
This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

GoogleTM books

<https://books.google.com>

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

GoogleTM books

<https://books.google.com>

C 3 9015 00339 373 6
University of Michigan - BUHR

THE ACADEMY.

35816

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

JANUARY — JUNE,
1890.

VOLUME XXXVII.

PUBLISHING OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

1890.

AP
4
.A17

LONDON:
PRINTED BY ALEXANDER AND SHEPHEARD, LONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME XXXVII.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Abercromby's (Hon. J.) Trip Through the Eastern Caucasus	110
Aide's (H.) Songs Without Music	200
Archer's (W.) Henrik Ibsen's Prose Dramas	206
Aasboth's (J. de) An Official Tour through Bosnia and Herzegovina	40
Bain's (F.) Christina, Queen of Sweden	94
Baker's (C. W.) Monopolies and the People	95
Bancroft's (H. H.) Utah	418
Benson's (Archbishop) Christ and His Times	39
Besant's (W.) Captain Cook	207
Betham-Edwards's (M.) The Roof of France	137
Biggar's (E. B.) Canada	201
Bingham's (Capt.) The Marriages of the Bourbons	164
Blackie's (J. S.) A Song of Heroes	183
Blyth's (E. K.) Life of William Ellis	128
Boyd-Carpenter's (Bishop) Permanent Elements of Religion	259
Bradley's (Miss E. T.) Life of the Lady Arabella Stuart	30
Brand's (Dr. G.) Impressions of Russia	438
Brown's (Rev. Tom) The Manx Witch; The Doctor; and Fo's's's Yarns	2
Browning's (H.) Asolando	19
(O.) Life of George Eliot	179
Bryden's (H. A.) Kloof and Karroo	299
Bury's (J. B.) History of the Later Roman Empire	109
Cable's (G. W.) Strange True Stories of Louisiana	75
Carstensen's (A. E.) Two Summers in Greenland	402
Carus's (Dr. P.) Fundamental Problems	361
Castellani's (C.) pamphlet on the Origin of Printing	165
Chesney's (Mrs.) Louisa May Alcott	55
Chatterfield, Lord, Letters of, to his Godson	1
Church's (A. J.) Early Britain	91
Conder's (Maj. C. R.) Palestine	381
Corbett's (J.) Monk	347
Cunningham's (Sir H.) The Heriots	279
(W.) The Growth of English Industry and Commerce during the Early and Middle Ages	364
Dasent's (J. R.) The Acts of the Privy Council in England	329
Davis and Bronghall's Our Home in Assyria	127
De Coulange's (F.) Histoire des Institutions Politiques de l'Antienne France	295
De la Ferrière's (H.) Henri IV.	367
De l'Isle-Adam's (Comte V.) Art.	235
Dickson & Edmond's Annals of Scottish Printing	199
Diggie's (J. W.) Lancashire Life of Bishop Fraser	200
Dike's (Sir C. W.) Problems of Greater Britain	161
Dunkin's (J. G.) Trooper and Redskin in the Far North West	3
Edmonds's (Mrs.) Ethiops Pheraios	113
Ellis's (Mrs.) The Early Diary of Frances Burney	125
(H.) The New Spirit	231
Emerson's (P. H.) English Idylls	93
Fabian Essays in Socialism	117
Fane's (Voltaire) Autumn Songs	191
Forman's (H. B.) Poetry and Prose by John Keats	400
Fraser's (J. G.) The Golden Bough	399
Frayling's (G.) The Crown Prince and the German Imperial Crown	163

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Fyffe's (C. A.) History of Modern Europe	215
Gairdner & Morgan's Sailing Directions	333
Garnett's (E.) Iphigenia in Delphi	366
Giffen's (R.) The Growth of Capital	381
Goodwin's (H.) The Foundations of the Creed	383
Gore's (O.) Las Mundi	163
Gossi (Carlo) Memoirs of	73
Gray's (M.) Westminster Chimes, and other Poems	247
(E. C.) Idle Musings	350
Green's (W. S.) Among the Solikirk Glaciers	365
Hake's (T. G.) The New Day	417
Haliburton's (H.) In Scottish Fields	383
Hall's (H.) Court Life under the Plantagenets	91
Hallett's (H. S.) A Thousand Miles on an Elephant in the Shan States	216
Hatch's (Rev. E.) Towards Fields of Light	278
Memorials	278
Herrick's (C. T.) The Letters of the Duke of Wellington to Miss J.	31
Hickson's (S. J.) A Naturalist in North Celebes	144
Hisey's (J. J.) A Tour in a Phæton	262
Hodgett's (Miss) Tales and Legends from the Land of the Tear	261
Hunter's (Sir W. W.) The Marquess of Dalhousie	261
Hurlbert's (W. H.) France and the Republic	313
Hutchinson's (H. G.) Golf	340
Ibsen's (H.) Rosmersholm	36
The Lady from the Sea	38
Prose Dramas	296
Jackson's (Lady) The First of the Bourbons, 1598-1610	367
Jacoba's (J.) The Fables of Aesop	39
Jessopp's (A.) The Trials of a Country Parson	360
Jones's (L.) The Life, Times, and Labours of Robert Owen	314
Keibel's (T. E.) Lord Derby	402
Kroupa's (B.) An Artist's Tour	280
Lang's (S.) Problems of the Future	351
Lane-Poole's (S.) Thirty Years of Colonial Government	37
Law's (T. G.) Jesuits and Seculars in the Reign of Elizabeth	143
Lebarq's (Abbé) Histoire Critique de la Priodication de Bossuet	183
Leger's (L.) History of Austro-Hungary	180
Le Strange's (Guy) Correspondence of Princess Lieven and Earl Grey	109
Levy's (Amy) A London Plane Tree, and other Verses	76
Lewis's (H.) The Ancient Laws of Wales	91
Lucas's (F.) Sketches of Rural Life, and other Poems	56
Lambolts's (C.) Among Cannibals	73
Macdonnell's (J.) Reports of State Trials	311
MacKay's (T.) The English Poor	113
Mallock's (W. H.) In an Enchanted Island	87
Markham's (C. R.) Hues' Treatise on the Globes	283
Martel's (E. A.) Les Cevennes, et la Région des Cévennes	137
McCarthy's (J.) History of the Four Georges	233
Mitchell's (D. G.) English Land, Letters, and Kings, from Celt to Tudor	146
Moliner's (L.) Étude sur Alexandre Vinet	291
Monkhouse's (O.) Corn and Poppies	437

REVIEWS—continued.

	PAGE
Moulton's (Mrs.) In the Garden of Dreams	313
(R. G.) The Ancient Classical Drama	332
Murdock's (H.) The Reconstruction of Europe	377
Nettleship's (J. T.) Robert Browning: Essays and Thoughts	363
Nicoll's (W. R.) James Macdonnell, Journalist	74
Nodal's (J. H.) Bibliography of Ackworth School	129
Patmore's (C.) Principles in Art, etc.	145
Pitt, William, and Charles Duke of Rutland, Correspondence between	246
Pritchard's (Rev. C.) Occasional Thoughts of an Astronomer on Nature and Revelation	94
Rawnsley's (H. D.) Edvard Thring, Teacher and Poet	218
Requin's (Abbé) L'Imprimerie à Avignon en 1444	332
Runciman's (J.) Joins in our Social Armour	350
Russell's (W. C.) Horatio Nelson	495
Schuchburgh's (E. S.) translation of The Histories of Polybius	76
Sharp's (W.) Life of Robert Browning	245
Shaw's (G. B.) Fabian Essays in Socialism	197
Shields's (G. O.) Cruisings in the Cascades	3
Skrine's (J. H.) Memory of Edward Thring	318
Smodes's (Mrs.) A Southern Planter	181
Smith's (Goldwin) Life of Jane Austen	330
Smith & Meyer's Les Contes Moralités de Nicole Bozon	420
Stackelberg's (Baroness) Life of Catherine Selya	394
Steinitz's (W.) The Modern Chess Instructor	4
Stokes's (G. T.) Ireland, and the Anglo-Norman Church	56
Stowe, Harriet Beecher, Life of	163
Tavernier's (J. B.) Travels in India	20
Theobald's (Rev. S. W.) The Land and the Community	112
Theology and Piety alike Free	410
Todd's (A.) On Parliamentary Government in England	128
Tozer's (H. F.) The Islands of the Aegean	313
Trollope's (T. A.) Further Reminiscences	298
Turner's (O. E.) The Modern Novelists of Russia	348
Van Dyke's (H.) The Poetry of Tennyson	217
Velthe's (J.) Mertins and other Poems	263
Vernon's (Hon. W. W.) Readings on the Purgatorio of Dante	92
Viollet's (P.) Histoire des Institutions Politiques et Administratives de la France	295
Warner's (C. D.) Studies in the South and West	246
Watson's (W.) Wordsworth's Grave, and other Poems	126
Wedmore's (F.) Honour de Balzac	144
Welshofer's (H.) Geschichte des Griechischen Volkes bis zur Zeit Solons	385
Whistler's (J. M.) The Gentle Art of Making Enemies	435
Wilheboer's (Dr. G.) Het ontstaan van den Kanon des Ouden Testaments	69
Williams's (M.) Leaves of a Life	235
Woodford's (C. M.) A Naturalist among the Head-hunters	330

NOVELS.

	PAGE
A'Beckett's (A. W.) Hard Luck	422
A Railway Foundling. By Nomad	240
Arnold's (A. S.) Broughton	114
Ashburner's (Miss) A Resolute Purpose	148
Astor's (W. W.) Sforza	77
Atherton's (Mrs.) Los Cerritos	352
Austin's (Stella) Paul's Friend	60
Baring-Gould's Arminell	5
Bayly's (Miss) Jonathan Morie	60
Bell's (Mrs. H.) Will o' the Wisp	440
Bellamy's (E.) Miss Ludington's Sister	264
Six to One	352
Betham-Edwards's (M.) Forestalled	220
Bickley's (A. C.) Midst Surrey Hills	184
Black's (W.) The New Prince Fortunatus	219
Blackmore's (R. D.) Kit and Kitty	77
Boldrewood's (R.) The Miner's Right	421
Bridges's (J. A.) A Brummagem Baron	316
Brynner's (E. L.) Agnes Surriage	316
Cahill's (J.) Wheat Certainty	60
Caine's (H.) The Bondman	147
Carmarthen's (Lady) A Lover of the Beautiful	300
Calmour's (A. C.) The Confessions of a Door Mat	422
Carmichael's (J.) Dead Stripes	96
Cartwright's (F. L.) Olga Zanelli	42
Clare's (A.) For the Love of the Lass	130
Clarke's (P.) Three Diggers	202
Claverling's (V.) Till the Great Assize	385
Clayden's (E. J.) By the World Forgot	282
Cobb's (T.) Brownie's Plot	42
Cobban's (J. M.) Master of His Fate	114
Coleridge's (Hon. S.) The Sanctity of Confession	316
Collins's (Wilkie) Blind Love	184
Concealed for Thirty Years	368
Conney's (Mrs.) A Lady Horsebreaker	166
Correll's (Marie) My Wonderful Wife	42
Cotterell's (Constance) Strange Gods	129
Cousins's (Kate) Norman and I	96
Cuddip's (Mrs. P.) On the Children	166
Cushing's (P.) The Bull i' th' Thorn	202
Davis's (Helen) For so Little	386
Dave's (Hester) A Snow Flower	23
Day's (Alice M.) Her Three Lovers	440
Dixie's (Lady F.) Redeemed in Blood	60
Donovan's (Dick) Tracked and Taken	405
The Man from Manchester	440
Doudney's (Sarah) Where the Dew falls in London	6
Doyle's (Dr. C.) The Captain of the "Polestar," and other Tales	282
The Firm of Girdlestone	404
Drewry's (Edith S.) For Somebody's Sake	263
Dr. Hermione. By the author of "Lady Bluebeard"	77
Eastwood's (F.) In Salan's Bonds	184
Ellis's (Lilith) A Stage Romance	60
Erroll's (H.) By Woman's Favour	235
Eyre's (Kate) For the Good of the Family	405
Farjoun's (B. L.) The Peril of Richard Pardon	220
Fendall's (P.) The Celebrated Janet Homfret	236
Fenn's (G. M.) Three People's Secrets	318
The Myrns Mystery	716
(W. W.) & E. Salmon's Twice Guilty	185
Foster's (B.) A Queen of Roses	250
Fothergill's (Jessie) A March in the Banks	129
Frederick's (H.) The Lawton Girl	333
Gerard's (Dorothea) Lady Baby	219
Gibney's (S.) Captain Jacques	23
Sentenced	440

NOVELS—continued.

Ginsling's (G.) The Emancipated ...	263
Goodchild's (J. A.) A Fairy Godfather ...	187
Gowing's (Mrs.) An Unruly Spirit ...	184
Gray's (Louisa M.) Cousin Ned ...	90
Greenwood's (J.) Fair Phyllis of Laven- der Wharf ...	282
Prince Dick ...	334
Dahomey ...	319
Greville's (H.) A Noble Woman ...	238
Grey's (Cyril) Glenathole ...	438
Haggard's (H. R.) Beatrice ...	316
Hall's (Mrs. W. D.) Eric Rotherham ...	404
Hamilton's (Col. B.) The Last of the Cornets ...	430
Hardy's (J. D.) A New Othello ...	148
Harland's (H.) Two Women or One? ...	300
Harrison's (C.) Dollis Brooke ...	300
Hart's (Bret) A Waif of the Plains ...	333
Hatton's (J.) By Order of the Czar ...	281
Hayward's (Gertrude M.) Dalziel ...	282
Herbert's (Mrs. M.) Mrs. Danby Kauf- man of Baywater ...	300
Hilbert-Ware's (Mrs.) Fairfax of Puyton ...	368
Hill's (J.) An Unfortunate Arrange- ment ...	96
Hodgetts's (J. F.) A Tale of Three Nations ...	186
Hopkins's (Eamé) William Orleigh ...	263
Hopkins's (T.) The Nugents of Carri- conna ...	22
Hopps's (Mary M.) The Locket ...	41
Hopson's (W. D.) A Hazard of New Fortunes ...	352
Hudson's (F.) Running Double ...	96
Hume's (F.) Miss Mephistopheles ...	352
Hynes's (C. J.) Currie, Curtis & Co., Crammers ...	236
Isaac's (J.) Maria ...	421
James's (C. T. C.) The Blindness of Memory Earle ...	385
Jefferson's (J. C.) Cutting for Partners ...	114
Jeffery's (J. C.) James Vraile ...	334
Jocelyn's (Mrs. R.) The M.F.H.'s Daughter ...	334
Johnson's (V. D.) The Treasure Tower ...	334
Johnston's (D. L.) The Paradise of the North ...	97
Jones's (J.) The Experiences of Richard Jones ...	430
Keary's (C. F.) A Marriage de Con- science ...	430
Keith's (L.) A Hurricane in Petticoats ...	23
Kenyon's (Edith C.) The Stranger Artist ...	230
King Squeak of Toadland, By an	77
Envoy Extraordinary	43
Lafan's (Mrs.) Louise Draycott ...	167
Lansa's (Marquise) Basil Morion's Transgression ...	148
Lathrop's (G. P.) Would you kill Him? & Wakeman's Lal ...	353
Law's (J.) A Manchester Shirtmaker Lee's (Vernon) Hauntings ...	43
Levy's (Amy) Miss Meredith ...	77
Lewis's (H. P.) Her Heart's Desire ...	334
Lord Allanrae, By B. E. T. A.	230
Lothair's Child, By H. R. H.	404
Lynght's (Ellis J.) The Gold of Ophir Lynton's (Lord) The Ring of Amasis ...	23
Maarten's (M.) The Sin of Joost Ardingh ...	60
McEwen's (Constance) A Cavalier's Lady ...	220
Macquoid's (Mrs.) Cosette ...	300
(Miss K.) The Haunted Fountain ...	122
Majendie's (Lady M.) Tom's Wife ...	209
Mann's (Miss) One Another's Burdens ...	281
Marshall's (F.) Claire Brandon ...	404
Marryatt's (Florence) Blindfold A Scarlet Sin ...	130
Mather's (Helen) Blind Justice ...	368
Max's (J.) In Chains of Fate ...	284
May's (Adela) Laura Montrose ...	90
Meades's (L. T.) Engaged to be Married Melville's (M. C.) The Lost Ring ...	168
Merriman's (H. S.) Suspense ...	368
Middlemass's (J.) Two False Moves Monro's (A. M.) Briars ...	284
Morley's (Mabel) Boycotted ...	60
Muddock's (J. E.) The Dead Man's Secret ...	98
Murray's (H.) A Game of Bluff (D. C.) John Vale's ...	114
Guardian ...	240
Alias ...	284
Bible ...	421
Naseby's The Silver Whistle ...	6
Norris's (W. E.) Mrs. Fenton ...	315
O'Brien's (W.) When we were Boys ...	403
Ohnet's (G.) A Last Love ...	202
Oliphant's (Mrs.) The Duke's Daughter and The Fugitives ...	333
Ouida's Syrin ...	351
P...s (Count Paul) The Conspirator Payn's (J.) The Burnt Million ...	386
Pinkerton's (T. A.) The Spanish Pontard ...	420

NOVELS—continued.

Pontoppidan's (H.) The Apothecary's Daughters ...	96
Poynter's (Miss) The Failure of Eliza- beth ...	385
Præd's (Mrs. C.) The Romance of a Station ...	77
Prince Maurice of Scotland, By	250
H. R. H.	6
Pullen-Barry's (B.) Eleanor Lewknor ...	369
Riddell's (Mrs.) My First Love ...	264
Rita's A Society Scandal ...	166
Roach's (E. M.) Dick Chichester ...	316
Robinson's (F. W.) A very Strange Family ...	282
Rochford's (Edith) The Lloyds of Bally- more ...	202
Russell's (W. C.) An Ocean Tragedy ...	333
Saiwey's (R. E.) Wildwater Terrace ...	439
Sergeant's (Adeline) Little Miss Colwyn Sherard's (R. H.) Rogues ...	42
Simon's (S. L.) Agatha's Quest ...	396
Simons's (H.) Dantele Cortis ...	264
Simons's (O. J.) Through the Crowd Cloister ...	130
Smart's (H.) Without Love or Licence Speight's (T. W.) The Sandycroft Mystery ...	184
Stockton's (F.) What might have been expected ...	250
Swan's (Annie S.) Sheila ...	23
Tait's (J. S.) Who is the Man? Tasma's (A.) Sydney Sovereign ...	6
In Her Earliest Youth ...	386
Taylor's (Mary) Miss Miles ...	202
Thiessen's (I.) A Far Look Ahead ...	352
Tolstol's (Count) Boyhood and Youth ...	421
Treatman's (W. S.) Craythorne ...	202
Trollope's (Frances E.) Among Aliens Twain's (Mark) A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur ...	352
Tyler's (Sarah) Duchess Frances ...	250
Vallings's (H.) The Quality of Mercy ...	130
Van de Velde's (Mme.) Dr. Greystone Veitch's (Miss) Duncan Moray, Farmer Vince's (H. S.) Two Pardons ...	315
Wallford's (L. B.) A Sage of Sixteen ...	60
Wallace's (W. A.) Only a Sister ...	113
Watson's (H. B. M.) Lady Faintheart Werner's (E.) A Heavy Reckoning ...	59
Westbury's (Hugh) Acte ...	23
Weyman's (S. J.) The House of the Wolf ...	403
Whitby's (Miss) Part of the Property White's (Maj. G. F.) Lucinda ...	316
Winter's (J. S.) Mrs. Bob ...	147
Woolson's (C. F.) Jupiter Lights ...	334
Worthing's (Mrs.) The New Continent ...	6
Yorke's (C.) The Wild Euthens ...	405

MINOR NOTICES.

Abbott & Matheson's Demosthenes, Orations against Philip ...	442
Adam's (J.) Platonis Euthyphro ...	442
Adams's (W. H. D.) Witch, Warlock, and Magician ...	317
Alexander's (W. D. S.) Translation of Ruy Blas ...	167
Appleton's (L.) Memoirs of Henry Richard ...	7
Arnold's (T.) Dryden's Essay of Dra- matic Poesy ...	24
Baigent's & Millard's History of Basingstoke ...	264
Belcher's (Dr.) Robert Brett ...	7
Bell's (H. J.) Obeah ...	185
Boswell's (R. B.) Translation of Racine Bowles's (T. G.) The Log of the "Nereid" ...	167
Brown's (J.) Trying to find Europe ...	98
Bulkeley's (O. T.) The Lesser Antilles Burkhardt's (J.) The Civilization of the Renaissance in Italy ...	62
Carotto's (Mme.) My Mistress the Empress Eugénie ...	441
Empire's Fall ...	7
The Eve of an ...	423
Camer's (P.) Homeri Ilias ...	423
Church & Seoley's The Hammer ...	24
Clark's (Kate D.) The French and English Birthday Book ...	423
Clarkson & Richardson's Police! ...	62
Coleridge's (E. P.) translation of The Argonautica Apollonius Rhodius ...	115
Cotswold Iais's Handy Book to Dry-Fly Fishing ...	424
Cowan's (J.) Pliny's Letters ...	283
Craven's (Mrs. D.) Guide to District Nurses ...	61
Crombie's (J. W.) The Poets and Peoples of Foreign Lands ...	167
Dabney's (W. S.) The Public Regula- tion of Railways ...	251
De Quincey, the Collected Writings of	301
De Rosny's (L.) Tauereus et Man- tilles ...	98
Donisthorpe's (W.) Individualism Doughty's (H. M.) Friesland Mores, &c.	250

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

Ferguson's (R. S.) Carlisle ...	203
Fishwick's (H.) History of the Parish of Rochdale ...	264
Fittis's (R. S.) Heroines of Scotland ...	61
Fitz-gibbon's (H. M.) Famous Elizabeth- than Plays ...	24
Foster's (W. E.) The Parish Church of St. Mary, Whapload ...	265
Frances's (May) Beyond the Argentine Frederickson's (A. D.) Ad Orientem ...	353
Glover's (Rev. R.) Self-Discipline ...	97
Godley's (A. D.) The Histories of Tacitus ...	7
Govett's (L. A.) The King's Book of Sports ...	283
Green's (M. A. E.) Calendars of the Proceedings of the Committee for Compounding, &c. ...	317
Haddon's (J.) Old Lamps and New ...	25
Headlam's (C. E. S.) The Iphigenia at Aulis ...	114
Heilprin's (A.) The Bermuda Islands ...	185
Hertzka's (T.) Freiland ...	149
Houston's (Mrs.) Sylvanus Redivivus Hudson's (Rev. W.) History of the Parish of St. Peter Permountgate, Norwich ...	266
Humphreys's (A. L.) History of Wellington, Somerset ...	285
Humphry's (G. M.) Old Age ...	60
Inge's (W. R.) Selections from Valerius Marimus ...	283
Jacobs's (Dr. H.) New Zealand ...	185
Japp's (A. H.) Good Men and True Jeyes's (S. H.) The Ethics of Aristotle Jusserand's (J. J.) The English Novel in the Time of Shakespeare ...	432
Kebbel's (T. E.) Rough Shooting ...	434
Keller & Haessener's Horati Opera ...	443
Kane-Poole's (S.) The Barbary Corsairs Laughton's (S. F.) Memoir of George Byng, Lord Torrington ...	203
Macloed's (H. D.) The Theory of Credit Marriott's (J. A. R.) The Makers of Modern Italy ...	114
Mavor's (Prof. J.) Economic Theory and History ...	251
McCarthy's (J. H.) Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam ...	167
McCray's (F. T.) The Life-Work of the Author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" ...	403
Merry's (W. W.) The Birds of Aristo- teles ...	25
Middlemore's (S. G. C.) translation of Burkhardt's Civilization of the Renaissance in Italy ...	232
Minton's (F.) The Welfare of the Millions ...	441
Montgomery's (Bishop) History of Kennington ...	251
Moore's (J. M.) New Zealand for the Emigrant, Invalid, and Tourist ...	266
Morris's (M. O'C.) Dublin Castle ...	353
Morrison's (W. D.) The Jews under Roman Rule ...	440
Mummery & Hobson's The Physiology of Industry ...	440
Oberammergau, The Passion Play at O'Connor's (Rev. W. A.) Essays in Literature and Ethics ...	251
Panton's (J. E.) From Kitchen to Garret ...	24
Bypaths and Cross-Roads ...	61
Parkinson's (Rev. T.) Yorkshire Legends and Traditions ...	424
Paton, John G., Missionary to the New Hebrides ...	317
Payne's (J. O.) Old English Catholic Missions ...	185
Peach's (R. E. M.) Annals of the Parish of Swainswick ...	115
Pennell's Our Journey to the Hebrides Pimblett's (W.) Emin Pasha ...	285
Purcell's (T. A.) A Suburb of Yedo Reminiscences of a Literary and Clerical Life ...	423
Robertson's (W.) Historical Tales and Legends of Ayrshire ...	97
Rogers's (T. E.) Records of Farlington Russell's (P.) A Journey to Lake Taupo Rye's (W.) catalogue of MSS. relating to Norfolk ...	205
Cramer, Past and Present ...	115
Rzsch's (A.) Homeri Ilias ...	204
Sammelsson's (J.) India, Past and Present ...	443
Sandys's (J. E.) The Speech of Demosthenes against the Law of Leptines ...	97
Saunders's (F.) Stray Leaves of Litera- ture ...	442
Saxby's (Mrs.) West-Nor-West ...	24
Schöne's (A. E.) Cornetii Taciti de Vita et Moribus Iulii Agricola Liber Schopenhauer's The Wisdom of Life Schubert's (F.) Sophokles König Oedipus ...	283
Scougal's (F.) Scenes from a Silent World ...	283
Shilleto's (A. R.) revision of Whiston's translation of The Works of Flavius Josephus ...	60

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

Shuckburgh's (E. S.) Herodotus, Book V ...	442
Smith's (H.) A Century of American Literature ...	423
Statesman's Year Book, The ...	301
Stebbing's (W.) Lord Peterborough ...	316
Stephenson's (H. M.) Livy, Book IV ...	442
Thayer's (W. M.) From Printing-office to the Court of St. James's ...	63
Thormanby's The Horse and his Rider ...	424
Tomson's (G. R.) Selections from the Greek Anthology ...	115
Tweedie's (Mrs. A.) The Ober- ammergau Passion Play, 1860 ...	301
Waddell's (W. W.) Veres and Imita- tions in Greek and Latin ...	116
Walras's (L.) Elements d'Economie Politique Pure ...	149
Watson's (J.) Nature and Woodcraft Sketches of British ...	423
Sporting Fishes ...	424
Wilkins's (Mary E.) A Humble Romance, and other Stories ...	422
Melody, and other Stories ...	422
Wilkinson & Tattersall's Memoirs of Hurwood, Burnley, Lancashire ...	265
Wright's (T.) The Choice of Caden ...	25
Yonge's (C. D.) Horace Walpole's Letters ...	203
Young's (Sir F.) A Winter Tour in South Africa ...	353

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

A Doubter's Doubts about Science and Religion ...	131
Ball's (C. J.) The Prophecies of Jeremi- ah ...	237
Bellesheim's (Dr. A.) History of the Catholic Church of Scotland ...	334
Bindley's (T. H.) Q. S. P. Tertulliani Apologues adversus Gentes pro Christianis ...	369
Bindley's (T. H.) The Apology of Ter- tullian for the Christians ...	369
Briggs's (Prof.) Whither? ...	300
Brown's (H. S.) Manliness, and other Sermons ...	441
Bruce's (A. B.) The Kingdom of God ...	130
Bunyon's (C. J.) Memoirs of Bishop McDougall ...	335
Butcher's (Dean) Sermons Preached in the East ...	442
Chevalier's (U.) Repertorium Hymno- logicum ...	369
Copinger's (W. A.) Treatise on Prede- stination, Election, and Grace ...	131
Delitzsch's (F.) Biblical Commentary on the Psalms ...	237
Dods's (M.) The First Epistle to the Corinthians ...	131
Dupanloup's (Bishop) The Ministry of Preaching ...	370
Elwin's (W.) The Minister of Baptism Forbes's (J.) The Servant of the Lord in Isaiah xl. lvi. ...	130
Gabbart's (E.) L'Italie Mystique ...	335
Gilbert's (Dr. G. H.) The Poetry of Job Godet's (F.) Studies on the Epistles ...	300
Haines's (C. R.) Islam as a Missionary Religion ...	78
in Spain ...	79
Holder's (W. G.) The Hymn Lover ...	369
Howatt's (J. R.) Agnostic Fallacies ...	131
Hughes's (H. O.) The Philanthropy of God ...	442
Jefferson's (H. H.) The Divine Unity and Trinity ...	130
Kelly's (J.) Life and Work of Charles Henry von Bogatsky ...	79
Lily among Thorns, The ...	300
Little's (Canon Knox) The Light of Life ...	441
Lloyd & Sanday's Greek New Testa- ment ...	369
Moorsom's (R. M.) Historical Com- panion to Hymns Ancient and Modern ...	130
Mozley's (T.) The Word ...	130
(F. W.) David in the Psalms ...	237
Myrles's (Bishop) Sermons preached in St. Thomas's Cathedral, Bombay ...	441
Overton's (J. H.) John Hannah ...	335
Perrin's (Sir P.) The Works and Days of Moses ...	369
Purinton's (D. B.) Christian Theism ...	131
Redford's (R. A.) Vox Dei ...	131
Sarum Breviary, The Lesser Hours of the ...	78

THEO. LITERATURE—continued.

Van Orelli's (O.) The Prophecies of Jeremiah ...	237
Weldon's (J. E. C.) The Spiritual Life and other Sermons ...	441
Welsh & Edwards's Romance of Pealier and Hymnal ...	399
Westcott's (Dr.) From Strength to Strength ...	441
Yeastman's (J. P.) On Highgate Hill ...	335
Zahn's (T.) Geschichte des Neutestamentlichen Kanons ...	78

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Baran's (A.) Schulcommentar zu Demosthenes's Staatsreden ...	220
Christ's (A.) Homer's Ilias in verkürzter Ausgabe ...	230
Eymer's (W.) Lateinische Uebungssätze zur Casuslehre ...	220
Fowler's (J. H.) Sportella ...	406
Fox and Bromley's Models and Exercises in Unseen Translation ...	406
Hensell's (W.) Griechisches Uebungsbuch I. ...	220
Oman's (C. W. C.) History of Greece ...	406
Sargent's (J. Y.) Models and Materials for Greek Iambic Verse ...	406
Scheindler's (A.) Lateinisches Schulgrammatik ...	220
Schenkl's (K.) Uebungsbuch zum Uebersetzen ins Griechische ...	220
Sedlmayer's (H. S.) Ausgewählte Gedichte des Ovidius ...	220
Stone's (E. D.) Selection from the Greek Tragedians ...	221
Thompson's (F. E.) Homeric Grammar for Schools ...	406
Von Hartel's (W.) Curtius's Griechische Schulgrammatik ...	220
Weidner's (A.) Xenophon's Memorabilia ...	220
White's (J. W.) Passages for Practice in Translation at Sight ...	220
Wilkinson's (H.) Legends of Ancient Rome from Livy ...	221
Wolke's (K.) Demosthenes Ausgewählte Reden ...	220

MINOR POETRY.

Birrell's (C. J. B.) Two Queens ...	149
Bruce's (W.) In Clover and Heather ...	149
Carlson's (Will.) City Legends ...	44
Chapman's (J. T.) Poems ...	386
Cox's (May M.) Poems ...	149
Crawford's (H.) An Atoneament of East London and other Poems ...	148
Dash's (Blancor) Tales of a Tennis Party ...	396
Eaton's (A. W.) Acadian Legends and Lyrics ...	43
Fullarton's (R. M.) Merlin ...	43
Grant's (J. C.) New Verse in Old Feature ...	43
Reader's (Emily E.) Echoes of Thought ...	396

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A. D. 1690 ...	151
A Reviewer's Remorse ...	133
At Dawn ...	205
Ballade of ye Olde Cheshire Cheese ...	337
Beata Beatrix ...	319
Choice of a Man, The ...	444
Daughter of the Nile, A ...	407
Dying ...	426
Epitaph ...	63
Flos Florum ...	355
Jupiter Exiled ...	252
Life ...	26
Living, though the Date be old ...	187

ORIGINAL VERSE—continued.

Maid April ...	267
Meeting and Farewell ...	371
New Year's Greeting ...	8
On the Tomb opened in Canterbury Cathedral, March 7, 1890 ...	285
Petrarch, The First Sonnet of ...	45
— The First Ballata of ...	45
Plato to Aster ...	80, 117, 169
Puck, The Death of ...	303
Seafarer, The ...	99
Sonnet by Robert Browning ...	133
Swift to Stella ...	117
Venus of Milo, The ...	239
Watte's (Mr.) Picture of Mammon ...	388
Yule, Sir Henry: In Memoriam ...	232

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

American Oriental Society, The ...	389
Beatrice Exhibition at Florence ...	373
Browningiana ...	187
Bruno, Giordano, newly-discovered MSS. of ...	253
Christian Names in Early Times ...	82
Degrees, Honorary, at Cambridge ...	407
Folklore Society, The ...	81
Glosses from Turin and the Vatican ...	46
Marlowe Memorial, The ...	206
Mitanni, The Language of ...	64
Publications of Societies ...	425
University Jottings ...	63, 80, 99, 117, 132, 151, 168, 186, 205, 238, 285, 302, 318, 336, 355, 371, 388, 406, 426, 444
Yorkshire Mysteries, Fragments of ...	37

CORRESPONDENCE.

Abercromby's Trip through the Eastern Caucasus ...	154
Abraham, a Legend of "ay," the English diphthong ...	207, 223
Bracton's "Cons and Key" ...	356
Brāhmana of the Sāmaveda, The Sixth ...	337
British Record Society ...	12
Browning, A Twenty Years' Lover of, in 1858 ...	12
Browning's Ring and the Book , The line-numbering in ...	47
— Ancestors ...	268
"Bubonax" in the Defence of Poesy ...	83
"Buccarlie" in Godefroy's Old French Dictionary ...	83
Canynghe and Rowley ...	223
Celts and Slavs, Early contact between ...	189
Chaucer ...	373
Chaucer's Troilus , A Lost MS. of ...	82
— Story of "The Mad Cow" ...	230, 255, 269
"Clock" ...	390
"Coble" ...	390
"Cook" ...	189
"Cockney" ...	320, 338, 356, 390, 426, 445
Cromwell, Oliver, A Speech attributed to ...	206
Cross, Sign of the, and the Masts and Yards of a Ship ...	409, 427
Dante, Unknown MS. of, in the Bodleian ...	130
— and Beatrice, The Relations between ...	253, 287
Dante's Beatrice, The Sixth Centenary of ...	28, 253, 445
Diogenes, Chaucer's Reference to ...	223
Dorne, John, The Daybook of ...	101
Economics, Some Books on ...	270
Elliot, George: a correction ...	255
Eyton's MSS in the British Museum ...	64
Firdusi and the Old High-German Lay of Hildebrand ...	269
Fitton, Mary, and "The Dark Lady" of Shakespeare's Sonnets ...	153, 171
Gerard, E. D., and Dorothea Gerard ...	240
"Hanselyn" in Chaucer ...	373, 391, 410, 427
Harleian MS., 1733 (Chaucer) ...	269
Hobbes, The Claims of, to the Darwinian Struggle for Life ...	223

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

Hurlbert's France and the Republic ...	339, 428
Iceland, Winter Darkness in ...	171
Imitatio Christi , Date of the ...	409
Irish Items ...	296, 303
— MSS. at Cheltenham ...	321
Jews, French, and their Republican Persecutors ...	374
"Kenepas" in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle ...	100, 118
Leizarraga's Basque New Testament, the Original of ...	240
Lives of Saints from the Book of Lismore ...	321
Lotse or Teichmüller ...	153
Malory's "Le Morte Darthur," Sources of ...	11
Mazzini and United Italy ...	304
"Mean"—to mean ...	255
Mermaid, Irish ...	29
Micla ...	223
Middle English Notes ...	29, 47
Nevilles in Domesday, The Old High-German Glosses in the Vatican ...	65
Oriental Congress, The ...	320, 337, 356, 372, 390, 406
Ormulum, Orthography of the ...	188
Orthography, English, in the Twelfth Century ...	133
Playbill, An Old Italian ...	207
Printing, The Origin of, a Danish Contribution to the Question of ...	118
Printing, The Invention of ...	189
Privy Council under Elizabeth, Procedure of the ...	100
"Ragman" "Ragman Roll" ...	47, 65, 445
Rowley, Thomas ...	206
Ruthwell Cross, Date of the ...	163, 170
"Scadinavia" ...	445
See Slidefalle=Sota. Satiola=Saint Sidwell ...	65
Shakespeare's Sonnets, The Dedication of ...	408
Simcox's Language of the New Testament ...	65
Slavonic Place-names in Germany ...	239
"Story of the Nations—Early Britain" ...	118
"Survivals" in Negro Funeral Ceremonies ...	445
Teichmüller's Definition of "Religion" ...	135
"Tertre," Etymology of ...	118
"Teuton," Etymology of ...	288
Tomas, The University of ...	190
Trinity College, Dublin, Early Scholars of ...	154
Vandale, The, and Andalusia ...	427
Virgil, A New Mediaeval Legend of ...	134
"Was," etc., The Spelling of, in the Alliterative Poems ...	409
Washington Pedigree, The ...	135
Wynkin de Worde's Ortus Vocabulorum ...	13
"Yes-Tor," Derivation of ...	83, 101
Yorkshire Mysteries, Fragments of ...	10

OBITUARY.

Blades, William ...	303
Boyle, Mary Louisa ...	253
Campkin, Henry ...	262
De Arana, Don Vicente ...	187
Delitzsch, Franz ...	189
Fagan, Rev. Henry Stuart ...	81
Farran, Robert ...	10
Greg, Percy ...	45
Hallstone, Edward ...	269
Hase, Carolus Augustus ...	81
Lightfoot, Bishop ...	9
Littledale, Richard Frederick ...	45
Lorimer, Prof. James ...	151
Lovell, John ...	152
Mackay, Dr. Charles ...	10
Maskell, William ...	267
Moore, Rev. Aubrey L. ...	63
Pfeiffer, Emily ...	81
Stanger, Mrs. Joshua ...	117
Sullivan, Dr. William Kirby ...	337
Waugh, Edwin ...	319
Wise, John R. ...	267
Yule, Sir Henry ...	26

NOTES.

Balsac letters, rumoured discovery of ...	132
Beatrice Celebration in Florence ...	328
Bertran y Broe's Rondallistica ...	443
Books, analytical table of, for 1889 ...	8
British Record Society ...	318
Browning, Mr., letter of, to Lord Tennyson ...	8
Camden Society's publications ...	318
Cassell & Co., the American branch of ...	116
De Quincey's Collected Writings , new edition of ...	204, 406
Dowden's (Prof. E.) reprint of Lyric Ballads (1798) ...	238
Early English Text Society's publications ...	169
James's (L.) The Source of the "Ancient Mariner" ...	132
Littledale, Rev. Dr. E. F., proposed memorial to ...	238
Lyte's (H. C. M.) History of Eton College ...	80
Mallison's (Col.) History of the Indian Mutiny ...	62
Mozart autographs, discovery of ...	284
Palestine Exploration Fund ...	98
"Rulers of India," forthcoming volumes of ...	131
Ruskin's Works, cheap editions of ...	370
Shakespeare, old document containing the name of ...	169
Swedish Society's publications ...	443
Tom Brown's School-days : new sixpenny edition ...	398
Tunis, a bibliography of ...	117
Wolsey, Cardinal, Dr. Busch on the fall of ...	26

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

Altpreussische Monatschrift ...	187
American Journal of Psychology ...	81
American Magazine of Poetry ...	204
Antiquary 45, 117, 151, 205, 267, 371, 388, 444 ...	444
Argosy ...	100
Art Magazine ...	222
Art Review ...	62, 204, 222, 281, 355
Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia ...	205, 239, 319, 371
Bookworm ...	63, 132, 355, 426
Cassell's Saturday Journal ...	132, 204
Cassell's Magazine ...	132, 204, 355
Century ...	63, 267, 355, 444
Contemporary Review ...	204, 444
East and West ...	371
Education ...	294, 371
English Illustrated Magazine ...	204
Expositor ...	27, 100, 169, 263, 303
Folk-Lore ...	407
Gentleman's Magazine ...	63, 204, 444
Good Words ...	151
Harper's Magazine ...	204
Hermathena ...	284
Igdrasil ...	444
Jewish Quarterly Review ...	63
Le Livre Moderne ...	64, 205, 371
Library ...	407
Lippincott's ...	355
Little Folks ...	426
London Society ...	355
Mind ...	81, 222, 268, 414
Newbury House Magazine ...	132, 204, 355, 425
Parents' Review ...	371
Portfolio ...	222
Quiver ...	267
Reliquary ...	204, 425
Scots Magazine ...	63
Scribner's ...	132, 222, 267, 355
St. Nicholas ...	63
Temple Bar ...	222
Theologisch Tijdschrift ...	45, 205, 319
Time ...	132, 222, 284
United Service Magazine ...	355, 425
University Review ...	132

SCIENCE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Bandiasin's (Prof.) Die Geschichte des alttestamentlichen Priesterthums ...	322
Budge's (E. A. W.) History of Alexander the Great ...	84
Caird's (E.) The Critical Philosophy of Immanuel Kant ...	224
Cartailhac's (E.) La France préhistorique d'après les Sépultures et les Monuments ...	270
Casartelli's (L. C.) The Philosophy of the Mandaean Religion under the Sassanids ...	240
Chavannes' (C. C.) La Religion dans la Bible ...	322
Dakyn's (H. G.) translation of The Works of Xenophon ...	306
Eimer's (Prof.) Organic Evolution ...	339
Goodwin's (W. W.) Syntax of the Moods and Tenses of the Greek Verb ...	391
Jevons's (F. B.) translation of Schrader's Sprachvergleichung und Ursprünge ...	446
Leit's (Dr. B. W.) Alt-Arischen Jus Gentium ...	29
Macaulay's (G. O.) translation of The History of Herodotus ...	306
Margoliouth's (Prof.) Essay on the Place of Ecclesiastics in Semitic Literature ...	119
Martineau's (J.) The Seat of Authority in Religion ...	410
Mivart's (St. G.) The Origin of Human Reason ...	172
Postgate's Gai Valeri Catulli Carmina ...	101
Rawlinson's (G.) History of Phoenicia ...	13
Ribbeck's (G.) History of Roman Poetry ...	357
Sachau's & Bihé's Catalogue of the Persian, Turkish, Hindustani, and Pushtu MSS. in the Bodleian Library ...	288
Schepers' (Dr. G.) Conradi Hirsauensis Dialogus super Auctores sine Didascalia ...	255
Schrader's (Dr. O.) Prehistoric Antiquities of the Aryan Peoples ...	440
Simcox's (W. H.) The Language of the New Testament ...	48
Tucker's (T. G.) The Supplies of Aschylus ...	135
Verrall's (A. W.) The Agamemnon of Aschylus ...	135
Weismann's (Dr. A.) Essays upon Heredity and Kindred Biological Problems ...	83
Westcott's (Dr.) The Epistle to the Hebrews ...	154, 190
Wharton's (B. R.) Etyma Latina ...	374

MINOR NOTICES.

American Journal of Mathematics ...	48, 428
Bell's (A.) De locativi in prisca latinitate vi et usu ...	429
Bernthsen's (A.) Text-Book of Organic Chemistry ...	67
Bodington's (Alice) Studies in Evolution and Biology ...	447
Brooksmith's Arithmetic for Beginners ...	428
Chrystal's (Dr. G.) Algebra ...	49
Craighton's (C.) Jenner and Vaccination ...	240
Cremona's (L.) Graphical Statics ...	102

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

	PAGE
Crookshank's (E. M.) History and Pathology of Vaccination ...	240
De Lessert's (P.) Les Fastes de la Numidie sous la Domination Romaine ...	67
De Tonzelmann's (G. W.) Electricity in Modern Life ...	208
Durham's (W.) Science in Plain Language ...	417
George's (K. E.) Lexikon der Lateinischen Wortformen ...	429
Gerard's (Rev. J.) Science and Scientists ...	256
Gray's (A.) Absolute Measurements in Electricity and Magnetism ...	208
Hake's (H. W.) Coloured Analytical Tables ...	67
Handbuch der Physik der Klassischen Alterthums-wissenschaft ...	429
Heisterberg's (B.) Fragen der ältesten Geschichte Siciliens ...	66
Hoffmann's (O.) Das praesens der indogermanischen Grundsprache ...	429
Holm's (A.) Griechische Geschichte ...	65
Hunter's (H. St. J.) Key to Todhunter's Integral Calculus ...	49
Jackson's (J.) The Shorthand of Arithmetic ...	40
Jensen's (P.) Die Kosmologie der Babylonier ...	376
Ladenburg's (Dr. A.) Handwörterbuch der Chemie ...	67
Lewis's (V. B.) Services Chemistry ...	67
Martin's (E. A.) Glimpses into Nature's Secrets ...	447
Meister's (R.) Zum elischen arkadischen und kyprischen Dialekt ...	429
Muir & Morley's Watts's Dictionary of Chemistry ...	67
Muir's (T.) The Theory of Determinants in the Historical Order of its Development ...	428
Neue's (F.) Formenlehre der Lateinischen Sprache ...	429
Newman's (F. W.) Elliptic Integrals ...	428
Ohnesorge's (Dr.) Die roemische Provinz-List von 297 ...	67
Pendlebury's (C.) Arithmetic ...	428
Reisig's (Ch. K.) Vorlesungen über lateinische Sprachwissenschaft ...	429
Sanderson's (F. W.) Hydrostatics for Beginners ...	49
Schoeffer's De Deli Insulae Rebus ...	66
Soltan's (F.) Zur Erklärung der Reden des Karthaginensers Hannu ...	429
Stephani's (A.) De Martiale verborum novatore ...	429
Tumlriz's (Dr.) Potential, and its Application to the Explanation of Electrical Phenomena ...	208
Turnbull's (R.) Index of British Plants ...	256
Watson's (Rev. R. G.) Key to Lock's Arithmetic for Beginners ...	40

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Anthropological Jottings ...	323
Catalan Publications ...	340
Gaulish Menhir, an Inscribed ...	392
Indian Jottings ...	209
Oriental Congress, the next ...	108

CORRESPONDENCE.

	PAGE
"Ammatu," a Babylonian Word ...	137
Antonius and Sallustius of Horace ...	376, 383
Aram-Naharaim, the Language of, and the Su of the Assyrian Tablets ...	305
Aspasine, a Late Babylonian Tablet of ...	340
Catullus xxv. 5 ...	120
Etruscan and Libyan Divinity-Names ...	290
Jaina (New) Inscriptions from Mathura ...	270
Lycian Language, the ...	67, 104
Mādhava and Śāyana ...	173, 191
Naukratis, the Inscriptions from ...	13
Persian Catalogue of the Bodleian Library ...	323
Plant-Names, Old and Provincial ...	30
Rawlinson's History of Phoenicia ...	155
Semitic Etymologies ...	411
Yonissai Inscriptions, the ...	103, 208, 449

OBITUARY.

Dallas, W. S. ...	393
Gunn, John ...	392
Smyth, Sir Warrington ...	447

SCIENCE NOTES.

Anthropometric Method of Identifying Criminals ...	192
Cats, Egyptian Mummied, some skulls of ...	209
Fauna of British India ...	68
Geological Survey of the United States, bulletins of ...	120
Joule, James P., proposed memorial to ...	68
Land-Planarian, living specimens of a ...	358
M'Alpine's (A. N.) How to know Grasses by the Leaves ...	430
Ore-deposit at the Treadwell gold mine in Alaska ...	14
Tucson, the meteoric iron of ...	376
"Turquoise de nouvelle roche" ...	340
Triceratops, skull of a ...	40
Waagen, Dr. W., on the Salt Range ...	290
Westermarck's (E.) treatise on The Origin of Human Marriage ...	104

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Brinton, Dr., on Etruscan and Libyan Names ...	192
Coray's posthumous works ...	120
Gow's (Dr. J.) Companion to School Classics ...	120
Harvey's (W. F.) Simplified Grammar of the Spanish Language ...	341
Ionic dialects, vowel system of the ...	174
Irish Language, Society for the preservation of the ...	192
Jaina temple, discovery of a ...	358
Kennedy's (Dr.) Sabrinæ Corolla ...	340
Kural, the, of Tiruvalluva ...	69
Latin consonant laws ...	173
"Old Welsh Texts," the third volume of ...	138

PHILOLOGY NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
Oriental Translation fund ...	156
Pali Text Society's publications ...	340
Salmond's (Prof.) Arabic dictionary ...	31
Sanskrit MSS. of the Maharaja of Kashmir ...	14
Siebs's (T.) Zur Geschichte der englisch-friesischen Sprache ...	50
Tenfel's History of Roman Literature ...	173
Von Bahder's (K.) Grundlagen des neuhochdeutschen Lautsystems ...	376
Wilson's (J. C.) On the Interpretation of Plato's Timæus ...	105

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

Anthropological Institute ...	412, 448
Antiquaries, Society of ...	256
Archæological Institute ...	121, 227, 341
Aristotelian Society ...	31, 69, 108, 156, 193, 290, 306, 325, 342, 430
Browning Society ...	105, 256, 308
Cambridge Philological Society ...	168
Cambridge Antiquarian Society ...	121, 210, 358, 393
Cambridge Philological Society ...	138, 192, 241, 377, 412
Clifton Shakspeare Society ...	50, 120, 193, 271, 325, 413
Cymmrodorion Society ...	14, 69, 121
Elizabethan Society ...	14, 69, 138, 226, 341, 430
English Goethe Society ...	378
Entomological Society ...	85
Geological Society ...	210
Hellenic Society ...	156, 440
Jews' College Literary Society ...	31
Liverpool Literary and Philosophical Society ...	272
Manchester Goethe Society ...	14, 242, 324
New Shakspeare Society ...	241, 291, 341
Philological Society ...	256, 306, 431
Royal Asiatic Society ...	394
Royal Historical Society ...	174, 377
Royal Society of Literature ...	325
Shelley Society ...	50, 138, 241, 291, 449

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

Babylonian and Oriental Record ...	85, 192
Classical Review ...	241, 430
Contemporary Review ...	226, 358
Epigraphia Indica ...	323
Hermathena ...	430
Journal of Microscopy ...	341
Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal ...	31
Journal of Philology ...	40, 358
Journal of the Anthropological Institute ...	105
L'Anthropologie ...	323
Linnean Society of N. S. Wales, Proceedings of the ...	173
Oxford Magazine ...	40
Revue Critique ...	393
Scottish Review ...	69
Trübner's Record ...	323
Zoological Record ...	226, 358

FINE ART.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Cagnat's (R.) Cours d'Epigraphie Latine	211
L'Année épigraphique , 1888	211
1889	449
Dehaisnes's (Mgr.) La Vie et l'Œuvre de Jean Bellegambe	174
Howorth's (D. F.) Coins and Tokens of the English Colonies	273
Hübner's (E.) Römische Herrschaft in West Europa	449
Irwin's (D. H.) British War Medals and Decorations	273
Le Jay's (P.) Inscriptions Antiques de la Côte-d'Or	449
Lermoloff's (I.) Die Galerien Borghese und Doria-Panfilii in Rom	300
Nightingale's (J. E.) The Church Plate of the County of Dorset	15
Pennell's (J.) Pen-Drawing and Pen-Draughtsmen	291
Simpson's (W. S.) Gleanings from Old S. Paul's	50
Sparvel Bayly's (J. A.) New Studies in Old Subjects	139
Verrall and Harrison's Mythology and Monuments of Ancient Athens	431
Von Veith & Klein's Das römische Lager in Bonn	450
Williamson's (G. O.) Trade Tokens issued in the Seventeenth Century	139
Wroth's (W.) Pontus, Bithynia, and Bosphorus (Greek Coins)	342

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Archæology, London Lectures on	274
Babylonian Tablets, a Collection of	433
Burlington Fine Arts Club	433
East's (Mr. Alfred) Pictures of Japan	175
Egypt, Letters from	157, 194, 227, 273
Excavations in the Fayum	242
..... at Platea	327
..... in Cyprus	343
..... proposed, at Chester	395
Fulleylove's (Mr. J.) New Drawings	86
Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts	139
Grosvener Gallery, the	377
Johnson's (Mr.) Pictures of Highland Sports	122
Mezzotint, a New	122
Numismatic Publications	272
Naukratis, a Relic of	291
Old Masters (the) at Burlington House	32, 69, 106
Painter-Etchers, the	193
Prints, some New	51
Rembrandt's Drawings	242
Royal Academy, the	325, 359, 394
..... Scottish Academy	156
..... Society of Painters in Water-Colours	326
Scottish National Portrait Gallery	413
Strang, William, the Etched Work of	343

CORRESPONDENCE.

	PAGE
"Gangkee Tiger," the	243
Mutilation of Monuments in Egypt	107
Perrot and Chipiez on the Art of Judæa	378, 414
Phœnician Inscription in Cyprus	140
Runic Stones in the Isle of Man	71
Tile, Roman, a Forged	175

OBITUARY.

	PAGE
Burty, Philippe	414
Poock, Crawford J.	274
Wood, John Turtle	287

NOTES.

Chantrey Fund, Royal Academy's purchases out of the	415
Coins, Indo-Sassanian	415
Crown Derby Porcelain Company	51
Daniel (E. T.), memoir of	379
Duncan's (E.) British Landscape and Coast Scenery and Marine Painting	106
Excavations at Megalopolis	274
Goodall's (Mr.) Contributions to the Royal Academy	287
Gray (Mr. J. M.), on Andrew Geddes	238
Green (Mr. C.), two drawings by	140
Haag's (Mr. C.) portrait of Mr. Papworth	287

NOTES—continued.

	PAGE
Haynes-Williams (Mr.), two pictures by	238
Healy's (Mr. G. P. A.) portrait of Lord Lytton	287
Hissarlik, nature of the ruins at	53
Hole's (Mr.) etching, "The Wood Sawyers"	243
Lemaire, Mme., water-colour drawings by	396
Morland's mezzotints	141
Mullins (Mr. Roscoe), two figures by	238
Nisbet's (Ethel) Flower Painting for Beginners	108
Penicuik House, Midlothian, Art treasures at	87
Rajputana, Drawings from Indian buildings in	87
Salamis, Discovery of an early temple at	176
Spielmann's (M. H.) paper on Critics and Artists	123
Year's Art, The, for 1890	71

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

American Journal of Archaeology	106, 344
Archæologisch-epigraphische Mittheilungen	450
Art Journal	123
Indian Antiquary	272
Magazine of Art	121
Portfolio	121
Reliquary	15

THE STAGE AND MUSIC.

THE STAGE.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Edwards's (H. S.) Idols of the French Stage	243
Pemberton's (T. E.) Memoir of Edward Askew Sotherton	87
Robertson's (T. W.) Dramatic Works	15

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Ajæc, of Sophocles, at St. Andrews	176
A Midsummer Night's Dream , at the Globe	83
A Village Priest , at the Haymarket	274
Clarissa, at the Vaudeville	153
Daly Company at the Lyceum	415
Dick Venables , at the Shaftesbury	309
Dr. Bill , at the Avenue	108
Foot's Mate , at the Avenue	108
Hamlet , at the Globe	195
Judas , at the Shaftesbury	396
Matinée , at the Haymarket	344
Relapse , The , at the Vaudeville	228
Specioses , A Pair of , at the Garrick	176
Todhunter's (Dr.) Pastoral at Bedford Park	344
Vanbrugh at the Vaudeville	228
Violin Makers , The , at the Shaftesbury	309

OBITUARY.

	PAGE
Maclean, John	212
Marston, Westland	52

NOTES.

As You Like It , at the St. James's	177
Barrett, Mr. Wilson, in America	258
Bernhardt, Sarah, as the Virgin Mary	287
..... as Joan of Arc	450
Cinderella , at Her Majesty's	16
Is a Day , at Terry's	397
Lowie the Eleventh , at the Lyceum	379
Marshall, Mr. Frank, death of	16
Much Ado about Nothing , by the Shakespeare Reading Society	177
Nerves , at the Comedy	434
New Lamps for Old , at Terry's	123
Poel and Berlyn Drawing Room	159
Comedies Company	159
Toole, Mr. J. L., visit of, to Australia	123

MUSIC.

REVIEWS.

	PAGE
Brookhoven's (J. A.), System of Harmony	73
Donovan's (J.) Music and Action	141
Klein's (H.) Musical Notes , 1889	213
Kobbé's (G.) Wagner's Ring of the Nibelungen	16
Musical Notation of the Middle Ages	451

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Carl Rosa Opera Season at Drury Lane	258, 292, 379
Gluck's "Orpheus" at Cambridge	345
Musical Publications 18, 34, 72, 276, 293, 328
National Society of Professional Musicians	34, 52
"Thorgrim" at Drury Lane	292

NOTES.

	PAGE
Antigone , of Sophocles, at the Westminster Town Hall	310
"Die Meistersinger," at Covent Garden	416
CONCERTS:
Monday Popular	53, 89, 108, 142, 177, 193, 213, 244
Saturday Popular	71, 108, 123, 143, 159, 177, 196, 213, 229, 244, 268, 275, 293, 310
Henachel's	86, 123, 159
Hallé's	89, 123
Bach Choir	159, 346
Wind Instrument Chamber Music Society	177
Pachmann's farewell	177
Philharmonic Society	213, 244, 310, 346, 379, 416
Crystal Palace	327, 451
Welsh music at St. James's Hall	337
Richter	346, 361, 397, 434
Sarasate's	416, 434
"Cotter's Saturday Night, The," set to music	178
Italian Opera at Covent Garden	361, 397
Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" at the Crystal Palace	451
Meyerbeer's "Le Prophète," at Covent Garden	451
Mignon , at Drury Lane	275
Stavenshagen, Herr	71

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 922.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

THE LANCASHIRE LIFE of BISHOP FRASER.

By JOHN W. DIGGLE, M.A., Vicar of Mossley Hill, Liverpool, Hon. Canon of Liverpool; Author of "Godliness and Manliness," "True Religion," &c.; also Editor of Bishop Fraser's Sermons. Second Edition. 1 vol., illustrated, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.
"This important work is the history of a very grand episcopacy. The story of what can be done in fifteen years—and that by the simplest means—is a bit of blue sky, indeed, an expanse of blue sky, in our cloudy heavens."—The Times.
"A singularly complete picture of James Fraser as bishop, philanthropist, and citizen."—Record.

THE LIFE of HARRIET BEECHER STOWE. Edited by her Son, Rev. CHARLES E. STOWE. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 1 vol. demy 8vo, about 500 pages, cloth, 15s.

The volume contains numerous letters from such distinguished persons as Archbishop Whately, Charles Kingsley, Mrs. Browning, Rk. Hon. John Bright, Mr. Ruskin, James Russell Lowell, Harriet Martineau, Lady Byron, all of immediate interest, as throwing light on the personality of Mrs. Stowe, and illustrating the works which have emanated from her pen.

LOUISA MAY ALCOTT: her Life, Letters, and Journals.

Edited by EDNAH D. CHENEY. With 2 Portraits of Miss Alcott, and a view of her Concord Home. 450 pages, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"Miss Cheney has done her best with her subject and with her materials, and we may be glad to have for girls such a compact and interesting memorial of a writer whose appreciation can do them nothing but good. And further, it would be a pity to leave the impression that no others should read this volume. It throws side-lights on domestic and literary America before the war, and is by no means without such humour as appeals to any who love their fellow-men."—Spectator.

RANDOLPH CALDECOTT: a Personal Memoir of his Early

Art Career. By HENRY BLACKBURN, Author of "Academy Notes," "Breton Folk," &c. With 172 Illustrations. New and Cheaper Edition, with Portrait, 7s. 6d.
"We do not hesitate to give a high place among the Christmas books of the year to the Memoir of Randolph Caldecott, one whose pencil charmed so many with its graceful humour. These drawings are nothing less than delightful; so various so genial, and so full of taste, and, when the occasion serves, of a sense of beauty, are they."—Spectator.

THE PRINCIPAL DRAMATIC WORKS of THOMAS

WILLIAM ROBERTSON. With Memoir by his Son. Illustrated with 6 Photogravure Portraits of J. Hare, Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft, F. A. Sothorn, H. J. Montague, and Geo. Honey. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, One Guinea.
"They are invaluable to the student of the stage; inestimable documents in theatrical history."—World.

MEMORIES of FIFTY YEARS. By Lester Wallack.

Large Paper Edition of Fifty Copies, printed on extra plate paper, small 4to boards, cloth back, autograph in gilt letters, £3 3s. net. Ordinary Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
"Very pleasant reading do they constitute, and the volume, overflowing with portraits and other illustrations, is an agreeable possession. Besides being agreeable reading, is a welcome contribution to stage history."—Saturday Review.

NEW NOVELS AND STORIES AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

Third Edition, NOW READY.

KIT and KITTY: a Story of West Middlesex. By R. D.

BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.
"The plot, good as it is, is not the point in this charming romance. The finer and the truer point is in the admirable literature of the book, in the sense of open air and freshness, in the descriptions—the fruit ripening under your eye, the wind blowing the open page. The dialogue is exquisitely chiselled."—Daily News.

A LITTLE JOURNEY in the WORLD: a Novel. By

CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER, Author of "Their Pilgrimage," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

IN FAR LOCHABER. By William Black, Author of "The Strange Adventures of a House-Boat," "A Daughter of Heth," &c. New and Cheaper Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"A capital story of Scotch life, briskly and brightly told, and full of startling contrasts."—Standard.

"This is a good little book."—Athenæum.

BETWIXT THE FORELANDS. By W. Clarke Russell,

Author of "The Wreck of the 'Grosvenor,'" "The Frozen Pirate," &c. 1 vol., with numerous illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.
"A long-shore chat about the Straits of Dover and seafaring life generally. A most interesting book, and freely illustrated."—Glasgow Herald.

JUPITER LIGHTS: a Novel. By Constance F. Woolson,

Author of "Anne," "East Angels," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RANDALL TREVOR. By H. P. Earl, Author of "His Sisters," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"Randall Trevor," with its pictures of Oxford and country life, is a well written and interesting novel. His portrait of character is generally excellent."—Morning Post.

THREE DIGGERS: a Tale of the Australian 'Fifties. By PERCY CLARKE, LL.B., Author of "The New Chum in Australia," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE STORY of EMIN'S RESCUE, as told in STANLEY'S LETTERS. Published by Mr. Stanley's permission. Edited by J. Scott Keltie, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society; with a Map of the Route from the Congo to the coast. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

"It will of course be distinctly understood that this little volume will in no way trench upon Mr. Stanley's great work, which cannot possibly be published for several months."

AUSTRALIA TWICE TRAVERSED: the Romance of

Exploration. Being a Narrative compiled from the Journals of Five Exploring Expeditions into and through Central, South, and Western Australia, from 1872 to 1876. By ERNEST GILES, Fellow and Gold Medallist of the Royal Geographical Society, London. With Six Maps, and numerous illustrations. 2 vols. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 30s.

THE LAND of an AFRICAN SULTAN: Travels in Morocco. By WALTER B. HAERIS, F.R.G.S. ("AL AISOU"). With numerous illustrations by Aleck Berens. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. A Large-Paper Edition (limited to 200 copies), at 31s. 6d. net.

FRIESLAND MERES, and THROUGH the NETHER-

LANDS: the Voyage of a Family in a Norfolk Wherry. By HENRY MONTAGU DOUGHTY, Author of "Summer in Broadland." With about 50 illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 8s. 6d.

"From beginning to end this book is full of interest, the places described being seldom visited by Englishmen. The illustrations are numerous and remarkably good; some are from pen-and-ink sketches made on the spot by three members of the party, others are from photographs. The book is also furnished with two good maps, on which the author's route is laid down."—Field.

BLACKS and BUSHRANGERS; or, Adventures in North

Queensland. By E. B. KENNEDY. With 8 Original Illustrations by Stanley Berkeley. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.
"One of the most exciting and interesting stories of the season."—Standard.

THROUGH ATOLLS, and ISLANDS in the GREAT

SOUTH SEA. By FREDERICK J. MOSS, Member of the House of Representatives, New Zealand. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

TROOPER and REDSKIN. Recollections of Life in the North-West Mounted Police, Canada. By JOHN G. DONKIN. The Author served in the Mounted Police of Canada from 1884 to 1888, and met with some lively experiences in outlying stations in the North-West. The book contains a Map and Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

NEW JUVENILE BOOKS.

RANDOLPH CALDECOTT'S SKETCHES. A Collection of about 200. With an Introduction by HENRY BLACKBURN, Editor of "Memoirs of R. Caldecott," "Academy Notes," &c. Demy 4to, picture boards, 2s. 6d.

"An extremely interesting volume."—Spectator.

THE CONQUEST of the MOON: a Story of the Bayouda.

By ANDRÉ LAURIE. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.
"Emphatically a book of marvels and a marvellous book, a book sufficient in itself to make memorable the season, a 'white book' for wonder-loving readers, a story that rivals the most ingenious conceptions of Edgar Poe, and M. Jules Verne."—Saturday Review.

SIR LUDAR: a Tale of the Days of Good Queen Bess. By TALBOT BAINES REED, Author of "The Fifth Form at St. Dominic's," "The Willoughby Captains," &c. Crown 8vo, with numerous illustrations, cloth, 6s.

"As a picture of life in Elizabethan time, and a tale of adventure, the volume is likely to prove acceptable to those for whom it is specially written."—Morning Post.

ADRIFT in the PACIFIC. By Jules Verne, Author of

"Around the World in Eighty Days," "The Clipper of the Clouds," &c. Over Sixty illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.
"It is written with all the author's well-known boldness of imagination and ingenuity in devising surprises of adventure. It will please boys heartily."—Scotsman.

LOST in AFRICA: a Tale of Adventure. By F. H. Winder.

Crown 8vo, with Eight illustrations, cloth, 6s.
"This is a very successful story of its kind, and the characters are, without exception, well drawn. The excitement is kept up from beginning to end. It is but fair to Mr. Winder to add that he exhibits no slovenliness in style."—Academy.

ANDROMEDA; or, the Maid of the Golden Age. By H.

C. McLEAN. With Eight Original Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.
"The title does not indicate it, but it is none the less a capital 'yarn' concerning the life and adventures of one 'Harry' during his six years' apprenticeship on board Her Majesty's ship 'Andromeda.'"—Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW READY. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.—January Number.

CONTENTS:

ST. ANDREWS. ANDREW LANG. Fourteen illustrations. Drawn by Joseph Pennell. JAMAICA, NEW AND OLD. First Paper. HOWARD PYLE. With Twenty-two illustrations. Drawn by Howard Pyle.

THE RUSSIAN ARMY. By a RUSSIAN GENERAL. Sixteen illustrations. Drawn by T. de Thulestrup.

TWO PHASES OF AMERICAN ART. Mrs. L. C. LILLIE. Illustrated.

A NIGHT AT OUSELEY MANOR. A STORY. KATHARINE S. MACQUOID. Illustrated.

THE SMYRNA FIG HARVEST. Eleven illustrations. Drawn by Tristram Ellis.

&c., &c. Nearly Eighty illustrations.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE NEW CHESTERFIELD LETTERS, by W. P. COURTNEY	1
THE REV. TOM BROWN'S MANX POEMS, by HALL	2
UAIINE	3
TWO HUNTERS IN THE FAR WEST, by Dr. R. BROWN	4
STEINITZ'S CHESS INSTRUCTOR, by J. I. MINCHIN	5
NEW NOVELS, by G. COTTEBELL	6
FORMS BIOGRAPHICAL BOOKS	7
NOTES AND NEWS	8
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A NEW YEAR'S GREETING," by F. P.	8
OBITUARY: BISHOP LIGHTFOOT, by Prof. SANDAY;	9
DR. CHARLES MACKAY, by H. T. W.; &c.	9
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	10
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Fragments of Yorkshire Mysteries , by Prof. Stead;
The Sources of Malory's "Le Morte Darthur" , by Dr. H. Oskar Sommer; A Twenty Years' Lover of Browning in 1856, by Miss Hickey; The
British Record Society , by W. P. W. Phillimore;
The "Ortus Vocabulorum" of Wynkyn de Worde ,
by R. G. O. Proctor	10
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	13
RAWLINSON'S HISTORY OF PHOENICIA, by Prof.	13
SAYCE	13
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Inscriptions from Naukratis , by Prof.
Hirschfeld	13
SCIENCE NOTES	14
PHILOLOGY NOTES	14
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	14
NIGHTINGALE'S CHURCH PLATE OF THE COUNTY OF
DORSET, by W. M. CONWAY	15
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	15
ROBERTSON'S DRAMATIC WORKS, by F. WEDMORE	15
STAGE NOTES	16
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	16
MUSIC NOTES	17

FOREIGN STAMPS.—WANTED a COLLECTION, small or large. It must be old. State price.—LUNDANIA, Moffat, N.B.

LECTURES and LESSONS in English Literature and Composition, Logic, Moral Philosophy, Political Economy, and Classics, by experienced Teacher. Graduate in First Class Honours.—Address Rev. W. STEWART, M.A., LL.B., 44, Fulham-road, S.W.

PARTNERSHIP.—A London Publisher having a Good Connection desires a PARTNER with £1,500 Capital. Half-share for £1,000. Full investigation. Good references given. Apply (principals only) to J. M. UFFILL, Esq., Solicitor, 114A, Chancery-lane, W.C.

MR. RICHARD SHIPMAN, DRAMATIC RECITER, accepts PUBLIC or PRIVATE ENGAGEMENTS. "Forceful and realistic."—Evening News. "Refined and pleasing."—Society Herald.—Address Earle Villa, Putney, S.W.

TO PUBLISHERS, EDITORS, and PRO-PRIETORS OF NEWSPAPERS and MAGAZINES (London or Provincial).—An Author who has published several volumes of Poems, and who can write Prose with ease, wishes an ENGAGEMENT. Is a good Accountant, and would be agreeable to assist at or take charge of Books in addition to Literary services rendered. Low remuneration.—Address J. R. Post Office, London and North-Western Railway Station, Finner, Middlesex.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINA-TION for filling up about FOUR VACANCIES on the FOUNDATION will be held on the 15TH JANUARY NEXT.—For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—The EXHIBITION of WORKS by the OLD MASTERS and by DISCEPLED MASTERS of the BRITISH SCHOOL, including a collection of Drawings and Models by ALFRED STAYERS, will OPEN on MONDAY NEXT, the 6TH JANUARY, 1890. Admission, 1s. Catalogue, 6d. Season Tickets, 5s.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY. ADMISSION FREE, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C. (About 30 doors West of Mudie's Library.)

THE GREAT MASTERS.—Botticelli, Lorenzo di Credi, Francia, Michael Angelo, Raffaele, Titian, Da Vinci, Correggio, Rembrandt, Van Dyke, Murillo, &c., REPRODUCED in AUTOTYPE, Permanent Photography, from the grand Works in the Louvre, Hermitage, Uffizi, Madrid, Sistine Chapel, the National Gallery, London; the Royal Collections at Windsor and Buckingham Palace. The various Galleries have separate Albums, easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of art. Visitors are welcome to come and study them, and will not be solicited to make purchases. For further particulars, send for the new Pamphlet, 40 pages and Four Illustrations, entitled "AUTOTYPE, a Decorative and Educational Art." Free per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE, 180 pp., free per post for 6d.

AUTOTYPE BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS. The AUTOTYPE COMPANY offer their services to AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS to produce by the Autotype Process Book Illustrations of the highest excellence of any subject capable of being photographed. Amongst the WORK RECENTLY DONE may be cited Wyon's "Great Beas of England," Dr. Crookshank's "Micro-Photographs of Bacteria"; "Famous Monuments of Central India," for Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.B.; "Facsimiles of Early Italian Engravings," for the Trustees of the British Museum; "The Palaeographical Society's Facsimiles for 1888"; Illustrations for the "Journal of the Hellenic Society," &c.

For specimens, prices, and full particulars, apply to the MANAGER.

AUTOTYPE PROCESS applied to Photographic Engraving on copper.

Portraits from Paintings by Pettie, R.A., Onless, R.A., Holl, R.A.; Specimens of Copies of Drawings, Etchings, &c.; and Examples of Auto-gravure Reproduction of Photographs from Art Objects, from Life, and from Nature, can be seen at the AUTOTYPE GALLERY.

Estimates and particulars on application.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, W.C.

21, BEDFORD STREET,
COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Mr. WILLIAM HEINEMANN (for 10 years associated with the late firm of Trübner & Co.) begs to announce that he has this day COMMENCED BUSINESS as a PUBLISHER at the above address, and that WORKS in every Branch of LITERATURE submitted to him will receive careful consideration by competent readers. A FIRST LIST of FORTHCOMING PUBLICATIONS, including Works by some of the leading Writers of the day, will shortly be issued.

London, January 1st, 1890.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,
FOR THE CIRCULATION AND SALE OF ALL THE
BEST AND NEWEST BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per Annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per Annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per Annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

TOWN AND VILLAGE CLUBS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the Leading Books of Past Seasons are on Sale, Second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
241, Brompton-road, S.W., and 2, King-street, Cheapside, E.C.

MERCHANT VENTURERS SCHOOL, BRISTOL.

The HEAD MASTERSHIP of this School of Science, Art, Technology, and Commerce will become VACANT after the Examinations in May, 1890.

The School works in connection with the Department of Science and Art, and the Head Master must be qualified to teach and superintend teaching, under the conditions laid down by that Department.

He will be required to devote his whole time to the work of the School, and to be responsible personally for the Chemical branch of it, which has large and well-appointed laboratories.

There are upwards of 1,300 students now in attendance.

Evening classes form an important part of the School.

Applications for the Head Mastership must be sent in to the undersigned address before the 31ST JANUARY, 1890, and may be accompanied by copies of not more than five testimonials.

Applications from candidates, who cannot show that they have had experience in teaching and in organising schools, and in the modes of scientific and technical education, or from candidates above the age of 35, will not be considered.

The salary, made up partly of a fixed payment, partly of capitation fees, and partly of a share of grants on results of examinations, will be guaranteed at not less than £500 a year.

Further information may be obtained from GEORGE H. POPE, Merchant's Hall, Bristol.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

In consequence of the election of Professor Ward to the Principalship, a rearrangement of the History and English Literature Departments has become necessary, and the Council invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP in HISTORY.

The Professor will have charge of the Classes in History, with such assistance as may be granted by the Council. The Professor may also, if he is desirous of doing so, be called upon to conduct the Classes in English Literature, with such assistance as may be granted by the Council, and Candidates are requested in their applications to state if they are prepared to undertake this.

The stipend is £250 per annum, together with two-thirds of the fees paid by students attending the Classes of the Department.

A fuller statement of duties, &c., may be obtained on application.

Applications, with Testimonials, should be sent under cover to the Registrar, not later than 27TH JANUARY, 1890.

HENRY WM. HOLDER, M.A., Registrar.

MIDHURST SCHOOL of ART, SUSSEX.

Principal—Mr. W. FRANK CALDERON.

NEXT TERM COMMENCES TUESDAY, JANUARY 7.

Classes, twice a week, include Drawing and Painting from the Life Draped, Casts, &c., and Instruction in the Study of Animals.

Special arrangements are made by which Students living or lodging in or near Midhurst can work in the Schools every day and receive extra instruction.

ENTRIES CLOSE WEDNESDAY, 15TH INST. INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION

ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING,
GENERAL INVENTIONS AND INDUSTRIES,
EDINBURGH, 1890.

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—THE MARQUIS OF LOTHIAN, K.T.,
Secretary of State for Scotland.

PROSPECTUSES and Forms of APPLICATION for SPACE may be had at the Offices—37, FREDERICK STREET, EDINBURGH; 6, WATERLOO STREET, GLASGOW; and 3, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, LONDON, E.C.

GEORGE E. WATSON, C.A. | S. LEE BAPT, F.R.G.S.,
Secretary. | General Manager.

* Section XVI, EDUCATION and the LIBERAL ARTS CLASSES, 64-68, comprising Educational Appliances and Furniture; Specimens of Pupils' Work; Book Maps, Charts; Drawing and Painting Materials, Stationery, Printing, and Bookbinding.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES is now Open, 5, Pall Mall East from 10 till 5. Admission 1s.; Catalogue 6d.

ELECTION of ASSOCIATES.—The day appointed for receiving works by Candidates is MONDAY, FEBRUARY 17TH, and the day of Election THURSDAY, 20TH.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary R.W.S.

MR. DANNREUTHER'S PROGRAMMES

6TH JANUARY 18th and 20th, FEBRUARY 13th and 27th, will include—C. H. H. Parry: Trio in G. (first performance). C. V. Stanford: Trio, Op. 35 (first performance). Saint-Saëns: Op. 79, Caprice for Flute, Oboe, Clarinet, and Piano. Sgambati: Op. 5, Quinette for Piano and strings (second performance). Bach: Suite in B Minor for Flute, two Violins, Viola, Violoncello, and Bass (second performance). Schumann: Piano-forte Sonatas, Op. 11 and Op. 22. Beethoven: Sonata, Op. 102, No. 1, for Violoncello and Piano-forte, &c.

THE NEW REVIEW.

JANUARY.—Price Sixpence.

A SWIMMER'S DREAM. By ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE.

CANDOUR in ENGLISH FICTION. I. By WALTER BESANT. II. B.

MR. LYNN LINTON. III. By THOMAS HARDY.

HOW TO GET THE TITHE BILL THROUGH THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

By Viscount WOLMER, M.P.

RAMBLES with CUPID and PSYCHE.

TRADES UNIONISM for WOMEN. By Lady DILKE.

WHO NEXT?

THE FATE of SWAZILAND. By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

THE SOLUTION. Part II. By HENRY JAMES.

ROBERT BROWNING: IN MEMORIAM. By EDMUND GOSSE.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S LIST.

NOW READY.

In one handsome volume, 8vo, price 12s. With Etched Portrait by H. MANESSE.

JAMES MACDONELL,
(Of "The Times.")

A STORY OF SELF HELP.

By W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Mr. W. Robertson Nicoll has enriched not only the literature of our day, but the lives of many of us by his sincere, sympathetic, loyal, and artistic rendering of what he fairly calls 'the only life of a journalist 'pure and simple ever written.' This masterly monograph."

GLASGOW HERALD.—"It will be universally allowed that Mr. Nicoll has discharged his task with judgment and perfect literary skill and taste."

LEEDS MERCURY.—"Will be one of the books of the season. It is full of interesting matter, and throws a vivid light on the inner life of journalists and journalism."

J. M. BARRIE'S WORKS.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

A WINDOW IN THRUMS. By J. M. Barrie.

Standard.—"We think that this is the very best of the many good sketches of Scottish peasant life which we have ever read."

Third Edition, crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

AULD LIGHT IDYLLS. By J. M. Barrie.

Academy.—"This is not only the best book dealing exclusively with Scotch humble life, but the only book of the kind deserving to be classed as literature that has been published for at least a quarter of a century."

Second Edition, crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

WHEN A MAN'S SINGLE. A Tale of Literary Life. By J. M. Barrie.

Daily News.—"The best one-volume novel of the year."
Saturday Review.—"From one end to the other the story is bright, cheerful, amusing."

NEW BOOK BY W. M. THAYER.

Handsomely bound, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

From Printing Office

TO THE

Court of St. James.

THE BOYHOOD AND MANHOOD OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.

By W. M. THAYER, Author of "From Log Cabin to White House," &c. With Illustrations.

PROF. G. T. STOKES' NEW WORK.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

IRELAND and the ANGLO-NORMAN CHURCH.

A History of Ireland and Irish Christianity from the Anglo-Norman Conquest to the Dawn of the Reformation.

By the Rev. G. T. STOKES, D.D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Dublin.

Scotsman.—"It is marked by freshness and vivacity. He touches nothing which he does not illuminate and invest with a fresh interest for the student of Irish history."

By the same Author, Second Edition, 9s.

IRELAND and the CELTIC CHURCH.

A History of Ireland, from St. Patrick to the English Conquest in 1172.

"Anyone who can make the dry bones of ancient Irish history live again may feel sure of finding an audience sympathetic, intelligent, and ever-growing. Dr. Stokes has this faculty in a high degree."—Westminster Review.

ARCHDEACON WHATELY.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

Personal and Family
Glimpses of Remarkable People.

By the Venerable Archdeacon E. W. WHATELY, M.A., late Chancellor of St. Patrick's and Rector of Werberg, Dublin.

"A bright and pleasant book of cultivated and well-informed gossip."—Leeds Mercury.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, Paternoster Row.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

Novels at all Circulating Libraries in Town and Country.

By

JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

MRS. BOB. (2 vols.)

By the Author of
"Bootles' Baby," "Buttons,"
"Bootles' Children," ("s);
"Beautiful Jim" (2s. 6d. & 2s.) &c.

The Morning Post's opinion.—"In 'Mrs. Bob' the author continues her chronicles of Blaukhampston, but varies them by the introduction of an element at once novel and thrilling.... It will serve to keep the author's readers in a state of thrilling excitement from start to finish."

The Scotsman's opinion.—"Mrs. Bob' derives its charm, like most of its author's novels, from its light and free treatment of a serious theme.... The story is told with a rare knowledge of the character (of women, and with an easy-going good sense and good-humour in the handling of the incidents, such as make it far more attractive than a y sketch of its plot can indicate.... It is interesting throughout, and will be widely read."

Life's opinion of the Author's Stories.—"J. S. Winter's stories blossom with perennial popularity.... For the million J. S. Winter's writings have a charm that insures unlimited demand."

A LIFE'S REMORSE.
(3 vols.)By the Author of 'Molly Bawn,' 'Phyllis,'
'The Hon. Mrs. Vereker' (2s. 6d.);
'A Troublesome Girl' (1s.) &c.

The Morning Post's opinion.—".... as vivacious as many of the author's previous works.... there runs throughout these volumes a strain of mirth and fun quite in keeping with the youth of most of the principal characters and genuine enough to be contagious which should propitiate the severest critic. One must have but little sense of humour not to laugh over the sallies of the irrepressible 'Batty,' a portrait natural enough to have been drawn from life, while pretty Evelyn is one of the foremost among winning heroines. Very much at home in the midst of fun and frolic, the author dips her pen in gall to imitate the acid words exchanged between Lady Sumer and her feminine adversaries. Her dialogues, of whatever kind, are full of smart sayings, and, together with her sympathetic dramatic personae, make up a bright and amusing novel."

A CRUEL WRONG.
3 vols.By Mrs. HOUSTOUN,
Author of
'Recommended to Mercy,'
'Barbara's Warning' (2s. 6d.),
&c.By F. C. PHILIPS,
Author of
'As in a Looking Glass,' &c.,
and C. J. WILLS,
Author of
'The Pitt Town Coronet,' &c.
(And at all Booksellers.)SYBIL ROSS'S
MARRIAGE.

The Romance of an Inexperienced Girl. (1 vol., 6s.)
Piccadilly's opinion.—"The combined efforts of these authors have resulted in a story of a very uncommon kind. One of the most striking and powerful pieces of fiction of recent years.... the chapters in which the strange wooing of the pretty, romantic child by the London thief is narrated are not only singularly well written, but characterized by much grace and poetic feeling.... The story is new, both in inception and execution, and should increase the reputation of the authors, who may both be congratulated upon their production of a novel as realistic, the living, and pathetic as 'Foul Play.'"

THE M.F.H.'S
DAUGHTER.By Mrs. ROBERT JOCELYN,
Author of
'£100,000 versus Ghosts' (2 vols.),
'A Distracting Guest' (2 vols.),
&c.

The Scotsman's opinion.—"The things that are characterised by genuine colour are the descriptions of the hunting field. Clearly Mrs. Jocelyn is an enthusiastic lover of the field, and here and there gives us a pretty picture of good Old English sporting life.... Old Squire Vernon is a very lovable character, and, on the whole, well drawn."

By FLORENCE MARRYAT,
Author of 'My Sister the Actress' (2s.),
'Facing the Footlights' (2s. 6d.), &c.MOUNT EDEN.
3 vols.SHEBA.
3 vols.By "RITA,"
Author of 'Dune Darden,'
'Miss Kate' (6s.), 'A Vagabond Lover' (1s.),
&c.By MRS. AYLMER GOWING,
Author of
'The Jewel Reputation,'
&c.AN UNRULY
SPIRIT.
3 vols.

Will be published immediately.

BEAUTIFUL JIM. (5th Edition) By

JOHN STRANGE WINTER. Illustrated by J. S.

LONG ODDS. By Hawley Smart.

1 vol., cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

A FRENCH MARRIAGE. By F. C.

PHILIPS, Author of 'As in a Looking Glass,' &c. In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET,
STRAND, W.C.

Swan Sonnenschein & Co.'s List.

Parallel Grammar Series.

Edited by Professor E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A. (Oxon.).

Latin Grammar. By Prof. E. A. SONNENSCHN, M.A., Oxon. ACCIDENCE, price 1s. 6d.; SYNTAX, price 1s. 6d.

First Latin Reader and Writer. By O. M. DIX, M.A., Oxon. Price 1s. [SECOND READER, in Jan., 1890.]

French Grammar. By Prof. L. M. MORIARTY, M.A., Oxon. (Edinb.). ACCIDENCE, price 1s. 6d.; SYNTAX (early in 1890), price 1s. 6d.

First French Reader and Writer. By R. J. MORICH (Manca, Grim. Fohl.) and W. S. LYON, M.A., Oxon. [Jan. 1890.]

German Grammar. By Kuno Mayer, Ph.D., (Univ. G.H. Lepol.). ACCIDENCE, price 1s. 6d.; SYNTAX, price 1s. 6d.

First German Reader and Writer. By Prof. E. A. SONNENSCHN, F.R.S. [Jan. 1890.]

Second German Reader and Writer. By W. STUART MACGOWAN, B.A., Cantab. (Cheltenham Coll.) [In prep.]

English Grammar. By J. HALL, M.A., Head Master of Hulme Grammar School, Manca; A. J. COOPER, Edgworth High Sch.; and the EDITOR. ACCIDENCE, 1s.; SYNTAX, 1s.

Lessons and Exercises on Eng. Gram. Part I, by M. A. WOODS, Clifton High School. Part II, (January, 1890), by A. J. COOPER, F.C.P. Price 1s. each.

Greek Grammar. By F. HAVERFIELD, M.A., Oxon. (Landing Coll.) [In prep.]

Spanish Grammar. By H. B. CLARK, B.A., Oxon., Taylorian Scholar in Spanish. [In prep.]

Other READERS and WRITERS to follow shortly.

Opinions of the Press.

Athenaeum.—"Marks a new departure, and is a real advance. Any one of these grammars may be used separately. They may be used with still greater advantage in combination. The method upon which they are written involves no special difficulties."

Academy.—"Obviously, this parallel method has great advantages. In general execution all these grammars are of exceptionally high merit."

Classical Review.—"This happy idea of parallelism is happily carried out.... applied with thoroughgoing skill."

Journal of Education.—"The rules are tersely and distinctly stated. The type is very good, and the arrangement excellent."

PUBLIC SCHOOLS' YEAR-BOOK. The 30 Principal Schools. Part I. EDUCATIONAL. Part II. ATHLETICS. 2s. 6d. Athletics separately, 1s. "The execution is admirable. Accurate and complete information, well up to date."—Journal of Education.THE STUDENT'S CICERO. Adapted from the German of Dr. MUNK, by W. Y. FAUSSET, M.A., of Fettes College. With an engraved Portrait. 3s. 6d. Embracing the sort of book that a student will find profitable.—Spectator.

BIRD'S-EYE MAP OF PALESTINE. By FRANCES H. WOOD. Glazed, on rollers. Palestine, 64 by 34 inches, 12s. 6d.; Judaea, 34 by 23 inches, 3s. 6d.; Jerusalem, 25 by 20 inches, 3s. 6d. HANDBOOK to the above. Fourth Edition. Limp cloth, 1s. 6d.

AN INDISPENSABLE COMPLEMENT TO "ORIMM."

TEUTONIC MYTHOLOGY. By Prof. VICTOR RYDBERG. Large 8vo, 21s. "An indispensable part of the material for students who neglect it will do so to their own blame and loss. A solid piece of hard work."—*Saturday Rev.*THE HISTORY OF PHILOSOPHY. By Dr. ERDMANN. Now first translated, I. ANCIENT and MEDIEVAL; 15s. II. MODERN, 15s. III. SINCE HEGEL, 12s. "The best general history to be got."—Scotsman.

THE NOVEL THAT IS BEING MOST DISCUSSED.

A CONSPIRACY OF SILENCE. By G. COLMORE. 3 vols. St. James's Gazette says: "It is doubly interesting. A strong book certainly, but not suitable for weak nerves."

Glasgow Herald says: "The work of a true literary artist. A world and intensely interesting tale." Saturday Review says: "It is a study in character and a very clever and very painful book."

Literary World: "An excellent novel, thoroughly interesting."

THE SPANISH PONIARD: the Remorse of Ambrose Drybridge. By THOR A. PINKERTON. 1 vol. "A romance of keen interest. The conception of the character and fate of Drybridge is just such a one as might have occurred to Mr. Hawthorne. Mr. Pinkerton works it out with scarcely less inventiveness than emphasises the uneasy suggestions of the author of the 'Scarlet Letter.'"—Scotsman.JOHN NEWBOLD'S ORDEAL. By THOMAS PINKERTON. Second Edition. 6s. "An unmistakably clever book. By the few who know and love good work it will be found thoroughly enjoyable."—Spectator. "Brilliant of cleverness."—Post.

OFFICIAL TOUR through BOSNIA and HERZEGOVINA. By J. D. ASBOTH. Very fully illustrated, 21s.

"It promises much to the archaeologist and historian, the student of primitive literature, poetry, and laws, and the searcher after picturesque scenery and customs."—Scotsman.

"A most valuable work. It contains one of the most interesting accounts of the Bogomil heresy that we have met with. Profusely illustrated."—Athenaeum.

RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS OF THE WORLD: National, Christian, and Philosophic. 7s. 6d., 573 pages, large 8vo.

A Series of Papers by Edw. Clodd, Can. Hamilton, &c. C. B. Swinburn, J. Leake, S. Real, Jas. Bird, Sir A. Lyall, Dr. Leitner, F. York Powell, Oscar Browning, J. A. Fictor, Dr. Ed. White, J. Clifford, W. Pollard, Fred. Harrison, W. H. Lilly, D. Na. R. J., F. Pincoff, M. Joseph, J. M. Robertson, G. W. Foot, H. W. Cross Key, Stanton Coll. C. Vorse, and 16 other leading Specialists on the 40 principal Ethnic Religions, Christian &c. and Philosophic Creeds.

A NEW DEPARTMENT IN ENGLISH POETRY.

THE PAGEANT OF LIFE: an Epic of Man in Five Books. By GEORGE BARLOW. Second Edition (within 12 months), 4s. 6d. "A low price has arisen among us; an indispensable poet, forcible, graceful, earnest, courageous; having something of real interest and great moment to say, and knowing how to express his thoughts in words of extraordinary power and lines of real beauty."—Daily Telegraph.THE QUAKERS: a Study, Historical and Critical. By F. STORRS TURNER. 6s. "It can hardly be praised too highly."—Manchester Examiner. "This excellent little book, Mr. Turner has told an interesting story well."—St. James's Gazette.

"Here both the good and the bad sides of the movement are told."—Scots Observer.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co., Paternoster-Eq., E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

A New Story by Rhoda Broughton,
The Popular Author of "Red as a Rose is She," and "Nancy," entitled

ALAS!

AND

A New Story by Mrs. Annie Edwardes,
Author of "Ought We to Visit Her?" entitled

PEARL POWDER, are commenced in the JANUARY NUMBER of THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

Published on Saturday, December 21. Price One Shilling. To be had of every bookseller in town and country, and at all Railway Stations.

IN an ENCHANTED ISLAND: A VISIT to CYPRUS in 1889. By W. H. MALLOCK. Author of "Is Life Worth Living?" &c. Second Edition.
In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Frontispiece, 12s.

"Mr. Mallock has passed a winter's retreat in Cyprus, and the result is this charming volume of fact, fancy, and philosophy. The author saw many things in Cyprus, and cogitated much on the social and political problems, as well as on the natural beauties of the classic spot. He has stood upon the hill tops, visited old abbeys, and inspected all the horrors of the prisons. He has collected anecdotes and moralised thereon, and all through he writes with a perfect mastery of pure, lucid style. There is a literary fascination about all Mr. Mallock's work, and as a study in style alone this book can, indeed, be held up as a type of the best in writing." Daily Telegraph.

A TOUR in a PHAETON THROUGH the EASTERN COUNTIES. By JAMES JOHN
HISSEY. Author of "An Old-Fashioned Journey,"
&c. In demy 8vo, with Map and Illustrations, 16s.

"Mr. Hisey's pleasant book will be a revelation to many of what quaint, picturesque villages and splendid mansions of the Tudor time exist in the Eastern Counties. Mr. Hisey would allure into rural England—and especially into East Anglia—the crowds of his countrymen and countrywomen who kill time abroad more or less uncomfortably, while they are in ignorance of their own country."—Echo.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT SHELLEY. By Mrs.
JULIAN MARSHALL. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portrait and Facsimiles, 80s.

A MEMOIR of E. A. SOTHERN
"LORD DUNDREARY." By T. EDGAR
PEMBERTON. Second Edition. In 1 vol., demy
8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles, 16s.

NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF
"MASTERS OF THE WORLD," &c.

THE LOCKET. A Tale of Old Guernsey.

By MARY A. M. HOPPUS (Mrs. MARKS). 2 vols.
"A pretty yet tragic story of love and jealousy, told with a certain grace and simplicity of manner." Athenæum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENETIA'S LOVERS."
A HURRICANE in PETTICOATS. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "The Chilcotes," &c.
8 vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A MODERN BRIGAND."
MAYGROVE. By W. Fraser Rae,
Author of "Miss Bayle's Romance," &c. 3 vols.

"A book to be read. The vigorous, masculine style, the knowledge of the world and of life under various aspects, the humour and the epigrams, as well as the extremely shrewd, if somewhat cynical, observations with which it abounds take it out of the category of ordinary works of fiction of the present day, and serve to give the book an interest."—Observer.

BY THE AUTHOR OF
"THE DANVERS JEWELS."

SIR CHARLES DANVERS. 2 vols.

"Novels so amusing, so brightly written, so full of simple sense and witty observation, are not found every day. It is a charming love story, lightened upon all sides by the humorous genial character-sketches of less important personages. For a wonder, we want the third volume the author has denied us."—Saturday Review.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Cassell's & Company's Announcements

NOW READY.

Complete in 3 vols., price 12s. each.

A HISTORY of MODERN EUROPE.

By C. A. FYFFE, M.A.,

Fellow of University College, Oxford.

Vol. I. from 1792 to 1814; Vol. II. from 1814 to 1848;
Vol. III. from 1848 to 1878.

NOW READY.

Complete in 3 vols., price 9s. each.

OUR EARTH and ITS STORY.

EDITED BY

DR. ROBERT BROWN, M.A., F.L.S., F.R.G.S.

With Thirty-six Coloured Plates and numerous
Wood Engravings.

"Our Earth and its Story," edited by Dr. Brown, is of very high merit; it is lucidly written, abreast of the most recent results of scientific research, and most beautifully illustrated. No school library should be without it, and in the hands of learners of all ages it is sure to convey a vast amount of information."—Athenæum.

IMPORTANT FINE-ART VOLUME.

Now Ready, price Two Guineas.

THE RIVERS of GREAT BRITAIN.

DESCRIPTIVE, HISTORICAL, PICTORIAL

RIVERS of the EAST COAST.

With numerous highly finished Engravings from Original Drawings.

Royal 4to, 384 pages, cloth gilt, gilt edges, with Etching as Frontispiece.

"In regard both to illustration and to literary work, the book is comprehensively and ably done. The number of illustrations is immense, and it may be added that the quality of the cuts is good. Publishers and writers are especially to be congratulated on having had a share in the production of a volume which satisfies a real want." THE STANDARD.

The First large Edition of Sir ROBERT BALL'S
New Work,

STAR-LAND,

Having already been exhausted, the book has been reprinted, and copies are again on sale at all Booksellers, price 6s.

NOTICE.

THE SECOND EDITION OF

Q'S NEW WORK, The SPLENDID SPUR

Is now on Sale at all Booksellers.

"From the moment that his hero falls asleep at his fencing master's, in Oxford, till fair Della sets sail for France, there is not a single pause in the heady current of adventure."—Daily News.

NEW VOLUME BY R. L. STEVENSON.

SIXTEENTH THOUSAND, now ready, price 5s.

THE MASTER of BALLANTRAE.

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON,

Author of "Treasure Island," "Kidnapped," &c.

"Mr. Stevenson has done it at last. In 'The Master of Ballantrae' he has produced something very like a classic." Pall Mall Gazette.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate-hill, London.

W. H. ALLEN & CO.'S Recent Oriental Publications.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d.

THE SYNTAX and IDIOMS of HIN-

DUSTANI, A Series of Progressive Exercises in Translation, with Grammatical Commentary, Notes, Directions, and Vocabularies on the Model of the best Classical Exercise Books. By M. KEMPSON, M.A., formerly Director of Public Instruction in the N. W. P. of India.

Fcap. 8vo, 5s.

AN ARABIC READING BOOK. By

ALAN R. BIRDWOOD. Containing Sentences and Dialogues, Exercises, Extracts from the Papers, and Facsimiles of MS. writings.

New and Revised Edition, fcap. 8vo, 6s.

TAS-HIL UL KALAM; or, Hindustani made Easy. By Col. W. R. M. HOLROYD, Director of Public Instruction, Punjab.

Royal 4to, cloth, £4 14s. 6d.

A Complete ENGLISH-PERSIAN

DICTIONARY. Compiled from Original Sources. By ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E., H.M.'s Indian (Home) Service, Translator of the "An-war-i-Suhaili," &c., &c.

"All Persian scholars owe the author a heavy debt of gratitude for his undertaking and bringing to so successful an issue so onerous and, in many respects, ungrateful a task."—Academy.

"It is noteworthy that the appearance of this monumental tome, which has occupied the learned leisure of some sixteen years of the author's life, should have been coincident with the visit to our country of his Majesty the Shah. He pleads consideration for inevitable mistakes; but we should be ashamed to look for faults in the vast memorial of patient toil with which the erudite translator of the 'An-war-i-Suhaili' has enriched all Oriental libraries." Daily Telegraph.

"Mr. Wollaston's smaller undertaking of the same kind was a great achievement, but this giant lexicon, in which, as far as can be ascertained, hardly a word of importance in our vernacular is omitted, must be of the utmost assistance to all who desire fully to enjoy the fruits of Persian literature, or to become proficient in perhaps the most poetical of Eastern languages."—Morning Post.

"The book supplies a desideratum for the serious student of Persian, well worth the money value set upon it, and has earned its right to a place in the libraries of upper-class philologists and Oriental scholars."—Athenæum.

TWO NEW MANUALS.—Just Issued.

THE CHINESE MANUAL. By Professor R. K. DOUGLAS. Fcap. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"We welcome this manual as a thoroughly practical and useful help to students who may be about to begin a study of the language. Professor Douglas may be congratulated on having made Chinese grammar intelligible. Its principles are clearly stated, and are illustrated by a host of useful examples. The work is of a convenient and portable size, and the small price brings it within the reach of all serious students."—The Times.

"Professor Douglas' volume possesses several attractions we are not in the habit of associating with Chinese grammars. It is extremely handy in size. There is an enormous number of examples useful to students. Its price is extremely moderate. The book is of a practical character, and fitted to meet the wants of those to whom it is addressed." London and China Telegraph.

"It is now inevitable that the language of China will be much in demand, both among officials and commercial men, and it is therefore satisfactory that the means of acquiring it has been so soon provided. Ordinary industry, aided by this manual, will make more progress in the language in a month than has before been accomplishable in a year." Homeward Mail.

A MANUAL of ANGELICISED COL-

LOQUIAL BURMESE. By Captain F. A. DAVIDSON
Fcap. 8vo, 8s. 6d.

"As a sign of the manner in which the great Anglo-Indian publishing firm of W. H. Allen & Co. keep abreast of the time in Oriental matters, nothing could be more conclusive than the appearance of this Burmese manual. The vocabulary seems an exceptionally good one." Asiatic Quarterly Review.

"The book is likely to be very useful to officers and others desiring to learn Burmese."—Rangoon Times.

"A most useful manual, eminently adapted for non-commissioned officers and soldiers of our army in Burma." Broad Arrow.

A DICTIONARY of the ECONOMIC

PRODUCTS of INDIA. By GEORGE WATT, M.B., C.M., F.L.S., Professor Bengal Educational Department, Assisted by numerous contributors. Published under the authority of the Government of India. 6 vols., royal 8vo. Price to subscribers, up to February 1st, £3 8s.

BENGALI MANUAL. By G. F. NICHOLL

[In preparation.]

W. H. ALLEN & Co., 13, Waterloo Place, S.W.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 4, 1890.

No. 922, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Letters of Lord Chesterfield to his Godson.
Edited, with a Memoir, by the Earl of Carnarvon. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

THESE letters, like their celebrated predecessors from the same writer to his natural son, were composed without any thought of subsequent publication, and are the frank and unrestrained expression of the writer's thoughts and feelings. Those written to the illegitimate Philip Stanhope were given to the world after his death by his widow, and they were published in spite of an attempt to restrain their appearance in print. These, composed for his godson and successor, the lawful Philip Stanhope, were cherished by the son of the recipient for years, and were then given to his son-in-law, Lord Carnarvon, with the hope that they would be published under the present editor's supervision. Affairs of state and other cares intervened to prevent the accomplishment of the task. The letters were placed on one side, and passed out of knowledge. Fortunately they were recovered without any injury to their condition; and they are now issued to the world with all the pomp of wide margins, thick paper, and choice illustrations. The volume does honour to all concerned in its production. Our only doubt is whether the letters would not have been more generally useful had they appeared in a volume of the same size and nature as Lord Stanhope's standard edition of the previous correspondence; but probably their second appearance will be after that fashion. The illustrations add character to the work. The frontispiece is engraved from Gainsborough's well-known painting of Lord Chesterfield (1769), in which he holds a volume of Cicero de Senectute—his favourite author, and the writer of the best Latin and the best sense, as he tells his godson. A second engraving, now produced for the first time, represents a companion picture of the young Philip Stanhope in the same year, resting his hand on a table where lie the classical works which Lord Chesterfield's fancy painted as supplying the quotations for his speeches in Parliament. Another depicts him now passed into middle-life in the farmyard at Bretby, and among the cattle that he bred. In the fourth are shown the two earls, Chesterfield and Scarborough, the latter being the high-minded peer who put an end to his existence; and the words "avulso deficit alter" in the corner express the grief with which the survivor lamented the loss of the "best man he ever knew and the dearest friend he ever had."

It is impossible not to feel some commiseration for the perpetual disappointment which clouded Lord Chesterfield's career, and equally impossible to withhold our admiration from the energy with which, when one attempt ended in failure, he laid the foundations of another. Ambition to excel in politics marked all the working years of his life; but in the official world his name is only perpetuated through his splendid exile in Ireland. Even his marriage seems to have been intended to promote his advancement in office. His wife was the illegitimate daughter of the first George; but the marriage did not help him in his parliamentary career, and the death of her mother, rich as she was, brought no addition to his fortune. Chesterfield when under age was returned for an obscure borough in the West of England, and "from the day he was elected to the day that he spoke he thought nor dreamed of nothing but speaking." His illegitimate son was, no doubt with a view to future benefits, sent on the grand tour with the young patron of the same borough. On his return to Parliament, the old earl primed the youth with "infinite pains" for his maiden speech; but the performance was a failure, and its author could never be cajoled or coerced into making a second attempt. Some years later Chesterfield was driven to the mortification of arranging that the illegitimate Philip Stanhope should publicly acknowledge the failure of his hopes by withdrawing from St. Stephen's in return for a pecuniary consideration. In the case of the subject of the letters now first printed nothing but death spared him the distress of witnessing a second time the ruin of all his plans. The aim that he was driving at is apparent on every page. When the lawful Philip was a child less than ten years old he was enjoined to study the writings of Cicero as the best means of qualifying himself "to make a figure one day in Parliament." A year or two later the fond peer discourses to him on the necessity of learning the French language thoroughly if he wished to become, as he believed that the child did, a Secretary of State. Two years later follows the specific statement that the old man's object was to give his heir and successor "learning enough to distinguish himself in Parliament, and manners to shine in courts." The sincerity of these wishes is beyond a doubt, but the instruments for effecting their fulfilment were unhappily chosen. The youth's first preceptor was a dancing-master from France—a "needy Monsieur" Robert; and he was assisted by a tenth-rate versifier, one Cuthbert Shaw, whose excesses carried him to an early grave. These were succeeded in their turn by the notorious Dr. Dodd, a pretender to religion and to knowledge, with sufficient commercial instinct to see the advantage of the youth as an advertisement, and with impudence enough to write to Charles Yorke that he was about to move into Southampton Row, and desired his kind offices to obtain "two or three more young noblemen or gentlemen," who might be brought up with young Stanhope, and on the same system of education. A less happy selection of tutors for a promising youth could not have been made. Truth to tell, Lord Chesterfield, although he had spent a long life in the fashionable world, was no judge of character in ordinary life. When he went to Ireland, he took a young fop as his secretary, and gave as a reason that he meant to do all the business himself. His natural abilities were sufficient for the task, without any assistance from a subordinate; but, excellent as they were, they would have proved inadequate had Warburton not declined the post of principal chaplain which was offered him. Even Chesterfield's suavity would not have been able to keep the peace with that turbulent priest stirring up the seething mass of ecclesiastical intrigue in Ireland.

As his years sped away, the habits of the young men of the day became more and more displeasing to the old peer. "Their manners are illiberal, and their ignorance is notorious. They are sportsmen, they are jockeys, they know nor love nothing but dogs and horses, racing and hunting." To Chesterfield all this was distasteful. He stood almost alone in his class as an opponent of field sports. He boasted to his godson that he had never in his life "killed his own meat," adjured him to refrain from killing any game himself, and stigmatised country sports generally as "the effects of the ignorance and idleness of country esquires." His godson was to be framed in a very different mould. He was to pass his days as the best-bred gentleman in England. Possessed of abundant powers of wit, he was to keep them always in reserve. "A wise man," runs one of the most trenchant sayings in the letters, "will live at least as much within his wit as within his income." He was to know the chief languages in Europe, "for a man that knows all languages is of all countries, as a man who knows history is of all times." In the perfect character learning was always found combined with true politeness, and with Lord Chesterfield the end of education consisted of good manners in society. Occasionally he strikes a deeper note, and nowhere more clearly than in the letter on "duty to God and duty to man," which Lord Carnarvon has reproduced in facsimile. In this he sums up the rules of life—adoration and thanksgiving to the Creator, and doing unto man what he would wish that man should do unto him, without any arrière pensée; in this he inculcates virtue for virtue's sake, and without any regard to the effect which it might have on the good opinion of his contemporaries. His discretion was not always so sound. A quotation from Dryden that life is "all a cheat" does not strike as a happy selection of a passage for a child of six to learn by heart, and to remember as long as he lived. It was hardly judicious to tell a boy of ten that "the most entertaining and the most instructive company" was a volume of Voltaire. The reference to the possibility of the youth's father marrying for a third time is not couched in the best taste. Nor was it discreet to keep on worrying the youth with the monotonous application of the words Hoc age, and to be always throwing at his head the praises of his sister's application and attention. To tell him in every letter that his sister, with less years and less aids to learning, is more advanced in knowledge than he is would not be productive of good feeling from brother to sister, and would discourage the child in his studies.

These letters show what Lord Chesterfield wished his godson to be and what he himself was. From the first, ambition fired his movements.

"I laboured hard," says the wearied politician in his declining days, "to outstrip my contemporaries in learning. I was mortified if in our little plays they seemed more dextrous than I was; nay, I was uneasy if they danced, walked, or sang more genteelly than myself."

In the last of these objects he gained, by the common consent of mankind, the front place; in learning many of his companions left him far behind in the race. The chief Latin authors, especially Cicero, Horace, and Martial, he read and quoted continually; but his misquotations are numerous, and some of them seem to show that he never could have mastered the rudiments of Latin versification. The French language was his special study, partly as the medium of diplomacy and partly as the language of society; and half of the letters are composed in French, yet not with a perfect command of idiom. The pains with which he studied the success of his rivals is frankly confessed, and the necessity of imitating their industry is hourly repeated to his godson. He asked Bolingbroke how he "could always speak with so much extempore eloquence even in private conversation, without it's smelling of the lamp," and received the reply that St. John had studied diction from the age of twelve or thirteen. Chatham, he himself knew, had practised the art of speaking every day for the past thirty years. Charles Yorke is commended to the young Stanhope for his great figure in parliament, which he deserved by the great pains he had taken to gain success. What the youth should avoid in society was exemplified in the person of Addison, "the most timid and awkward man in good company I ever saw; and no wonder, for he had been wholly cloystered up in the cells of Oxford till he was five-and-twenty years old." Chesterfield's ideal was "a cool intrepid assurance with great seeming modesty," and the first of these qualities had by practice become part of his being. Application, persistent application, was the theme of his letters, whether his examples came from politics, society, or the stage. Garrick was at first a very mediocre actor, but talent and study had raised him to perfection. "Observe Garrick," he cries, "and you will find that throughout his part he never has a look, nor a motion, but what is strictly relative and necessary to it."

What then was the fate of the youth to whom this garrulous old man gossiped on ambition and prattled on philosophy? He lived and died without distinction in the senate, and without shining in courts; a sober, steady, sensible Englishman, finding his pleasures in rural life and in the sports which Chesterfield loathed.

W. P. COURTNEY.

THE REV. TOM BROWN'S MANX POEMS.

The Manx Witch. (Macmillan.)

The Doctor. New Edition. (Sonnenschein.)

Fo's'sle Yarns. New Edition. (Macmillan.)

THERE has been nothing of its kind so good as The Manx Witch since The Doctor, just as there had been nothing of its kind so good as The Doctor since Fo's'sle Yarns. It is perfectly delicious. In humour, in pathos, in character, in local atmosphere, in dialect, and in the poetry of rude life, it is quite the most masterly thing of recent years. I make no qualifications whatever in the extent and quality of this praise in favour of any productions of the kind known to me. The Manx Witch is a work of clear and absolute genius. There is not a page of it that a writer of mere talent could touch; there is hardly a passage that is not alive with the life that genius alone can give. It is not a better work than Betsy Lee, but that is because Betsy Lee is altogether the best poem of its class in the whole range of English verse.

I find it impossible to judge rightly of The Manx Witch apart from The Doctor and Fo's'sle Yarns. They are a trilogy, so to speak, of dramatic poetry. The same characters run through them, and their scene is the same. Their method of verse—irregular, broken, spasmodic, narrative—is peculiar to them, although, of course, one sees the influence of Browning's manner, and perhaps even, in a slight degree, of that of Mr. Bret Harte. But they have real individuality of style, and there is never a page that is not proper to it. Indeed, the author of Fo's'sle Yarns is, in my judgment, one of the very few men now writing who have any distinct style at all. He is a poet of a very true and rare kind. He has great command of the passions, the liveliest fancy, the quietest wit and humour, so rich and racy, so buoyant, so generous, so sweet and sunny that the like of it I do not know in any living man. Nevertheless, I doubt if he can ever be very popular. If he were an actor he would be so quickly enough—not a second Robson, but a comedian without a prototype. No one could hear him read this trilogy of narrative dramas (for that seems to be the only name for them) without being moved to laughter and tears at every page and nearly every line. But the amazing and ineradicable objection of ninety-nine hundredths of readers to all forms of dialect must be one insurmountable obstacle in the way of their popularity. Yet anybody may master this Manx patois in half an hour, and the half-hour will be well spent that opens up a mine so full of genuine ore as these three delightful books.

As mere stories the poems are excellent, though the strength of the writer does not lie in the invention of incident. They are love stories almost without exception, and depict the love passion as it has never been depicted in late years except in Mr. Blackmore's masterpiece. It is the simple side of love, its happy, joyous innocent thrill, not its depths of pain, not its guilty struggles, that they describe. Nothing more delicious, more delicate, more charming, than the best love passages in these three books do I know or can I conceive of. They are flowers as fresh as the dewdrop, and they lose none of their beauty for me by reason of the thistles of rustic speech that grow beside them. It would be impossible to weed them of these thistles, for flowers and thistles grow together. Some of the stories come closer than others to this sunny side of the love passion, and those that come closest to it are the best. Nevertheless they are often tragical in their termination, or end in a tender melancholy. Some of them are very strong in mere incident, though power of that kind is not their great quality. "Betsy Lee," "Christmas Rose," "The Doctor," and "The Manx Witch," have all got passages that are almost as startling and powerful as the sand-storm in The Maid of Sker. But no one would say that power is half so potent a factor in the art of Mr. Blackmore as charm; and whatever the rugged power of Mr. Brown's verse, its charm through its rough vehicle is the quality that stands first.

As "poems of province" these books have hardly their equal anywhere. The Manxman lives here as he lives in the flesh. It is the living man that is here depicted: his speech, his habits, his occupations, his beliefs, his superstitions, his gait, and the very tones of his voice. The island described is Mann and no other place in the wide world. Not Mann as it is after it has gone through the mind of a romancer—an idealised, rarified, glorified, transfigured Mann, a sort of island of Prospero, a good deal bewitched—but the everyday, work-a-day, Isle of Mann. I can scent its very air in these pages, as of mingled brine and gorse-blossom and fresh peat; and I can see its stark-green hills that are dotted over with the gold of the cushag, and its glens that are pink and white with the fuchsia. Then the ways of life of the people, their manners and customs, their folk-talk and tales, their proverbs and saws and old ballads and Christmas "carvals," they are all here. The "melya," and "Oiel Verree," and the "Hunting of the Wren," and the May-night fires, and the last cut of corn, and the honours paid to St. Stephen and St. Bridget—not one of them is forgotten. The religion of the Manxman, too, is painted like a picture, that amusing mixture of puritanism and its opposite, that grim white-face sanctity that is never altogether free of a big boisterous laugh somewhere behind it. One trait the reader of these books may miss—a hint of the Manxman's patriotism. But he would also look for it in vain if he studied the Manxman in the flesh. Patriotism as an active trait, meaning thereby not only a love of country, but a passion to serve it, to protect its rights, to maintain its ancient laws and customs, can hardly be said to exist in the Manxman. More is the pity; and too soon all that makes the dear old island interesting to study, curious and amusing, and very sweet and touching—its childlike faith, its superstition, its poetry of common speech, its Norse laws and constitution—will be gone for ever. But when that evil time comes and Manxmen have made their ways of life as much as possible like those of Englishmen, there will still remain one record of absolute truth and fulness to tell how Manxmen lived when Mann had some right to call itself "the little nation"—these three books by a Manxman of genius.

It would be easy to say much of the dialect of the poems, and open thereby a large question, but I have neither space nor inclination to discuss the function of patois in poetry. To me it is quite incredible that any reader with power to master dialect should doubt its right to exist there. Such vividness as it gives, brightening humour, softening pathos, sharpening wit, can never fail of recognition; and I do not think that any writer of rustic verse has used this powerful instrument with more dexterity, more ease, more power, and even more grace than Mr. Brown. Here are three considerable volumes written almost throughout in irregular couplets of Manx dialect, and yet I do not know of any similar body of verse in a uniform measure in which the rhyme itself oppresses you so little. You read on from page to page (once you get the trick of the movement and an idea of the dramatic method) without the very faintest oppression of rhyme, such as comes like a bodily affliction in many a poem of real quality after the first dozen pages have been passed. And yet I should say that the difficulties of free movement in dialect verse are greater in the degree of ten to one than in the verse of pure language. This dialect of Mr. Brown's is not pure Manx; but that is not a fault, the chief narrator being a sailor who has picked up words in all corners of the earth. The Manx part of it is such as no other man whatever can write. It is the exact echo of the actual speech, not the word merely, but the tone. I can hear it as distinctly in these pages as if it was still falling every day on my bodily ear. The shrill tones, which, perhaps, come of the effort to speak above the shrill winds that whistle over the mountains, the deep tones that may be born of the deep swell of the seas, they are here as full and true as it is possible to give them. The dialect is dying out in Manx before the inroads of the "tripper." It is spoken nowhere now as it is written here, except in the heart of the island; and even there it will soon be lost and forgotten.

There is a better quality in this verse as a vehicle than its fidelity, and that is its amazing felicity. It is full of simile; and the simile is sometimes as sweet and graceful as in the poetry that is not called rustic; but more often it is rude and rugged in the last degree, and therein lies its real quality. Everyone who knows anything of the rustic knows how startling and fit and true and complete are the rough figures in which he constantly speaks. More of these figures have never been gleaned by anyone than by Mr. Brown; and, if he has invented a few to add to them, he has done it with astonishing dramatic truth.

But the great quality of all possessed by the three books, of which (as I gather from the poem) The Manx Witch is to be the last, is character. The people who move through this series of dramas, for dramas they are, are as vivid and vital as any to be found in recent imaginative literature. The dear Parson Gale, the "Pazon" and "ould angel," the simple old doctor, the "dooineymolla," Tommy Big Eyes, Cain the farmer, "Christmas Rose," Betsy Lee, and, last and best, Tom Baynes—I hardly know a group of people so real to me. I seem to have known them all my life. I like some of them better than others, and the "ould angel" best of all. Manxmen are a queer hodge-podge, an amusing and even ludicrous combination of contrary qualities. They can be mean as well as generous, close as well as open, crafty as well as single-hearted, envious, cantankerous, and not above a touch of downright hypocrisy. But there is a type of old Manxman who would be hard to beat in sweetness and simplicity among all the peoples of the earth. He unites the best qualities of both the sexes—as soft and gentle as a dear old woman, and as firm of purpose as a strong man.

Garrulous, full of platitudes, easily moved to tears by a story of sorrow, and as easily taken in, but beloved, and trusted, and revered by all the little world about him. If he is a farmer he sits at the head of his table in the kitchen, with his sons and daughters and man-servants and maid-servants beside him, and save for ribald gossip and broad oaths no man of whatever condition abridges the flow of talk for his presence. If he is a parson he is the father of his parish, and lives like a patriarch among his people. This dear old soul, this "ould angel," can only be seen in the flesh in the Isle of Man; but if anyone wishes to see him in literature, let him come for an exact and beautiful portrait to the "Pazon" of the Rev. Tom Brown.

There is another Manx type, as racy, as simple, as single-hearted, as easily moved to laughter and tears, as garrulous, but a little touch more crafty, and a big touch more profane. Great he is at a yarn of the "ould island," a tale of sweetheating, or drinking, or going to the devil. A sort of oracular old salt, fond of advising and arbitrating, a keen swordsman, skilful at cut-and-thrust, not to be bullied, up to anything, down to anything, capable of as much tenderness as the baby of a girl, but a very bull-dog to anyone that shows his teeth. This is Tom Baynes—Tom, the spinner of these "fo'c's'le yarns," young Tom as he was in "Betsy Lee," old Tom as he is, though he will not allow it, in The Manx Witch. He is the best, the fullest, the largest, the truest of the many characters of these books. He is a real character really worked out. He is not a Manxman, but the Manxman, and his author's best gift to his country. "Old salt, old rip, old friend, Tom Baynes comes just."

HALL CAINE

TWO HUNTERS IN THE FAR WEST.

Cruisings in the Cascades: a Narrative of Travel, Exploration, Amateur Photography, Hunting, and Fishing. By G. O. Shields. (Sampson Low.)

Trooper and Redskin in the Far North-West. By John G. Donkin. (Sampson Low.)

BOTH of these books relate to Western America, and both are engrossed by memories of hunting trips. But while Mr. Donkin was occupied for three years in chasing thieves, Indians, rebels, and unruly folk with a propensity for running cattle over the Canadian border without paying the ad valorem 20 per cent. which the Dominion exacts on such importations, Mr. Shields's volume contains the reminiscences of trips undertaken for purposes sufficiently specified on its title-page.

Only, we must take exception to the claim which he puts forward as an "explorer." That he is not; for all of the country over which his sporting excursions extended is, geographically, well known, though, no doubt, to the ordinary reader much of it will be quite new. The districts described are for the most part on the Pacific side of the Rocky Mountains, in the Cascade Mountains—that remarkable range running the entire length of North-West America, from Puget Sound to Harrison River in British Columbia. Here he hunted bear and mountain goats, when they could be got, antelope and elk (wapiti), and at a period when the plains were black with them, the now all but extinct buffalo. The habits and mode of circumventing these animals are sketched with spirit and accuracy, and occasionally with some literary power. As a rule, however, the papers in which the latter merit is most conspicuous are those which have already appeared in two of the American magazines.

The chapters which have not passed through the editorial fire are less concisely written and disfigured with a more than acceptable seasoning of Chicago slang. "And, come to think of it," the author remarks in his prefatory explanations regarding the motives which compelled his reappearance in print, "I guess I won't attempt, any way." And he is discreet in so acting, though the revision of his pages by a kindly eye might have saved them from many blunders, pieces of indifferent English, and not a few errors of taste. It is, for instance, absurd to affirm that the author met with incivility in British Columbia because he was an American. As this Canadian province is almost an outlying portion of the United States, the American who receives the cold shoulder there is likely to experience this unfriendliness more from aggressive swagger on his part personally than from any ill-will to what Mr. Shields terms "my Nation (with a big N)." It is also characteristic of the Western American to describe Victoria, a town barely thirty years old, as "quaint, old, ultra English," with "an air of age and independence." Mr. Shields, however, is fond of this mode of expressing his approval. Thus he talks of "the Grand Old North Pacific"—a line of railway which was opened only two or three years ago; of "old Mount Hood"; of "Portland, that old and far-famed metropolis of the North Pacific Coast"; of "Tacoma, that grand old pinnacle"; of "Old Mount Douglass," and so forth.

But "bad form" in the shape of rhodomontade and fine writing are not the only features in Mr. Shields's useful volume which might have been spared the reader. It contains many actual misstatements. We do not refer to the spelling of points named after the late Sir James Douglas with a double s, or even to his extraordinary characterisation of the Frazer River as "mysterious" (p. 59), the course of few streams in Western America being better known, or to the doubtful assertion that there are hundreds of firs in Puget Sound "over 300 feet high" (p. 39), only one which I knew to be accurately measured reaching that altitude. But when he informs us (p. 31) that the Indians know Mount Tacoma as "Rainier" it is necessary to protest. The facts are the exact opposite. "Tacoma" is the native name; "Rainier," like "Baker," being one of Vancouver's officers, after whom the peaks sighted by him in the Cascades were named. Again, his Chinook is seldom right. For example, yalka hyak does not mean "he can come." What the Indian must have said was yalka chako hyak. Nor is ikta mika mamook "at what." Once more, "Siwash" does not mean "a coast Indian," but any Indian, being simply a corruption of the French sauvage. Mr. Shields blunders still further when he repeats a long-exploded absurdity in the shape of a legend that the Chinook jargon was the invention of an "employé of the Hudson's Bay Company" (p. 102). This, like the story of alahouya (how do you do?) being an Indianised form of "Clark, how are you?" is pure fiction, which by this time ought to be banished from the pages of any book at all affecting accuracy. As every well-informed philologist knows, it arose at Astoria, near the Columbia River mouth, and is based on the language of the Chinook Indians who congregated round the pioneer fort of the fur companies, the jargon gradually, as is the case with every other Lingua Franca, getting mixed with corrupted words from various Indian tongues brought by voyageurs and traders from the posts at which they had been stationed, and many from the English, French, and (though Gibbs denies this assertion) Hawaiian languages.

Beyond these, and a few similar misstatements which might be pointed out, Mr. Shields's Cruisings is to be commended as a lively sketch of a hunter's life in the West, though we feel bound to qualify this admission by adding that it contains little which has not been repeatedly told in a form quite as readable, apart from the fact that the author has a habit of quoting from other writers without giving any indication as to their personality. Some of the illustrations, mainly from his own photographs (those on pp. 18, 20, 22, 24, 25, 50, 88, &c., for example), are singularly good, while others (pp. 116, 127, 158, 160, 224) are quite the contrary. It would also have been well had Mr. Shields thought fit to have added an index to his tastefully got-up volume.

Mr. Donkin's book is less pretentious, though we venture to think destined for a longer lease of life than Mr. Shields's. As member of the Canadian North-West Mounted Police, the author saw three years of rough service in what Sir William Butler calls the "Great Lone Land"—the region north of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. His narrative of dismal marches when the cold was 46° below zero, and "blizzards" rendered life almost intolerable, and of merrier times, when the forest and prairie were gay with their brief season of sunshine, is told with some verve, and an amount of literary style not to be expected under the circumstances. Unfortunately, however, that portion of his volume which is most original is just that section which will be least read in this country. The author shared in the rough campaign against Riel and his rebels, and, for the first time, supplies a substantial account of that affair. But Louis Riel is dead, and his revolt now very ancient history. On the other hand, Mr. Donkin's description of the Saskatchewan country is, from circumstances over which he has little control, rather monotonous. For the land is not very varied. The Indians and their ways have also been more than once studied by greater ethnologists than he, so that it would be unfair to expect any revelations in the few pages devoted to them in their altered condition. Still, Mr. Donkin's chapters have the undeniable merit of describing the latest aspect of the ever progressive settlements of the North West, in a region unreachd by the "globe trotter," and of supplying wholesome antidotes to the falsehoods scattered broadcast by emigration agents anxious to beguile colonists into these inhospitable latitudes.

The book is, moreover, very readable, and written with a skill which does the ex-corporal of police the highest credit. Perhaps, however, he would do well when the second edition is called for to avoid a proneness—not uncommon with young authors—for calling a spade an agricultural implement, and an old half-caste woman "an ancient half-breed of the feminine gender," and to eschew a cockney tendency to draft all his similes and standards of comparison from London. A trifle less parade of phrases which bear the smack of a dictionary of quotations might likewise improve his pages; while it goes without saying that there was no necessity for following in the footsteps of Col. Burnaby, Mr. Stanley, and some less notable travellers, by giving free advertisement to anybody's pills or anybody else's elixir of life. In common with Mr. Shields, Mr. Donkin thinks fit to placard his portrait opposite the title-page of his modest volume; and, like the former gentleman, he fails to remember how valuable an index is to those who may in the future search its pages—as they deserve to be searched—for some of the many interesting facts scattered through them.

ROBERT BROWN.

The Modern Chess Instructor. By W. Steinitz. Part I. (Putnam's)

THIS book thoroughly answers the expectations of the chess world, whose members have long looked forward to its appearance. Mr. Steinitz has for many years held the foremost place as a practical exponent of match play. Since the lamented death of Dr. Zukertort he stands alone as an original, painstaking analyst; and in this first part of his work we have the results of his long years of labour in that field.

This first part contains, besides introductory chapters, a detailed analysis of the Ruy Lopez, the double Ruy Lopez, the Scotch Gambit, the Two Knights' defence, and Petroff's and Philidor's defences to the Knights' game, such analysis being followed in each case by illustrative games actually played by leading masters. To show the thoroughness of the work, it is enough to state that forty-two variations of the Ruy Lopez are given, followed by twenty celebrated games in illustration of this opening; fifty-four variations of the Scotch Gambit, with twelve illustrative games; and no less copiousness of detail in the other openings given.

The majority of the variations are of course familiar to chess players, being taken from the leading authorities; but in every opening striking novelties are introduced, and in one or two cases, if Mr. Steinitz's innovations stand the test of match play, a real revolution will be effected. For instance, in the Ruy Lopez, he proposes as best for the defence P to Q 3 for the third move, followed in some cases by P to K B 4, which apparently does away with all the complications arising in every form of the ordinary old defences, which have made this opening specially a trap for the unwary.

In the Scotch Gambit there is not much novelty of treatment. Mr. Steinitz has apparently abandoned his preference for the defence adopted by him in the correspondence match between London and Vienna, which he stuck to in his match with Blackburne, and has now adopted as best the defence specially recommended by Zukertort, and I believe first brought into vogue by that great player.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. P K 4	1. P K 4
2. Kt K B 3	2. Kt Q B 3
3. P Q 4	3. P t P
4. Kt t P	4. B B 4!
5. B K 3	5. Q B 3
6. P Q B 3	6. K Kt K 2
7. Q Q 2	7. P Q 4!

Mr. Steinitz's demonstration that Black's seventh move may be made not only with safety, but with advantage, appears conclusive; and the variations given in columns 4, 5, and 6, are singularly elegant in support of this thesis. Columns 1 and 2, in fact, demolish Mr. Steinitz's former favourite counter attack, (4) Q R 5 (Black), in an equally effective way.

The novelties in the treatment of the Two Knights' game are equally striking. This defence, originally adopted to evade the possibility of the Evans attack, was met some forty years ago by the sacrifice of a piece, which was long considered sound, and the attack obtained thereby invincible. Mr. Steinitz was, I believe, the first to prove the unsoundness of this sacrifice, accepted as best in Staunton's Handbook; and in column 19 and the following, the proof to this effect is conclusive. In columns 3, 4, 5, and 6, Mr. Steinitz shows that by means of a preliminary move, (6) P Q 4, the sacrifice becomes perfectly sound, and that consequently the fifth move for Black, Kt t. P, is not reliable. It was the consciousness of the dangers resulting from that Morphy move that led players from the time of downwards to play (5) Q Kt R 4 (Black) at this stage; and the position resulting from the consequent variation has for many years been a problem to analysts and practical players as to the consequent result of the Two Knights' game.

The following are the moves in question:

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. P K 4	1. P K 4
2. Kt K B 3	2. Kt Q B 3
3. B Q B 4	3. Kt K B 3
4. Kt Kt 5	4. P Q 4
5. P t P	5. Kt Q R 4!
6. B Kt 5 ch	6. P Q B 3
7. P t P	7. P t P
8. B K 2!	8. P K R 3

At this point all previous writers have considered (9) Kt B 3 to be the only possible retreat for the Knight, which is followed by (9) P K 5, (10) Kt K 5, and Black has at the cost of a Pawn obtained a strong counter attack, which every player in practice must have found most puzzling to meet. Mr. Steinitz in this treatise has greatly strengthened this counter attack, and shown that the utmost White can hope is to obtain a drawn game, after being exposed to the most dangerous complications.

The remedy proposed by Mr. Steinitz is as simple as Columbus's egg, when once pointed out, and appears to be perfectly efficacious. He suggests the retreat of the Kt to K R 3, and shows in his col 1 that the consequent doubling of the K R P in this position can be encountered absolutely without disadvantage.

It is unnecessary to follow Mr. Steinitz

through all the openings contained in his first part. The student will find himself everywhere under the guidance of an instructor disinclined to stick in the old ruts, and always on the look out for originality. The book is distinctly provocative of thought in the student, and he should be specially careful when he imagines the master to have fallen into error. Mr. Steinitz does not explain everything, and on such occasions he will probably find that the error lies only in his own perception.

As the chief exponent of the modern school of chess, it was to be expected that Mr. Steinitz would lay down the principles of that school, as he does in his sixth and seventh introductory chapters. It has long been an axiom with leading practitioners that it is wrong to advance either R P to the third square unnecessarily, and these have been tauntingly called "country moves." The real objection to such moves is explained clearly in this book. They create weak squares, or, as Mr. Steinitz calls them, "holes," where an adverse piece may be posted with fatal effect. The keenest struggle between first-class practitioners is often to compel the adversary to create such weak squares, which are often productive of greater advantage than mere material superiority. The old masters were of course equally alive to the advantages resulting from posting a piece with security in the heart of the enemy's game, but Philidor's principles of play a century back certainly did not entertain the objection of modern theory to the creation of weak squares by the advance of Pawns.

In addition to the analysis of the openings mentioned Mr. Steinitz's book contains the whole twenty games of his latest match with Tchigorin, copiously annotated. The peculiarity of this match consisted in Steinitz, as first player, invariably playing the close game first brought into vogue by his great rival Zokertort, and Tchigorin, with one exception, always playing the Evans attack, defended throughout by Steinitz in a way that will find favour with no other practitioner. It suffices to say that the best result of this defence, as modified and improved by Steinitz after the close of the match, results in the complete block of Black's Queen's pieces, the loss of the Pawn won in the opening, the travels of the King who is unable to castle, with the prospect of a possible final advantage of Pawns on the Queen's side, for which no player but Mr. Steinitz would be willing to suffer to such an extent. Mr. Steinitz may be right in theory as to the validity of his new defence, but in practice he will have no followers.

Having written so much in just praise of this book, I must exert a critic's right to censure. The arrangement of the book sacrifices clearness to economy of space—especially in the case of the games; as the copious notes and diagrams occupy three times as many pages as the games themselves, the student has the great inconvenience, when playing over the former, of hunting for the notes from page to page. To the young player this constant shifting from place to place would render the correct playing of the moves most difficult, and make them often incomprehensible through resultant errors.

The correction of the press, so vital in chess works, is also not so accurate as it might be. I know well from experience the great difficulty of correcting the press in the printing of chess matter; but a work like this, that must be a standard authority, ought to be absolutely accurate, and unfortunately it cannot be said that this is the case. As an example, in a well-known variation of the Scotch Gambit, column 37, p. 72, the moves are printed as follows.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. P K 4	1. P K 4
2. Kt K B 3	2. Kt Q B 3
3. P Q 4	3. P t P
4. B B 4	4. B B 4
5. Kt Kt 5	5. Kt R 3?
6. Q R 5	6. Q B 3

We need not go further. The learner will be led to imagine that Black's fifth move is an error; whereas it is the only possible move to avoid loss, and it is Black's sixth move that is the questionable one—the correct move being (6) Q K 2, as shown in column 36. The only object of column 37 is to show the learner how to take advantage of the weak move (6) Q B 3, but by the mark of interrogation being placed against the wrong move he is led quite astray.

On the whole, this is the most valuable chess work that has ever been offered to the public, while its price (six shillings) places it within reach of all. There is no player, whatever may be his strength, who will not reap advantage by placing himself in the hands of this most competent Chess Instructor.

JAMES INNES MINCHIN.

NEW NOVELS.

Arminell: a Social Romance. By the Author of "Mehalah." In 3 vols. (Methuen.)

Would You kill Him? By George Parsons Lathrop. In 3 vols. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.)

The Silver Whistle. By Naseby. In 2 vols. (W. H. Allen.)

Mrs. Bob. By John Strange Winter. In 2 vols. (White.)

Eleanor Lecknor. By B. Pullen-Barry. In 2 vols. (Remington.)

Mrs. Fenton. By W. E. Norris. (Longmans.)

Where the Lew falls in London. By Sarah Doudney. (Nisbet.)

The Wild Ruthvens. By Curtis Yorke. (Jarrold.)

The Spanish Poniard. By T. A. Pinkerton. (Sonnenschein.)

Sheila. By Annie S. Swan. (Oliphant, Anderson & Co.)

MR. BARING-GOULD, in his latest novel, deals with the question of class inequality. He treats of it from every possible point of view: from that of the aristocrat, convinced of his rights and his duties; from that of the young woman-aristocrat, saturated with a sense of the glaring want of justice in our social economy; from that of the mystic and the religious enthusiast; from that of the pauper and the oppressed; from that of the Radical politician; and from that of the young man of the lower middle class, who has received the education of a gentleman, but who yet, by virtue of his birth and inherited drawbacks, feels himself shut out from circles that would have been congenial to him. But, thus full as it is, the book on the whole is disappointing. No one sets the right way to work to remedy the ills of his position. Arminell herself, Lord Lamerton's daughter, on whom the unsatisfactory state of society flashes in a burst, simply runs away to London with her brother's tutor, Giles Saltren, whom she believes to be an illegitimate son of her father, hoping thus to force his recognition. Arrived in London, she finds that the young man's mother has made up the story of his noble birth, and that he really is the bastard of a very undesirable pauper. Therefore, all full of high ideas and dreams as she was, she settles down to be cook, general servant, and nursemaid in the family of James Welsh, a Radical journalist, and is finally converted to the gospel of the humdrum. James Welsh, on the other hand, becomes convinced of the error of his levelling-down doctrines, and forthwith preaches the gospel of levelling-up. That is the ultimate idea of the book, but Mr. Baring Gould gives no practical hint as to how the general amelioration is to be brought about. Probably it was his intention to give none. But, while the book is disappointing because of the silly actions of some of its characters, there are many fine scenes and passages in it. The character-drawing is able and original. The sensitive, refined, and morbid tutor, his lying and bragging mother, his mystic half-mad father, the unfortunate Lord Lamerton, the brilliant and sharp-sighted James Welsh, all stand out from each other in distinct individuality. It must be added that Mr. Baring Gould's besetting sin of garrulousness, which was comparatively under control in The Pennycomequicks, here runs rampant. We have sermon after sermon, illustration after illustration, from the rich stores of the author's wide experience—albeit there is some charm of wisdom or humour in everything he writes.

The American wheat market, unpromising as such a source seems, furnishes a good deal of the subject-matter of Would You kill Him? One chapter is even called "A Symphony in Quotations"; and the various quotations of the fluctuating market are set as passages of music, and appropriately marked crescendo or scherzo. The chapter ends with a funeral march and a crash of trombones, portending ruin to the operators. The father of the girl to whom the hero, Roger Holclaw, is engaged, is ruined with the rest; and Ida, the girl, insists on giving her lover up, as her father, by causing him to venture money in the same speculation, has almost broken him too. Roger is anxious to marry her, but she persists in refusing to let him. Her young brother, Frank Vail, vows vengeance for ever against him for not forcing her. Roger goes away and prospers, and finally marries a charming girl, who has been dedicated by her parents to "the higher life." They might have been perfectly happy but for an insinuating female friend, Lily Britton by name, a personage whom everyone knows under various aliases; and who with the most transparent guilelessness and friendship generally succeeds in separating husbands and wives, and in leaving misery and mistrust behind her. Lily Britton contrives to find out the fact of Roger's former engagement, breathes horrid suspicions into the young wife's ear, and gets into collusion with Frank Vail, whose thirst for vengeance is greater than ever. Helpless, exasperated, and desperate, Roger unwittingly commits the awful act which makes him legally, but hardly morally, deserving of the last penalty of the law. Perhaps the speculations on the wheat market have too much prominence in the first part of the story, but the second and third volumes are full of interest. The writing is throughout forcible and direct, and the more important scenes are depicted with great vividness.

As a variation from the heroine with whom every man falls in love we have in The Silver Whistle a hero who subjugates every female heart. One lady was once or twice on the point of proposing for him. To the reader Edgar Sydney is a little difficult to understand. A man who, after a promising career at college, takes to racing and sport, and yet is supposed to cherish within him the noblest devotion to the highest ideals, is rather an anomaly. Naseby's women characters are far more true to life, and are intensely interesting. The perpetual contrast between Bridget (the well-born, with her brilliance, impudence, scepticism, high culture, sarcasm, restlessness, and withal goodness of heart) and Moyrah (the peasant descendant of Irish kings and St. Louis of France, with her loveliness, sweetness, gentleness, and innate piety) is admirably conceived and carried out. In spite of some occasionally curious English the reader is carried on from page to page profoundly interested and charmed. The Irish element is a large one, and no writer delineates Irish character more faithfully or more lovingly than Naseby. The events crowd together so thick and fast that it is impossible to give an outline of the story. Quick as thought we fly from college to Elizabethan pageants, from moonlighters to charming Irish interiors, from racecourses to English politicians, from Harvest Bug meetings to French Communist dynamitards, from murder to another Elizabethan pageant, and so on in an endless stream.

John Strange Winter has her own answer to Shakspeare's riddle, "What's in a name?" She evidently thinks there is everything in it; and therefore Mrs. Bob, though rather a nobody in the story so named, is picked out to give it a title. The book is, as usual, a bright, chatty, gossiping, and essentially feminine account of the ways, wicked and otherwise, of smart dames and their various cavaliers. The familiar "Blankhampton" allusions are not wanting, and the ill-natured and gratuitous slaps at "John, by Divine Providence Lord Bishop of Blankhampton," have found their way in. The plot is simple. A girl is very rapidly wooed and won by a handsome and wealthy young Australian, who ostensibly draws his riches from some mysterious gold mine. In the end he turns out to be a member of a large gang of jewel robbers. The way in which his young wife reclaims him is weakly and hurriedly told, and you by no means feel that the affair is satisfactorily settled when you close the book.

Eleanor Lewknor is a religious novel, not in the sense that its people represent different religious principles, and embody them in their lives, as in one or two familiar examples, but because they talk or argue about religion. In the beginning we have a very promising young sceptic and misogynist, who in the end is converted to a quasi-spiritualism, quasi-ritualism by a High Church curate, and to a renewed and hopeful faith in woman-kind by the heroine—a really interesting, earnest, and heroic young woman. But Eleanor Lewknor has another conquest to make, namely, that of herself. Her father married against her grandfather's wish, and was cut off from remembrance; and Eleanor, having lost both her parents, is alone in the world. The Lewknor pride has descended strongly to her, and she will not be friends with her grandfather, though he has long since repented of his cruelty, and sues humbly for her love. She herself holds very loose notions on religious matters; but the earnest curate also subjugates her, and the curtain descends, as the author evidently considers it ought to do, on a fairly orthodox and extremely happy couple, at peace with all the world, grandfathers included. The story is well and easily told, but the punctuation is abominably careless.

In Mrs. Fenton Mr. Norris has not given us his best work or his most interesting characters. The people are not so lifelike or so near to us as his people are wont to be. Still, the style is bright, easy, and fluent; and of the one woman who is the subject of the sketch you do get a fairly good hold. Moreover, Mr. Norris's vein of kindly satire is still open, as when the heroine, an Australian with free and natural ideas, tells her cousin how a great lady in society wondered "where the deuce her eyeglasses were," and how she was also careful to inform several gentlemen that she had eaten apricot tart at luncheon, and had a horrible pain in the stomach in consequence. The story, which is one of impersonation, is tragic in its way; but Mr. Norris flits so lightly and entertainingly over the surface of things that the deeper theme of the book is somewhat missed.

The few characters in Where the Dew falls in London are all drawn with Miss Doudney's insight and fidelity. A smart young man has come up to London from Hampshire, and is making his way well at Battersby's works. But he only loves the charming Olive Wingfield because she worships him, and he does not deign to notice an old friend, in a lower position at Battersby's, who got him in there. Olive also comes to London, to a situation at a florist's, and little by little discovers, though it is long before she will own it, that her idol is clay. The romance is enacted round about the old Chapel Royal, Savoy. Miss Doudney's perception of the beautiful and pathetic is as marked as her sound commonsense, and both qualities are evident in this story.

The same hand which wrote Dudley and That Little Girl is apparent in The Wild Ruthvens. This time Curtis Yorke tells the story of a family of boys and girls, who, starting from a positively unprecedented childhood of naughtiness and insubordination, finally arrive at that state of ideal delightfulness which usually falls upon the elect of the novel-writer. From thoughtlessness to actual brutality the reader follows these wild young Ruthvens, all the time cheered only by the fact that they are all of them honest and truthful, and by the presence of a certain Dick, a cousin who has been crippled, and who boards with the Ruthvens. This Dick Trevanion is one of Curtis Yorke's too much idealised characters. He protests that he has a horrible temper, and is utterly unworthy of the love and respect they all give him, and yet plays good angel from first to last to himself and everybody else. A kindly innocent and religious spirit breathes through the story, but there is no goody-goodness in it.

It is hard to give fresh interest to the period of the Royalist wars, but this Mr. Pinkerton unmistakably does in The Spanish Poniard. He takes human nature to have been in the time of Charles I. pretty much what it is under Victoria. By treating it as such he has produced a powerful and interesting story, which is not concerned so much with the wars of King and Parliament as with the thoughts, lives, and ideas of men of that day. Ambrose Drybridge, the central character, has had a tragic history. He committed a horrible crime in a moment of frenzy, and is ever pursued by the vision of the Spanish poniard which he wrenched from the hand of his victim, and used for the dread deed. There are some pathetic complications, and the story ends half tragically. All through it the miserable remorse, hesitation, and longing to do right which torment the unhappy Ambrose are shown with painful clearness.

Sheila is a well-told and interesting story of the joys and sorrows of some young people who, as is usual in stories, bear upon their heads more troubles and trials than fall to the lot of young folk in real life. Sheila herself is the stepdaughter of the laird of Dalmore, to whom he leaves all his property. The coming of her mother had ousted the laird's sister, with her young son Fergus, who had always been looked on as the heir to Dalmore. But Providence and Miss Swan had their own plans in regard to the young couple, and how Fergus finally got Dalmore and Sheila into the bargain Miss Swan must be left to tell. Her Highlanders are drawn with an affectionate hand, and the whole story is charming.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

SOME BIOGRAPHICAL BOOKS.

Good Men and True. Biographies of Workers in the Fields of Beneficence and Benevolence. By Alex. H. Japp. (Fisher Unwin.) Dr. Japp writes of "good men and true" much in the way in which Mr. Smiles does of great inventors; and those who admire the one author will be no less satisfied with the other. His subjects answer to his title. Dr. Norman MacLeod, Canon Kingsley, Dean Stanley and his father, and Sir T. Salt alone would fill a delightful volume; and that Arnold Toynbee comes next to Edward Denison is a specially happy arrangement. The almost luxury of the Toynbee Hall rooms is indeed a contrast alike to Denison's dingy little Philpot-street lodgings and to Arnold Toynbee's Commercial-road rooms, "furnished in the barest manner possible." But our young reformers have got beyond denying themselves down to the level of the East-end poor. Their idea is to raise the poor by giving them a taste of a pleasanter and (if they can get it) a more excellent way. Dr. Japp brings out Conington's humour—a quality which escaped some of his contemporaries as completely as his joining with more or less éclat in a Guy Fawkes "town and gown" row has escaped his biographers. For some of his notes on Canon Kingsley he goes to Mr. Kegan Paul, who got an "implied rebuke" for naming Heine at table. There is so much that is "warm"—doubtless with the highest purpose—in Kingsley's writings that we really think he had no business to call Heine "a wicked man." The great German might have retorted by calling the Anglican canon "a humbug." We are sorry Dr. Japp thought it necessary to repeat the closing extracts from Bishop Hannington's diary. Surely there is nothing more painful in the whole range of literature; and the sting of it is that no one can help asking: cut bono? Mr. Plimsoll is one of the best and truest men. Unhappily, Dr. Japp is quite right in saying that "his work is only half done."

Robert Brett (of Stoke Newington): his Life and Work. By T. W. Belcher, D.D. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) The name of Robert Brett is well known within a limited sphere, but outside it suggests nothing definite to the memories of his contemporaries. Mr. Brett was, in fact, a medical practitioner of no particular eminence who interested himself in providing for the spiritual wants of the suburb in which he lived, and was rather conspicuous as a member of the "High Church" party. When Dr. Belcher speaks of his friend as having "secured a foremost place among the great men of Church and State on many public occasions," he must be understood to mean that Mr. Brett was not a man whose shyness or diffidence would keep him in the background at a public meeting, or in any discussion upon Church matters. The title of "Lay Pope of Stoke Newington" and "Lay Bishop of London" were conferred upon him; and we only have to look at his portrait—prefixed to the present volume—in order to accept his biographer's statement that "he would have his way." That way would naturally be regarded as the best way by all those who shared in his religious opinions, and by many of them as the only right way. We must give him credit for possessing very strong convictions which he never concealed, and for exhibiting a thoroughly consistent example throughout his life of self-denial and practical philanthropy. He was untiring in his efforts to provide the north of London, and especially Stoke Newington, with adequate church accommodation; and to this good object he devoted the not inconsiderable profits which he derived from certain devotional books which he had written. He describes himself as "a loyal and devoted son of the English Church, and a strenuous advocate of the revival of her doctrine and ritual"; and this description Dr. Belcher has rendered complete by adding "that he would have made a very good ecclesiastic, and that, if elected to a bishopric on the lines of the early Church, he would have been a devotional leader and a powerful defender of the Church's rights."

Perhaps neither the Church nor the community suffered by his remaining a layman.

Reminiscences of a Literary and Clerical Life. By the Author of "Three-cornered Essays." (Ward & Downey.) Pressman as well as parson, the author of these two volumes has had an experience rather wide than profound, which he details in a very pleasant chatty way. He has something to say about Osborne Gordon, Conington (he or his printer writes Connington), Calverley, and several Northern lights; for, besides being at Oxford and Cambridge, he was also at Glasgow. John Morley, too; the Mozleys; Archer Gurney (at Paris); Dean Stanley; Earl Russell; George Müller;

Dr. Barnardo; Bazeley, "The Oxford Evangelist"; and many oddities as well as celebrities he either knew or met. He has a very high opinion of Mr. Spurgeon, whom, on one page, he describes as "distilling sweetness and light to 8000 people," and on the next, as "giving a lecture on candles at a bazaar, wearing a paper cap with a tallow dip greasily stuck through his hair, between it and the forehead." Of course he is right in condemning the want of elasticity which prevented our Church from utilising such a phenomenal man, as he is also right in hitting us hard about the chance medley way in which Church patronage is often bestowed. He can enjoy a joke; though, of his twin description of Mr. Spurgeon, the humour did not seem to strike him. His jokes are often better than this—about one Cole who left a legacy to a Cambridge church on condition that his name should be put up in the building. Why this could not be done on a list of benefactors does not appear; but, if the legacy was really saved by writing up "Cole Deum," the law was about on a par with the wit. Another story—about the secretary to a Liberian president who, when asked why African progress was so slow, replied: "Fac" is, sir, dem niggers is so uncivilised"—we think we have heard before, and certainly don't care to hear again. In fact (as the grocers say), all these "Reminiscences" are not new and selected fruit; still, they are good and tasty, and sure to be liked by not over critical readers. Here and there, too, there are things to make us think. Haggerstone being a parish in which our author has chiefly helped, he has seen much of the Rev. M. Rosenthal's work among the East End Jews. On Jewish converts he therefore speaks with authority. This, again, if trustworthy is important:

"A peer, a late cabinet minister, who knew a good deal about the East, spoke of a large American college in which Bulgarian students had been educated. These men had given fibre to the Bulgarian people. Russia was never more astonished than when she found herself confronted with a real nation in Bulgaria" (ii. 179).

My Mistress the Empress Eugenie. By M^{me}. Carette. (Dean.) This is the authorised translation of a record of court life at the Tuileries by the private reader of the ex-Empress of the French. Those who expect ill-natured or, at least, piquant gossip in the memoirs of a court will be disappointed on perusing these pages. M^{me}. Carette has an unflinching store of good-nature, and for her mistress her enthusiasm is unbounded. The tone of the book is very good, but its construction bad. There is no system or order in the narrative, and the stories follow each other at haphazard. The chapter on the Mexican War does not seem to have been written by the same pen, and is quite irrelevant to the general subject. In spite of these faults, M^{me}. Carette may be congratulated on having compiled a very readable book. She tells us of her meeting, at the house of a friend, a priest whose eyes shone "comme deux charbons d'enfer." Her friend was much shocked at her speaking thus of a Dominican, who taught "the word of God with a fervour which would convert the fallen angels." This priest was Father Hyacinthe. We have only space to quote what is, perhaps, the most interesting passage from the life of her mistress. On June 19, 1879, Lord Sydney informed the Duke of Bassano of the death of the Prince Imperial. At first the duke refused to break the news to the Empress, but at last consented, and went to her. The Empress was surprised to see him so early, and at once remarked:

"You have news from Zululand?"

"Yes, madame; but not good news."

"Louis is ill? Well, my dear duke, let us depart immediately to nurse him."

"There was a fight," said the duke.

"Is he wounded?"

"The duke simply bent his head."

"We can set out to-day, even. The ships leave port every day."

"The Empress then ordered all necessaries to be got ready without delay."

"Is the wound serious?" she asked, not daring to look at the duke, who was still standing at the entrance of the room. She then went up to him, and looked at him with great anxiety. Tears were rolling down the duke's cheeks; and the Empress burst into a great fit of sobbing, for she now understood all" (p. 91).

Let us hope that this warm-hearted friend, M^{me}. Carette, has brought some consolation to her mistress in her lonely hours.

Memoirs of Henry Richard. By Lewis Appleton. (Trübner.) This book is not so much a biography of the late Mr. Henry Richard, as a record of his views on the wars of the last forty years. It is impossible, in a brief notice, to discuss Mr. Richard's position even in one case—the American War of Secession. Mr. Ward Beecher publicly declared that "the firm invincible determination of the North, deep as the sea, firm as the mountains, but calm as the heavens above us, is to fight out this war through, at all hazards, and at every cost." Mr. Richard was shocked at language which opened up to him a "terrible vision of blood and vengeance." He did not sympathise with the North, because he believed the war was waged not for freedom, but for "Union and Empire." Like Mr. Gladstone, he believed that Jefferson Davis had "succeeded in making the Southern States of America a nation." If Mr. Richard erred in his Southern sympathies, he erred in good company. Many of Mr. Appleton's notes, notably those about the Transvaal War and the Danish War (a very thorny question), are not altogether satisfactory; but these Memoirs form a useful book of reference for the politician, whether he agree or not with the Apostle of Peace.

Reminiscences of a Boyhood. (Sampson Low.)

Its anonymous author has sub-entitled this book "A New Story by an Old Hand." We question whether the story he has to tell can be fairly entitled new, but it is pleasantly told. It is for few of us that "remembrance like a sovereign prince" doth "a stately gallery maintain of gay or tragic pictures." There is nothing stately in the writer's remembrances, and very little that is gay or tragic; but the tone of the book is excellent, and the "old hand" has not lost its cunning in the art of expression. The first twenty-four chapters, which deal with the author's childhood in Ireland, are the best. As the author comes of Milesian stock, his family naturally have their own particular banishes. When a death was to occur there were heard weepings and wailings near the house, until the very heart was thrilled, and they that watched in the chamber of sickness felt that all hope was over, and that the husband or wife, the father or the sister, was delivered over to death. The banishes can be distinguished from other ghosts by its being heard only, and never seen. The author's aunt, the heroine of the book, did, however, see her mother's wraith (p. 25). The fault of the writer is that he dwells too much on trifling incidents, which (as he himself puts it) "can have but little interest for any but the writer." Still, there is sufficient matter and reflection in these Reminiscences to make them pleasant reading for the old.

Self-Discipline: a Memoir of Percy Clabon Glover. By his Father, the Rev. Richard Glover. (Nisbet.) This is a class of book which is perplexing to the reviewer. It is impossible not to feel the deepest sympathy for a father deprived, by a cruel accident, of a promising son, however much we may deprecate the overt multiplication of biographies—one of the characteristics of the present day. It is easy, too, to understand Mr. Glover's hope that the narrative of his son's pure and consistent life will be profitable to young men generally, though we fear they are the last set of people who will read the book. The subject of this memoir was born in 1856; and all through his life, from his earliest childhood, seems to have been everything that a father could desire, and to have given promise of a creditable, if not distinguished, career. He was on the point of taking orders in the year 1888, when he succumbed to an accident, the result of a scrimmage in a game of la-crosse. Mr. Glover, who is the author of several other works, makes some useful and sensible observations, and we would specially notice his remarks on the importance of good handwriting and careful composition. Doubtless it is the religious element in his son's character which he would wish to be most considered and dwelt upon, and which in his opinion justified him in giving this Memoir to the public. We trust, indeed we feel sure, that among the young men of the present day there are many who form as high an ideal of life and carry out that ideal as consistently as Percy Glover. The patience and resignation which the author shows in his own bereavement must be both a comfort and example to other mourners who may come across his book.

NOTES AND NEWS.

WE hear that Bishop Lightfoot had finished, before his lamented death, an abridgment of his classical work on the Apostolic Fathers, which is at present accessible only in several bulky volumes. The abridged edition will contain the Greek text, with a translation into English, and short introductions.

THE Dublin University Press has now ready for issue the long-expected history of the university by the Rev. Dr. John William Stubbs, senior fellow of Trinity. It covers the period from the foundation in 1591 to the end of the eighteenth century. In the appendix will be printed a number of original documents preserved among the college archives.

MR. TOZER's book, The Islands of the Aegean, which will shortly be published by the Clarendon Press, will contain accounts of two journeys in the Cyclades and Crete and in the Asiatic Greek islands, which appeared in the ACADEMY in 1875 and 1886, and have since been considerably amplified; and also a narrative of visits to the islands of the Thracian Sea—Lemnos, Thasos, and Samothrace—in 1889, which now appears for the first time.

BESIDES The Language of the New Testament, recently issued by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, we understand that the late W. H. Simcox left behind him a little book on the Revelation for the Cambridge "Bible for Schools" series, which his brother, Mr. G. A. Simcox, is now seeing through the press.

UNDER the title of Shakespeare's True Life, Messrs. Longmans will publish immediately a descriptive account of Stratford-on-Avon and its neighbourhood, written by Mr. James Walter, and illustrated with about 500 drawings from the pencil of Mr. Gerald E. Moira.

AMONG the volumes that have been arranged for in the series of "English Men of Action" are—Captain Cook, by Mr. Walter Besant; Drake, by Mr. Julian Corbet; Oliver, by Sir Charles Wilson; Sir John Moore, by Col. Maurice; Marlborough, by Sir William Butler; and Havelock, by Mr. Archibald Forbes.

THE next volume of "Great Writers" will be George Eliot, by Mr. Oscar Browning. We understand that Mr. William Sharp has undertaken to write on Browning for this series.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS, of Vigo Street, will publish in the course of the present month an English edition, limited to 250 copies, of the Rev. Dr. H. van Dyke's little book entitled The Poetry of Tennyson. It is, in the main, a critical study, with a list of the laureate's quotations from the Bible.

MESSRS. T. AND T. CLARK, of Edinburgh, announce for early publication The Servant of the Lord in Isaiah, Chapters xl.-lxvi: reclaimed to Isaiah as the author, from examination of the argument, structure, and date, by John Forbes, Emeritus Prof. of Oriental Languages, Aberdeen.

UNDER the title of Sermons preached in the East, Dean Butcher is about to publish a volume of discourses with Mr. Elliot Stock.

"PROFESSOR" PEPPER has written a book entitled The True History of the Ghost and all about Metempsychosis, which will be published, with illustrations, by Messrs. Cassell & Co. during the course of next week.

DR. J. K. INGRAM'S History of Political Economy, which was reviewed in the ACADEMY of May 26, 1888, is just about to appear in a German version. The translator, who is believed to have done his work extremely well, is Herr E. Roschlau, of Berlin, and the publishing house will be that of H. Laupp at Tübingen.

MR. W. CLARK-RUSSELL has written for Cassell's Saturday Journal some sea stories under the title of "Three Sitings with a Sailor." The first of these, "The Sailor and the Ghost," will appear in No. 328, issued on January 8.

THE new monthly, The Expository Times, has now been acquired by Messrs. T. and T. Clark, of Edinburgh. The January number will include the first part of a translation of Rothe's Exposition of 1 John.

COMMENCING with the January issue, Dr. Parker will contribute monthly to the Homiletic Review a series of papers on "Current English Thought."

DR. ADOLF NEUBAUER, reader in Rabbinical literature at Oxford, and senior sub-librarian at the Bodleian, has been elected a foreign correspondent of the Académie des Inscriptions.

THE series of Sunday afternoon lectures at the South Place Institute, on "National Life and Thought among the Nations of the World," will be continued during the first four months of the present year. On Sunday next, Mr. M. Sevasly (editor of the Havasdan) will discourse upon "Armenia"; and Mr. J. G. Cotton Minchin, on the following Sunday, upon "Servia and Montenegro." The following are some of the future arrangements: "Gipsies," by Mr. F. H. Groome; "Roumania, Bosnia, and Herzegovina," by Mr. A. R. Fairfield; "Egypt," by Mr. J. C. McCoan; "Spain," by Mrs. Cunningham Graham; "The Jews in their Relation to Other Races," by the Rev. S. Singer; "Russia," by Mr. W. R. Morfill; "The Miniature States of Europe," by the Rev. John Verschoyle; "The Women of Turkey," by Miss Lucy Garnett; "Morocco," by Dr. Robert Brown. The lectures, which are entirely free, begin at 4 p.m., and are preceded by an organ recital and vocal solo.

A FRIEND of Mr. Browning has persuaded Lord Tennyson to allow the following letter to be made public:

"29 De Vere Gardens, W., Aug. 5, 1889.

"My dear Tennyson,—To-morrow is your birthday—indeed a memorable one. Let me say I associate myself with the universal pride of our country in your glory, and in its hope that for many and many a year we may have your very self among us—secure that your poetry will be a wonder and delight to all those appointed to come after. And for my own part, let me further say, I have loved you dearly. May God bless you and yours!

"At no moment from first to last of my acquaintance with your works, or friendship with yourself, have I had any other feeling, expressed or kept silent, than this which an opportunity allows me to utter—that I am and ever shall be, my dear Tennyson, admiringly and affectionately yours,

"ROBERT BROWNING."

WE have received from the editor of the Publishers' Circular the usual analytic table of books published during 1889. The total number is 6067, made up of 4694 new books and 1373 new editions. This shows a considerable decrease when compared with 1888 (6591), which represents the high-water-mark for many years, but an almost equal increase when compared with 1887 (5686). There are no very notable variations in the several classes, except that novels and juvenile works appear to have prospered at the expense of theology and school books. But it seems probable that these relative alterations are at least partly due to changes of classification. If the literary output of 1889 be contrasted with that of 1883, some surprising results are revealed, which can hardly be explained by changes in the public demand. The totals for the two years are nearly the same—6145 for 1883, and 6067 for 1889; but juvenile books have fallen in the six years from 939 to 511, while novels have risen from 573 to 1404. Similarly, artistic and scientific works have fallen from 491 to 146, while miscellaneous have risen from 222 to 627. The advance in new editions of belles lettres from 48 to 183 probably represents a real change, being due to the numerous series of cheap reprints of standard books.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING
TO E. S.

"Love, we are in God's hand."
R. BROWNING.
("Andrea del Sarto.")

"Shall I find ought new With the changing year?"
R. BROWNING.
("James Lee's Wife.")

WHAT shall I say to you, dear,
That you have not heard before,
In years that long are past, dear,
From those you lov'd of yore?

I can only pray God keep you
Throughout the coming year!
May his mercy and love ever shield you
Mid sorrow and trials here!

You have heard the words before, dear,
From other lips than mine,
Ere I had seen your face, dear,
Or clasped my hand in thine.

I know their sound brings back to you
The dead and distant years,
With all that was so dear to you—
The smiles, the joy, the tears.

"God bless and keep you safe, dear,"
Again you hear that prayer;
But, oh, the words call up, dear,
Far other days that were!

F. P.

OBITUARY.

BISHOP LIGHTFOOT.

It is an inexpressible debt which England owes to the great bishop—great in the truest sense, although as a man so unassuming—over whom the grave closed on the last Friday in the old year. This is not the place to speak of the administrative success with which he managed the affairs of his populous and important diocese, or of his wise and statesmanlike schemes for the spiritual and moral well-being of the communities under his charge. Neither is this the place to speak of the way in which the history of his ancient see caught and fired his imagination and made him the fit successor of Cuthbert and Aidan, of De Bury* and Tunstall, of Cosin and Butler. Nor yet may we at present enlarge upon the excellencies of his personal character, on the intense reality, simplicity, and sincerity of all that he said or did, on the transparent integrity of motive which made the whole world trust him, on his singular equity and moderation of mind, his calm, broad, unbiassed judgment. Of these things others will speak as they have already spoken elsewhere; but here it is right that something should be said of his contributions to literature, and of the influence which he has exercised upon the thought of his generation.

In the religious history of our time there have been two main currents, both of native origin. The one had its birth in Oxford. The other is commonly and rightly associated with Cambridge; though, if we would trace it to its fountain-head, it would seem that we ought to go back a step further and to a smaller centre—King Edward's School, Birmingham. A remarkable man there impressed his stamp upon a group of remarkable men. Prince Lee did not leave behind him any great literary work, but he left behind him workers who have reared an imperishable monument to his memory. Dr. Lightfoot, Dr. Westcott, and the present Archbishop of Canterbury were all his pupils and almost at the same time. Dr. Westcott being the senior and the archbishop the junior members of the group. Dr. Hatch, whose too early death has been so recently lamented, was also at Birmingham, with others who have won distinction in different walks of life; but they belong to the next generation in the school history, when its character, though still a strong one, was changing.

The three elder boys went up one after the other to Trinity College, Cambridge. Dr. Westcott was second classic in 1848, Dr. Lightfoot senior in 1851, Dr. Benson eighth in the first class in 1852. All three alike became Fellows of Trinity. Nor can we think of them otherwise than in connexion with their close friend and colleague, himself I believe a Rugby-man of Rugby's great days, Dr. Hort. The literary productions of the archbishop show how deeply he is imbued with theological culture; but he, even more than the others, has been absorbed in practical work, and it is the other three who stand out conspicuously as the founders and chief representatives of a distinct Cambridge school. The characteristics of this school lie upon the surface, and have been necessarily recognised. It is primarily Biblical, where the earlier Oxford movement was patristic and mediæval. It is exegetical and critical, where the Oxford movement has been historical and ecclesiastical. There can be no question that the Cambridge work has been first-rate in its kind. It rested upon a foundation of sound and thorough scholarship of genuinely English manufacture. The advice which Dr. Westcott gave to Cambridge students some time ago, to read their Greek Testament with the Greek text, concordance, and grammar, but without commentaries, was characteristic of its method. But to this independent first-hand study there was superadded a wide erudition. Dr. Lightfoot, in particular, evidently made a point of knowing all that had been written upon the subjects which he took up. Yet his learning sat easily upon him. Seldom has there been a scholar who possessed such power of lucid exposition. No matter how intricate or complicated a subject, in his pages it was always set forth in regular and orderly development. It was impossible to mistake his own meaning. It once fell to me to remark on this wonderful lucidity of style, when the bishop, in referring to it, said that he believed it to be, in a great measure, due to the fact that he wrote with difficulty; the words would not come of themselves, and he was compelled to seek for the most appropriate. A marked feature in his commentaries, besides the elaborate introductions and dissertations, was the admirable paraphrase by which each section of the text was accompanied. This alone was a commentary in itself. Excellent as all the commentaries are (Galatians, first published in 1865; Philipians, first published in 1868; and Colossians, the first edition of which came out in 1875), I believe others would bear me out in saying that the latest was the best—the most thorough and the most searching. In his Cambridge days the bishop had lectured upon others of St. Paul's Epistles, and it is greatly to be hoped that his notes on these may still see the light.

It is right to recall here the important part which the bishop played in the revision of the Authorised Version. The work which he published on the subject in 1871, at the beginning of the deliberations of the committee, undoubtedly did much to determine the lines on which the revision proceeded. If the thorough-going principles which it represents have prevented the new version from obtaining complete popularity, they have also enhanced its value in the eyes of professed students.

A Biblical scholar cannot confine himself to the Bible. Bishop Lightfoot certainly did not. He was thoroughly at home especially in the early periods of Church history. He had at one time planned a history of early Christian literature. This was not destined to be accomplished; but fortunately the controversy, roused by the book called Supernatural Religion, rescued some considerable fragments of it. The essays which appeared in the Contemporary Review of 1874-1878 have recently been reprinted. The bishop was stung by the attack upon a dear friend, and his reply had a sharpness which was not usual with him, and which there were other things in his opponent's statement of his case to justify.

It was characteristic of this work, as of all the bishop wrote, that his whole handling of his subject was that of the senior classic. Here the English scholar has an advantage over his foreign contemporaries. At least in history, if not in Biblical exegesis, it would be safe to say that few of the continental scholars who have been over the same ground had gone through the same severe and many-sided philological training. A conspicuous instance of this was given in an important letter which Bishop Lightfoot wrote to the ACADEMY on September 21 of the past year. It has often before been maintained that the original of the Muratorian Fragment was written in Greek. Bishop Lightfoot not only contended for this, but he went on to maintain that the original was written in Greek verse; and he went on yet further to give a specimen of the kind of verse—a feat in which I suspect that few of our foreign friends would have been able to follow him. To say that the case was completely made out would, I think, be saying too much; but it was at least a brilliant tour de force.

But the great monument of the bishop's labours in this field of study is to be seen in his editions, first of the two epistles ascribed to St. Clement of Rome (1869, with appendix in 1877) to be re-issued, as it is believed, in a revised and remodelled form; and secondly, of the writings connected with the names of SS. Ignatius and Polycarp. The first edition of this latter work appeared in 1885, when it was reviewed in the ACADEMY by Dr. Salmon. A second edition is just out, and will no doubt be noticed shortly. The work is allowed on all hands to be a classic of the highest order.

In one respect, the extraordinary clearness of the bishop's mind may have been almost prejudicial to his reputation. He had none of that appearance of profundity which is sometimes only another name for obscurity. He could not put down anything which he did not first understand entirely himself, and he therefore conveyed it with equal ease to the understandings of others. With him the crooked became straight, and the rough places plain. It would, however, probably be true to say that he was, in the first instance, scholar, historian, exegete, critic, rather than philosopher. His method was the English one of working from without inwards—of collecting first a number of facts, and arranging them in orderly groups with a view to generalisation; not the seizing of some great genetic idea, and tracking it through all its labyrinthine manifestations. Bishop Lightfoot's method was at the opposite pole, e.g., to Baur's. There could be no doubt which was the more sound, though it might be less illuminative and stimulating.

This brief survey will, I hope, be enough to justify the opinion which I expressed at starting. The place which Bishop Lightfoot's work occupies in the history of English thought shows at once its immense value. It would be difficult to imagine anything which should supplement more happily the tendencies of the Oxford movement. It added to that what it most required—a firm and solid grounding in the original documents of Christianity. It brought it back into contact with those great root-ideas which can never be deserted with impunity. It prevented it from dissolving in the mists of refined and devout, but not always strong and manly, sentiment. It supplied just the critical and rational element which it needed.

On the other hand, Bishop Lightfoot's work came at a moment when, after long lethargy, the country was beginning to be invaded by a host of foreign ideas, which in their own homes had acted as a destructive force upon received beliefs and opinions. It was much that they found us with a school of native theology and exegesis at all. It was still more that they found us with a theology and exegesis so sober and well-considered as that of Dr. Lightfoot and his colleagues. To them we owe it that the deluge has not come, and that our old landmarks have not been too ruthlessly swept away.

But the best feature of all in the work of the Cambridge divines is that, while so solid, positive, and constructive, it has not merely repelled the new ideas. The attitude of its exponents has not been one of mere antagonism and defiance. Cautious and conservative as they have been, they have yet kept an "open mind." They have not sought to preclude the assimilation of all that was sound and true in the imported doctrines. And if they have retarded the process of assimilation, so much

* De Bury, that is, as we have been in the habit of thinking of him, and as the bishop himself thought of him, not in the light in which he has appeared under the most recent criticism. There is no doubt a case on the adverse side, though it may not be conclusive.

the better: it is only the more likely to be healthy and permanent. If, as we look around us, we see the currents of English thought tending to mix and blend; if we see the various schools ready at once to learn from and to teach each other; if we see the religious life of our people drawing in to itself nourishment from all sides, and gaining alike in fulness, richness, and effectiveness—this is due in no small measure to those wise men who have had the directing of theological studies at Cambridge, and perhaps most of all to Bishop Lightfoot.

W. SANDAY.

DR. CHARLES MACKAY.

In the last few months of the year 1889 we have lost three of the most popular poets of the early Victorian epoch. Early in the autumn Eliza Cook passed away; Martin F. Tupper followed her; and now, last but not least, Dr. Charles Mackay has joined the majority. On Christmas Eve he died at Earl's Court, Kensington, after having been in failing health for a considerable time.

Charles Mackay was born at Perth in 1814. In his infancy he was brought to London, and he finished his education in Belgium. Perhaps it is to his observation of the events of the revolution which broke out there in 1830 that we owe his most stirring lyrics. His first volume of poems was issued in 1834, and they became his introduction to journalism. In the great days of Mr. John Black's editorship of the Morning Chronicle, Mackay obtained a place upon the staff of that paper, and he was connected with it for about nine years. During this period he published The Hope of the World, and other poems; and A History of London (1838). One of the books by which he was best known—Memoirs of Extraordinary Popular Delusions—appeared in 1841. In September, 1844, he became editor of the Glasgow Argus; but a schism in the Liberal party, to which he always belonged, led to his retirement from that paper at the general election in 1847. In the previous year, 1846, Glasgow University conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. Dr. Mackay then returned to London; and on the establishment of the Daily News by Charles Dickens he contributed a series of poems to that newspaper, called "Voices from the Crowd," which have often been reprinted. Indeed, it is upon some of these lyrics of the time that his fame will chiefly rest. "Clear the Way," "The Good Time coming," "Old Opinions," "Tubal Cain," "The Dream of the Reveller," "King Clog," "John Littlejohn"—if he had written no more than these, he would still have had a claim upon posterity. He was a contributor to the Illustrated London News for some years. In 1860 he established the London Review. In 1859 he published two volumes on Life and Liberty in America. He resided in New York from 1862 to 1865, acting as special correspondent for the Times during the Civil War. In 1871 he collected many of his contributions to All the Year Round, Robin Good-fellow, and other periodicals, with the title of "Under the Blue Sky." Bibliographers must refer to the British Museum Library Catalogue for a witness to his prolific authorship. His A Thousand and One Gems of English Poetry (1867) is known in every home. He was his own biographer in more than one volume. That which he considered the crowning work of his life, The Gaelic Etymology of the English Language, and other volumes on similar subjects, never found much favour with scholars. But it is by his lyrics that he will live on the lips and in the thoughts of men. Some of these, set to music by Henry Russell, attained extraordinary success, and their fame became commensurate with the use of the English language. "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," embodied the great emigration movement, and must long remain the song of the Greater England.

Dr. Mackay's merits have more than once received public recognition. In 1862 he was put upon the Civil List, with a pension of £100 a year, "in consideration of his contributions to poetry and to general literature." On December 27, 1877, his friends presented him with the sum of £770, including £100 from the "Clan Mackay," at St. James's Hall. In 1888 he received a further testimonial, to support him in his declining health. For years he has been the chief bard-elect of the Highland clan of Mackays; and they sent a superb wreath of bulrushes, the emblem of the clan, woven with white flowers, for his funeral in Kensal Green Cemetery.

In private life Dr. Mackay was of a retiring disposition, and of a most genial nature. When he lived in his cottage at Boxhill, near Dorking, next door to Mr. George Meredith, the little parties that he gave were more like family gatherings of the olden time than the mere social meetings of friends. He never understood himself. His modesty minimised the work he had done. He thought his forte lay in his Gaelic studies; and he seemed never to realise how his lyrics had crystallised the aspirations of young England, nor to pride himself upon the enthusiasm with which they had inspired so many millions of his fellow countrymen. Yet he was born the poet of the people, and not a philologist.

H. T. W.

THE death is also announced of Mr. Robert Farran, some time senior partner in the well-known publishing firm of Griffith, Farran, Okeden, & Welsh. He was born in India in 1829, being the son of Major Charles Farran, of the 28th Madras Infantry. He received his early training at W. H. Allen's, at that time in Leadenhall Street; and he was afterwards for several years with Longmans, whom he left to join Mr. Griffith at the corner of St. Paul's Churchyard on the retirement of Mr. Grant in 1856. He retired from business about two years ago, owing to prolonged ill-health. Mr. Farran died on December 13 at Surbiton, where he had lived for many years, always taking an active part in local affairs.

[We are compelled to reserve till next week our notice of the late Sir Henry Yule.]

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BACHMANN, F. Die landeskundliche Literatur üb. die Grossherzogtümer Mecklenburg. Güstrow: Opitz. 8 M.
- BAUMANN, O. In Deutsch-Ostafrika während d. Aufstandes. Wien: Hübsel. 3 M. 60 Pf.
- BOUCHOT, H. La Franche-Comté. Paris: Plon. 60 fr.
- BRALMONT, L. Les régions fortifiées: leur application à la défense de plusieurs états européens. Bruxelles: Muquardt. 25 fr.
- FRET, Col. Côte occidentale d'Afrique: vues, scènes, croquis. Paris: Marpon. 10 fr.
- GUSTAFSSON, Wladimir. Souvenirs d'un prêtre romain devenu prêtre orthodoxe. Paris: Fischbacher. 10 fr.
- HESSEM, L. de. Ohnoserier. Paris: Quantin. 6 fr.
- MARMONTAN, P. Notice historique et critique sur les peintres Louis et François Watteau (de Lille). Paris: Plon. 20 fr.
- MOIRBAU, A. La journée d'un écolier au moyen âge. Paris: Quantin. 7 fr. 50 c.
- NIEWISCHANSKY, F. Alfred de Musset's Gedicht: Sur la paresse. Jena: Dabbs. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- PINET, G. Histoire de l'école polytechnique. Paris: Baudry. 25 fr.
- SAINT-JULIEN, La Seine à travers Paris. Paris: Launette. 20 fr.
- SCHMIDT-WARNEKE, Die Sociologie im Umrisse ihrer Grundprinzipien. 1. Thl. Braunschweig: Grunewald. 6 M. 50 Pf.
- SCHUCHHARDT, O. Schellmann's Ausgrabungen in Troja, Thyra, Mykeni, Orchomenos, Ithaka im Lichte der heutigen Wissenschaft. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 8 M.

- SIMON, Jules. Mémoires des autres. Paris: Testard. 8 fr. 50 c.
- SMOUCK HURGRONJE, C. Bilder aus Mekka. Leiden: Brill. 21 M. 25 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- SCHAEFER, A. Die Bücher d. Neuen Testaments, erklärt. 1. Bd. Die Briefe Pauli an die Thessalonicher u. an die Galater. Münster: Aschendorff. 5 M. 50 Pf.
- WODIANER, R. C. Liber hereditatis Josuae. Wien: Lappe. 10 M.

HISTORY.

- ACTA et diplomata graeca medii aevi. Vol. VI. Acta et diplomata monasteriorum et ecclesiarum orientalis. Tom. III. Wien: Gerold's Sohn. 14 M.
- BOYER, H. V. Erinnerungen aus dem Leben d. General-Feldmarschalls. 2. Thl. Der Zeitraum von Ende 1809 bis zum Bündnisse v. Kalisch. Leipzig: Hirzel. 10 M.
- BRUCKER, P. P. L'Alsace et l'église au temps du pape Saint Léon IX. (Bruno d'Ensisheim) 1003-1064. Tome II. Strasbourg: Le Roux. 3 M. 60 Pf.
- GESCHICHTSQUELLEN der Prov. Sachsen. 22. Bd. Urkundenbuch der Stadt Erfurt. 1. Thl. Halle: Hendel. 12 M.
- GÜTTENBERG, J. Apollonius v. Tyana. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
- HÖPLER, O. R. v. Der Hohenzoller Johann, Markgraf v. Brandenburg. München: Franz. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- KÜTZSCHKE, K. R. Ruprecht v. der Pfalz u. das Konzil zu Pisa. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
- MERKLE, J. Katharina Paulowna, Königin v. Württemberg. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Necrologia Germaniae. II. Dioecesis Salisburgensis. Pars I. Berlin: Weidmann. 9 M.
- Παροτρύν, Α. Γ. Πολιτοποικία καὶ ἀλωσις τῆς Κωνσταντινουπόλεως ἐν ἔτει 1453. T. 1. Athens: Book 8 fr. 50 c.
- PASTOR, L. Geschichte der Päpste seit dem Ausgang d. Mittelalters. 2. Bd. Geschichte der Päpste im Zeitalter der Renaissance bis zum Tode Sixtus' IV. Freiburg-L.-Br.: Herder. 10 M.
- STAATSGESCHICHTE der neuesten Zeit. 27. Bd. Deutsche Geschichte im 19. Jahrh. Von H. v. Treitschke. 4. Thl. Bis zum Tode König Friedrich Wilhelms III. Leipzig: Hirzel. 10 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ABHANDLUNGEN, palaeontologische. Neue Folge. 1. Bd. 2. Hft. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der fossilen Flora einiger Inseln d. südädischen u. indischen Ozeane. Von L. Orst. Jena: Fischer. 9 M.
- ABHANDLUNGEN zur Geschichte der Mathematik. 5. Hft. Leipzig: Teubner. 6 M.
- BARNUM, O. Das Problem der Materie in der griechischen Philosophie. Münster: Aschendorff. 12 M.
- GEIGEL, R. Die Frage nach der Schwingungsrichtung polarisierten Lichtes. Würzburg: Stachel. 2 M.
- HARTMAN, E. V. Ergänzungsband zur 1.-9. Aufl. der Philosophie d. Unbewussten. Leipzig: Friedrich. 8 M.
- HOFFMANN, F. Beiträge zur Kenntnis der Flora v. Central-Ost-Afrika. Jena: Dabbs. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- PLEBEK, Th. Die Vogelfauna d. Russischen Reichs. 2. Bd. 2. Lfg. Leubänger (Phylloscopus). Leipzig: Voss. 7 M. 50 Pf.
- SCHULZE, O. Ueb. die Entwicklung der Medullarplatte d. Froscheides. Würzburg: Stachel. 2 M.
- STEINMANN, G., u. L. DÜNNELMANN. Elemente der Paläontologie. 2. Hälfte. Leipzig: Engelmann. 15 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BÜTTING, O. Brhadāraṇyakopaniṣad in d. Mādhyamika-Reconson. Hrg. u. übersetzt. Leipzig: Voss. 5 M.
- ECKHARDT, E. Das Präfix ge- in verbalen Zusammensetzungen bei Berthold v. Regensburg. Leipzig: Fock. 3 M.
- GAUDENZ, A. I suoni, le forme e le parole dell' odierno dialetto della città di Bologna. Turin: Loescher. 7 fr. 50 c.
- KNEKE, O. Untersuchungen üb. die mittellenglische Magdalenenlegende d. Ms. Laud 108, nebst Quellenuntersuchg. Berlin: Schöns. 2 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FRAGMENTS OF YORKSHIRE MYSTERIES.

Cambridge: Dec. 23, 1889.

It is my privilege to be permitted to bring to public notice an interesting discovery lately made by Dr. Calvert, of Shrewsbury, in the library of the school. He has happily recovered a part of three scenes in a set of old Yorkshire Mystery plays, hitherto entirely unknown, and of considerable antiquity. Indeed, I suspect that we have here the oldest existing MS. which gives us specimens of English Mystery plays. The MS. of the Chester plays dates only from 1591, and that of the Coventry plays from 1534. The Wakefield MS. is older, viz., of the fifteenth century, and that of the York Mystery plays is supposed to be about 1430-40.

The fragments in the Shrewsbury MS. are demonstrably older than the last of these, and belong, so far as I can judge, to the beginning of the fifteenth century.

The MS., marked "Mus. iii. 42," consisted originally of 43 leaves. The 3 fly-leaves at the beginning have nothing to do with it. There were 5 quires of 8 leaves and 1 quire of 3 leaves. Leaf 9 has been cut out, leaving 42 leaves. The signatures, all in a late hand, are quite wrongly marked, and may be disregarded. Leaf 1 is a palimpsest leaf; but the original writing can be traced, and the words are the same as on leaf 2, back.

The first 36 leaves are taken up with Latin anthems, &c., all carefully set to music, and written in a clear and regular hand, with rubrics. The contents are as follows:

1. "Centum quadraginta," &c. (Rev. xiv. 3, 4), followed by "Cedentem (for Sedentem) in superne maiestatis aroe," &c.; leaf 3.
2. In die purificationis, ad preces: "Hodie, Beata virgo," &c.; leaf 3, back.
3. In die palmarum: "En rex venit mansuetus," &c., with "Gloria laus"; leaf 4, back, and 5, back.
4. In die palmarum: "Passio domini"; leaf 7, back.
5. In vigilia Pasche: "Rex sanctorum angelorum"; leaf 14.
6. In die Pasche, ad process: "Salve, festa dies"; leaf 15, back.
7. In die Pasche: "Crucifixum in carne"; 17, back.
8. In die Pasche, Ad vespas: "Laudate, pueri"; 18.
9. In translatione sancti Cedde: "Salve, festa dies"; 23, back.
10. In die Ascensionis: "Salve, festa dies"; 25, back.
11. In die Pentecost: "Salve," &c.; 27.
12. In ebdomada pentecost FERIA ija, ija, & iija cantabitur iste cantus ad process: Sancti spiritus Assit nobis gracia; 49.
13. In festo corporis cristi: "Salve"; 32, back.
14. In festo dedicationis ecclesie: "Salve," 35, back.

I note that Langland clearly followed Anthems 3 and 4, which he quotes in Piers Plowman, B. xviii. 1-68. His gloria laus (in l. 8) refers to six elegiac lines, beginning—

"Gloria laus et honor tibi sit, rex criste redemptor, Qui puerile decus promittit hosanna plium."

Cf. Hymns Ancient and Modern—"All glory, laus," &c.

But on leaf 38 the real interest begins with a rubric from Luke ii. 8, followed by English verses, in a smaller writing, but by the same hand. Of this portion Dr. Calvert made a transcript, which he sent to Dr. Clark, who, again, sent it on to me. In this it was duly noted that certain words, or pairs of words, occurred frequently in the margin, and the puzzle was to elucidate these. I could make nothing of them, beyond guessing that they belonged to imperfect lines. On this, Dr. Calvert kindly procured us permission to inspect the MS., whereupon the full significance of these "side-notes" at once appeared, and I was enabled to solve the whole problem.

The fact is that there are three distinct fragments. Each of these contains portions of a scene in a play. These portions all belong to one actor, and the "side-notes" give, in fact, his catchwords or cues.

This actor doubtless performed all three parts. He was the Third Shepherd in the play of "The Angels and Shepherds"; he was the Third Mary in the scene at the sepulchre; and he was one of the two disciples who went to Emmaus. Moreover, of these two, he was certainly Cleophas, as I shall show.

That he was the Third Shepherd appears from the heading—"ijus pastor." That he was the Third Mary appears from the heading—"iija ma," i.e., "tertia maria," which was very puzzling to read; and that he was Cleophas appears from the fact that he had to sing in the chorus of the apostles at the end; and the words suit him better than they do St. Luke, who, according to tradition and the Coventry Mysteries, was Cleophas's companion.

The dialect is clearly Northern, and I fully believe it is Yorkshire, in particular. It is obviously allied to the York Mystery plays, with one stanza of which the Shrewsbury MS. agrees, though there is a wide general difference. Perhaps the fragments belong to the lost set of Beverley plays (see York Mystery Plays, ed. Miss T. L. Smith, p. xlv., &c.). The language is just that of the York plays, as exemplified in such characteristic words as these: mun "must"; myennes me "I remember"; in hy "in haste"; nem "to name"; thar "he need"; frely fode "noble creature"; gaynest "nearest"; bedene "at once"; wil of red "at a loss what to do"; symyn "together"; withouten trayne; apert; mased "astonished"; couthes "could"; and the like. We even find at for to with the infinitive, a strong mark of Northern dialect.

In the coincident stanza (York Plays, xv. 120-131) this MS. has an older reading. It corrects the line—"And it will herbar [harbour] fourty pese" to "That may herbar an hundreth pese," which reads better and preserves the alliteration. The whole is written seriously and poetically, with skilful alliteration, and clearly exhibits an old and valuable text. I hope to print the whole text in a future letter.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE SOURCES OF MALORY'S "LE MORTE DARTHUR."

38 Museum Street, London, W.C.: Dec. 23, 1889.

When I undertook two years ago to edit Caxton's impression of "Le Morte Darthur," it was my desire to produce a standard edition in token of gratitude to the English people for the hospitality I have always received in their wonderful national library. My studies have necessitated my working in several great libraries; but I feel that my results are chiefly due to the wealth of material and the admirable organisation of the British Museum. My work is now nearly completed. The second volume is, for the greater part, in the printer's hands, and will, I trust, be ready by the end of February 1890.

The result of my researches surpasses all my anticipations. I have been enabled to determine exactly Malory's position in the history of English literature. I can clearly show what were the versions of the sources he used, and how he altered and added to them to suit his purpose. There is no reason to suppose, as Leland is said to have done (though I cannot find any such passage in his works) that Malory was a Welshman; nor was he, as often asserted, a mere translator. He evidently endeavoured—and with no little measure of success—to weld into an harmonious whole the immense mass of French romance. After a comparison with the sources, his work gives the impression that he did not servilely copy his originals, but that he had read various versions, and that he impressed upon the whole the stamp of his own individuality. He certainly did as much as many of the French compilers, who only retold what they had heard or read in their own tongue, while Malory combined both English and foreign romances. Sir Walter Scott says of "La Morte Darthur," that "it is indisputably the best prose romance the English language can boast of"; I may add, also, that it is one of the most important and interesting, considering the great influence it has exercised not only on the formation of English prose style, but also on the subject-matter of English literature.

I venture to submit as fairly certain the following results respecting the sources of Malory's refacimento of the Arthurian romances.

For the first four books Malory follows the version of the "Suite de Merlin," represented by the unique MS. now in Mr. Alfred Huth's possession (published by G. Paris and J. Ulrich for the Société des Anciens Textes français). Chaps. ix. to xviii. of the first book are, however, intercalated. They describe Arthur's first war, his alliance with Ban and Bors, and the assistance he rendered to king Leodegan, as told in MS. Add. 10292 in the British Museum, and in the unique English version, printed from a Cambridge MS. by the Early English Text Society, and edited by H. B. Wheatley under the title of "Merlin." It has further to be remarked that the Huth MS. is not perfect, leaving off in the middle of the adventure of Marhaus, Gawayn, and Vwayne with the three damoyseles, so that we lack a positive source for the last few chapters of the fourth book.

The fifth book is not, as Gaston Paris supposes (Huth Merlin, Introd., p. lxxii.), taken from the "Merlin ordinaire," but is a prose rendering of the English metrical romance, "La Morte Arthure," represented by the Thornton MS. in the Lincoln Cathedral Library, edited by J. O. Halliwell (1847), G. G. Perry (1865), E. Brook (1871). Moritz Trautmann, in his treatise on the poet Huchown (Anglia, i., 1868, p. 143), was the first to point out that Malory used the work of this poet; but his characterisation of Malory as a "Zusammenstoppler" is unjustifiable. That Malory really used Huchown's work can be proved in many cases, where the alliteration of the metrical version has been retained in the prose. But he suppressed the conclusion of this work, for which he followed, as will be shown presently, another version.

The sixth book is throughout taken from the "Launcelot," as represented by about a dozen MSS. (more or less complete, and resembling one another). Of this there are several printed editions (in French) of the beginning of the sixteenth century, all to be found in the British Museum.

I cannot trace the seventh book in any of the numerous MSS. I have studied. This book, which describes the adventures of Gareth (probably the Gaheriet, or Guereches of other English and French romances), brother of Gawayn, called Beaumayns by Kay, has all the character of a folk-tale, differing greatly from the other books. I am inclined to believe that it does not belong to the Arthurian cycle at all, but was adopted by Malory from some lost French lay. This hypothesis is strengthened by the fact that in none of the versions that I have read is the slightest reference made to the exploits of Gareth on his way to the castle of the Lady Lyonesse; nor are the five brothers whom he overcame in this expedition mentioned.

The eighth, ninth, and tenth books follow the prose version of "Tristan," represented by MS. 103 of the Bibliothèque Nationale. This also was printed several times at the latter end of the fifteenth and the beginning of the sixteenth centuries, and copies are in the British Museum.* This version is generally attributed to Luces de Gast, and differs greatly from the so-called enlarged "Tristan" of Hélie de Boron, represented by MSS. Add. 5474, Royal 20 D ii. and Egerton 989. Chaps. xxi. to xxviii. of the tenth book are, however, intercalated, and follow the version of a French MS. (Add. 25434) of the British Museum, which has never been printed (comp. Ward, Catalogue of Romances, pp. 371-72). This MS., as well as Harl. 1629, contains the "Prophecies of Merlin," said to have been translated out of Latin by "mestre richart dyrlande," at the command of the Emperor Frederick II., which entirely differ from Geoffrey's version. Mr. Ward's remark that ff. 67 and 68 of Harl. 25434 were, perhaps, the ones missing in Add. 25434 does not seem justified; the two hands are different, the lines in Harl. are a little shorter, and Add. has long f and Harl. s. There exists also an English metrical version, "Sir Tristrem," which has been edited by Sir Walter Scott, and again by E. Koelbing, from the famous Auchinleck MS. in the Advocates' Library, Edinburgh. Though this version is entirely different from the one Malory follows, I found a peculiar coincidence between the two. When Tristram comes for the first time to Ireland to have his wound healed, he declares, according to Malory, that he is called Tramtryst. This rather clumsy attempt to conceal his name is not in Malory's French source, where Tristram only says:

* Gaston Paris, Romania xv. 1886, p. 481, note, says: "Les éditions n'ont pas été faites sur ce ms. même, mais sur un ms. très voisin, qui ne diffère du 103 que par de détails de style," &c.

"Sire deist il le suys de leonoys pres de la cite dalbime, ie suys ung cheualier deshaitie et malade qui me suys mys en aduantage en ceste mer si suys cy arriue pour sauoir se ie pourroye trouuer guerison de maladie."

The metrical romance reads, v. 1187-88 (Koelbing's edition):

"Tristrem he gan down lain
And seyd, Tramtris he hj3t."

The same occurs in the Old-Norse version of Tristram (Tristram's Saga ok Isondar, Cod. A. M. 567 and Cod. A. M. chart. 543, Copenhagen, ed. by E. Koelbing, 1878), and in the "Tristram" of Gottfried of Strassburg (comp. Koelbing, introd., p. li.).

The eleventh and twelfth books are again drawn from the above-mentioned "Launcelot," save the last three chapters of book xii., relating the fight between Tristram and Palomydes and the subsequent christening of Palomydes, which are not to be met with in any of the two above-quoted versions of "Tristram." In MS. Add. 5474, on fol. 301, col. 2, an account is given of the christening of Palomydes, but it differs widely from Malory's version.

It is not quite clear what Malory means by saying at the end of book xii.: "Here ends the second book of syr Trystram that was drawn out of Frensahe, but here is no rehearsal of the thyrd book." The source that he follows for his whole account of Tristram consists only of two books, therefore he must either refer to the enlarged "Tristram" of Helie de Boron, or he knew another third part which we no longer possess. I believe that he meant the "Tristan" of Helie de Boron, for the following reason. In book xix., chap. xi. (21-23) and book xx., chap. vi. (15-20), Malory refers to Tristram's death, as being stabbed from behind by King Mark. This exactly corresponds to the "Tristram" of Helie de Boron (Add. 5474, fol. 290, verso):

"Ensi comme tristram aloit harpant devant la roine yseut engulse de menestrel & li rois march le fiert per derriere dun glaue."

Similar is the account given in the romance of "Meliadus." The king there dreams that Mark stabs his nephew, "iusques a la croix parmy le corps."

From the thirteenth to the seventeenth book Malory relates the Queste of the Holy Grail, as we find it in the "Launcelot," and as it has been edited by Dr. F. J. Furnivall for the Roxburgh Club (1864) from MSS. Royal, 14 E. iii. and Add. 10294 in the British Museum.

The eighteenth book is one of the most difficult to settle. Compared with "Launcelot," there are many feats peculiar to both; and compared with the English metrical romance, the same can be noticed. Malory alters here considerably the sequence of the incidents. The great tournament at Winchester, with the story of the mayden of Astolot, takes place previous to the incident of the queen's dinner and her accusation by Mador, contrary to Malory's account. It is not at all improbable that Malory knew a source which combined the peculiarities of the two versions, though I do not believe it. The twenty-fifth chapter of this book, in which true love is likened to summer, is evidently Malory's own composition, as also are the first few lines of the first chapter of book xx., and some other passages in books xx. and xxi.

As to the nineteenth book, I agree with M. Gaston Paris (Romania, xii, 1883, pp. 459-534) that Malory had another source besides the "Launcelot" from which he drew the first part of the episode of Meleagaunt and Gueneuer, though I could easily account otherwise for Queen Gueneuer's "mayeng," which persisted among all ranks in England as late as the latter part of the seventeenth century. The whole incident is omitted in the metrical version, Harl. 2252. I can nowhere trace the contents of the last four chapters of this book, describing the healing of Vrrre's wounds by Launcelot. This incident is either taken from the lost source which supplied the introductory chapters of his book, or it is adopted from some lost French lay, like book vii. In my opinion, the enumeration of the knight's handling Vrrre's wounds, which occupies almost the whole of chap. xxi., is Malory's own composition. He seems to have had a predilection for such catalogues of names, as can be seen from several other passages of his work.

Books xx. and xxi. are drawn from the metrical version of "La Morte d'Arthur," edited by Dr. F. J. Furnivall, from Harl. 2252, for Macmillan (1864), and from the "Launcelot." With regard to the latter, it was again the reproduction of the alliteration and the occasional repetition of a whole line, with inverted sequence of words, which guided me.

Such is the outline I hope to fill out with details in my treatise on the Sources of "La Morte d'Arthur." I publish it now in the hope of obtaining some information about the three passages I cannot trace.

H. OSKAR SOMMER.

A TWENTY YEARS' LOVER OF BROWNING IN 1856.

Hampstead: Dec. 29, 1889.

There must always be a special delight in the feeling that where greatness has shown itself, there has been insight to recognise it from the first.

Readers of the ACADEMY are too familiar with the history of the illustrious career which closed on December 12 to be unaware that at its very beginning there was not only recognition of the poet, but that high reverence which is due to the master and seer.

In one of the recent obituary articles it was said that Robert Browning was at once felt to be a king, even if he had but one subject. This seems to be clearly expressed in the following lines, written in 1856, of a "twenty years' love" for him. It gave Mr. Browning pleasure when, several years ago, I showed them to him. I owe the permission to print them to the kindness of Miss Viola Cramp, the daughter of the writer, who says to me:

"I had only this summer the testimony of [my father's] oldest friend to his appreciation of the first of Mr. Browning's things that were given to the public, and of his emphatically saying that the world must listen to him some day."

EMILY H. HICKEY.

"Ah! and so you would not see Browning
With your friend, but stopped away!
Although it had been the crowning
Of twenty years! that day!
To hear him talk, and mark his smile,
Read the light in his eyes—your eyes large the while!

"Why, what was the cause? a reverent fear;
Or a faithless dread of a dream undone?
It could hardly be that, for you hold him, I hear,
As the first of Poets under the sun!
Just so; and that was the reason, I say,
Why I baffled my wishes and stopped away!

"Easy to rush to his presence, and stare!
The heart's wonder in my gaze—
As the multitude flock to the trumpet's blare
When, 'neath the banners' blaze,
In the hour's triumph, a hero rides
Through the peoples, surging on all sides.

"And that were well; my heart would leap
As he passed, in glory, along;
'Mid the wide hurraing, loud and deep;
But—to step from out the throng,
And idly check his barb's proud pace,
And singly greet him face to face,

"Were a different thing! great grace to me!
But to him? that's another case.
Homage to him would mere gratitude be;
But should I stand in my place?
Let my pride be still, and, leave in the throng
One voice more to hail as he rides along!

"And I have a little tower of my own;
Half ruined, lone, and rude,
From whose height I can watch as he mounts his throne
In his own right, for others' good;
But I must watch this from my tower lone,
For what am I—to approach his throne!

"So, I think you may see ('tis not hard to read),
Why from Browning I stopped away;
In truth, the pleasure was not my meed;
Though the sun shines every day,
And I, with the world, its light have won,
I can get no nearer to the sun!

"Thus, I did not meet great Browning,
But stubbornly stopped away,
Though, certes, it had been the crowning
Of twenty years' love, that day!

WM. ARCH. CRAMP (1856).

THE BRITISH RECORD SOCIETY.

124 Chancery Lane, W.C.: Dec. 27, 1889.

Referring to Mr. Rye's letter in the ACADEMY of December 14, which unfortunately I overlooked until to-day, may I observe as follows?

(1) As regards the title, "British Record Society," it is sufficient to point out that the resolution for the foundation of the society contemplates not merely indexes and calendars, but also abstracts thereof, or in special cases the full text. Either of the suggested alternative titles, "Index Record Society" or "Record Index Society," would therefore be an inaccurate description of our aims. At the same time as our main object is to provide keys to the records in the shape of indexes and calendars, that principal function of the society will be clearly indicated by our retention of the title of "Index Library," which was adopted for the fasciculus of record calendars edited by me for the last two years. (2) As to the charge of publishing indexes, &c., by bits at a time, most persons, I think, prefer having them in that way at regular intervals, rather than waiting for complete volumes, which societies are too apt to issue at indeterminate periods. (3) Lexicographical indexes, I agree with Mr. Rye, are a necessity, if waste of time is to be avoided; but the want of such is not a charge which can be laid to the "Index Library." The first volume we completed, "Northampton Wills," contains a full lexicographical index; the second, "Royalist Composition Papers," was arranged in lexicographical order; the third, "Chancery Proceedings," is merely the first portion of the calendar for those records for Charles I.'s reign; and a lexicographical index is not feasible until we have printed the whole. "Berkshire Wills," now in the press, is arranged lexicographically, which order will also be followed when we print Mr. Hall's calendar of "Sussex Wills." A lexicographical index to the nearly completed "Signet Bills," is in course of preparation; and I doubt not that the council will take care to add such an index to "Lichfield Wills" as soon as the calendar thereof is wholly in type.

W. P. W. PHILLIMORE,
Hon. Sec. British Record Society.

THE "ORTUS VOCABULORUM" OF WYNKYN DE WORDE.

149 Tufnell Park Road, N.: Dec. 27, 1889.

May I be allowed to add a few words to my letter of last week? If there be an error in Dibdin's description of the Ortus of 1516, it is at least not due to him, for it appears in the same form in both Herbert and Panzer.

The true explanation perhaps is that these writers, or their authorities, quoted solely from the title, being either in ignorance of, or neglecting to use, the colophon to the volume.

R. G. C. PROCTOR.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Jan. 5, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "Armenia," by Mr. M. Sevasly.
MONDAY, Jan. 6, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Egyptian and Assyrian Marbles in the British Museum," by Mr. Louis Fagan.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting," I., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: "Practical Certainty the Highest Certainty," by Mr. R. E. Mitcheson.
TUESDAY, Jan. 7, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electricity" (adapted to a Juvenile Auditory), V., by Prof. A. W. Rücker.
WEDNESDAY, Jan. 8, 8 p.m. Geological: "Some British Jurassic Fish-remains referable to the Genera Euryacanthus and Hypacanthus," by Mr. A. Smith Woodward; "The Peblidian Volcanic Series of St. David's," by Prof. C. Lloyd Morgan; "The Variscite Rocks of Mont Genève," by Messrs. Grenville A. J. Cole and J. W. Gregory.
8 p.m. Microscopical: "The Variations of the Female Reproductive Organs, especially the Vestibule, in different Species of Uropoda," by Mr. A. D. Michael.
8 p.m. Cymmrodorion: "James Howell and the Familiar Letters," by Mr. Joseph Jacobs.
8 p.m. Elizabethan: "Shaksperian Tragedy," by the Rev. H. C. Beeching.
THURSDAY, Jan. 9, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electricity" (adapted to a Juvenile Auditory), VI., by Prof. A. W. Rücker.
6 p.m. London Institution: "Birth and Growth of Worlds," by Prof. A. H. Green.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Painting," II., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.
8 p.m. Mathematical: "The Deformation of an Elastic Shell," by Prof. H. Lamb; "The Relation between the Logical Theory of Classes and the Geometrical Theory of Points," by Mr. A. B. Kempe.
FRIDAY, Jan. 10, 7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Irrigation Works on the Cauvery Delta," by Mr. A. Chatterton.
8 p.m. New Shakspeare: a Paper by Mr. R. G. Moulton.

SCIENCE.

History of Phoenicia. By G. Rawlinson. (Longmans.)

THE History of Phoenicia is the valedictory bequest to the public of the late Camden Professor of Ancient History at Oxford. It worthily closes a career of useful and scholarly work which embodies the true ideal of a professor's duty in the midst of a gainsaying generation. In days when recent legislation has endeavoured to transform the professor into an overpaid college lecturer without pupils, it is good that there should still be a few among us who hold fast to the older and better conception of what a professor ought to be.

But there are signs in the book before us that Canon Rawlinson has lost somewhat of the youthful energy that once characterised him. There is still the same clear and flowing style, still the wealth of classical quotations and the excellent and numerous illustrations to which his former works have accustomed us. But we miss that extensive acquaintance with the modern literature of his subject which the student of ancient history is now in the habit of demanding. The Germans are conspicuous by their absence from his pages. Even the classical work of Movers is not only not quoted in his notes, but is not even mentioned in the list of authorities at the end of the volume. Excellent as the book is, especially in its geographical and more purely historical portions, this disregard of modern research is a distinct loss. He who would thoroughly master all that is known of one of the most interesting nations of antiquity must read the volume by the side of Pietschmann's Geschichte der Phönizier, which is now appearing in Oncken's "Allgemeine Geschichte." The two books supplement and complete one another, and illustrate admirably the respective excellencies and defects of English and German scholars.

The question of the origin of the Phoenicians affords a good example of the loss occasioned by a neglect of recent researches into Phoenician history. Canon Rawlinson adopts the time-honoured view, in which, I must add, I agree with him—according to which the Phoenicians originally migrated from the islands and coasts of the Persian Gulf. In quoting the testimony of Troilus Pompeius on this head, he identifies "the Assyrian Lake," where the Phoenicians are said to have settled before they reached the Mediterranean, with the Sea of Nedjif, near Babylon. But Gutschmid has shown that the true reading of the passage is not Assyrium stagnum, but Syrium stagnum, "The Syrian Lake"; and, since the cause of the departure of the emigrants from their original home is stated to have been an earthquake, the story has been brought into connexion with the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the Syrian Lake identified with the Dead Sea. Canon Rawlinson might, at least, have referred to this opinion, and, in any case, have given the reading which is that of the MS. The opinion has been supported by such eminent authorities that it needs to be refuted before the other view can be allowed to retain possession of the field. Personally I do not think that a refutation would be difficult, but I also think that it ought to have been attempted.

I did not intend, however, to exercise the immemorial privilege of the reviewer, of finding fault. The History of Phoenicia is by far the best account of the old Phoenician cities, their commerce and their art, which has ever been put into the hands of the English reader. It is a book heartily to be recommended to the student of the past. We have chapters on the geography and climate of Phoenicia, on its towns and colonies, on the characteristics of the people, on their architecture and art, their trade and their costume. There are also chapters on their religion and their writing, which are, however, not quite up to the level of the rest. It may be noted that Canon Rawlinson regards the Phoenician alphabet as originating in hieroglyphs invented by the Phoenicians themselves—a view which has found but few supporters among modern enquirers. The argument from the fact that the letters have Phoenician names has as little force as the argument that the letter A was derived from an English picture of an archer, because children were once taught that "A was an archer, who shot at a frog." It is curious that Canon Rawlinson never refers to Canon Isaac Taylor's exhaustive investigation of the whole question.

It is possible that the spade of the excavator may, before long, clear up the difficulties which now surround the subject. The newly found inscriptions of central and northern Arabia tend to refer the use of the Phoenician alphabet to a much earlier date than had hitherto been suspected, and Mr. Petrie's recent discoveries in Egypt are full of promise for the future. The student of ancient oriental history has been so accustomed of late years to archaeological surprises that nothing now seems to him impossible.

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE INSCRIPTIONS FROM NAUKRATIS.

Königsberg, Prussia: Dec. 17, 1889.

Only to-day have I seen the letter of Mr. E. S. Roberts in the ACADEMY of September 14, which appeared during our university vacation, and while I was away from home.

Mr. Roberts, after briefly enumerating the points on which I—as well as Dr. A. Kirchhoff—could not agree with Mr. Ernest Gardner, proceeds to compare some of my later conclusions with those of Mr. Gardner, and to allege that I have now adopted his views.

I am sorry that Mr. Roberts should have thought it necessary to give the question this personal turn. I can only repeat what I said in my first letter to the ACADEMY (July 9, 1887): "It matters very little who is right in such questions; but it matters very much indeed that the truth should be made out and acknowledged as such." Acting on this principle, I laid before the public, in my second paper in the Rhein. Mus. (1889, p. 461 seq.), the results of my later consideration of the matter. I did not care at all whether these agreed with my former opinions, or with those of anybody else. I was glad, indeed, that they coincided in part with some of Mr. Gardner's hypotheses, though I quite overlooked the fact that Mr. Gardner had already put the question, incidentally, whether the three-stroke Sigma was derived from Tsade. I have, however, always been of opinion that, while mere hypotheses may sometimes be of use in scientific matters, the really important thing is to establish hypotheses as truths by means of systematic reasoning. Nay more, I think it is itself a "misrepresentation," as Mr. Roberts styles it, to compare results with one another, rather than the processes by which the results were reached.

And so I leave it to those who are experienced in such questions to decide upon the independent value of my views. I hope ere long to have an opportunity of returning to the subject in another place.

G. HIRSCHFELD.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish immediately a fifth edition, considerably enlarged, of Sir John Lubbock's Origin of Civilisation.

DR. G. M. DAWSON, of the Geological Survey of Canada, has published some notes on the remarkable ore deposit which has attracted attention of late years at the Treadwell gold mine in Alaska. The ore-mass is not an ordinary vein, or lode; but a granitic intrusion, much crushed and altered. Among the secondary minerals, iron-pyrites is found; and microscopic examination of this mineral, by Mr. F. D. Adams, shows that the gold occurs, partly at least, in a free state mechanically enclosed in the pyrites. Such an association has been suspected in many gold reefs; but the proof is rarely so clear as in this case.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE State Council of Kashmir has, on the proposal of the British Resident, Col. P. Nisbet, sanctioned the publication of a systematic catalogue of the Maharaja's collection of Sanskrit MSS. at Jammu, under the editorship of Dr. Aurel Stein, Principal of the Oriental College, Lahore. This collection, although of recent date—having been mainly formed by the late Maharaja Ranbir Singh—is one of the largest in Northern India. It contains over 4000 works, and among them a very considerable number of ancient Sanskrit MSS., purchased for the late Maharaja at Benares and elsewhere in India. The library is preserved in the Raghunath Temple at Jammu, and has not been previously explored by a European scholar. It is mainly due to the interest shown in the matter by Raja Amar Singh, the president of the Kashmir Council of Regency, and by the Resident, that the preparation of a scientific catalogue has now become practicable.

DR. STEIN has been engaged, since a visit to Kashmir in 1888, in researches relating to the Rajatarangini of Kalhana, the Royal Chronicle of Kashmir, with a view to a new edition of this work. During a more recent sojourn in the "Happy Valley," Dr. Stein was fortunate enough to secure the Codex Archetypus of all extant Kashmir MSS. of the Rajatarangini, written in the seventeenth century, for the purpose of his edition, and to devote some time to the identification of ancient localities mentioned in the work. A visit to the shrine of Vijayavara, the modern Bijabror, was rewarded by the discovery of two Sanskrit inscriptions in Śāradā characters. One, dated in the reign of King Rājadeva, goes back to the early part of the thirteenth century.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, Dec. 11.)

F. ROGERS, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—Miss Grace Latham read a paper entitled "Some Laws in Dramatic Art." Miss Latham remarked that the drama, so far as it represents life, thought, and feeling through the human form, is linked with painting and sculpture; but that it differs from them, as—(1) Its material is the living human being, with whom the subjects it illustrates must be connected. (2) The living material necessitates motion, also progression—the effects obtained being transitory; hence the development of character, plot, &c. (3) The transitory nature of dramatic art obliges it to be produced at fixed times, before many spectators. A picture or statue can wait for beholders, can be seen at any moment. A play must succeed or fail at once, so far as each audience is concerned. The limited time a body of people can be held together causes the abridgment especially characteristic of dramatic art. A crowd is always restless; hence the attention of an audience must be caught, kept, and directed by means of contrast, climax, and continuity of action, &c. (4) Dramatic art deals with the exceptional moments of life. Plays being usually produced in large buildings, their situations, passions, and characters require to be strongly emphasised to be at all effective; and unless they will bear this treatment they are unfit for dramatic representation. (5) Both eye and ear are appealed to. Opportunity must be provided by the playwright for action and grouping, which may tell their story to the eye, as well as words capable of being said with characteristic intonations. (6) The works of the dramatist, like those of the musician, exist through the co-operation of skilled interpreters, who can use opportunity, work out climax and contrast, and represent character. Without them the writings of a Shakespeare become but poems or tales, unless the student himself possesses dramatic knowledge to create in his mind a vivid picture of their representation, and become his own interpreter.—An interesting discussion followed, in which Mr. F. Rogers, Mr. W. H. Cowham, Mr. F. Payne, Mr. B. Dyer, Mr. J. E. Baker, and other members took part.

MANCHESTER GOETHE SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, December 11.)

DR. A. W. WARD, president, in the chair.—Mr. Preisinger read a paper by Prof. O. H. Herford, of Aberystwyth, on "Goethe's Hermann und Dorothea." This work, the result of a single though not continuous effort (begun August, 1796, finished March, 1797) was, if not the richest, yet certainly the ripest fruit of Goethe's activity during his great Weimar period. In spite of its perfect finish and its homogeneity, it reflects, though in a manner often subtle and refined, the intellectual, moral, and social strivings of the time and of Goethe himself. The French Revolution, the Italian journey, Goethe's friendship with Schiller, Wolf, Voss, and W. von Humboldt, have all their part in it. Schiller's was perhaps the most important of these influences, as it restored Goethe, as he gratefully owns, to poetry, which he had as good as abandoned. Wolf's theory of the rhapsodic origin of the Homeric poems encouraged Goethe to vie, on a different ground, with the father of poetry; and Voss's Gisela, a crude though suggestive effort to apply Greek art to German life, was the immediate inspiration, though not the model, of Hermann und Dorothea. Goethe took his subject from an unpretending anecdote in the prolix work of G. G. Götting (1734 and 1737) on the emigration of a Salzburg Protestant community to Prussia and Hanover. This simple story of the wooing of an emigrant maiden by a citizen's son of Altmühl Goethe used, in his own words, for "detaching the purely human element in the life of a small town from its excrescences and at the same time reflecting in a little mirror the great movements of the theatre of the world." The two communities introduced, although of one race, are separated by the broad distinctions of a wandering and a stationary community, which are typified in the two central figures: Dorothea, the self-dependent, heroic maiden; and Hermann, the awkward, home-bred, yet strong and tender youth. The revolutionary upheaval which brings these lovers together is introduced as a needful element in a purely literary conception, the development of idyllic beauty out of distraction and disorder. The reasons for Goethe's success in giving the air of Homer to undisguisedly modern materials are the essential unity of his figures, the broad human basis on which the differences of characters are founded, the absence of any such contrast between refinement and rusticity—as, e.g., in Longfellow's and Clough's epic idyls. The distinction between Goethe's work and all Arcadianism whatsoever is that Arcadia is an imaginary seclusion of elegant and sentimental souls from the stir and stress of life, while Hermann und Dorothea is life itself, disengaged, not from its stir and stress, but from the excrescences which overlie and disguise the inner movement of human hearts. Hermann und Dorothea was, at the time of its appearance, received with warm applause by the leading German critics, A. W. Schlegel and W. von Humboldt. On the romantic it had little influence, but abroad its classical perfection won for it a place second only to Faust among Goethe's works.—In the discussion which followed, Dr. Ward criticised Goethe's treatment of his metre, and claimed for Greek idyllic poetry its share among the influences upon Goethe's work.—Mr. Schelling drew attention to an opera by Mr. Gustav Rösler, founded on the subject of Hermann und Dorothea.—Dr. Ward read a short paper on "Count William of Schaumburg-Lippe," whom Goethe, in Dichtung und Wahrheit, places among those German sovereigns of the eighteenth century who drew into their service distinguished men of intellectual ability to adorn and benefit the society of their states. The count (born 1724), who received his first education in England, was a genuinely kind, lovable man, an independent thinker, a recklessly brave and enthusiastic soldier. He served in Austria and in Portugal, where he came under the influence of that true representative of eighteenth-century reform—the Marquis of Pombal. He published a work on defensive warfare, in order to show how peace could be preserved by readiness for war, and preceded Scharnhorst and Stein in their endeavours to create a national army. The literary names chiefly associated with Count William are Thomas Abbt, the friend of Nicolai, and the author of a brilliant essay on death for our native land, whom an early fate cut off from a promising career as a historian; and Herder, who from 1771 to 1776 was chief officiating clergyman at Bückeburg, the capital of the count's principality. Unfortunately, there was little sympathy, and consequently no harmonious intellectual intercourse between the count and Herder, whose temper lacked the sweet reasonableness with which his great friend Goethe accommodated himself to the narrow sphere of a small state. Count William died in 1776, a few months after Herder's removal to Weimar.

GYMNODORION SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, December 18.)

J. ANDREW CORBETT, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. Frederic Seeböhm read a paper on "The Celtic Open-field System." Mr. Seeböhm observed that German writers on the "Mark" and "Village Community" have left Celtic ground almost unexplored, and have perhaps been too ready to indulge patriotic feelings by assigning a Teutonic origin to a system which they have closely examined only in German districts. On the other hand, even the two recent volumes of the late lamented French scholar M. de Coulanges, though containing chapters of remarkable thoroughness and value on the rural economy of Gaul under the Merovingian kings, and notwithstanding their wonderful lucidity in interpretation of the texts, still leave us quite in the dark as to the origin of the Gallic open-field system. In a letter written to Mr. Seeböhm just two years ago, M. de Coulanges expressed his surprise that no trace, or hardly any trace, was to be found in the ancient documents of French history of the open-field system, adding that he was almost willing to concede that possibly it might have had a German origin, seeing that it resembled so closely the system described in the Germania of Tacitus. Mr. Seeböhm contended, on the contrary, that there are facts which prove beyond reasonable doubt that the open-field system has from ancient times been thoroughly at home in North-West France, and that it was by no means borrowed from a Frankish or other Teutonic source. A visit to Brittany last autumn had enabled him to carry out a personal investigation on the spot. The chief marks of the open-field system he thus shortly described: (1) An open-field township, except near the homesteads, had no permanent hedges. (2) Both meadow and arable lands were open to the common pasture of the flocks and herds of the township except while the grass and corn crops were growing. After the crops were removed the common right of pasture was resumed. (3) And yet, though subject to these common rights, the land for the purposes of the crops was in the private ownership of individual holders. (4) For the purpose of the crops and the private ownership the meadow and the arable of a township were divided into many hundreds and often thousands of narrow strips, or acres, divided by turf balks or ploughed up into high-backed lands laid out so as generally each to embrace a day's ploughing. And the land of each holder was not contiguous, but consisted of a bundle of strips, often as many as from thirty to sixty scattered about on the whole open field. An examination of this system as it existed in early Britain and Ireland led Mr. Seebohm to the belief that it was a Celtic system independent of the Teutonic system, though very possibly having in prehistoric times a common origin in the old Aryan home, or in survivals from the husbandry of still more ancient races on the ground before the coming of the Aryan tribes. A close examination of the husbandry of Brittany, with an inspection of Chartularies and other documents at San Gwenolet, Plouharnel, Carnac, Redon and elsewhere, together with a philological comparison of agricultural terms, had led Mr. Seebohm to the conclusion that the connexion between the systems of Brittany, Cornwall, and Wales is a very striking one; and that in Western France, at any rate, it was a Celtic system, and could not have been an importation into Gaul by the Goths or Franks.—In the discussion that followed Mr. Corbett commented on the fact that no survival of the system was now to be found in Wales, and Mr. G. L. Gomme was disposed to ascribe the system to Roman rather than to any earlier influences.

FINE ART.

The Church Plate of the County of Dorset.
By J. E. Nightingale. (Salisbury.)

A few years ago such a monograph as this could hardly have been produced. Some local antiquary might have contributed a few lines and a rough woodcut, representing one of the more remarkable pieces of church plate in the county, to some local antiquarian publication; and there the information would have lain as much buried as ever. It is only by means of co-operation that the treasures, even of one sort, preserved in a small county, can be described; and such co-operation can only be accomplished when initiated by an authority which commands general respect. The increased attention paid to the preservation of monuments of the past is beginning to produce patent results, and the monograph under consideration is one of them.

The Bishop of Salisbury desired

"to obtain authentic returns of the church plate belonging to every parish in the diocese for the purpose of their being preserved in the diocesan registry. To carry out this design a printed form of return was issued to every incumbent, through the rural deans, stating what special information was required. These were ultimately collected together, and form the basis of the matter now printed."

Other bishops please copy! Needless to say, the returns sent in were full of inaccuracies; but they served as a guide, and greatly abbreviated the work of cataloguing.

The history of Church plate in Dorset resembles the history of that of other counties. Henry VIII. confiscated the great mass of it. Much of what remained was sold for parish expenses. In 1552 Edward VI. appointed a commission to examine the church property and to take away all superfluous plate, leaving only to each church "one, two, or more chalices or cuppes according to the multitude of people." The account of the church goods in Dorsetshire, drawn up by these commissioners, is fortunately preserved in the Record Office; and Mr. Nightingale has printed that part of it which refers to the plate. Six parishes are recorded as possessing three chalices each, fifty-five have two chalices, 204 have one chalice. The "worst" was always the one left for future use. Thus, in the year 1552 there were still 265 mediæval chalices in the possession of the churches of the county. Of these only three exist at the present day.

The great and final destruction was wrought in Queen Elizabeth's time. In the year 1567 orders were issued requiring the disuse of "massing chalices" and the substitution of "decent communion cups." The chalice was, therefore, everywhere replaced by a cup with a paten cover of very ordinary form, so many examples of which are still found all over England. No less than 104 of such Elizabethan cups remain in Dorsetshire alone, seventy-four of them being hall-marked between 1562 and 1591. Others were clearly of local manufacture, and, though not hall-marked, have one of two (town or maker's) marks, which certainly belonged to someone working in the county. About seventy parishes possess communion plate of the seventeenth century. In the eighteenth century several parishes acquired large additions of single pieces or of sets; while in the present century some fifty parishes are known to have exchanged their old plate for new.

The above brief abstract of Mr. Nightingale's conclusions will serve to show the excellent quality of his work. The bulk of his book is occupied with detailed accounts of the plate in every church, and there are sixteen full-page illustrations of the more remarkable specimens.

W. M. CONWAY.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE usual winter exhibition of "Old Masters" at Burlington House will open next week; the private view is fixed for to-day. It is understood that the special features this year will be collections of the work of Rembrandt and Velasquez, and also a collection of the water-colour drawings of the sculptor Stephens, best known for his Wellington monument in St. Paul's.

THE Hobby Horse, for the future, will be issued to none but annual subscribers; only the exact number subscribed for will be printed, and single copies will no longer be procurable. The January number will contain some studies by Sir Frederick Leighton; an essay upon contemporary art, by Mr. G. F. Watts; a poem by Mr. J. Addington Symonds; a notice of Mr. Pater's new volume; and some renderings of Propertius into English prose, by Mr. Selwyn Image, which have been revised by Mr. Postgate.

THE Reliquary for January will contain "Some Inventories of Church Goods," including relics in Coventry Cathedral, goods of St. Katherine's Hospital, St. Martin's Le Grand Church, Langley Abbey, Norfolk, Howden, Yorkshire, Lowthorpe, Yorkshire, Southwell Church, Notts; also illustrated articles on "The Devil's Arrows," near Boroughbridge, by Mr. A. H. D. Leadman; and on "The Nine Ninnyhammers," by Mr. J. T. Micklethwaite.

At the last general meeting of the Society of Medallists, it was decided to offer prizes of £25 and £5 respectively for medals or models of medals in metal or plaster. Objects in competition should be sent to the secretary, Mr. H. A. Grueber, British Museum, by April 1.

MESSRS. JOHNSTONE, NORMAN & Co., of New Bond Street, have now on view a large stained-glass window, executed by Mr. John La Farge, of New York, whose work on a smaller scale attracted attention at the recent exhibition of American decorative art.

MR. HENRY PFUNGST has just presented to the Nottingham Castle Museum a fine water-colour drawing by Hamilton.

THE amount already received by the Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt is a little more than £400. Subscriptions should be sent to Mr. E. J. Poynter, 28, Albert Gate, S.W.

THE STAGE.

Dramatic Works. By T. W. Robertson. With Memoir by his Son. (Sampson Low.)

THE "principal dramatic works" is the full entry on the title-page; for to print the whole of them would have been unadvisable, T. W. Robertson having been a most prolific writer, some of whose efforts did not pretend to permanent value. No less than fifteen plays, however—including a posthumous farce, and one or two larger plays of dubious success—are included in the two portly volumes which are now before us; and the reader is unquestionably enabled—and it is for the first time—to judge, in the quietude of the study, what is the real rank of a writer who, after years of failure, became for a few years very popular, and who, after these few years of great popularity, fell not indeed into disrepute, but into comparative neglect. We need not be concerned with any very elaborate enquiry into the sources of Robertson's fascination for what was at least an important moment in the history of our stage, but we may declare with a certain amount of confidence that the truth in the matter of Robertson's merits lies between the two extremes. He was not the lasting and the dazzling genius which some of his friends esteemed him to be. He was not, on the other hand, the purely ephemeral writer that it has of late, in more quarters than one, been the fashion to represent him. Nor is there anything surprising in the position he took up. When one knows, along with his work, something of his circumstances, the connexion between the two is both interesting and easy to trace. Of his life and of his circumstances, the work—poor at first, then finer, then a little wearied and ordinary—was the very natural result.

The genuineness of Robertson's inspiration, such as it was, and his entire unconventionality were the causes of his first successes, in so far as these were to be attributed to literary qualities at all, or to those powers of observation of life which it was the business of his literature to embody. But of course his quite exceptional knowledge of stage requirements—a familiarity with the theatre which was wholly advantageous, inasmuch as he contrived to keep his independence of vision in spite of it—was of immense assistance to him (as the same has been to Mr. Pinero) in assuring him of what was possible and what was effective. A wider and more varied observation of life would have permitted him to be as true in depicting one phase of society as in depicting another. As it was, while his Krux is a portrait, and, in another social stratum, his Tom Stylus is a portrait, there is a certain indefiniteness—for once, perhaps, the taint of conventionality—in his sketches of "the great world." Extraordinary personal sympathy with the soldier—the poor man himself, in the depths of his poverty, was once on the very point of enlisting—kept him right in all those episodes in which the military are concerned. It is a great mistake to declare that T. W. Robertson's pieces are not of the kind that one can read. They can be read and be found interesting; read and found, at the very least, entertaining. But though this is so, and though they, or the best of them, will likewise hold their own yet awhile, we do not feel sure that it can be said of Robertson that he brought into his literature a new view, or a strikingly individual view of life. What he did was to bring on to the stage a view of life that had not obtained hitherto in that region. And when he made the effort to leave what we may fairly call high comedy, or the higher kind of genre, for the more essentially dramatic, the more stirring, the more profound, it is probable that what told against him was a certain inability on his part to reach the violent or to reach the intense. I do not know that throughout his work there is a trace of the capacity for any great passion. Mr. John Oxenford, when he was praising "Caste," in the Times, could well and truly lay stress on the "epigrammatic tendency that pointed the entire fable"; on a "predilection for domestic pathos," which almost implies an indisposition for tragedy; and on a "freedom from convention in the delineation of characters." Furthermore, it is but just to remember—and Robertson's son dwells on it so much that we are caused to remember it permanently—that the success of Robertson's pieces was not dependent on their performance by any particular company. A certain method and a certain scale of theatre did undoubtedly associate themselves with the success. At the Haymarket there was not the enthusiasm that there had been at the Prince of Wales's. But "Society" had triumphed at Liverpool, under the direction of Henderson, before ever it triumphed in Tottenham Street; and Miss Sophie Larkin was the only player who appeared in the two places.

The details of his father's life, which Mr. Robertson the younger gives us, are very interesting. They tell us of his honourable origin and of his life of struggle. The sometime manager of "the Lincoln circuit" had much reason to be proud of his family, the youngest of whom—it could be no other than Mrs. Kendal—is now admittedly the greatest of English actresses, and the eldest of whom was, at all events for a few years, the most prominent dramatist of his period. T. W. Robertson's conduct, all through life, was such as might have been looked for from the son of rightly respected parents. He was the soul of honour and of kindness. Like many Englishmen, he bore adversity with courage; and, unlike many Englishmen, his head was not turned by a wholly unlooked-for prosperity. When his father's pecuniary fortunes gave way, and "the Lincoln circuit" had to be broken up, Robertson was thrown, very young, entirely on his own resources. He acted a little, but never it seems with much success. He took to writing; and, as he had lacked the opportunity to master any particular subject, it was to the smaller imaginative work—belles lettres of the humbler kind—that he naturally drifted. Certain studies of theatrical types, which he made not at all in the first days of his writing, are, if I remember accurately, noteworthy examples of real observation and of a happy fashion of recording it. But after the long-delayed success of his dramatic endeavours, Robertson was not likely to do much more to the social essay or the imaginative sketch. Play now followed play somewhat rapidly; and there can be no doubt that, in his later days, both Robertson's health and the quality of his work suffered by the superabundance of his labours. Herein he wanted, as it seems to me, wisdom. It is not unkind to suggest that he should have been content to reap his harvest not quite so rapidly. Robertson was twice married, and the son who is his biographer is the son of his first wife. She was an attractive and excellent young actress, who became known to Robertson when he was himself an actor, and who was his companion through all his days of difficulty. Her death and his first assured triumph were almost simultaneous. Three years or so afterwards, Robertson married again. With Bohemia, even of the better kind, he had then absolutely finished; and it seemed that thereafter he worked too hard and lived in a circle that was rather too restricted. He was liked—it may almost be said that he was loved—wherever he went. Much of the charming wholesome spirit of the man survives for us, fortunately, in his plays.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

IN common with about a thousand other children—many of them bald-headed and not a few of them grey—we were privileged, on Saturday afternoon, to see the pantomime at Her Majesty's. The treat of Drury Lane—a very great treat, confessedly—has not yet been afforded to us, so that we do not profess to write as experts on the relative merits of the two shows. Comparisons are "odorous"; and whatever may be the triumph of Drury Lane, the show at Her Majesty's is distinctly a great one. "Richard Henry" has written the book—and not too long a book—very neatly; and Mr. Charles Harris's notions of spectacle are of an advanced kind. The absence of buffoonery, too, is much to be commended. While there is a proper harlequinade at the end of the business, the action of the piece itself, and the charm of its spectacle, suffers but little—and that, quite necessary—interruption. Miss Minnie Palmer plays Cinderella, and she is America's favourite representative of the very juvenile person—of what we may call the exaggerated ingenue. She has attractiveness of manner, and, especially in speaking, an extremely sympathetic voice—the best and least mannered of "elocution." Miss Robina, who plays far better than she did in "Faust" at the Gaiety, is a very sufficient Prince, though there are rumours to the effect that Miss Violet Cameron, who has been ill, may undertake the part during the latter portion of the run. Three or four good comic men are usefully occupied; and they include Mr. Shiel Barry, who was so wonderful, and so more than comic, in the "Cloches de Corneville," and Mr. Charles Coburn, the hero of the "two lovely eyes" song (we forget whether they were "black" or "blue"). But admirable as these different people's efforts are, it is the spectacle that is "convincing." What a manoeuvring of crowds!—what an arrangement and rearrangement of gay or gorgeous colour. The scenes, by Telbin and by Ryan especially, and Emden's Transformation, are not only elaborate, but of distinguished beauty. The dances, in themselves, are not perhaps very remarkable—are not up, it may be, to the highest level reached by the modern followers of "the Sallé" and "the Camargo"—but they are at all events of the right kind. The short skirt is chiefly tabooed, and singular grace is secured by the dexterous manipulation of long gown and flowing or fan-like drapery. Truly admirable as may be many things that are done elsewhere, there is no question that the pantomime at Her Majesty's is really a sight to see.

LITTLE Miss Vera Beringer—who, by the bye, unlike most child actresses, grows space—is giving her farewell performances in "Fauntleroy," every afternoon, just now, at the Opera Comique. The cast remains a good one, Mr. Somerset and Miss Helen Leigh still playing admirably the old nobleman and the noisy would-be daughter-in-law, and Miss Elizabeth Robins, returning after her distinguished success at the Criterion, to the charming part of young Mrs. Errol, which she understands so well. As for the "little Lord," Miss Vera Beringer has him at her fingers' ends, so to speak, yet familiarity with the character has brought with it no neglect of the art. And, to show, we suppose, that she is not for ever to be identified exclusively with the rôle that made her famous, Vera Beringer gives a couple of skilful little recitations every afternoon, after the play.

MISS GERALDINE ULMAR AND MISS JESSIE BOND have both, we hear, been "out of the bill" at the Savoy, through temporary indisposition. And at the Shaftesbury, Miss Annie Hughes was for at least two nights unable to act; her place being supplied by Miss Eva Moore. At the Vaudeville, the dramatist, Mr. Buchanan, and the actor, Mr. Thomas Thorne, have both been laid aside. Even theatrical people are not made absolutely of steel, though they come nearer to it, we think, than any other section of humanity.

By the death of Mr. Frank Marshall—which occurred a few days since, at his house in Bloomsbury—we lose a genial member of society, who was at the same time a good Shaksperian critic. Until lately most of the work we believe, that was connected with the "Henry Irving Shakspeare," had been done by Mr. Marshall, who at an earlier period had seemed a dramatist of promise, and was even, to some extent, a dramatist of performance. He wrote "False Sham"—a play which had a certain character; and by his adaptation of the "Saratoga" of Mr. Bronson Howard (he called his version "Brighton"), he provided Mr. Charles Wyndham with one of those parts which did much to establish a light comedian's reputation for an actor who has since been more ambitious. Mr. Marshall leaves a widow, long known to the stage as Miss Ada Cavendish.

MUSIC.

RECENT MUSIC PUBLICATIONS.

WAGNER's Ring of the Nibelungen. By Gustav Kobbé. (New York: G. Schirmer.) This little work, which has reached a fifth edition, gives an analysis of the tetralogy with musical illustrations. It is written in a clear and interesting manner, and will prove of great service to those who have not time, or may not be competent, to examine the work for themselves. There is also a short introduction, with some historical and critical remarks. Mr. Kobbé points out one fault in the dramatic construction of the "Ring"—viz., the prolonging of scenes which are merely episodic. In this most critics would agree with him. But he goes so far as to speak of Wotan as a "bore," except in the noble scene with Brünnhilde in the finale of "The Valkyr."

The Organists' Quarterly Journal, Part 84 (Novello), contains a Preludio e Fuga by G. B. Polleri, which obtained a first prize at Padua in 1884. The writing is clever, but not laboured. Moreover, it is not difficult to play. An Allegro Moderato, by R. Ernest Bryson, is a vigorous and effective piece, intended as a concluding voluntary. A Scherzo by the Rev. A. H. Stevens is lively, and the Trio melodious; but the music has little individuality.

May Margaret, Choral Ballad, by Erskine Allon (op. 17) (London Music Publishing Co.), is, to our thinking, one of the composer's most successful efforts. The opening chorus is fresh and pleasing, and the music throughout is melodious and unaffected. The work is a short one, and may be recommended to choral societies. The words—by J. Payne—are reprinted by permission from Songs of Life and Death.

Suite for Pianoforte. By Edward German. (Ashdown.) There is plenty of clever writing in the various numbers; but if the composer means them to be played one after the other, the work is far too long. They are in various keys; and, with the exception of the Bourrée, all the pieces are modern in character. This Bourrée and Elegy No. 4 are the most pleasing. The Tarantella—or Saltarella, as it should have been called—is commonplace.

Trois Suites, Esquisses Posthumes, Six Préludes. By Stephen Heller. (Edwin Ashdown.) The name of this composer recalls the many characteristic Études and pieces which have been the delight both of teachers and pupils; and anything from his pen will be received with respect and affection. But these posthu-mous works, though they contain many pleasing ideas and effective passages, show signs of failing powers. Indeed, they had not received the composer's finishing touches before his death, for on the title-page of the three sets we read: "Mises en ordre et achevées par H. Barbedette." Of the Suites, the second is the most attractive. Of the Esquisses, the Barcarolle shows most character; the Fileuse is a good study for the fingers. The Préludes have for us the greatest charm; and, in any case, they are excellent practice.

Pavane Espagnole, Zambra Granadina, Sevillanas, Barcarolle Catalane, Cotillon Waltz. Pianoforte Pieces. By J. Albeniz. (C. Ducol.) This composer, as is well known, has achieved no small success in the performance of his own compositions. They are light and graceful; and by certain nuances and change of time he knows how to impart a certain character and charm to them. If played in an ordinary manner they would produce but little effect. The first is not difficult. The second, also easy, is pleasing in its rhythms. Sevillanas has an attractive principal theme. The Barcarolle commences well, but the middle section is weak. We care least for the Waltz.

Six Songs. By Frances Allitsen. (Ascherberg.) No. 1—"Not Quite Alone"—has good feeling and some tasteful harmonies, but the accompaniment follows somewhat too faithfully the voice part. No. 2—to words by Lord Tennyson—is an expressive song, and the music pleases by its weird and unconventional character. No. 3 is less striking, and gives one the impression of having been composed at the pianoforte. Of the remaining numbers, the last—again to Tennyson's words—may be praised for its decisive rhythm and dramatic style.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

MR. DANNREUTHER will commence his twentieth series of concerts at Orme Square on January 16. The programme on that occasion will include a new pianoforte Trio in E. flat (Op. 35) by Dr. Stanford, and Bach's Suite in B minor for flute and strings. The second concert takes place on January 30. On February 13, a new pianoforte Trio in G by Dr. Parry will be performed; and on February 27 Sgambati's pianoforte Quintet will be given for the second time. The programmes also contain interesting pianoforte solos and songs.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

"A MARVELLOUS PRODUCTION AT A MARVELLOUS PRICE."

A NEW SCHOOL ATLAS

ENTITLED

THE CENTURY ATLAS

AND

GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD.

EDITED BY JOHN G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S., F.R.S.E., &C.,

Containing 52 entirely New Maps, beautifully Engraved and Printed in Colours.

ALSO A

DICTIONARY of GENERAL GEOGRAPHY, or GAZETTEER of the WORLD,

DESCRIBING 35,000 PLACES.

STRONGLY AND ELEGANTLY BOUND IN CLOTH,

PRICE 3s. 6d.

THIS Atlas and Gazetteer has been produced with great care, and no expense has been spared to make it complete and accurate. The publishers, therefore, feel confident that the work has only to be universally adopted as THE SCHOOL ATLAS OF THE FUTURE. Nothing to be compared with it for cheapness and completeness has as yet been offered to the Scholastic World.

✚ IMPORTANT.—In order to facilitate the inspection of this Atlas, the publishers have decided (for the next three months only) to send Sample Copies to Head and Assistant Teachers free by parcel post on receipt of 2s. 6d. in stamps or postal order. In no case will duplicate copies be sent at this price, and school address must be given as a guarantee.

Supplied by all Educational Booksellers and Stationers.

LONDON: JOHN WALKER & CO., FARRINGDON HOUSE, WARWICK LANE, E.C.

Ready in January, 1890, post 8vo, brown buckram, gilt top, 7s. 6d.
NEW BOOK ON ROBERT BROWNING: Essays and Thoughts.
 By JOHN T. NETTLESHIP.
 Also Edition de Luxe, Limited to 75 numbered copies, Whatman large paper, price 21s. net.
 Ready in January, 1890, post 8vo, green buckram, gilt top, 6s.
THE POETRY OF TENNYSON. By H. Van Dyke, D.D.
Limited to 250 copies only for England.
 LONDON: ELKIN MATHEWS, VIGO STREET, W.

THE PRESENT NUMBER COMMENCES A NEW VOLUME

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW

For JANUARY contains:—

The ONLY COMPLETE STATEMENT as to PORTUGAL'S RECENT CLAIMS and AGGRESSIONS in AFRICA.—"REMINISCENCES of CARLYLE," by Professor TYNDALL.—The BISHOP of PETERBOROUGH on "THE STATE and the SERMON on the MOUNT."—A. C. SWINBURNE on ROBERT BROWNING'S DEATH; together with Articles by Professor DOWDEN, GRANT ALLEN, and others.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

No. 891.—JANUARY, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

IN THE DAYS OF THE DANDIES.
 A GLIMPSE OF LAKE NYASSA. By CAPTAIN F. D. LUGARD.
 HIS UNCLE AND HER GRANDMOTHER. CHAPS. I.—VI.
 THE MOUND BY YELLOW CREEK.
 THE GHOST BABY.
 OPENING UP INDO-CHINA.
 LADY BABY. CHAPS. XII., XLII.
 CARDINAL LAVIGERIE AND THE SLAV-TRADE.
 By COURTIS TROTTER.
 ROBERT BROWNING. A SONNET.
 By SIR THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.
 A WINTER'S DRIVE FROM SEDAN TO VERSAILLES AND ROUND PARIS DURING THE SIEGE.
 By W. H. (BULLOCK) HALL.
 THE BURN. By PETER BAYNE, LL.D.
 THE OLD SALOON.
 THE POLITICAL POSITION.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR JANUARY.

TWO NEW UTOPIAS. By EMILE DE LAURENTE.
 MR. WILKIE COLLINS'S NOVELS. By ANDREW LANG.
 BROTHERHOOD. By the BISHOP of RIMON.
 THE ORIGIN OF THE ENGLISH. By E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L.
 THE UNFAITHFUL STEWARD. By JULIA WENWOOD.
 PROFIT-SHARING. By Professor J. S. NICHOLSON.
 HOME RULE IN INDIA and in IRELAND. By A. BENGAL MAGISTRATE.
 A LUMBER-ROOM. By MICHAEL FIELD.
 BRAZIL, PAST and FUTURE. By M. G. MULMALL.
 RUNNING FOR RECORDS. By J. R. WERNER.
 WHAT STANLEY HAS DONE FOR THE MAP OF AFRICA. By J. FOOT KELTIE.
 ROBERT BROWNING. By the Rev. STOPFORD BROOKS, M.A.
 ISSISTER & Co., Limited, 15 & 16, Tavistock-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

THE LATE BISHOP OF DURHAM.

An Article on the INTERNAL EVIDENCE for the AUTHENTICITY and GENUINENESS of ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL, by the Right Rev. J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D., appears in the JANUARY Number of

THE EXPOSITOR,

which also contains—

Rev. Prof. J. Agar Beet.—NEW TESTAMENT TEACHING ON FUTURE PUNISHMENT.
 Rev. Prof. T. K. Cheyne, D.D.—TWENTY-SIXTH and TWENTY-EIGHTH PSALMS.
 Rev. J. Oswald Dykes, D.D.—OUR LORD'S FIRST APPEARANCE at the FEAST of TABERNACLES.
 Rev. Charles F. D'Arcy.—MICAIAH'S VISION.
 Rev. Samuel Cox, D.D.—ST. JAMES and his EPISTLE.
 *As among other Articles expected to appear during the year may be mentioned Contributions by Rev. Prof. Dodd, D.D., Rev. Principal Fairbairn, D.D., the late Prof. Elmslie, D.D., Rev. G. Adam Smith, M.A., and the Rev. Canon Westcott, D.D.

THE JANUARY NUMBER commences the FOURTH SERIES.

One Shilling Monthly.

London HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, Paternoster-row.

KNOWLEDGE.

An ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF SCIENCE, simply worded and exactly described.

JANUARY. SIXPENCE.

THE COMMON FLEA.—II. By E. A. BUTLER.
 THE LIFE HISTORY of a FERN. By Dr. E. MARSH SYMONSON.
 SOME PROPERTIES of NUMBERS. By ROBT. W. D. CHRISTIE.
 GROWTH and DECAY of MIND. By the late H. A. PROCTOR.
 TORTOISES and TURTLES. By R. LYDEKKER.
 HARVARD COLLEGE OBSERVATORY. By A. C. RANFARD.
 THE FACE of the SKY for JANUARY. By HERBERT MADLER.
 WHIST and CHESS COLUMNS, &c.
 London W. H. ALLEN & Co., 13, Waterloo-place; and at all Booksellers and Railway Bookstalls.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

JANUARY. Price 2s. 6d.

ON THE NATURAL INEQUALITY of MEN. By Professor HUXLEY.
 THE GERMAN DAILY PRESS. By Dr. BAMBERGER (Member of the Reichstag).
 THE MELBOURNE GOVERNMENT: ITS ACTS and PERSONS. By the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.
 OURSELVES and OUR FOREMOTHERS. By the COUNTESS of JERSEY.
 THE DECLINE of RESERVE among WOMEN. By the COUNTESS COWPER.
 THE FUTURE of the CITY CHARITIES. By ROBERT HUNTER.
 THE ACTUAL and the POLITICAL IRELAND. By T. W. RUSSELL, M.P.
 TEN YEARS of BRITISH ART. By MARCUS B. HUISS.
 ABSOLUTE POLITICAL ETHICS. By HERBERT SPENCER.
 THE ASCERTAINMENT of ENGLISH. By the late CHARLES MACKAY, LL.D., F.R.S.
 THE DANGERS of ELECTRIC LIGHTING. By CHARLES W. VINCENT.
 THE GOVERNMENT and the TITHES. By the Right Hon. EARL GREY.
 London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH & Co., Limited.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR JANUARY.

MARCIA. Chaps. 1—4. By W. E. NORRIS.
 FLEETS and PORTS: a Reply. 1. By Admiral P. H. COLOMB. 2. By Lieut.-General Sir ANDREW CLARKE, G.C.M.G.
 AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS. Part I. By SAMUEL SMILES, Author of "Self Help," &c.
 MADAME SCHUMANN and NATALIE JANOTHA.
 MISS BLAKE of MONKSHALTON. Chaps. 1—4.
 CHRISTMAS in the JEGAN. By RENNELL RODD.
 PRESENT and PAST. By P. T. BARNUM.
 THE PUBLIC and the EDUCATION DEPARTMENT. By J. H. YOXALL.
 CORRESPONDENCE.—St. Alban's Restoration. By Sir ARTHUR, BLOMFIELD.
 NOTES of the MONTH, from LONDON, EDINBURGH, and PARIS.
 OUR LIBRARY LIST.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

THE JOURNAL OF EDUCATION,

No. 246, for JANUARY.

1. OCCASIONAL NOTES:—Journal of Education, 1879-89; Christ's Hospital Scheme; Scholarships for Boys educated in Elementary Schools; Catholic University for Ireland, &c.
2. "1889."
3. SUBJECT-TEACHING v. FORM-TEACHING. By E. M. CLARKE.
4. THE LIMITS of EDUCATION. By G. COLCLOCK.
5. FRENCH and GERMAN A Story of my School Days. By ASCOTT R. HOPE.
6. UNIVERSITIES and UNIVERSITY LIFE in GERMANY.
7. CORRESPONDENCE:—College of Preceptors' Examinations; London University Convocation and the Proposed New Charter; The Parents' National Educational Union; Spurious Literature Teaching, &c.
8. SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES.
9. FOREIGN NOTES:—Sweden, Germany, France, New Zealand, &c.
10. THE TEACHERS' GUILD of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND.
11. REVIEWS and NOTICES:—Rendall's "The Cradle of the Aryans"; Skrine's "A Memory of Edward Thring"; "Whitley's" "In Cap and Gown"; Gift Books, &c.
12. OUR TRANSLATION PRIZE, and TWO GUINEA EXTRA PRIZE.

Price 6d., per post 7d.

*As Volume for 1890 now ready, 7s. 6d., post free.
 Binding Cases, 1s. 6d.

Offices: 86, FLEET-STREET, LONDON, E.C.

HAZELL'S ANNUAL, 1890.

A Cyclopaedic Record of Men and Topics of the Day. Re-written to date. Contains over 3,500 Original Articles by Eminent Specialists on every question now before the public. Edited by E. D. PRICE, F.G.S.
 "An extraordinary amount of information at a low price.... We can imagine few volumes more useful to place on the table of the reading-room of a public library or of a mechanic's institute."—Academy.

London: HAZELL, WATSON, & VINEY, Limited,
 1, Creed Lane, E.C.

Ready immediately. Price 7s. 6d., crown 8vo, cloth gilt.
 By E. P. SCOTT.

STANLEY: and HIS HEROIC RELIEF of EMIN PACHA.

With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations.
 London: DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet-street, E.C.

Ready immediately at all the Libraries.

Cloth, handsomely bound, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

By MADAME CARENTE,

Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

THE EVE of an EMPIRE'S FALL.

Being Intimate Recollections of the Court of the Tuilleries.

Now ready, crown 8vo, One Shilling.

By EDITH HERAUD,

Authoress of "A Handbook of Elocution and Oratory."

ELOCUTION MADE EASY.

The Elocutionary Pause, its Nature, Use, and Value.
 A Complete and Practical System of Elocution.

London: DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet-street, E.C.

Just published, 8vo, pp. XV., 480. Price 12s.

ORIGINAL NOTES on the BOOK of PROVERBS, according to the Authorized Version. By the Rev. S. C. MALAN, D.D., late Vicar of Broadwindsor, Dorset. Vol. I., Chap. I. to X. 1

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

JUST READY. 1890 EDITION. JUST READY.

DEBRETT'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE,

KNIGHTAGE, and COMPANIONAGE. Beautifully printed, over 1,000 pp., and 1,500 Armorial Bearings. Heraldically Embellished Binding. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 51s. 6d., or in 2 vols., 10s. each.

London: DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet-street.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Hints and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Voburn House,
 Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

EPPS'S

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING

(BREAKFAST)

COCOA.

MADE SIMPLY WITH BOILING WATER OR MILK.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCING CROSS, S.W.

Established 1768.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries:—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

Price One Penny; post-free, Twopence.

"FIFTY YEARS' PROGRESS" of the BRITISH EMPIRE, comprising the Term of the Reign of HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA.

Containing:—The "Howard Vincent" Map of the British Empire. Four Full-page Coloured Diagrams, in Reference to Population, Trade, Shipping, Revenue, &c.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free
LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treason and Loyalty.—The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
 21, FURNIVAL STREET HOLBORN.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
Every Evening, at 8,
LONDON DAY BY DAY.
Mr. Geo. Alexander; Messrs. Martin, Bertridg, Shine, Rignold, Abingdon, Balfour, Wilfred, Russell, East, &c.; Mesdames A. Murray, M. Rorke, E. James, C. Ellet, and Clara Jacks.
Preceded, at 7.15, by POLLY'S VENTURE.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8,
THE FIELD OF THE CLOTH OF GOLD.
Messrs. Chevalier, Tapley, Sinclair, Capel, Gratton, Ward, Shone, and Co.; Mesdames London, Byron, Evelyn, Polak, Grubb, Davies, Ellis, &c.
At 8.15,
LA ROSE D'AUVERGNE.
At 7.30,
IN THE EXPRESS.
At 6.30,
BELLES OF THE VILLAGE.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, PINK DOMINOES.
Messrs. Herbert Standing, Alfred Maltby, A. Boucicault, E. Dagnall, Williams, Baines, and C. H. Hawtrey; Mesdames Rose Baker, Goldney, Robertson, Lydia Cowell, and Alma Stanley.
Preceded, at 8, by ONE SUMMER NIGHT.
Messrs. Day, Lugg, Boucicault, &c.; Miss Richards, &c.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, AUNT JACK.
Preceded, at 8.15, by TO THE RESCUE.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

THIS DAY, at 1.30 and 7.15,
JACK AND THE BEANSTALK.
Messrs. Harry Nicholls, Leno, Lauri, Jun., Griffiths Bros., Conquest, Jun., Leopold Bros., Picon, Stanton, Abba, Harry Payne, and Herbert Campbell; Mesdames H. Vernon, Fandella, Hewitt, Wilson, Comyns, Charteris, Darling, Bennett, Grey, &c., and Duggan.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Every evening, at 8,
RUY BLAS AND THE BLAZE ROUE.
Messrs. Fred Leslie, Fred Storey, and Dalton Somers; Mesdames Ellen Farren, Marion Hood, Sylvia Grey, Linda Verner, Blanche Massey, and Lotty Lind.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. F. R. BARNON.
MR. F. R. BARNON'S SHAKESPEARIAN COMPANY every Evening, at 8, in Shakespeare's Fairy Comedy, with Mendelssohn's Incidental Music,
A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.
Doors open 7.30; Overture, 7.45. Box office open 10.0 to 5.0. Acting Manager, Mr. H. JALLAND. No fees. MATINEES of A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, Saturday, Jan. 4th, Wednesday, Jan. 8th, and every following Saturday and Wednesday, until further notice. Doors open at 5, commencing 7.30. Children half-price to Stalls and Dress Circle to Matinees.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERDORF-TREE.
Every evening, at 8.30, A MAN'S SHADOW.
Messrs. Tree, Fernandez, Kemble, C. Collette, E. M. Robson, Allan, Harcourt, Tapping, Gurney, and Harwood; Mesdames Tree, Minnie Terry, Morrey, and Julia Nelson.
Preceded, at 7.45, by GOOD FOR NOTHING,
Miss Morrey.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, HENRY J. LESLIE.
This evening, at 8.30, THE RED HUSSAR.
Mesdames Marie Tompest, Birdie Irving, Holland, Sidney, Florence Dymott; Messrs. Ben Davies, C. Hayden Coffin, Christian, Wood, J. Le Hay, and Arthur Williams.
At 7.15, WARRANTED BURGLAR-PROOF.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGWICK.
This Evening, at 8.15, PAUL JONES.
Preceded by, at 7.30, JOHN SMITH.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 7.45, MASTER AND MAN.
Messrs. Henry Neville, J. H. Barnes, Robert Pateman, Bassett Roe, C. Dalton, E. W. Gardner, Sidney Howard, F. Shepherd, Geo. Dalzell, E. Meyer, E. W. Lawson, Morton Baker, &c.; Mesdames Ella Pateman, Fanny Brough, — Huntly, &c.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LART, Lessees and Managers.
Every Evening, at 8, THE MIDDLEMAN.
Messrs. Willard, Mackintosh, E. W. Garden, H. Cane, H. V. Edmond, Ivan Watson, C. Crofton, W. E. Blatchley, R. Keith; Mesdames M. Miller, A. Hughes, E. H. Brooke, A. Verity, St. Ange, E. Moore, &c.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical comedy in London,
OUR FLAT.
Messrs. Willie Edouin, Fawcett, Rignold, Forbes-Dawson, Whitaker, Vainby, Sims; Misses Goward, Whitty, Leslie, Sedgwick, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 7.30, A BROKEN SIXPENCE.
At 8.15,
Messrs. J. L. Toole, John Billington, George Shelton, C. M. Lowne, H. Westland; Mesdames Eliza Johnston, Mary Brough, Jenny Donald, Florence Henry, Effie Linton, and Irene Vanbrugh, &c.
Conclude with THE STEEPCHASE.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.
Every Evening, at 8, JOSEPH'S SKELETON.
Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Giltmore, F. Grove, C. H. Jerry, J. S. Blythe, Stanley Hopa, and Fred Thorne; Mesdames Ella Bantler, Sylvia Hodson, Coralie Owee, Gladys Ffolliott, &c.

NIAGARA IN LONDON.

Colossal PICTURE of the GREAT FALLS. Original effects by Philipponnet. Pleasant lounge, music, American sweetmeat store. Refreshments by Beguinot. Electric light. Building cooled throughout. Admission 1s. 10 to 10.—York-street, Westminster (St James's-park station). Second year. Nearly one million visitors.

Literary Men, Artists, and all Brain Workers

WILL FIND

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

a most refreshing beverage,

especially during work when solid food cannot be taken.—It satisfies without loading the stomach, stimulates the system, and leaves none of the neurotic effects of tea and coffee.

The perfect purity and delicacy of this Cocoa is testified to by

Dr. HASSALL, the LANCET, the BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL, HEALTH &c. &c.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.

FRANCIS BAYNES-CROFT, Manager.

To H.B.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Free Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

CATALOGUES POST-FREE.

S. FISHER, 188, STRAND.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

tasted Cocoa
that I like so well."

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

TEXT-BOOKS FOR COMING EXAMINATIONS.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON, 1890.

- Aeschylus.—Persae. Edited by A. O. PRICKARD, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Livy. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. H. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Cicero.—De Amicitia. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.
Xenophon.—Hellenica. Books I. and II. Edited by H. HAILSTONE, B.A., with Map. Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.
Horace.—Odes. Books I. and II. With Notes and Vocabulary, by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.
Virgil.—Georgics. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary, by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.
Virgil.—Georgics. Book II. With Notes, by Rev. J. H. SKRINE, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.
Livy. Books XXI. and XXII. Ed. by Rev. W. W. CAPES, M.A. 5s.
Livy. Book XXI. With Notes and Vocabulary, by J. E. MELHUISE, M.A. Adapted from Mr. Capes's Edition. 1s. 6d. [In Jan.]
Virgil.—Æneid. Books VII., VIII., IX., X. With Notes and Vocabulary, 1s. 6d. each. [VIII. and X. in preparation.]
Thucydides. Book IV. Edited by C. E. GRAVES, M.A. 5s.
Bacon.—Essays. With Introduction and Notes, by F. G. SELBY, B.A. 3s. 6d.
Milton.—Complete Poetical Works. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Prof. MASSON. Globe Edition, 3s. 6d.
Milton.—Poetical Works. Edited, with Introductions, Notes, and Memoir, by Prof. MASSON. 3 vols., fcap. 8vo, 15s.
Milton.—Comus. With Introduction and Notes, by W. BELL, M.A. 1s. 6d. [In January.]
Pope.—Poetical Works. (Including the Essay on Criticism.) Edited by Prof. A. W. WARD. Globe Edition, 3s. 6d.
Spenser.—Complete Works. Edited by Dr. MORRIS, with Memoir by Prof. J. W. HALES. Globe Edition, 3s. 6d.
Elizabethan Literature. (1560-1665.) By GEORGE SAINTSBURY. 7s. 6d.
Eighteenth Century Literature (1660-1780). By EDMUND GOSSE. 7s. 6d.
A Short History of the English People. By J. R. GREEN, M.A. With Analysis. Part II. (1244-1558). Part IV. (1680-1873). 3s. each.

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1890.

- The Gospel according to St. Matthew. The Greek Text, with Notes, by Rev. A. SLOMAN, M.A. [In January.]
Shakespeare.—Julius Cæsar. With Introductions and Notes, by C. H. TAWNEY, M.A. [In preparation.]
Cæsar.—The Gallic War. Book VI. With Notes and Vocabulary, by O. COLBECK, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Vergil.—Æneid. Book V. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Euripides.—Alcestis. With Notes and Vocabulary, by M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. [In preparation.]
Xenophon.—Anabasis. Book III. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. [In preparation.]
Xavier de Maistre.—La Jeune Siberienne et Le Lepreux de la Oite d'Aoste. With Notes, Vocabulary, and Exercises, by S. BARLET. 1s. 6d.
Cicero.—The Catiline Orations. Edited by Prof. A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D., LL.D. 2s. 6d.
Horace.—Epistles and Ars Poetica. Edited by Prof. A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D., LL.D. 6s.
Homer.—Odyssey XXI.-XXII. Edited by S. G. HAMILTON. 3s. 6d.
Euripides.—Hippolytus. Edited by Prof. J. P. MAHAFFY, M.A., and J. B. BURY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Schiller.—Wilhelm Tell. Edited by G. E. FASNACHT. 2s. 6d.

OXFORD LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1890.

- Shakespeare.—Henry V. With Introduction and Notes, by K. DEIGHTON. 2s.
Cæsar.—The Gallic War. Books II. and III. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. W. G. RUTHERFORD, LL.D. 1s. 6d.
Cæsar.—The Gallic War. Book IV. With Notes and Vocabulary, by C. BRYANS, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Virgil.—Æneid. Book VI. With Notes and Vocabulary, by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
Livy.—Books XXI. and XII. Edited by W. W. CAPES. 5s.
Livy.—Book XXI. With Notes adapted from Mr. Capes's Edition, and Vocabulary, by J. E. MELHUISE, M.A. 1s. 6d. [In January.]
Euripides.—Medea. Edited by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. 3s. 6d.
Xenophon.—Hellenica. Books I. and II. Edited by H. HAILSTONE, B.A. 4s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE HIGHER LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1890-1.

- Cicero.—Pro Lege Manilia. Edited by Prof. A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D., LL.D. 2s. 6d.
Cicero.—The Catiline Orations. Edited by the same. 3s. 6d.
Lucretius. Books I.-III. Edited by J. H. WARBURTON LEE. 4s. 6d.
Livy. Books XXI. and XXII. Ed. by Rev. W. W. CAPES, M.A. 5s.
Livy. Book XXI. With Notes, adapted from Mr. Capes's Edition, and Vocabulary, by J. E. MELHUISE, M.A. 1s. 6d. [In Jan.]
Virgil.—Æneid. Book VIII. With Notes and Vocabulary, by Rev. A. CALVERT, M.A. [In preparation.]
Euripides.—Medea. Edited by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. 3s. 6d.
Thucydides. Book IV. Edited by C. E. GRAVES, M.A. 5s.
Pope.—Poetical Works. (Including Satires and Epistles.) Edited by Prof. WARD. Globe Edition, 3s. 6d.

- Arithmetic for Beginners. By J. BROOKSMITH, M.A., LL.B., and E. J. BROOKSMITH, B.A., LL.M. Globe 8vo, 1s. 6d.
Arithmetic in Theory and Practice. By J. BROOKSMITH, M.A., LL.B. New Edition, revised, crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.
Arithmetic for Schools. By Rev. J. B. LOCK, M.A. With Answers and 1,000 additional Examples for Exercises. Third Edition. Globe 8vo, 4s. 6d. Or, in Two Parts:—I. Up to and including Practice, 2s.; II. With 1,000 additional Examples for Exercise, 2s.—KEY, 10s. 6d.
Arithmetic for Beginners. A School Class-book of Commercial Arithmetic. By the same. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.—KEY, 10s. 6d.
Elementary Algebra for Schools. By H. S. HALL, M.A., and S. R. KNIGHT, B.A. Fifth Edition. Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.; with Answers, 4s. 6d. KEY, in the press.
Higher Algebra. A Sequel to "Elementary Algebra for Schools." Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.—KEY, 10s. 6d.
Elementary Algebra. By CHARLES SMITH, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. Globe 8vo, 4s. 6d.
A Text-Book of Euclid's Elements. By H. S. HALL, M.A., and F. H. STEVENSON, M.A. Globe 8vo. Book I, 1s.; Books I. and II., 1s. 6d.; Books I.-IV., 3s.; Books III.-VI., 3s.; Books I.-VI. and XI., 4s. 6d.; Book XI., 1s.
An Elementary Class-Book of General Geography. By HUGH ROBERT MILL, D.Sc., F.R.S.E. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
A Graduated Course of Natural Science for Elementary and TECHNICAL SCHOOLS and COLLEGES. By B. LOEWY, F.R.A.S. In Three Parts. Part I., First Year's Course. Globe 8vo, 2s.
A Geography of Europe. By JAMES SIME, M.A. With Illustrations. Globe 8vo. [Nearly ready.]
An Introduction to the Creeds. By the Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. Canon of Canterbury, Warden of St. Augustine's Coll., Canterbury. 18mo, 2s. 6d.
Class-book of the Thirty-nine Articles. By the same. [In the press.]

MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL LIBRARY.—New Volumes.

- Aeschylus.—Agamemnon. With an Introduction, Commentary, and Translation. By A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. 8vo, 12s.
Aeschylus.—The Suppliants. A Revised Text, with Introduction, Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation. By T. G. TUCKER, M.A. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
Thucydides. Book IV. A Revision of the Text, illustrating the Principal Causes of Corruption in the Manuscripts of this Author. By WILLIAM GUNION RUTHERFORD, M.A., LL.D., Headmaster of Westminster, Author of "The New Phrynichus," and Editor of "Babrius." 8vo. [In a few days.]

MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL SERIES.

- Demosthenes.—De Corona. Edited by B. DRAKE, M.A. 7th and Revised Edition. Ed. by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.
Terence.—Phormio. Edited by Rev. JOHN BOND, M.A., and A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. Third Edition, Revised. Fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d.
Pliny's Letters. Books I. and II. With Introductions, Notes, and Plan. Edited by JAMES OOWAN, M.A. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.
Tacitus.—Histories III.-V. Edited by A. D. GODLEY, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Fcap. 8vo, 5s.
A History of Classical Greek Literature. By the Rev. J. P. MAHAFFY, M.A. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 3s. each. Vol. I. The POETS. With an Appendix on Homer by Prof. SAYOE. Vol. II. The PROSE WRITERS.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 923.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 11, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO.'S LIST.

Large crown 8vo.
TOIL, TRAVEL, and DISCOVERY in BRITISH NEW GUINEA. By THEODORE F. BEVAN, F.R.G.S. With Maps. [Immediately.]

Demy 8vo, 21s.
INDIA, PAST and PRESENT, Historical, Social, and Political. By JAMES SAMUELSON, Author of "Roumania, Past and Present," "Bulgaria, Past and Present," &c. With Map, explanatory Woodcuts and Collotype Views, Portraits, Archaeological and Ethnological Subjects, from 40 Photographs.

With Map, post 8vo.
ENGLISH INTERCOURSE with SIAM in the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. By J. ANDERSON, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.

New and Cheaper Edition.
INTRODUCTION to the SCIENCE of LANGUAGE. By A. H. SAYCE, M.A., Deputy Professor of Philology at the Oxford University. Third Edition, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 9s.

2 vols., post 8vo, half-bound, 86s.
AN ARABIC-ENGLISH DICTIONARY, on a New and Unique System. Comprising about 120 000 Arabic Words, with an English Index. By H. A. SALMONE, Arabic Lecturer at University College, London.

2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.
J. G. FICHTE'S POPULAR WORKS. Translated from the German by WILLIAM SMITH, LL.D. With a Memoir of the Author. Containing—The Nature of the Scholar; The Vocation of the Scholar; The Vocation of Man; The Doctrine of Religion; Characteristics of the Present Age; Outlines of the Doctrine of Knowledge.

Post 8vo, 10s. 6d.
THE SCIENCE of KNOWLEDGE. By J. G. FICHTE. Translated from the German by A. E. KROEGER. With an Introduction by Professor W. T. HARRIS.

Post 8vo, 12s. 6d.
THE SCIENCE of RIGHTS. By J. G. FICHTE. Translated from the German by A. E. KROEGER. With an Introduction by Professor W. T. HARRIS.

Demy 8vo, 12s.
MISCELLANIES.—Vol. III. Essays, Tracts, and Addresses, Political and Social. By Professor F. W. NEWMAN.

With Illustrations.
STRANGE TRUE STORIES of LOUISIANA. By GEORGE W. CABLE. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
"Probably the best living writer of dialect stories.....A volume which will not diminish his fame."—Saturday Review.

New Edition, fcap. 8vo, 4s.
PROVERBS and their LESSONS. By RICHARD CHENEVIX TRENCH, D.D., Archbishop. Eighth Edition.

WELSH PROVERBS.
BRITISH REASON in ENGLISH RHYME. By HENRY HALFORD VAUGHAN, M.A., sometime Regius Professor of Modern History in Oxford University. Crown 8vo, 6s.
This volume contains upwards of 2,600 Welsh Proverbs, with renderings in English rhyme.

Small crown 8vo, 6s.
WESTMINSTER CHIMES, and other Poems. By MAXWELL GRAY, Author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland," &c.

Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
THE EMPIRE of MAN: an Essay in Verse, Together with other Poems. By Colonel FIFE-COOKSON, Author of "Tiger Shooting in the Doon and Ulwar," &c.

Small crown 8vo, 6s.
CAUSE. By MICHAEL DOYLE.

With 4 Portraits and 1 Illustration, 8vo.
THE LIFE of CARMEN SYLVA (Queen of Roumania). Translated from the German by Baroness DEICHMANN. [Immediately.]

Demy 8vo, 14s.
LIFE of WILLIAM ELLIS, Founder of the Birkbeck Schools). With some Account of his Writings and of his Labours for the Improvement and Extension of Education. By E. KELL BLYTH. With Portrait.
"The career of an ardent educational reformer, whose labours in the cause of popular education date from the very commencement of the movement." Saturday Review.

THE PARCHMENT LIBRARY.
MATTHEW PRIOR: a Selection from his Poems. With Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Parchment or cloth, 6s.; vellum, 7s. 6d.
"That choice collection of noble books, 'The Parchment Library,' has received a notable addition in the shape of the 'Selected Poems of Matthew Prior.'" The Speaker.

Crown 8vo.
RUPERT of the RHINE. A Biographical Sketch of the Life of Prince Rupert, Prince Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Cumberland, &c. By Lord RONALD GOWER. With 8 Portraits. [Immediately.]

Crown 8vo, 6s.
BLUNDERS and FORGERIES. Historical Essays. By the Rev. T. E. BRIDGETT.

Crown 8vo, 5s.
THE LIGHT of REASON. By SEBASTIAN S. WYNELL-MAYOW.
The Author aims at giving (1) such clear, brief, concise proofs of the existence of God, and (2) of the means of knowing His will, as may be easily understood by any one who shall take up the inquiry.

Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
RETROGRESSION or DEVELOPMENT? By F. NEVILL.

DEDICATED TO THE EMPRESS FREDERICK.
THE ETHICAL TEACHING of FROEBEL, as gathered from his Works. Two Essays:—I. By MARY J. LYSCHINSKA. II. By THERESE G. MONTEFIORE. Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NEW EDITION.
ENGLISH PSYCHOLOGY. Translated from the French of TH. RIBOT. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d. CONTENTS: Hartley—James Mill—Herbert Spencer—A. Bain—G. H. Lewes—Samuel Bailey—John Stuart Mill.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
A KEY to the IRISH QUESTION. Mainly compiled from the Speeches and Writings of Eminent British Statesmen and Publicists, past and present. With some Chapters on the Reign of Eviction in England and Scotland. By J. A. FOX, Author of "Why Ireland Wants Home Rule," &c.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
POLITICAL PRISONERS at HOME and ABROAD. With Appendix on Dietaries. By GEORGE SIGERSON, M.D., M.Ch., &c., Member of the Royal Commission on Prisons, 1894. With Introductory Letter by JAMES BRYCE, M.P.

THE TIMES-PARNELL COMMISSION.
MICHAEL DAVITT'S SPEECH in DEFENCE of the LAND LEAGUE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Paper cover, 1s. 6d.; cloth limp, 2s
THE WELFARE of the MILLIONS. By the Rev. F. MINTON.

Crown 8vo, 5s.
THE PREVENTION of MEASLES. By C. CANDLER, Author of "The Prevention of Consumption."

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
BROWNING'S LAST POEMS, by ARTHUR SYMONS	19
MISS BRADLEY'S LIFE OF ARABELLA STUART, by S. R. GARDINER	20
BALL'S TRANSLATION OF TAYLOR, by STEPHEN WHEELER	20
THE LETTERS OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON TO MISS J., by Mrs. C. KEGAN PAUL	21
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE	22
CURRENT LITERATURE	24
NOTES AND NEWS	25
ORIGINAL VERSE: "LIFE," by ARTHUR L. SALMON	26
OBITUARY: SIR HENRY YULE, by J. S. O.	26
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	27
FRAGMENTS OF YORKSHIRE MYSTERIES	27
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	28
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Sixth Century of Dante's Beatrice , by Miss R. H. BUCK	28
Middle English Notes , by Henry Bradley	28
An Irish Merman , by James Quinn	29
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	29
LEWIS'S EARLY ARYAN LAW, by A. W. BENN	29
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Some Old and Provincial Plant-Names , by the Rev. Hilderio Friend	30
SCIENCE NOTES	31
PHILOLOGY NOTES	31
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	31
THE OLD MASTERS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE, I., by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	32
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	32
"A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM" AT THE GLOBE, by F. WEDMORE	33
STAGE NOTES	34
THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF PROFESSIONAL MUSICIANS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	34
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	34

JUST PUBLISHED.

NEW FRENCH CATALOGUE—Belles Lettres, History, Travels, &c. Post free One Shilling.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

COINS.—English, Roman, and Greek Gold, Silver, and Copper Coins FOR SALE; also 17th and 18th Century Tokens. Moderate prices.—Apply to W. H. TAYLOR (Member Numis. Soc., London), Ivy View, Ealingdon.

BOOK ILLUSTRATING, Engagements for, required by FIRST-CLASS ARTIST. Preference given to Books for Girls and Tales of Home Life. Terms moderate. Highest references.—Address F. J. Parkhouse-street, Camberwell.

TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' Manuscripts, Plays, Specifications, Legal Work, and all kinds of Documents carefully and accurately COPIED by Remington Machine. Terms moderate.—Write X. Y. Z., May's, 182, Piccadilly, London, W.

TO AUTHORS.—MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS, 18, Bonville-street, Fleet-street, London, E.C., are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS., and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. Digby & Long have also every convenience and ample facilities for the publication of MAGAZINES. Editorial offices if required.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINATION for filling up about FOUR VACANCIES on the FOUNDATION will be held on the 15th JANUARY NEXT. For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington.

LECTURES and LESSONS in English Literature and Composition, Logic, Moral Philosophy, Political Economy, and Classics, by experienced Teacher. Graduate in First Class Honour.—Address Rev. W. STEWART, M.A., LL.B., 4, Fulham-road, S.W.

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.—JANUARY, 1890, containing Articles by Mr. GLADSTONE on FREE TRADE, by Mr. BLAINE on PROTECTION, by JEFFERSON DAVIS on GENERAL LEE, &c. Price 2s. 6d.
G. E. STEWART, 30, Wellington-street, W.C.

MERCHANT VENTURERS SCHOOL, BRISTOL.

The HEAD MASTERSHIP of this School of Science, Art, Technology, and Commerce will become VACANT after the Examinations in May, 1890. The School works in connection with the Department of Science and Art, and the Head Master must be qualified to teach and superintend teaching, under the conditions laid down by that Department. He will be required to devote his whole time to the work of the School, and to be personally responsible for the Chemical branch of it, which has large and well-appointed laboratories. There are upwards of 1,300 students now in attendance. Evening classes form an important part of the School. Applications for the Head Mastership must be sent in to the undersigned address before the 31st JANUARY, 1890, and may be accompanied by copies of not more than five testimonials. Applications from candidates, who cannot show that they have had experience in teaching and in organising schools, and in the modes of scientific and technical education, or from candidates above the age of 35, will not be considered. The salary, made up partly of a fixed payment, partly of capitation fees, and partly of a share of grants on results of examinations, will be guaranteed at not less than £500 a year. Further information may be obtained from GEORGE H. POPE, Merchant's Hall, Bristol.

MIDHURST SCHOOL of ART, SUSSEX.

Principal—Mr. W. FRANK CALDERON.
TERM COMMENCED TUESDAY, JANUARY 7.
Classes, twice a week, include Drawing and Painting from the Life (Draped, Casts, &c.), and Instruction in the Study of Animals. Special arrangements are made by which Students living or lodging in or near Midhurst can work in the Schools every day and receive extra instruction.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES is now Open, 5, Pall Mall East from 10 till 5. Admission 1s.; Catalogue 6d.
ELECTION of ASSOCIATES.—The day appointed for receiving works by Candidates is MONDAY, FEBRUARY 17th, and the day of Election THURSDAY, 30th.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary R.W.S.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY (Incorporated by Royal Charter).

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The LORD ALBERT ARTHUR, G.C.B.
THURSDAY, 16th JANUARY, at 8.30 p.m.
The following Paper will be read:—"PAPERS RELATING to the OFFICIATING PRIEST at the PASCH CELEBRATION in ROME, 1849, a PAGE in the HISTORY of ITALIAN UNITY," by J. FOSTER PALMER, L.R.C.P., F.R.Hist.S.
11, Chandos-street, Cavendish-square, W.

Now ready, price 31s.

CHARLES I. ELTON'S ORIGINS of ENGLISH HISTORY. Second Edition, Revised. 8vo, xxiv and 450 pp., with Ten Historical Maps, cloth.

"This fascinating and scholarly book."—Saturday Review, Dec. 28, 1889.
BERNARD QUANTON, 15, Piccadilly, London.

JUST READY. 1890 EDITION. JUST READY.

DEBRETT'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE, and COMPANIONAGE. Beautifully printed, over 1,000 pp., and 1,500 Armorial Bearings. Heraldically Embellished Binding. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 31s. 6d., or in 2 vols., 16s. each.

London DEAN & SON, 180A, Fleet-street.

Ready immediately. Price 3s. 6d., crown 8vo, cloth gilt.

By E. P. SCOTT.

STANLEY: and HIS HEROIC RELIEF of EMIN PACHA.

With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations.

London: DEAN & SON, 180A, Fleet-street, E.C.

DR. SMILES'S WORKS.

THE HUGUENOTS in ENGLAND and IRELAND. New Edition, with Additions. 7s. 6d.

JAMES NASMYTH: An Autobiography. 16s. and 6s.

LIVES of the ENGINEERS. 5 vols. 7s. 6d. each.

INDUSTRIAL BIOGRAPHY. 6s.

Post 8vo, 6s. each.

LIFE and LABOUR.

SELF-HELP.

CHARACTER.

INVENTION and INDUSTRY.

DUTY.

THRIFT.

LIFE of GEORGE STEPHENSON. 21s., 7s. 6d., and 2s. 6d.

THOMAS EDWARD: Scotch Naturalist. 6s.

ROBERT DICK: Geologist and Botanist. 12s.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

Now ready, at all Booksellers. 700 pages. 3s. 6d., cloth.

HAZELL'S ANNUAL, 1890.

A Cyclopaedic Record of Men and Topics of the Day. Re-written to date. Contains over 3,500 Original Articles by Eminent Specialists on every question now before the public. Edited by E. D. PRICE, F.G.S.

"An extraordinary amount of information at a low price.... We can imagine few volumes more useful to place on the table of the reading-room of a public library or of a mechanic's institute."—Academy.

London: HAZELL, WATSON, & VINEY, Limited,
1, Creed Lane, E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY
ADMISSION FREE,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(About 20 doors West of Mudie's Library.)

THE GREAT MASTERS.—Botticelli, Lorenzo di Credi, Fra Bartolomeo, Raphael, Titian, Da Vinci, Correggio, Rembrandt, Van Dyck, Murillo, &c., REPRODUCED in AUTOTYPE. Permanent Photography from the grand Works in the Louvre, Hermitage, Uffizi, Madrid, Sistine Chapel, the National Gallery, London; the Royal Collections at Windsor and Buckingham Palace.

The various Galleries have separate Albums, easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of art. Visitors are welcome to come and study them, and will not be solicited to make purchases.

For further particulars, send for the new Pamphlet, 40 pages and Four Illustrations, entitled "AUTOTYPE, a Decorative and Educational Art." Free per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE, 188 pp., free per post for 6d.

AUTOTYPE BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY offer their services to AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS to produce by the Autotype Process Book Illustrations of the highest excellence of any subject capable of being photographed.

Amongst the WORK RECENTLY DONE may be cited Wyon's "Great Feats of England"; Dr. Crookshank's "Micro-Photographs of Bacteria"; "Famous Monuments of Central India," for Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.B.; "Facsimiles of Early Italian Engravings," for the Trustees of the British Museum; "The Palaeogeographical Society's Fasciculus for 1888"; Illustrations for the "Journal of the Hellenic Society," &c.

For specimens, prices, and full particulars, apply to the MANAGER.

A U T O - G R A V U R E.

The AUTOTYPE PROCESS applied to Photographic Engraving on copper.

Portraits from Paintings by Pettie, R.A., Oulson, R.A., Holl, R.A.; Specimens of Copies of Drawings, Engravings, &c.; and Examples of Auto-gravure Reproduction of Photographs from Art Objects, from Life, and from Nature, can be seen at the AUTOTYPE GALLERY.

Estimates and particulars on application.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

FOR THE CIRCULATION AND SALE OF ALL THE BEST AND NEWEST BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per Annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per Annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per Annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

TOWN AND VILLAGE CLUBS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the Leading Books of Past Seasons are on Sale, Second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON
241, Brompton-road, S.W., and 2, King-street, Cheapside, E.C.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST FOR THE EXAMINATIONS, 1890-91.

The SCHOOL CALENDAR for 1890. A Handbook of Examinations, Scholarships, and Exhibitions. With a Preface by F. STORR, B.A., Chief Modern Master Merchant Taylors' School. Fcap. 8vo, 161 pp., 1s.

LONDON UNIVERSITY EXAMINATIONS.

MATRICULATION.

This Examination begins on the second Monday of the months of January and July.

- June, 1890.*
LAT. Cicero.—De Amicitia. With Notes by GEORGE LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.
GK. Xenophon.—Hellenics. Book II. With Notes, Analysis, and Introduction, by the Rev. L. D. DOWDALL, M.A., B.D. 2s.

- January, 1891.*
LAT. Horace.—Odes. With Notes by A. J. MACLEANE. 2s. (Books I. and II. set.)

- GK. Aeschylus.—Persae. With Notes by F. A. PALEY, M.A., LL.D. 1s. 6d.

- June, 1891.*
LAT. Livy. Book I. With Notes by PRENDEVILLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

- GK. Xenophon.—Anabasis. Books II. and III. MacMichael Edition, Revised by J. E. MELHUISS, M.A., Assistant Master St. Paul's School. With Life, Itinerary, and Maps. 1s. 6d. (Book III. set.)

INTERMEDIATE B.A. (PASS.)

- July, 1890.*
LAT. Virgil.—Georgics. Books I. and II. Prof. CONINGTON's Edition, Abridged. With Notes, &c. 1s. 6d.

- Livy. Book XXI. With Notes, Analysis, and Introduction, by the Rev. L. D. DOWDALL, M.A., B.D. 2s. 6d.

- GK. Sophocles.—Antigone. With Notes by Dr. PALEY. 1s. 6d.

- July, 1891.*
LAT. Virgil.—Aeneid. Books IX. and X. With Notes. CONINGTON's Edition, Abridged. 1s. 6d.

"The handiest as well as the soundest of modern editions."—Saturday Review.

B.A. (PASS.)

- October, 1890.*
LAT. Virgil.—Aeneid. Books VII. and VIII., Books IX. and X. (Books VII. to X. set.) In 2 vols. Prof. CONINGTON's Edition, Abridged. 1s. 6d. each.

- GK. Aristophanes.—Plutus. Latin Notes by the Rev. H. HOLDEN, LL.D. 2s.

- October, 1891.*
LAT. Terence.—Adelphi. Notes by W. WAGNER, Ph.D. 1s. 6d.

- GK. Euripides.—Iphigenia in Tauris. Notes by Dr. PALEY. 1s. 6d.
Plato.—Phaedo. Notes by Dr. WAGNER. 5s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE TEXTS.

- The following Texts of the subjects set in the above Examinations are published in this Series.*
LAT. Cicero.—De Senectute, et de Amicitia, et Epistolae SELECTAE. By G. LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.

- Terenti Comediae. By W. WAGNER, Ph.D.

- Vergilius. By J. CONINGTON. 2s.

- GK. Euripides. By F. A. PALEY, LL.D. 3 vols. 2s. each.

- Herodotus. By J. W. BLAKESLEY, B.D. 2 vols. 2s. 6d. each.

- Sophocles. By F. A. PALEY, LL.D. 2s. 6d.

OXFORD & CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS EXAMINATION.

Higher Certificate, July 14th, to 26th, 1890.

- LAT. Horace. With Notes by A. J. MACLEANE, M.A. With a Short Life. 3s. 6d.

- Livy. Book XXII. With Notes, &c., by the Rev. L. D. DOWDALL, M.A., B.D. 3s. 6d.

- Virgil.—Eclogues and Georgics. In 1 vol. Prof. CONINGTON's Edition, Abridged, with Notes, &c. 3s.

- GK. Aeschylus.—Persae. Notes by Dr. PALEY. 1s. 6d.

- Septem contra Thebas. Notes by Dr. PALEY. 1s. 6d.

- Euripides.—Iphigenia. Notes by Dr. PALEY. 1s. 6d.

- Alcestis. Notes by Dr. PALEY. 1s. 6d.

- Homer's Iliad. Books XIII. to XXIV. (Books XXII. to XXIV. set.) Edited with Introduction, Commentary, and Notes, by F. A. PALEY, LL.D. (Bibliotheca Classica Edition.) 6s.

- Sophocles.—Ajax. Notes by F. A. PALEY. Cambridge Texts, with Notes Edition. 1s. 6d. Bibliotheca Classica Edition, 2s. 6d.

- Electra. Notes by F. A. PALEY, LL.D. Cambridge Texts, with Notes Edition. 1s. 6d. Bibliotheca Classica Edition, 2s. 6d.

- Plato.—Apology and Crito. Notes by Dr. WAGNER. 2s. 6d.

- Thucydides. Book VI. Notes, &c., by Prof. T. W. DOUGAN, M.A. 3s. 6d.

- FR. Molière's Les Femmes Savantes. Notes and Argument by F. E. A. GASC. 6d. sewed; 1s. cloth.

- Corneille's Horace. Notes by GASC. 6d. sewed; 1s. cloth.

- GER. Schiller.—Wallenstein's Tod. Notes, &c., by Dr. BUCHHEIM. 2s. 6d.

- Goethe.—Hermann and Dorothea. Notes by E. BELL and WOLFEL. 1s. 6d.

- Gutzkow.—Zopf und Schwert. Notes, &c., by Dr. LANGE. 2s. 6d.

- ENG. Shakespeare.—The Merchant of Venice. Notes, Summary, and Analysis, by T. DUFF BARNETT, B.A. (Lond.), Second Master Brighton Grammar School. 1s.

- Bacon's Essays. With Notes, &c., by J. DEVEY, M.A. 1s. sewed; 1s. 6d. cloth.

- ITAL. Dante.—The Purgatorio. A Literal Prose Translation, with the Text of Bianchi printed on the same page, and Explanatory Notes, by W. S. DUGDALE. 3s.

CAMBRIDGE TEXTS.

The following Texts of the subjects set in the above Examinations are published in this Series.

- LAT. Horatius. By A. J. MACLEANE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

- Lucretius. By H. A. J. MUNRO, M.A. 2s.

- Vergilius. By Professor CONINGTON. 2s.

- GK. Aeschylus. By F. A. PALEY, M.A., LL.D. 2s.

- Euripides. By F. A. PALEY, M.A., LL.D. 3 vols., 2s. each.

- Sophocles. By F. A. PALEY, M.A., LL.D. 2s. 6d.

- Thucydides. By J. W. DONALDSON, D.D. 2 vols., 2s. each.

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.

December, 1890.

- ENG. Shakespeare.—Julius Caesar. Notes, Summary and Analysis (no Text). By T. DUFF BARNETT, B.A. 1s.

- LAT. Virgil.—The Aeneid. Books V. and VI. Prof. CONINGTON's Edition, Abridged, with Notes at the end. 2s.

- Caesar.—De Bello Gallico. Books VI. and VII. Notes by GEORGE LONG, M.A. In 1 vol., 1s. 6d.

- Horace.—Satires, Epistles, and Ars Poetica. MACLEANE's Annotated Edition for Schools. 2s.

- Livy. Book V. With Notes, Analysis, &c., by J. PRENDEVILLE.

- GK. Xenophon.—Anabasis. Books II. and III. in 1 vol. MACMICHAEL's Edition, with Notes at the end. Revised by J. E. MELHUISS, M.A., Assistant Master St. Paul's School. With Life and Map. 1s. 6d.

- Euripides.—Alcestis and Hippolytus. With Notes by F. A. PALEY, M.A., LL.D. 1s. 6d. each.

- FR. Racine.—Les Plaideurs. Notes and Arguments by F. E. A. GASC. 6d. sewed; 1s. cloth.

CAMBRIDGE HIGHER LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.

December, 1889-90; June, 1890-91.

- LAT. Virgil.—Aeneid. Book VIII. Prof. CONINGTON's Edition. Abridged With Notes at the end. 1s. 6d.

- Livy. Book XXII. With Introduction, Notes, and Analysis, by the Rev. L. D. DOWDALL, M.A., B.D. 3s. 6d.

- Book V. Notes by J. PRENDEVILLE. 1s. 6d.

- GK. Euripides.—Medea. With Notes by F. A. PALEY, M.A., LL.D. 1s. 6d.

- Sophocles.—Antigone. With Notes by F. A. PALEY, M.A., LL.D. 1s. 6d.

OXFORD LOCAL EXAMINATIONS.

July 14 to 19, 1890.

- ENG. Shakespeare.—Henry V. Notes, Summary, and Analysis (no Text), by T. DUFF BARNETT, B.A. (Lond.). 1s.

- LAT. Caesar.—De Bello Gallico. Notes, &c., by GEORGE LONG, M.A. 4s.

- Virgil.—Aeneid. Books V. and VI. Professor CONINGTON's Edition, Abridged. With Notes at the end. 2s.

- Livy. Book XXI. With Notes, Analysis, &c., by the Rev. L. D. DOWDALL, M.A., B.D. 2s. 6d.

- GK. Xenophon.—Hellenic. Book II. With Analysis and Notes, by the Rev. L. D. DOWDALL, M.A., B.D. 2s.

- Euripides.—Medea. With Notes by F. A. PALEY, M.A., LL.D. 1s. 6d.

- Plato's Apology. With Notes, &c., by Dr. WAGNER. 2s. 6d.

LOCAL AND HIGHER EXAMINATIONS OF THE UNIVERSITIES OF SCOTLAND.

June, 1890.

- ENG. Shakespeare's Plays. Notes, Introduction, Summary, and Analysis (no Text), by T. DUFF BARNETT, B.A. (Lond.). MERCHANT OF VENICE, 1s. HAMLET, 1s.; MACBETH, 1s.; MIDSUMMER NIGHTS DREAM, 1s.

- Midsummer Night's Dream. Edited with Notes by S. W. SINGER. 4d. sewed.

- Milton.—Paradise Lost. Book I. With Notes, &c., by C. P. MASON, B.A., F.C.P. 1s.

- ten Brink's Early English Literature. Translated by Professor H. M. KENNEDY. 3s. 6d.

- LAT. Caesar.—De Bello Gallico. Book I. Notes by GEORGE LONG, M.A. Vocabulary by W. F. R. SHILLETO, M.A. 1s. 6d.

- Books IV. and V. Notes, &c., by GEORGE LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.

- Books VI. and VII. Notes by GEORGE LONG, M.A. 1s. 6d.

- Horace.—Odes. MACLEANE's Edition. With Short Life. 2s.

- Satires, Epistles, &c. MACLEANE's Edition. 2s.

- Juvenal.—Satires. (Expurgated.) Notes, &c., by HERMAN PRIOR, M.A. 3s. 6d.

- Livy. Book II. Notes by J. PRENDEVILLE. 1s. 6d.

- Virgil.—Aeneid. Book I. Prof. CONINGTON's Edition, Abridged. With Vocabularies by W. F. R. SHILLETO, M.A. 1s. 6d.

- Books I. and II. With Notes at end. Abridged from Prof. CONINGTON's Edition. 1s. 6d.

- Book VII. With Notes at the end. Abridged from Prof. CONINGTON's Edition. 1s. 6d.

- FR. Molière.—Les Precieuses Ridicules. Notes, &c., by GASC. 6d. sewed; 1s. cloth.

- GER. Goethe.—Hermann und Dorothea. Notes by WOLFEL and BELL. 1s. 6d.

- Freitag.—Die Journalisten. Notes by Dr. LANGE. 2s. 6d.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

A New Story by RHODA BROUGHTON, The Popular Author of "Red as a Rose is She," and "Nancy," entitled

A L A S !

AND

A New Story by Mrs. Annie Edwardes, Author of "Ought We to Visit Her?" entitled are commenced in the JANUARY NUMBER of THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

PEARL POWDER,

Published on Saturday, December 21. Price One Shilling. To be had of every bookseller in town and country, and at all Railway Stations.

NEW WORKS.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of the PRINCESS LIEVEN and EARL GREY. Translated and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GUY LE STRANGE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with portraits, 80s.

THE FIRST of the BOURBONS. By CATHERINE CHARLOTTE LADY JACKSON, Author of "The Last of the Valois," "Old Paris," &c. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with portraits, 24s.

SARDINIA and the SARDES. By CHARLES EDWARDS, Author of "Letters from Crete." In demy 8vo, 14s.

IN an ENCHANTED ISLAND: A VISIT to OYPRUS in 1889. By W. H. MALLOK, Author of "Is Life Worth Living?" &c. Second Edition. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Frontispiece, 12s.

A TOUR in a PHAETON THROUGH the EASTERN COUNTIES. By JAMES JOHN HISSEY, Author of "An Old-Fashioned Journey," &c. In demy 8vo, with Map and Illustrations, 16s.

A MEMOIR of E. A. SOTHERN "LORD DUNDREARY." By T. EDGAR PEMBERTON. Second Edition. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles, 18s.

NEW NOVELS.

READY THIS DAY.

STRANGE GODS. By Constance COTTERELL. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MASTERS OF THE WORLD," &c.

THE LOCKET. A Tale of Old Guernsey. By MARY A. M. HOPPIN (Mrs. MARKS). 2 vols. "A pretty yet tragic story of love and jealousy, told with a certain grace and simplicity of manner." Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENETIA'S LOVERS." A HURRICANE in PETTICOATS. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "The Chilcotes," &c. 3 vols.

"There is no incident or character in this exceptionally artistic piece of work which one could wish to find otherwise than it is presented."—Graphic.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A MODERN BRIGAND." MAYGROVE. By W. Fraser Rae, Author of "Miss Bayle's Romance," &c. 3 vols.

"A great deal more readable than the majority of novels, in virtue of the knowledge, both of the world of men and of the world of books displayed by the author in his bright sketches of character and incident." Spectator.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1889.—The CLARENDON PRESS obtained the ONLY GRAND PRIX and TWO out of the five GOLD MEDALS awarded to British Printers and Publishers.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

NEW WORK BY PROFESSOR CREMONA.

Just published, 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

GRAPHICAL STATICS Two Treatises

on the Graphical Calculus and Reciprocal Figures in Graphical Statics. By LUIGI CREMONA, For. Memb. R.S., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Rome. Translated by T. H. BEARE, B.Sc., Professor of Engineering and Applied Mechanics, Heriot Watt College, Edinburgh.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED AND MUCH ENLARGED.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

GOLDEN TREASURY of ANCIENT GREEK POETRY: being a Collection of the Finest Passages in the Greek Classic Poets, with Introductory Notices and Notes. By R. S. WRIGHT, M.A., Honorary Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. Second Edition, Revised and much Enlarged by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Balliol College, Oxford.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL DOCUMENTS

of the PURITAN REVOLUTION, 1689–1690. Selected and Edited, with an Historical Introduction, by SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, &c.

The documents in this volume are intended to serve either as a basis for the study of the Constitutional History of an important period, or as a companion to the Political History of the time. The Constitutional Bill of the first Protectorate Parliament has never before been printed.

UNIFORM with Dr. MERRY'S EDITIONS of the "ACHARNIANS,"

"CLOUDS," "FROGS," and "KNIGHTS."

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Coloured Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANES.—THE BIRDS. With

Introduction and English Notes by W. W. MERRY, D.D., Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the COMPAR-

ATIVE GRAMMAR of GREEK and LATIN. By J. E. KING, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Lincoln College, Oxford, and C. COOKSON, M.A., late Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Assistant Master at St. Paul's School, Joint Authors of "Principles of Sound and Inflection as Illustrated in the Greek and Latin Languages."

BOOKS FOR CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1890.

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth.

LIVY. BOOK V. With Introduction and Notes by A. R. CLUER, B.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Revised and Enlarged by F. E. MATTHEWSON, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford. 3s. 6d.

"Admirably adapted for the purposes of an examination. The notes are clear, sensible, and correct."—Saturday Review.
"A sound and very useful school and college edition." Classical Review.

CÆSAR.—THE GALLIC WAR. BOOKS

VI, VII, VIII. For Schools. With Notes and Maps. By C. E. MOBBLEY, M.A. [Immediately.]

"Stands high among the best classics we have met."—Saturday Review.

CICERO.—SPEECHES against CATA-

LINA. With Introduction and Notes by E. A. UPCOTT, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford, Assistant Master at Wellington College. 2s. 6d.

"A very useful and well-appointed edition."—Scotsman.

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. BOOK III

For Junior Classes and Private Students. With Introduction, Notes, and Index, by J. MARSHALL, M.A., Rector of the Royal High School, Edinburgh. 2s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—ALCESTIS, for Schools.

With Introduction and Notes by C. S. JERRAM, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford. Second Edition. 2s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.—JULIUS CÆSAR.

Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A. Stiff covers, 2s.

"This edition is simply without a rival. None even comes second to it." Westminster Review.

EUCLID REVISED. Containing the Essentials of the Elements of Plane Geometry as given by Euclid in his First Six Books. With numerous additional Propositions and Exercises. Edited by R. C. J. NIXON, M.A. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Book I., 1s.

Books I. and II., 1s. 6d.

Books I.–IV., 3s.

Books V.–VI., 3s.

"The best edition of Euclid for schools that I know.... The Notes are excellent, and the examples well chosen."—H. F. GURNEY, M.A., Managing Partner and Principal Mathematical Lecturer of Messrs. Wren & Gurney.

SCHILLER'S WILHELM TELL.

Edited by C. A. BUCHHEIM, Ph.D., Professor of German, King's College, London. With a Life of Schiller; an Historical and Critical Introduction, Arguments, a Complete Commentary, and Map. Sixth Edition. 3s. 6d.

"As complete and satisfactory in every way as could be desired." Athenaeum.

SCHILLER'S WILHELM TELL.

School Edition. With Map. 3s.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues sent free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

READY ON MONDAY,
AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "In Far Lochaber,"

"The Strange Adventures of a House-Boat,"

"A Daughter of Heth," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

KIT AND KITTY.

A Story of West Middlesex.

By R. D. BLACKMORE,

Author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven," &c.

Second Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

"The plot, good as it is, is not the point in this charming romance. The finer and truer point is in the admirable literature of the book, in the sense of open air and freshness, in the descriptions—the fruit ripening under your eye, the wind blowing the open page. The dialogue is exquisitely chiselled."—Daily News.

STORY OF EMIN'S RESCUE

as Told in STANLEY'S LETTERS. (Published by Mr. Stanley's permission.) Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. With a Map of the Route from the Congo to the Coast. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

"It will of course be distinctly understood that this little volume will in no way trench upon Mr. Stanley's great work, which cannot possibly be published for several months."

WORKS BY H. M. STANLEY.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE.

With numerous Illustrations and Maps. Post 8vo cloth, 7s. 6d.

THROUGH the DARK CONTINENT.

With numerous Maps and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

THE CONGO: and Founding its Free

State. A Story of Work and Exploration. With Maps and Illustrations. 2 vols., 21s.

MY KALULU: Prince, King, and

Slave. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.

New and Cheaper Issues.

Crown 8vo, fancy boards, 2s.; cloth, uniform, 2s. 6d.

LORNA DOONE. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD. By THOS. HARDY.

SENIOR PARTNER. By Mrs. RIDDELL.

CLARA VAUGHAN. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

THE GUARDIAN ANGEL. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

HER GREAT IDEA, and other Stories. By Mrs. WALFORD.

SOME ONE ELSE. By Mrs. CROKER.

THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE. By THOS. HARDY.

THE CASTING AWAY of MRS. LECKS and MRS. ALESHINE; and THE DUBANTES. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange."

To be followed by others.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED), St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 11, 1890.

No. 923, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

BROWNING'S LAST POEMS.

Asolando: Fancies and Facts. By Robert Browning. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

READING Asolando once more, and remembering that coffin one had looked down upon in the Abbey, only then quite feeling that all was indeed over, it is perhaps natural that the book should come to seem almost consciously testamentary, as if certain things in it had been really meant for a final leave-taking. The Epilogue is a clear, brave looking-forward to death, as to an event now close at hand, and imagined as actually accomplished. It breaks through for once, as if at last the occasion demanded it, a reticence never thus broken through before, claiming, with a supreme self-confidence, calmly, as an acknowledged right, the "Well done" of the faithful servant at the end of the long day's labour. In the "Reverie" and elsewhere the teachings of a lifetime are enforced with a final emphasis, there is the same delight as ever in the beauty and strangeness of life, in the "wild joy of living," in woman, in art, in scholarship; and in "Rosny" we have the vision of a hero dead on the field of victory, with the comment, "That is best."

To those who value Browning, not as the poet of metaphysics, but as the poet of life, this book, this last book, will be very welcome. It will be equally welcome to those who feel that the finest poetic work is usually to be found in short pieces, and that even The Ring and the Book would scarcely be an equivalent for the fifty "Men and Women" of those two incomparable volumes of 1855. Nor is Asolando without a further attractiveness to those who demand in poetry a certain fleeting and evanescent grace.

"Car nous voulons la Nuance encor, Pas la Couleur, rien que la Nuance"— as Paul Verlaine says, somewhat exclusively, in a poetical confession of faith well-known in France. It is, indeed, la Nuance, the last fine shade, that Browning has captured and fixed for us in those lovely love-poems, "Summum Bonum," "Poetics," and the others, so young-hearted, so joyous and buoyant. Daintily, prettily pathetic in "Humility," more intense in "Speculative," in the fourteen lines called "Now" the passion of the situation leaps like a cry from the heart, and one may say that the poem is, rather than renders, the very fever of the supreme moment—"the moment eternal."

"Now.

Out of your whole life give but a moment:
All of your life that has gone before,
All to come after it,—so you ignore,
So you make perfect the present,—condense,
In a rapture of rage, for perfection's endowment,
Thought and feeling and soul and sense—

Merged in a moment which gives me at last
You around me for once, you beneath me, above me—

Me—sure that despite of time future, time past,—
This tick of our life-time's one moment you love me!

How long such suspension may linger? Ah,
Sweet—

The moment eternal—just that and no more—
When ecstasy's utmost we clutch at the core,
While cheeks burn, arms open, eyes shut and lips meet!"

Here the whole situation is merged in the single cry—the joy, "unbodied" and "embodied," of any, of every lover; in several of the poems a more developed story is told or indicated. One of the finest pieces in the volume is the brief dramatic monologue called "Inapprehensiveness," which condenses a whole tragedy into its thirty-two lines, in the succinct, suggestive manner of such poems as "My Last Duchess." Only Heine, Browning, and Mr. George Meredith in Modern Love—each in his own entirely individual way—have succeeded in dealing, in a tone of what I may call sympathetic irony, with the unheroic complications of modern life—so full of poetic matter really, but of matter so difficult to handle. The poem is a mere incident, such as happens every day: we are permitted to overhear a scrap of trivial conversation; but this very triviality does but deepen the effect of what we surmise, a dark obstruction, underneath the "babbling runnel" of light talk. A study not entirely dissimilar—though, as becomes its name, more difficult to grasp—is the fourth of the "Bad Dreams": how fine, how impressive, in its dream-distorted picture of a man's remorse for the love he has despised or neglected till death, coming in, makes love and repentance alike too late! With these may be named that other electric little poem, "Which?"—a study in love's casuistries, reminding one slightly of the finest of all Browning's studies in that kind—"Adam, Lilith, and Eve."

It is in these small poems, dealing variously with various phases of love, that the finest, the rarest, work in the volume is to be found. Such a poem as "Imperante Augusto natus est" (strong, impressive, effective as it is) cannot but challenge comparison with what is incomparable—the dramatic monologues of "Men and Women." But there is something not precisely similar to anything that had gone before in the dainty simplicity, the frank, beautiful fervour, of such lyrics as "Summum Bonum," in which exquisite expression is given to the merely normal moods of ordinary affection. In most of Browning's love poems the emotion is complex, the situation more or less exceptional. It is to this that they owe their singular, penetrating quality of charm. But there is a charm of another kind, and a more generally appreciated one, which lies in the expression of feelings common to everyone—feelings which everyone can without difficulty make or imagine his own. In the lyrics to which I am referring Browning has spoken straight out, in just this simple direct way, and with a delicate grace and smoothness of rhythm not always to be met with in his later works. Here is a poem called "Speculative":

"Others may need new life in Heaven—
Man, Nature, Art—made new, assume!
Man with new mind old sense to leaven,
Nature—new light to clear old gloom,
Art that breaks bounds, gets soaring-room.

"I shall pray: 'Fugitive as preciou—
Minutes which passed—return, remain!
Let earth's old life once more enmesh us,
You with old pleasure, me—old pain,
So we but meet nor part again."

How hauntingly does that give voice to the instinctive, the universal feeling!—the lover's intensity of desire for the loved and lost one, for herself, the "little human woman full of sin"—for herself, unchanged, unglorified, as she was on earth, not as she may be in a vague heaven. To the lover in "Summum Bonum" all the delight of life has been granted; it lies in "the kiss of one girl," and that has been his. In the delicious little poem called "Humility," the lover is content in being "proudly less"—a thankful pensioner on the crumbs of love's feast, laid for another. In "White Witchcraft" love has outlived injury; in the first of the "Bad Dreams" it has survived even heart-break.

"Last night I saw you in my sleep:
And how your charm of face was changed!
I asked 'Some love, some faith you keep?'
You answered, 'Faith gone, love estranged.'

"Whereat I woke—a twofold bliss:
Waking was one, but next there came
This other: 'Though I felt, for this,
My heart break, I loved on the same.'"

Not subtlety, but simplicity—a simplicity pungent as only Browning could make it—is the characteristic of most of the best work in this last volume of a poet pre-eminently subtle. This characteristic of simplicity is seen equally in the love-poems and in the poems of satire, in the ballads and in the narrative pieces—notably in that story of "The Pope and the Net"—an anecdote in verse, told with the frank relish of the thing, and without the least attempt to tease a moral out of it. It is as if the poet, taking leave of that "British public" which had "loved him not," and to whose caprices he had never condescended, was, after all, anxious to "part friends." The result may be said, in a measure, to have been attained.

That Browning could ever become a popular poet, in the sense in which Lord Tennyson is popular, must be seen by everyone to be an impossibility. His poetry is obviously written for his own pleasure, without reference to the tastes of the bulk of readers. The very titles of his poems, the barest outline of their prevailing subjects, can but terrify or bewilder an easy-going public, which prefers to take its verse somnolently, at the season of the day when the newspaper is too substantial, too exciting. To appreciate Browning you must read with your eyes wide open. His poetry is rarely obscure, but it is often hard. It deals by preference with hard matter, with "men and the ideas of men," with life and thought. Other poets before him have written with equal independent aims; but had Milton, had Wordsworth, a larger and more admiring audience in his own day? If the audience of Milton and of Wordsworth has widened, it would be the merest paradox to speak of either Milton or Wordsworth as a popular poet. By this time, every one at least knows them by name, though it would be a little unkind to consider too curiously how large a proportion of the people who know them by name have read many consecutive lines of Paradise Lost or The Excursion. But to be so generally known by name is something, and it has not yet fallen to the lot of Browning. "Browning is dead," said a friend of mine, a hunting man, to another hunting man, a friend of his. "Dear me, is he?" said the other doubtfully; "did he 'come out' your way?" By the time Browning has been dead as long as Wordsworth, I do not think anyone will be found to make these remarks. Death, not only from the Christian standpoint, is the necessary pathway to immortality. As it is, Browning's fame has been steadily increasing—at first slowly enough, latterly with even a certain rapidity. From the first he has had the exceptional admiration of those whose admiration is alone really significant, whose applause can alone be really grateful to a self-respecting writer. No poet of our day, no poet, perhaps, of any day, has been more secure in the admiring fellowship of his comrades in letters. And of all the poets of our day, it is he whose influence seems to be most vital at the moment, most pregnant for the future. For the time, he has also an actual sort of church of his own. The churches pass, with the passing away of the worshippers; but the spirit remains, and must remain if it has once been so vivid to men, if it has once been a refuge, a promise of strength, a gift of consolation. And there has been all this, over and above its supreme poetic quality, in the vast and various work—Shaksperian in breadth, Shaksperian in penetration—of the poet whose last words, the appropriate epilogue of a lifetime, were these:

"At the midnight, in the silence of the sleep-time,

When you set your fancies free,
Will they pass to where—by death, fools think, imprisoned—

Low he lies who once so loved you, whom you loved so,

—Pity me?

"Oh to love so, be so loved, yet so mistaken!

What had I on earth to do
With the slothful, with the mawkish, the unmanly?

Like the aimless, helpless, hopeless, did I drivell
—Being—who?

"One who never turned his back but marched breast forward,

Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted,
wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake.

"No, at noonday in the bustle of man's work-
time

Great the unseen with a cheer!
Bid him forward, breast and back as either should be,
'Strive and thrive!' cry 'Speed,—fight on, fare ever

There as here!'"

ARTHUR SYMONS.

The Life of the Lady Arabella Stuart. By E. T. Bradley. (Bentley.)

MISS BRADLEY has no need to excuse herself for once more attempting to lay before the public the sad story of her heroine. Not only has she had access to new material of considerable interest, which has enabled her to collect at the end of her second volume the documentary evidence in a much more complete form than has hitherto been attainable, but her own treatment of the subject is, biographically at least, eminently satisfactory. We have before us in Miss Bradley's pages no lay figure of the studio, but the actual, lively, impulsive, book-loving woman who once moved and suffered on the earth. Miss Bradley has made one who has hitherto been little more than a name to be a living presence.

That a writer who has thrown herself so completely into her subject should be altogether just to Arabella's persecutors is perhaps hardly to be expected, and James, of course, comes in for some rough language. Miss Bradley would probably consider it a sign of a cold heart to enquire whether she has ever attempted to understand his position. She talks much, and is justified in talking, about blighted affections and the sin of separating a wife from a husband; but she does not seem to realise that James would not have wished, and would have had no reason to wish, to part the loving couple, if only he could have been sure that they would not have had children. The talk about Arabella's possible conversion to Popery if she lived abroad was little more than talk. The real danger lay in the undoubted fact that Arabella's son by William Seymour, if such a being had ever come into existence, would have united two distinct titles to the throne—that of his father, as holding by the Parliamentary title under the will of Henry VIII., and that of his mother, who was the senior descendant of Henry VII. born on English soil. If such a personage had been at all popular between 1642 and 1649, the line of Arabella Stuart might have been on the throne at the present day. Any stick will do to beat James; but Miss Bradley's eyes ought to have been opened when she found that Prince Henry took the same line as his father.

Nor should Miss Bradley have omitted to inquire what were the circumstances of the time when the marriage took place. Lovers, of course, move in an orbit of their own, and regard not political times and seasons. Still it was unlucky that the marriage should have occurred in 1610, just as the strife between James and his first Parliament was beginning, and that her escape was effected in 1611, after that strife had ended in a total breach, when there had been talk in condemnation of James's Scottish favourites, and language used which must have made him think that some at least of his subjects might be glad to find a claimant of the throne who was on no familiar terms with Scotchmen.

The fact is that history is not Miss Bradley's strong point. A portentous blunder in a note to vol. i., p. 169, is, no doubt, owing to a misprint. But it is strange to find that a writer so familiar with the court life of Arabella's time had never heard of Andrew Melville, as appears by her description of him as a "Nonconformist minister, one Melville" (i. 254); and it may, at least, be well to note that Aremberg, the ambassador of the archdukes, was not an Austrian ambassador (i. 185), and that Raleigh had been imprisoned in the Tower long before 1612 (ii. 66).

Surely, too, Miss Bradley is to some extent wrong in an explanation which she has derived from Canon Jackson of the word "ungraceful" in the following passage from a contemporary letter relating to the escape of Arabella and her husband, when it is stated that "the danger was not like to have been very great, in regard that their pretensions are so many degrees removed, and they ungraceful both in their persons and their houses."

Ungraceful, Miss Bradley says, probably means "out of favour," i.e., objectionable to the king. This would, however, deprive the passage of all meaning. The point is that they were not out of favour with the people, so that they were not likely to be dangerous to the king.

If I have dwelt at fuller length on what is questionable in Miss Bradley's work than on its undoubted merits, it is because that work is good enough to stand correction.

SAMUEL R. GARDINER.

Travels in India. By Jean Baptiste Tavernier, Baron of Aubonne. Translated by V. Ball. (Macmillan.)

ALTHOUGH Dr. Ball's translation professes to give only that portion of Tavernier's travels "où il est parlé des Indes et des îles voisines," it includes some notable references to the Portuguese settlements in Africa; and at the present juncture, perhaps, these will be considered more interesting than the description of India in the days of Aurungzeb.

The rambling jeweller, as Gibbon styles the Baron of Aubonne, "who had read nothing, but had seen so much and so well," must have heard about the Portuguese in Mozambique when he was at Goa, and also during his voyage home by the Cape of Good Hope in 1648. Along both banks of the Zambesi, he tells us, from the mouth to a distance of sixty or seventy leagues up the river, there were many negro settlements, each commanded by a Portuguese; and these Portuguese commanders, though subject to the governor of Mozambique, behaved like petty princes, waging war against each other, and some among them having as many as 5000 Caffre slaves. The governor of Mozambique used to keep them supplied with goods, mostly in the shape of black dyed calicoes, for barter with the natives of the interior. He also sent goods to the capital of Monomatapa, situate 150 leagues distant from Shupanga. The ruler of Monomatapa, Tavernier goes on to say, takes the title of emperor, and his authority extends up to the land of Prester John. Dr. Ball contents himself with a tentative suggestion of Matabele in a footnote; but, as pointed out by a writer in the Times (December 11), the so-called empire of Monomatapa has long ago been relegated by all serious geographers and historians to the region of myth. Nevertheless, Tavernier's account of the commerce between Mozambique and Monomatapa might suggest a curious commentary on the despatch of the Portuguese foreign minister, in which it was asserted that the cession of the ancient empire of Monomatapa to the Portuguese took place in 1630, Dom Nuno Alves Pereira being then governor of Mozambique. Tavernier had heard stories of the gold fields in what is now either Matabele or Mashuna land. He says:

"It is from these territories of Monomatapa whence the purest and finest African gold comes, and it is extracted without great difficulty by excavating in the ground to a depth of only two or three feet. In certain places gold is found on the surface of the ground in nuggets which weigh an ounce. I have had as curiosities some pieces which I have presented to my friends, and some of them weighed as much as two ounces."

The governors of Mozambique were appointed by the Viceroy of Goa for a term of three years; and their main function was not to rule a wide dominion but to trade with the blacks, which occupation as a rule was exceedingly profitable to themselves. "Private soldiers as well as governors and captains acquired great wealth by trade." The shrewd French traveller had a theory of his own to explain the decline of the Portuguese dominion in the Indies; and to some degree his observations would apply also to their failure in Africa.

"If the Portuguese," he writes, "had not been so much occupied with guarding so many fortresses on land, and if in the contempt they had for the Dutch at first they had not neglected their affairs, they would not be to-day reduced to so low a condition."

But the Portuguese made bad colonists. Directly they passed the Cape of Good Hope they all became Hidalgos. Simple Jeronimos and Pedros added Dom to their names, whence they would be called in derision "Hidalgos of the Cape." Moreover, those who crossed the seas changed their nature; and there were no more vindictive people in the world than the Portuguese of India, nor any more jealous of their womankind. Murder was the commonest of crimes, and a man would kill his enemy even at the altar. The law, says Tavernier, takes no cognisance of these crimes, because in general their authors are the first in the land.

The historical value of Tavernier's narrative, so far as it relates to India, is small, considering the extent of his travels and the opportunities he enjoyed of becoming acquainted with the leading men of the time. His "account of the last wars in Hindustan, in which the present condition of the empire and court of the Moghul is set forth," bears such a close resemblance to Bernier's history that, as Dr. Ball points out, Bernier must have supplied Tavernier with most of his information. At the same time, Tavernier often gives us a more sharply defined view of India under Moghul rule than can be obtained from the pages of more careful annalists. The peasants, he tells us, "are reduced to great poverty; because if the governors become aware that they possess any property, they seize it straightway by right or by force." You may see in India, he goes on to say, whole provinces like deserts whence the peasants have fled on account of the oppression of the governors. Most of the Moghul's officers were foreigners. There were but few native Mohammedans in positions of command. The public service was filled with Persians, driven either by poverty or ambition to seek their fortune abroad. Both in the great Moghul's dominions and in the kingdoms of Golconda and Bijapur these Persians held all the highest posts. Turks from Iran would, of course, be a more accurate designation than Persians. (To this day native officials are still called Turks in parts of the Punjab. If government subordinates, perhaps all of them Hindus, happen to be staying in the village rest-house, one villager will say to another, "Turk log chopal men baithe hue hain"—"There are Turks in the rest-house.") The Nawab Mir Jumla was a fair type of the Turk governors in the reign of Shah Jehan. Tavernier saw a good deal of him, and his account of the Nawab at work is one of the most striking passages in the book. Of the English traders in India Tavernier tells us but little. He met with marked civility at the hands of the President of Madras, and went to two or three English parties at Masulipatam. "They entertained us," he writes, "as pleasantly as they could, having baladines (nautch girls), of whom there are no lack in this country, present after the repast." At Surat the English merchants used to smuggle gold coins ashore in their wigs.

If Tavernier was no politician, he was a keen and shrewd man of business. There is sound commonsense in the chapter "concerning the methods to be observed for establishing a new commercial company in the East Indies." He insisted on the importance of not only prohibiting but preventing private trade. The Dutch Company suffered heavily from the private enterprise of its servants, who used to keep the letter of their covenant and trade in their wives' names. Tavernier was careful to note down, too, the manufactures and natural productions of each place he visited; and it would be an interesting study to enumerate the various industries which have disappeared since his time, as well as those which have come into being. What now represents the enormous quantity of very transparent muslins that were made at Barhanpur, in the Central Provinces, and exported thence to Persia, Turkey, Muscovy, Grand Cairo, and other places?

"Some of these are dyed various colours and with flowers, and women make veils and scarfs of them; they also serve for the covers of beds, and for handkerchiefs such as we see in Europe with those who take snuff."

At Sironj, in Rajputana, a kind of coa vestis was woven. The merchants were not allowed to export the fabric; but the governor used to send it to the court.

"This it is of which the Sultanas and the wives of the great nobles make themselves shifts and garments for the hot weather, and the king and the nobles enjoy seeing them wearing these fine shifts, and cause them to dance."

But Tavernier was mainly interested in India for its diamond mines, and also as a market for jewellery; for, as he explains, fine jewels ought not always to be taken to Europe, but rather from Europe to Asia. This is what he did himself, "because both precious stones and pearls are esteemed there very highly when they have unusual beauty." He spent some time at the diamond mines of Golconda, and also visited three other diamond mines. It is in this connexion that Dr. Ball's learned annotations are especially valuable. Dr. Ball would locate the diamond mines of "Soumelpour" not at Sambalpur, in the Central Provinces, but at Semah, in Lower Bengal; and he concludes his argument by expressing a belief that these once famous mines have not yet been exhausted. Tavernier also saw the great Moghul's diamond, and his translator discusses at some length the question whether this is to be identified either with the Koh-i-Nur or with the Shah of Persia's "ocean of light." Among the curiosities mentioned by the French traveller is the snake-stone, believed to be an antidote against snake-poison. The Archbishop of Goa gave him one, and he bought several others from the Brahmins, who, indeed, were most likely the manufacturers, though the stone was, and is still said to be, found in the snake's head. There are enormous snakes in Asia and Africa, Tavernier adds, and he had heard of one which swallowed a girl of eighteen. As might be supposed, he had a keen eye for the more costly kinds of decorative art. At Jehanabad he saw the great Moghul's peacock throne, now in the Shah's palace at Teheran, and admired in particular the twelve columns supporting the canopy, round each of which were set rows of beautiful pearls. He himself added to the great Moghul's treasures by presenting Aurangzeb with a richly gilt bronze shield, made originally for Cardinal Richelieu at a cost of about £330. In the middle was represented the exploit of Curtius, and round the margin the siege of Rochelle.

Ever with an eye to business and inclined to tell interminable stories illustrating the sagacity with which he himself would outwit those who opposed or hindered him, Tavernier was at times singularly indifferent to matters which most persons of culture and intelligence would have carefully inquired into. He had heard of Buddhists living in Kangra, and dismisses the subject with the curt remark that their creed is contained in a book "filled with rubbish, for which the author, who is called Baudou, gives no reason." Yet, for all his omissions, he is a traveller whose works we could ill-afford to lose; and Dr. Ball's translation of the chapters relating to India and further India well deserves a place beside Sir Henry Yule's Marco Polo and the publications of the Hakluyt Society. The translator's notes err, if anything, on the side of brevity, except when the subject touches on the mineralogy of India, of which Dr. Ball knows more than most people. But both translation and annotation are so well done that one can only hope the remaining portion of Tavernier's travels will now be taken in hand by the same editor.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

The Letters of the Duke of Wellington to Miss J. Edited, with Extracts from the Diary of the latter. By C. T. Herrick. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE publication of this volume appears to us to be designed to gratify the ghoul-like disposition of the public to prey upon the reputation of a great man. It is surely unfair to smirch the name of the hero who fought and lived for his country by anonymous aspersions; and "Miss J.'s" full name ought not to be withheld if we are to attach any credit to her statement—or perversion—of facts. The editor herself admits that her story should be received with caution; and, under all the circumstances of the case, we hold that it ought to have been altogether suppressed.

Miss J. was a hysterical young woman, with religious tendencies and an overweening sense of her own importance. She conceived it to be her mission to convert the Duke of Wellington; and when she was still a girl of twenty years, and he was sixty-five, she forced her acquaintance upon him, as she relates in a narrative drawn up some years after the event, by sending him a Bible, together with "a suitable note." She states that she herself delivered the parcel to the porter at Apsley House, and that he took it in without hesitation. This is one of the assertions which throws suspicion on her story, since the Duke informs her in a subsequent letter that no parcels are taken in without his written order; "so as to prevent my private dwelling being made the deposit of all the trash that is written, invented, or in any way made up." The Duke, according to Miss J.'s account, not only accepted the gift, but asked if he might have the pleasure of seeing her; and in reply to her second note he wrote that: "Although not in the habit of visiting young unmarried ladies, with whom he is not acquainted, he will not decline to wait upon Miss J."

Miss J. proceeds to give an altogether incredible account of their first interview. She promptly opened her Bible and began to read the third chapter of St. John's Gospel—a reading abruptly terminated by the Duke, who seized her hand, exclaiming: "Oh! how I love you!" This, she says, was his first utterance. We confidently assert that such a story is the invention of the diseased and hysterical imagination which leads some unhappy women to believe that every man who approaches must be in love with them.

Without more satisfactory evidence, it is difficult to accept the correspondence which follows as genuine. Extracts are given from letters which Miss J. copied into her diary; and these may have been garbled to any extent. Others are, as the editor informs us, exact copies of the originals, yet they do not tally in every respect with the published and unpublished letters of the Duke of Wellington with which we are acquainted. Several of the notes are undated, and we believe that such an omission will not be found in the whole series of the Gurwood Dispatches. Others, again, are over-dated: "At Night," "In the Morning," which is equally opposed to the Duke's usual practice. There is a verbosity in some of the letters which is contrary to the terse style he was in the habit of employing; although others are so characteristic that we hesitate to reject the whole collection. Such a letter as the following would scarcely have been invented, since it certainly confers no credit on the receiver:

"Strathfieldsaye,
Sept. 17, 1835.

"My dear Miss J.,—

"I always understood that the most important parts of a letter were its contents. I never much considered the Signature, provided I knew its handwriting; or the Seal, provided it effectually closed the Letter.

"When I write to a Person with whom I am intimate, who knows my handwriting, I generally sign my Initials. I don't always seal my own Letters; they are sometimes sealed by a Secretary, oftener by myself.

"In any case, as there are generally very many to be sealed, and the Seal frequently becomes heated, it is necessary to change it; and by accident I may have sealed a Letter to you with a blank Seal. But it is very extraordinary if it is so, as I don't believe I have such a thing. You will find this Letter, however, signed and sealed in what you deem the most respectful manner. And if I should write to you any more, I will take care that they shall be properly signed and sealed to your Satisfaction.

"I am very glad that you intend to send back all the letters I ever wrote to you. I told you heretofore that I thought you had better burn them all. But if you think proper to send them in a parcel to my House, I will save you the trouble of committing them to the Flames.

"Believe me ever yours most sincerely,

"WELLINGTON.

"I believe that the letter with the blank seal and signed with my Initials was sent off last Sunday night from Hartford Bridge, and was franked by me. I hope that this was not deemed disrespectful."

We are assured, apparently on Miss J.'s own authority, that she was remarkable for her personal beauty; but if this was really the case, the person was no index of the mind. She was, on her own showing, an exacting, querulous, unscrupulous woman, who, almost up to the date of the Duke's death at the age of eighty-three, nourished the hope of becoming his wife. Men are often willing to pay the penalty of greatness which is involved in the importunate homage of their admirers; and, although the great Duke had none of the childish vanity and thirst for fame which possessed Nelson, he was not insensible to the charm of adulation. He was fond of the society of women and children, and his relations with the latter were most kindly. The present reviewer is in possession of a series of letters addressed to little girls whose acquaintance he made, because they were in the habit of hovering round the gate of his private garden, which opens into the public garden lying between Hyde Park Corner and Stanhope Gate, in order to catch a glimpse of the great Duke as he walked round the paved path of his little enclosure for afternoon exercise. Instead of being annoyed by their inquisitiveness, he one day beckoned the children to the gate to ask questions about their names and ages, and from that day the acquaintance was established. He did not "know them at home," as schoolboys say, nor was the large school-room party by any means remarkable for their personal attractions. They were, in fact, in the habit of entitling themselves "the plain family," as plain in features as in dress. He was touched by their hero-worship, and took a kindly interest in their pursuits; and it was a red-letter day in the annals of the acquaintance when he unlocked his gate and walked through the public garden in order to pay a visit in Park Lane. The two younger children were invited to pass their small hands under his military cloak, and to walk arm-in-arm with him, while the elder girls followed with their governess in awe-struck admiration.

The correspondence with Miss J. leaves a bad taste in the mouth; and we subjoin a specimen of the letters in which the Duke used to acknowledge an annual offering of grouse, since it does more justice to the simplicity and kindness of his nature.

"London: August 18, 1840.

"My dear Miss Alice and Miss Maggie,—

"I have received the Grouse which you your sisters, and your little Nephew have been so kind as to send me; and I am much flattered by your recollection of me and gratified by this token of it. But I am still more flattered by your nice little Note.

"I hope that you will write to me again; and, in order to tempt you to do so, I send you the drawing of Monsieur and Madame [a water-colour drawing of two pet frogs which the children had given him], just to show you that our old amusements are not effaced from my mind, although I have at times other matters to think of.

The weather has been delightful, and I have missed you much in the Gardens.

"I hope that the Weather has been favourable in the North, and that the Harvest will be plentiful.

"Believe me ever yours most affectionately,
"WELLINGTON.

"Send me back the enclosed Drawing, and write me a line at the same time."

M. A. PAUL.

NEW NOVELS.

The M. F. H.'s Daughter. By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn. In 3 vols. (White.)

The Locket. By Mary M. Hoppus (Mrs. Alfred Marks). In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

The Sin of Joost Avelingh. A Dutch Story. By Maarten Maartens. In 2 vols. (Remington.)

Captain Jacques. A Romance of the Time of the Plague. By Somerville Gibney (Edward Fitzgibbon). (Roper & Drowley.)

The Stranger Artist; or, Through Shadowland. By Edith C. Kenyon. (Roper & Drowley.)

A Snow Flower. By Hester Day. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

What might have been expected. By Frank Stockton. (W. H. Allen.)

A Sage of Sixteen. By L. B. Walford. (Spencer Blackett & Hallam.)

MRS. ROBERT JOCELYN has written a capital novel, which, in spite of its title, is not overcrowded with those hunting chapters that have a way of becoming monotonous, except, of course, when they are the work of such writers as Whyte Melville and Anthony Trollope, who brought to their task both knowledge and genius. Here there is just enough of horses, dogs, and foxes, but not too much; and the hunting element is provided with a raison d'être and prevented from being a mere excrescence by the fact that one of the crises of the story is the very naturally contrived result of an accident upon the field. There is one noteworthy difference between the ordinary story of fiction and the ordinary story of real life, inasmuch as the reader of average experience always knows how the former will end, whereas the conclusion of the latter is, more or less, a matter of dubitancy and speculation. In this respect Mrs. Jocelyn's novel recalls the world of fact rather than the world of fancy; for though her charming heroine, Dolly Vernon, possesses, in addition to her other virtues, a very considerable stock of decision of character, we are not quite sure until we are nearly at the end of the third volume how she will answer the important question, "Whom shall I marry?" As a large part of the critic's interest in the story has been excited by the skill with which Mrs.

Jocelyn keeps her secret, it would ill become him to betray it; and tortures shall not draw from him the name of the happy man whose pride and joy it is to find himself standing before the altar at Dolly's side. Concerning the justice of the dénouement there will probably be differences of opinion, and it is easy to imagine very animated discussions on the respective claims of A and B; but I think the general opinion of "the judicious" will be that Mrs. Jocelyn is true to the constant facts of human nature, and that A is the right man in the right place. This diplomatic use of false initials is, I flatter myself, an original expedient in reviewing, for which I hope Mrs. Jocelyn will be duly grateful; and she also owes me thanks for my positive refusal to name the chapter in the first volume which will give very shrewd people some inkling of what is to be expected in the third. A better story of its kind than The M.F.H.'s Daughter one does not often read; and its goodness makes the reader wonder all the more at the strange oversight of the writer in making Captain Denham propose to a girl whose father was perfectly aware of the fact that he was a married man. This, however, is an almost solitary lapse from verisimilitude, for which the critic cannot but be grateful, because it enables him to introduce the element of "discrimination" into his review of a very pleasant, wholesome, and interesting novel.

Though The Locket is not a book that is at all likely to rouse anyone's enthusiasm, various pleasant things might be said of it; but the one remark that is likely to occur to readers of Mrs. Alfred Marks's previous stories is that it is decidedly disappointing. It is, indeed, so deficient in the power and passion of Miss Montisambart or the fine picture-sequences of Masters of the World that were the author's name absent from the title-page her identity would not be guessed by the most discerning reader. The book is, in the first place, almost irritatingly slight. Its motifs would have provided material for a fairly satisfactory magazine story, and such material might even have been spread over the pages of a single volume without too obvious attenuation; but the two volumes into which it has been expanded are almost painfully thin. Such story as there is can be told in a very few lines. The scene is laid in Guernsey in the days of George II.; and the heroine, Clementina Grandméau, has two lovers, Leonard Delafaye and Andrew Morier, to the latter of whom she becomes engaged. Madened by jealousy, Delafaye murders his rival, then betrays himself by presenting to Clementina a locket which he has taken from the body of his victim, and finally escapes punishment by suicide. The murderer himself is the only character in whom we can feel any real interest, and our interest even in him is minimised by the fact that his individuality is swamped by a passion which transforms him into a mere monomaniac. Still, though the book, as a mere tale, is unsatisfactory to the point of aggravation, it is not destitute of a certain charm. The style is good throughout, the local colour is veracious without being obtrusive, the descriptive passages are really excellent, and Mrs. Marks has given a very realisable picture of life in the Channel Islands at the beginning of the last century.

Very few English readers are familiar with the contemporary fiction of Holland; and if any great number of Dutch writers are producing work equal to Maartens's novel, The Sin of Joost Avelingh, our insular ignorance is a thing to be deplored at once and remedied as soon as may be. To speak of it as a great book would be to use the language of exaggeration; but it is a book by a man who, in addition to mere talent, has in him a vein of such genuine genius that, were he hereafter to produce a really great novel, no competent reader of his present story would have any right to feel surprised. In his method of presentation, Maartens shows himself to be a true artist. Like the painters of the most memorable age of his country's art-history, he has a loving eye for homely detail and great skill in the handling of it; but, unlike some of them, he never allows it to overpower him—never allows minute veracities of delineation to interfere with dignity or to mar general truth of effect. If, when the conclusion of the book is reached, the reader feels—as it is quite possible he may feel—a certain faint chill of disappointment, that disappointment will be due not to any ineffectiveness of workmanship, but to the fact that the writer has not been perfectly happy in his choice of theme. The chapters which lead up to and reveal the dénouement are, in form, the most powerful in the book; but their intellectual substance is of the nature of an anti-climax. The sin of Joost Avelingh is the sin of a moment, or a few moments, of murderous thought; but the mere accident—for such it really is—of the death of the man who is the object of that thought does not really provide an imaginative justification for Avelingh's years of remorse and final public self-abasement. We feel that we have been, as it were, tricked into an excess of sympathy with an emotion which, though noble in kind, is altogether morbid in degree; and in our own emotional recoil the keen edge of our pleasure is sensibly blunted. In this matter, and it is not a matter of trivial importance, it is, I think, certain that the author has made a mistake. But it is a mistake which the reader will not discover until he nears the close of the second volume; and while engaged in the perusal of the earlier portion of the work he will feel that he is making the acquaintance of a book of singular freshness and power.

The historical tales of Somerville Gibeay or Edward Fitzgibbon (I infer that the former is the author's literary pseudonym, and the latter his real name) are always carefully constructed, vivacious, and readable; and Captain Jacques is one of the brightest and the best of them. I have numbered it among historical tales for want of a more strictly accurate descriptive phrase; and because, though—with one trifling exception—no actual historical character appears in its pages, it reproduces with picturesque vividness many of the features of life in London at the time of the Great Plague and the Great Fire. If one is to do anything more than indulge in vague generalities of commendation, it is difficult to write of Captain Jacques without betraying the secret of the plot; and it must suffice to say that the writer has employed with great ingenuity an expedient which has been previously utilised, with creative genius by Mr. R. L. Stevenson, with considerable ability by Miss Florence Warden. The book is not devoid of a fault common to books of its class—a superabundance of complications and coincidences; but Mr. Fitzgibbon has acquired sufficient skill in the art of narration to keep his various threads of plot well together, and prevent them from straggling here and there over his pages. In Captain Jacques he has produced a well-planned and well-told story of brisk incident which, when once taken up, will not lightly be laid aside.

It is not in critical human nature to say anything about The Stranger Artist which can be of interest to a single human being. It is simply a thoroughly commonplace story—the work of a writer who has sufficient culture to avoid glaring literary faults, but not sufficient imagination or dramatic power to write a tale in which the characters are living and consistent, the situations vigorous and impressive. Some of the details are really well finished—the conversations, for example, are, as a rule, noticeably easy and natural—but the most important actions of the principal persons who figure in the story are wholly inexplicable, the consequence being that the book leaves behind it no approximation to a sense of reality.

A Snow Flower is a very unpretentious but exceedingly well-written story, which is made all the more enjoyable by the vein of bright, fresh humour which runs through it. The opening conversation between Maud Darrell and Mrs. Cheeseman—who belongs to Mrs. Poyser's family, though she has less wit and more good temper than her famous prototype—prepares us for a pleasant tale; and there is nothing in the after pages which is at all disappointing. The wilful, impulsive Maud is a very attractive little person; the love story of her elder and quieter sister is very prettily told; and there is one of those warm-hearted motherly old maids who are more frequently met with in real life than in fiction.

The remaining two volumes on our list are written for young people by writers whose previous books have been addressed to older readers. Mr. Stockton, since the days of Rudder Grange, has not published a page which could not be pronounced emphatically good, and the solitary fault of What might have been expected only appears as a fault from an English point of view. It is, I think, rather too purely American in its main scheme, and in many of its allusions, to be enjoyed to the full by children here; but in spite of these things they can hardly fail to be interested in the ingenious expedients by which Harry and Kate London contrive to keep the old negress Aunt Matilda out of the almshouse. The chapters devoted to the sumac-gathering, the wood-carrying, and the great telegraphic venture are full of "go"; and, though there is less of Mr. Stockton's peculiar humour than in some of his "grown-up" books, there is enough to make the new story very pleasant reading.

A Sage of Sixteen comes with two sufficing guarantees—it is written by Mrs. Walford, and it has been received with favour by the youthful but not uncritical readers of Atlanta. There is little that is "sage" about Elma Alfreton, for the nickname given by her cousin Piers is a humorous rather than an accurate characterisation; but there is everything that is winning. It is difficult to draw the portrait of a schoolgirl of sixteen; who redeems her contemporaries and elders from selfish worldliness without making her something of a prig; but the difficulties are overcome here, for in Elma's sweet, simple nature, priggishness has no place. Lady Alfreton, who is Elma's most distinguished convert, is capitally drawn, and so is the heroine's vivacious young friend, Lady Mabel Pomeroy. The story, as a story, is very simple, but it could not well be better than it is.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Hammer: a Story of the Maccabean Times. By Alfred J. Church and Richmond Seeley. With Illustrations by John Jellicoe. (Seeley.) The splendid narrative contained in the First Book of Maccabees affords excellent material for historical romance. To say that Messrs. Church and Seeley have done absolute justice to the capabilities of their subject would be to place them on a level with Scott; but they are well entitled to the lower praise of having produced a picturesque and interesting story. The title, of course, refers to Judas, whose cognomen Maccabæus is commonly interpreted as derived from the Hebrew Maqqabâ, "Hammer"; but the personality of the hero is not very vividly brought before us, and the description of military plans and movements is rather weak. One or two incidents of actual fighting, however, are related with spirit. The character of the Jew Micah, or Menander, who for a time attaches himself, though with a pricking conscience, to the Hellenising party, but on the outbreak of revolt throws in his lot with the patriots, is admirably drawn. Another excellent portrait is that of the clever Greek parasite Cleon, who acts as the right-hand man and arbiter of taste of two successive holders of the high priestly office, and who with all his unscrupulousness and refined selfishness has some winning qualities, and dies the death of a brave soldier after all. So far as historical accuracy is concerned we see nothing in the book to complain of; but it should be remembered that the biography of the Hellenising Jews of the second century B.C. has been written only by their enemies, and it is possible that some of them may have been actuated by less unworthy motives than those ascribed to them by the patriotic historian.

Stray Leaves of Literature. By Frederick Saunders. (Elliot Stock.) There are cases in which to know a book means to know its author, and there are others in which to know the author is to know the book. Stray Leaves of Literature belongs to the second category. Mr. Frederick Saunders is a native of London, where he was born in 1807. In the same year in which Queen Victoria ascended the throne he went to the United States as a representative of Messrs. Saunders & Otley, who thus tried to obtain copyright protection for American editions of their books. They were unsuccessful; and the petitions to Congress, signed by Washington Irving, Bryant, and Bancroft, were treated with that systematic disregard that the American Legislature has always shown to the claims of justice in this direction. Mr. Saunders, after the abandonment of the costly and fruitless enterprise just mentioned, devoted himself to literature, and received the honorary degree of M.A. from Madison University in 1863. He was one of the editors of the New York Evening Post, and a frequent contributor to periodical literature. In 1859 he became assistant librarian of the Astor Library, and since 1876 has been its chief librarian. He helped Tuckerman in the compilation of Homes of American Authors (1853). His own books are Memoirs of the Great Metropolis (1852), New York in a Nutshell (1853), Salad for the Solitary (1853), Salad for the Social (1856), Pearls of Thought, Selections (1858), Mosaics (1859), Festival of Song, Selections (1866), About Women, Love, and Marriage (1868), Evenings with the Sacred Poets (1869), Pastime Papers (1885), Our National Centennial Jubilee, orations, &c., in the several States (1877), and The Story of Some Famous Books (1887). Even a glance at these titles will show what we have to expect in Mr. Saunders's latest volume. The excellence of Salad for the Solitary has not been surpassed, nor even quite reached, in Mr. Saunders's later productions; but if the qualities that constituted its charm are less highly developed in these essays, they are present notwithstanding. A cheerful and unpretentious style, and a knowledge of books that is wide rather than critical, enable him to gossip pleasantly about the survival of books, the mystery of music, old book notes, and similar subjects. Some of his dicta are more than doubtful, as when he says that the Utopia "is now seldom read," and calls some verses by T. L. Peacock a "rollicking Welsh ballad." But, although Mr. Saunders claims no high critical faculty, and no great depth of research, he is a genuine lover of literature, and understands the fine art of gossip.

Essays in Literature and Ethics. By the late Rev. W. A. O'Connor. (Manchester: Cornish.) Outside Manchester Mr. O'Connor was known as a writer on Ireland. This volume—a pleasant memorial for his Manchester friends who knew him as a student of literature—may possibly have some interest for a wider circle. Its contents are satisfactory proof that their author was a good man with an alert, well-trained mind of more than average capacity; and from Mr. Axon's introduction, which is sympathetically written, it is evident that, in spite of much disappointment, he led a cheerful life full of well-directed labour. The papers on Browning's "Childe Roland," Tennyson's "Palace of Art," and "The Prometheus of Aeschylus and Shelley," although sermons rather than essays, contain some good thoughts. The following quotation from the first of these is an example of an abuse of language to be found in other critical writings of the day:

"In 'Paracelsus' he related a sad but not uncommon instance of imperfect aspiration and unsought attainment. The currents of imagination set moving during that composition, and the unused cosmic material that floated on them, seem to have given birth, by a purer because more intuitive poetic genesis, to the abstract ballad of 'Childe Roland.'"

That the writer had a meaning is apparent, but it is lost in the dubious allegory of this euphuistic misapplication of scientific terms to literature. Mr. Axon should not have published the verses entitled "Childe Roland leaving the Dark Tower." He thinks they will justify "the claim made for Mr. O'Connor of poetic instinct and expression." They do not. Mr. O'Connor's verses have no connexion with the poem to which they profess to be a sequel. They do contain echoes of "Instans Tyrannus" and "Prospect," but they read much like a bad parody of Mr. Swinburne than a serious imitation of Mr. Browning. Ordinary critical instinct would never dream of a sequel to "Childe Roland," and when the suggestion is made declares flatly that Browning himself could not write one. If the poem must have a meaning, let it be considered an expression of the desperate hope that keeps the world going; that has shaped creed after creed, philosophy after philosophy; that has produced martyrs, and knights, and the French Revolution, and will continue to produce beliefs and changes, hoping against hope, blowing its slug-horn in the night until time becomes eternity. But it is better than that; it is a great descriptive poem, and ranks with the "Inferno." Mr. O'Connor is at his best in his homelier writings. The caustic wit and rapid manner of his lectures on "Fables," and "From Lancashire to Land's End," make them very readable. In the latter he has given us a new proverb: "There is much more time lost in waiting for a donkey to rise than there is in going round him."

Dryden's Essay of Dramatic Poesy. Edited, with Notes, by Thomas Arnold. (Clarendon Press.) This is the very book teachers of English have been waiting for. Rasselas, also published by the Clarendon Press, is a capital book out of which to teach philology and grammar; but we think this, on the whole, more suitable for that purpose, because it is even less interesting. We trust that a number of volumes of this kind will be issued. Some chapters of Euphues, Puttenham's Art of English Poesie, Prynne's Histriomastix, are the proper books from which to prelect on the development of the language. There is hope here for the martyred English master, whose pleasure in Shakspeare and Milton has been destroyed by the terrible annotated editions insisted on by examining bodies. Surely it is possible to get all the drudgery at present associated with the greatest works in our literature shifted to less noble shoulders. Let us hope that the day is not far distant when "Hamlet" and "Comus," if they must be read in schools and colleges, will be studied, with neither introduction nor notes, for their humanity alone. Mr. Arnold's preface is almost perverse. He thinks it worth while to revive the old discussion with regard to the proper measure for the poetic drama, not as historically interesting but as a vital dispute still requiring settlement. We agree with Mr. Arnold and with Dryden that the average writer would be more likely to please in rhyme than in blank verse, because we think it impossible for the average writer to make blank verse. We are further of opinion that the average writer would be conferring a negative service on the world if he would write in neither mode. But where is the use of arguing about the average writer? Did not Dryden, the father of all such as write leaders and reviews, provide him with a vehicle for his necessary thoughts in this very Essay of Dramatic Poesy, the first book in modern prose? Mr. Arnold's notes are brief and to the point. Both the Essay and the Defence are here; and as they form a most distinct landmark in English prose, the book may be expected to find other than a merely scholastic public.

Famous Elizabethan Plays. Expurgated and adapted for Modern Readers. By H. M. Fitzgibbon. (W. H. Allen.) In expurgating these six dramas—Dekker's "Shoemaker's Holiday," Beaumont and Fletcher's "Knight of the Burning Pestle," Ben Jonson's "Silent Woman," Massinger's "New Way to Pay Old Debts," Ford's "Perkin Warbeck," and "The Two Noble Kinsmen"—Mr. Fitzgibbon has not spared the knife for fear of spoiling the play. He has cut out altogether 624 lines, mutilated 83, and, tempering justice with mercy, cauterised the omissions and alterations with asterisks and obelisks; so that a dull student of an inquiring mind can readily supply from other sources the missing members, and one of ordinary ingenuity may imagine for himself, in most cases, something like what should be there. Mr. Fitzgibbon seems to know his public, for he has prepared tables for "dramatic reading clubs and societies," assuring them that "they will find the volume most useful"; and he promises, if he receives the expected encouragement, to issue two more volumes of plays "hacked and chipped" like these. He thinks, in a hazy sentence which even his own italics fail to clear, that "it is much to be regretted that the dramatic masterpieces of Shakspeare's contemporaries, in their entirety, are wholly unfitted for general reading"; and he asserts that his volume "may be placed in the hands of all with the utmost confidence." It will be seen that this book is a product of the attempt which is being made at present to force the study of literature—a vexed question, on which it is easy to take an extreme view. In our opinion expurgated editions defeat their object; for the study of literature is at bottom a study of men and manners, and a conscientious student will say "Hands off!" to the Dutch gardener who would pare and lop to the shape conventionality requires. In so far as it is a study of style, books of selections are amply sufficient for younger scholars; and the most precocious juvenile can find experience, just enough in advance of his own to be wholesome, in literature less luxuriant than the Elizabethan drama.

Sylvanus Redivivus (The Rev. John Mitford). With a short Memoir of his Friend and Fellow-Naturalist, Edward Jesse. By M. Houstoun. (Sampson Low.) To Mrs. Houstoun belongs the merit of having discovered an original mode of writing biographies. She writes her own life at length, and every here and there dilates on the lives she undertakes to treat of when they touch her own. This peculiarity confuses still further the usual idea of biographies which a reader gains from the above cumbersome title-page. More than half the book thus relates to Mrs. Houstoun—her father Mr. Jesse, and her friend Mr. Mitford, obtaining the remaining pages. In short, Mrs. Houstoun here resembles a fixed star, while father and friend revolve around her radiance. Of her father little is told that was not already common property. Born in 1782, the incidents of his life were mainly comprised in holding several crown appointments which offered peculiar opportunities for his favourite study—natural history; in frequently changing his residences, and in marrying twice. He died in 1868. The true life of Edward Jesse is found in his books. There may be seen in every page the enthusiastic lover of nature, the eager student of birds and animals, the reverent mind which always loved to justify the ways of providence in the traits of his familiar birds and dogs, the keen eye and cunning hand, happy in spending quiet hours on capturing pike and perch. We have long known and loved the man without his daughter's impressions of his character. Something might have been vouchsafed to bibliographic tastes, details about his mode of composition (we could avouch that his books were written under the shade of the tall trees which he loved), and the dates of the green-covered volumes remembered so well. But this is evidently unworthy his daughter's attention. Personal grievances about the Duke of Clarence, and especially Oroker's treachery—"under whose tongue there lurked the poison of asps"—are more to her mind. The merest outline of Mitford's life is here given—the author frankly confessing that of his early years she knows nothing. As editor of the Gentleman's Magazine, and as a man in many respects of kindred tastes with Jesse, the two friends were much attached to each other, until death carried off the former in 1859. A handful of Mitford's letters are inserted, which betray no cleverness; which are, indeed, bad imitations of Swift's amusing, allusive, and discursive style. They were not worth printing, and leave behind them the impression that their writer was a jovial, amatory diner-out, fond of gardening and general literature. Although he was vicar of a Suffolk parish, he shows himself possessed of a most underclerical mind. By way of contrast to these scanty details, Mrs. Houstoun's reminiscences of herself as a child and a young woman are not stinted. The public is admitted into her confidence, both with respect to her first and her second husband, and even the baby. The whole of chapter xii. is thus taken up. Were Mrs. Houstoun's style easy and lucid much might be condoned. As it is, she writes cumbersome, involved English, thickly studded with quotations, which not un seldom obscure the sense. Here is a specimen:

"Truly the 'one human heart' which Wordsworth tells us that we all possess, beat strongly in the breast of the good man to whom that foolish young soldier found courage to confess his fault; and if it be true that 'best men are moulded out of faults,' the penitent, of whose future career I am in ignorance, may eventually have become the better, forasmuch as he had been a little bad."

The Latin quotations are almost without an exception ludicrously misprinted—e.g., "diminuere Prisciani exput," "animala cum cornebus"; and the only Greek word introduced is misspelt. It is a thousand pities that Mrs. Houstoun did not permit some friend to revise the printed sheets of this fulsome, pretentious book.

The Life-Work of the Author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." By F. T. McCray. (Funk & Wagnalls.) Indignation, which inspired Juvenal's verse, inspired the author of Uncle Tom's Cabin. It is difficult to believe that Lyman Beecher—Mrs. Stowe's father—was once in favour of gradual emancipation, yet such was the case. In fact, in 1837 her sister Catherine published a volume, entitled Miss Beecher on the Slave Question—a volume which was received with much favour, not by Abolitionists, but by slaveholders and their apologists.

"While it is true that names that are now honoured, such as Garrison, Whittier, Emerson, Theodore Parker, and Sumner, were enrolled as Abolitionists, the solid phalanx of society in Boston, the bench, the bar, the clergy, merchants, politicians, and the 'best citizens' generally, felt the utmost scorn and detestation for these advocates of philanthropy and justice. No one of the present generation can have a realisation of the manifestations of contempt which everywhere met the Free-soilers and Abolitionists. In the words of an observer, 'Phillip's oratory and Whittier's poetry were mere whispers against a hurricane.' (p. 71)."

It was to a public that regarded Abolitionism, and not slavery, as the sum of all villainy that Mrs. Stowe addressed herself. She was then (1851) the mother of six children, the youngest of whom was a babe of a few months. In addition to her own children she had a number of pupils and her father residing with her, and to assist her in her household cares she had but one servant. Uncle Tom's Cabin was dashed off at white heat. "It had no re-writing, scarcely a revision." Copies of the book were sent to the Prince Consort, Lord Carlisle, Macaulay, Charles Kingsley, and Charles Dickens. Of the many tributes paid to her work by distinguished men, perhaps that by Lord Palmerston was the most remarkable. "I have not read a novel for thirty years, but I have read that book three times, not only for the story, but for the statesmanship of it." But we have said enough to show that the book before us is a mine of information for all who value Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Old Lamps and New; an After-Dinner Chat. By Joseph Hatton. (Hutchinson.) Mr. Hatton explains this affected title in a still more affected preface. It appears to intimate that the essays which compose the book have mostly seen the light already in different publications. The bulk of these papers consists of reminiscences of men more or less distinguished, of holiday-making, literary criticism, Lord Mayor's Day, and the like. All may be read with pleasure; and one, entitled "At Home with William Black," is cleverly written, and will interest that gentleman's many admirers. Everyone likes to know how a distinguished writer works, and here the information is given to all embryo novelists. Unfortunately, no one draws Apollo's bow in the same manner; and few can so much as string that of Ulysses. Mr. Hatton's style is bright and sparkling, allusive and suggestive, touching upon many subjects, and exhausting none, after the fashion of modern journalism. But he is always good-natured and sympathetic, leaving his readers, as they close his book, on good terms with themselves and all their kith and kin.

The Chalice of Carden. By Thomas Wright. (Skeffington.) Those who have read Mr. Wright's first book, The Town of Couper, will be disappointed with his second. The author's strong point is his descriptive power. He can depict well domestic life as it existed one hundred and fifty years ago. The first chapter is on this account the best, unless we make exception of the last. The first chapter describes the breakfast table of an English yeoman; the last a Christmas holiday-making in the olden time. But when we quit introductions and leave-takings and come to the story itself, we are unable to give a favourable judgment. The setting is the best part of the story. The descriptions of scenery and manners are excellent, but both dialogue and plot are woefully poor. The heroine, Bennet Grey, we are told, is a beautiful and charming young girl. As to her beauty, the author must be taken at his word, but as to her character the reader can judge for himself. This is the way in which Bennet accosts two urchins of the village:

"If you tell lies, people will think you always tell them. Try, my boy, to break yourself of the horrid propensity. Have all the legitimate fun you can. Enjoy your young life, but keep within the limits of the truth" (p. 143).

Again this young mentor thus addresses a tramp who has been enjoying her grandfather's hospitality:

"The poor are never spurned from these doors, and I am heartily thankful that no untoward incident militated against your purpose" (p. 207).

We fear the lovely Bennet runs the serious risk of becoming a prig whenever she opens her mouth. Even her accepted lover does not escape her "preachments." Nor can we congratulate Mr. Wright on his plot. The quest of a chalice, even though it be "a mediaeval, gem-encrusted, massing chalice of solid gold," is not in itself a subject to arouse enthusiasm. Bennet, the only well-defined character, is more edifying than attractive. The author has recourse to the supernatural, but even that fails to keep up the flagging interest. And if the whole truth be told, we cannot say the book is free from padding. Mr. Wright is only one instance more of a clever writer whose métier is not novel writing.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Two new publishers have commenced business with the new year in the neighbourhood of Covent Garden. Mr. William Heinemann, after an apprenticeship of ten years with Messrs. Trübner, proposes to issue works in all branches of literature, and has already made arrangements with several popular writers. We understand that his first book will probably be The Bondman, by Mr. Hall Caine, to appear about February 1. Messrs. Percival & Co.—a firm consisting of the son of the headmaster of Rugby, and Mr. Septimus Rivington —will, in the main, confine themselves to the issue of educational works. They already have on hand the "Clifton" Primer of Greek Grammar, written by Dr. Evelyn Abbott and Mr. E. D. Mansfield, with a preface by Dr. Percival.

THE Bishop of Durham has left his valuable library to the University of Dublin and to the Selwyn Divinity School, Cambridge, the division of the books to be at the discretion of his executors, who are Archdeacon Watkins, the Rev. G. R. Eden, and the Rev. J. R. Harmer. The copyright of his works and the residue of his estate, including his MSS., he has left in trust for church and school building and spiritual agencies in the diocese of Durham.

THE late Dr. Charles Mackay has, we understand, left behind him a large quantity of unpublished MS., most of which was quite recently written. It includes a novel in two volumes, entitled "For Love's Own Sake," "Old English Rhymes Made New: a Handbook for Poets and Versifiers of the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries," "Phoenician Origin of the Grecian Mythology," "Stonehenge and Druidism," "Walks and Talks among the People," and a number of poems dating up to the very latest day he was able to hold a pen. The quality of these last show no signs of decreasing vitality or failing intellectual power.

MR. W. W. BEAN—who may be remembered for his severe criticisms on the Blue Book published in 1880, which purported to contain a return of the members of the House of Commons from 1213 to 1874—has been for some time past engaged on researches into the parliamentary history of the United Kingdom. As a first instalment, he has now sent to press a volume dealing with the six northern counties—Northumberland, Durham, Yorkshire, Lancashire, Westmoreland, and Cumberland. The work contains: (1) a list of the members for every constituency from 1603 to the general election of 1886; (2) petitions on disputed elections and their results; (3) analysis of the polls, and authentic statements about the elections; (4) biographical notices of most of the members and candidates, with special mention of any public offices held by them. The whole will be arranged according to constituencies, but there will also be an alphabetical index of names. Mr. Bean hopes to have the book ready for issue to subscribers before the end of February. His address is 4 Montague Place, Bedford Square, W.C.

MR. CHANCELLOR T. E. RODGERS is engaged in bringing out a volume of Records of Yarlinton, in which much interesting and little known information concerning the great families of the district will be given. The publisher is Mr. Elliot Stock.

THE next volume in the "Statesmen" series will be Lord Derby, written by Mr. T. E. Kebbel. This is to be followed by Fox, by Mr. H. O. Wakeman; and Gambetta, by Mr. F. T. Marzials.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL will publish in a few days a novel in two volumes, entitled The World and the Oloister. The book deals with political and philosophical problems, and is from the pen of Mr. Oswald John Simon, son of Sir John Simon, late M.P. for Dewsbury.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG will publish on January 21 a new novel, by Mr. W. Grove, author of "A Mexican Mystery," entitled The Wreck of a World. It will form Volume II. of Long's "Albion Library."

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. announce a volume of letters from Brazil, to be entitled Beyond the Argentine, by May Frances; and also Naval Warfare, by Rear-Admiral P. H. Colomb.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS & NORGATE will publish shortly the fifth edition of Sir John Lubbock's Prehistoric Times, with many additions.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. are about to issue their French, German, and Latin Dictionaries in monthly parts, commencing with the French Dictionary, of which the first part will be published on January 25. Upwards of a quarter of a million copies of this Dictionary have already been called for.

MR. W. E. A. AXON has written a popular account of the life of William Lloyd Garrison, which is appearing in weekly instalments in the Alliance News. It will be republished in book form immediately on its completion.

MR. MACKENZIE BELL will contribute a poem entitled "Spring's Immortality" to an early number of Temple Bar.

AFTER being closed for more than a year for structural alterations, the Central Free Library at Nottingham was re-opened by the mayor on New Year's Day.

DURING next week Messrs. Sotheby will sell several collections of special interest. On Monday the library of the Chevalier de N—, deceased, which includes some very choice examples of the French illustrated work of last century; on Tuesday, a portion of the library of Mr. William Talbot, consisting mainly of first editions of Cruikshank, Dickens, Thackeray, &c.; on Wednesday, the remaining portion of what is understood to have been the largest collection of Bibles, both English and foreign, in the world; on Thursday, a collection of early Bibles, New Testaments, and Psalms, formed by the late T. M. Ward, of Maida Hill; and on Friday, the library of the late Archdeacon Sanctuary, whose speciality seems to have been ballads and tracts relating to Scotch history in general and the Jacobite risings in particular.

In the last issue of the Historisches Taschenbuch appears an article from the pen of Dr. Wilhelm Busch, of Leipzig, on "The Fall of Cardinal Wolsey." The whole of the information contained in the Calendars of State Papers published by the English Government appears to be very thoroughly sifted, with a result which may be briefly stated as follows: Wolsey took up the question of Henry VIII.'s divorce unwillingly, with a conviction that the king was sure to have his way, whether he aided him or not; and he laboured to convince the Pope that it was right, even in the interests of Christendom, to find some mode of gratifying his master, otherwise England would throw off allegiance to Rome. His policy was defeated at the papal court by the watchfulness of Charles V.; but this only precipitated the foreseen result, and made Wolsey another victim, along with Katharine, to Henry's lust and tyranny.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

LIFE.

If life were but what lying tongues have said—
 Basely asserting kindred with the clay
 In soul and body; boasting of a day
 To bring us nothingness when life has fled—
 Yet, with the dreams of hope that fondly shed
 A glory and a halo round our way,
 Then, even then, 'twere better far to stay
 In sad existence, than to slumber, dead.
 If life were such! But round us and within
 A loud denial says eternally,
 "Life is a pilgrimage by which we win
 Strength in the present, future victory;
 Gladness from sorrow, purity from sin,
 And from our mortal, immortality."

ARTHUR L. SALMON.

OBITUARY.

SIR HENRY YULE.

ORIENTAL learning—which is by no means coextensive with oriental philology—has suffered an irreparable loss in the death of Sir Henry Yule, which took place on Monday, December 30, at his residence in Penywern Road, Earl's Court. For many years past his physical strength had been impaired by a wasting disease; but his extraordinary mental vigour allowed him to continue his official and his literary work well into the year 1889.

Colonel Yule—for by this familiar title both friends and students will always prefer to call him—was born in May, 1820, at Inveresk, in Midlothian. His father was a major in the Company's army; and Sir George Udny Yule, of the Bengal Civil Service, was his elder brother. He was thus a representative of the numerous Scotch families who have played so prominent a part in Anglo-Indian history. After passing through Addiscombe, he received a cadetship in the Bengal Engineers, and landed at Calcutta in 1840. His first appointment would seem to have been on what was then called the North-East Frontier; for in 1842 we find him contributing a paper to the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal on "The Iron of the Kasia Hills." Shortly afterwards he was employed on the extensive irrigation works in the North-Western Provinces, which were being carried out under the superintendence of Sir Proby Cautley; and this also led to a paper in the same Journal on "A Canal Act of the Emperor Akbar." But those were the days when engineers were compelled to do civil work "with their swords girded by their side." Yule was twice summoned to arms by the outbreak of hostilities with the neighbouring Sikhs; and he received the Punjab medals for 1846 and 1848. On the occasion of the next war—that with Burma in 1852—Yule was sent to Arrakan to survey the unexplored mountains on the frontier. His services in this capacity were rewarded by his appointment as secretary to the mission of the late Sir Arthur Phayre to the court of Ava in 1855. This mission formed the subject of his first book (1858), which, though overshadowed by his later works, still remains a standard authority. The outbreak of the Mutiny found Capt. Yule employed in the department of public works; and his special duty, we believe, was to keep open railway communication up the valley of the Ganges. From 1858 to 1862—a period which coincides with the viceroyalty of Lord Canning—he held the appointment of secretary to the government in the same department. In 1862, he retired from the service, partly on the ground of ill-health, with the honorary rank of colonel; and in the following year he was gazetted C.B., in the civil division. After his retirement he went to live in the South of Europe, chiefly in Palermo; and he devoted his leisure to those historical researches by which he was soon to become famous. In 1875, however, he was appointed by Lord Salisbury to a seat in the Indian Council; and henceforth he worked double tides—as a public servant and as a student.

The first book in which Col. Yule showed the peculiar bent of his genius was Cathay and the Way Thither: a Collection of all Minor Notices of China previous to the Sixteenth Century (printed for the Hakluyt Society, in two volumes, 1866). This work requires to be supplemented from the Chinese side by Dr. E. Bretschneider's Mediaeval Researches from Eastern Asiatic Sources (Trübner's Oriental Series, 1888); and in Col. Yule's literary career it served mainly as the prelude to his great work, The Book of Ser Marco Polo the Venetian (John Murray, 1871, second edition 1875). On its appearance this was at once recognised as a classic; and indeed it stands without a rival in the history of geography. The life and veracity of the traveller, the criticism of his text, his position in literature—all alike are finally settled, with a profusion of notes which illuminate every corner of a vast subject. A summary of the whole may be read by the lazy in his own article on "Marco Polo" in volume xix. of the Encyclopædia Britannica.

The design of his second great work was conceived before the first was given to the public. This was the Anglo-Indian Glossary (John Murray, 1886)—we decline to use the grotesque title of "Hobson-Jobson"—in which the lamented Arthur Coke Burnell collaborated with him. Dr. Burnell died in 1882; and by far the greater part of the work, as well as all the labour of preparing it for the press, were Col. Yule's own. But the collaboration, so far as it went, was fortunate; for Dr. Burnell supplied precisely that linguistic knowledge and philological acumen in which Col. Yule was deficient. The result is a monument of research which every oriental student must consult with increasing admiration. We may say of it, what Col. Yule himself says of the old Indian Office records—borrowing a simile from Don Quixote—"One has only to plunge in a ladle at random to scoop out something valuable or curious."

Col. Yule's third and last great work has hardly yet had time to receive the attention it deserves. The history of its genesis is worth telling. In 1887 there was printed for the Hakluyt Society the MS. Diary of William Hedges, who was sent out by the East India Company to establish an agency in Bengal in 1681. The editor had not bestowed any exceptional pains upon his task; nor was it evident, on the face of things, that very much could be made of it, for Hedges was an uninteresting person and his undertaking a failure. But Col. Yule—alone probably of all men—deemed that to publish the bare diary without illustrative notes was unworthy of the Hakluyt Society, of which he had been for many years president. Besides, his interest was aroused by the references to Job Charnock, the semi-mythical founder of Calcutta; to Elihu Yale, the eponymous benefactor of the second American University; and to a mysterious "interloper" named Pitt or Pitts. He therefore set to work to find out all that could be learned about these personages, and many others; and, as his industry was rewarded with abundant fruit, the comment swelled to more than double the bulk of the original text, and was published by the Hakluyt Society in two volumes (1888 and 1889). The latter of these is mainly devoted to a biography of the "interloper" Pitt, here proved to be identical with the Governor of Madras, who brought from India the "Regent" diamond, and who was the grandfather of Chatham. In order to satisfy his own sense of thoroughness, Col. Yule not only searched the records of the India Office and the MSS. in the British Museum; but he also turned genealogist, verifying his facts at the Heralds' College, Somerset House, and parish registers. He further illustrated the work with facsimiles and portraits, including those of Pitt and his wife (from pictures at Chevening) which have never before been published. If Col. Yule had never written anything but this, his name would deserve to rank high among historians. When we consider that it was a new field of research, entered upon when he was already broken in health, it seems to us that it may be described in the words of Browning's "Grammarians' Funeral":

"Now, master, take a little rest!"—not he!

Back to his studies, fresher than at first,
Fierce as a dragon
He (soul-hydroptic with a sacred thirst)
Sucked at the flagon."

These three great works are far from exhausting all Col. Yule's contributions to literature. Many scattered papers of his—especially obituary notices, in which form of writing he excelled—may be found in the Journals of the Geographical and Asiatic Societies, and also in the Times, the Athenæum, and the ACADEMY. His wide learning was always at the disposal of his friends, not only to encourage and advise them in adventurous journeys, but also to assist them in publication. In this kind, we may specially mention the valuable Introductions which he contributed to the second edition of Wood's Journey to the Source of the Oxus (1872), to Mr. Delmar Morgan's translation of Prejevalsky's Mongolia (1876), and to Capt. Gill's River of Golden Sand (1880, second edition, with memoir, 1883). His universal kindness to students, and cordial appreciation of all good work, must also not pass without a word of notice.

Col. Yule was not a greatly decorated man. On retiring from official work in the middle of last year he accepted a K.C.S.I. The university of Edinburgh conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D., on the occasion of its centenary festival in 1884; and he was honorary member of many foreign geographical societies. But the distinction he most prized was that of corresponding member of the French Institute.

His works will long keep his name green; and it will never pass from the memory of those who were once privileged to feel the charm of his manner and to observe his simple character and devotion to duty.

J. S. C.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

The Expositor for January is a more completely popular number than some which we have noticed. The opening article, however, has no doubt a value quite independent of its admirable popular effectiveness, being obviously one of the latest products of a brain which has just ceased to work for the good of the Church and of scholarship—Dr. Lightfoot, Bishop of Durham. Strictly speaking, indeed, the essay on the "Internal Evidence for the Authenticity and Genuineness of St. John's Gospel," the first part of which is printed in this number, is a monument of Dr. Lightfoot's Cambridge period. It was originally delivered as one of a series of lectures on Christian evidences in 1871. But it is now re-published with its author's deliberate re-indorsement; in fact, since the essay deals with the internal evidence, "the treatment suffers less than it would otherwise have done from not being brought down to date." We must not, however, even in the first moments of poignant regret, suffer ourselves to overrate the value of what is, after all, but a slight contribution to a problem which few professed critics, whatever their own bias may be, would venture to regard as finally solved. It sums up the results of a singularly vigorous and independent mind; but while so many able critics remain unconvinced, it is clear that the pupils of Lightfoot and Westcott in England, and of Weiss in Germany, have still much work cut out for them. Prof. Beet enters upon an objective grammatical examination of the New Testament statements on the future punishment of sin. Principal Dykes comments upon the narrative in John vii. 11-29, and Dr. Samuel Cox gives a lucid introductory paper on James and his Epistle. Mr. D'Arcy (a new name in theology) writes upon Micah's Vision, which he thinks supplies an index for discriminating between the divine and the human element in prophecy. Prof. Cheyne contributes a popular study of the moral and mental position of the authors of Psalms xxvi. and xxviii., from his own critical and exegetical standpoint. Mr. Robertson, Principal of Hatfield Hall, Durham, gives a very useful account of Arnold's German work on the Neronian persecution, and Mr. Carr makes a shrewd suggestion on John vi. 5-7.

WITH the December number, Le Livre—a periodical which has for ten years maintained not only the issue of very good and interesting original articles, but also (which seems to be more difficult in France) a careful compte-rendu of contemporary literature—comes to an end. It is true that it does not so much die as suffer a land-change into Le Livre Moderne, a smaller and daintier paper, which is going to turn its back on the past and be rigorously "actual." We drop the tear both over the old Livre and the old literature which (heresy as it is nowadays) we like much the best. But M. Uzanne will certainly give us a pretty periodical, and most probably a useful one. Meanwhile, the old Livre goes down gallantly, with drums beating and colours flying, in the shape of a mirific "Conte pour les Bibliophiles" about "Les Romantiques Inconnus," written by M. Uzanne himself, and illustrated excellently by M. Robida. These "Romantiques Inconnus," both titles and frontispieces, are what you can recommend to a friend; and the soul of "le doux Asselineau" must long to be at them, if indeed it is not furnished with copies already in a better world. Some of them might be hard to come at in this.

FRAGMENTS OF YORKSHIRE MYSTERIES.

(From the Shrewsbury MS.; see ACADEMY, January 4, 1890.)

SCENE I.—THE ANGELS AND THE SHEPHERDS.

PASTORES erant in regione eadem uigilantes & custodientes gregem suum. Et ecce angelus domini astitit iuxta illos & timuerunt timore magno. [Luke ii. 8, 9; written in red.]

*Tertius pastor.

[ii. Pas.] We! tib!
[iii. Pas.] Telle on!
[iv. Pas.] be nyght.
[ii. Pas.] ¶ Brether, what may his be bus bright to man & best?
[ii. Pas.] at hand.
[iii. Pas.] ¶ Whi say 3e so?
[ii. Pas.] warand.
[iii. Pas.] ¶ Siche s3t was neuer sene
before in ous Iewery;
Sum merueles wil hit mene,
bat man be here in hy.
[ii. Pas.] a sang:
[iii. Pas.] ¶ 3e lye bothe, by his li3t, and raues as recheles royes;
hit was an angel bri3t
bat made his nobulle noyes.
[ii. Pas.] of prophecy.
[iii. Pas.] ¶ he said, a barn schuld be in þe burgh of bedlem born;
And of þis, mynnes me,
Ours fadres fond be-fora.
[ii. Pas.] Iewus kyng.
[iii. Pas.] ¶ Now may we se þe same euen in ous pase puruayd;
þe angel nemed his name,
"Orist saueour" he saled.
[ii. Pas.] not raue.
[iii. Pas.] ¶ 3one brightnes wil vs bring vnto þat blisful bour;
For solace schal we syng
To seke ous saueour.

* Written "ijus pastor" in the MS. All the parts given in full belong to the Third Shepherd, whom I denote by "iii. Pas." Of the other parts, only the catch-words are given; and there is no clue to the speakers. I insert "ii. Pas.," &c., by conjecture. Note that "We" is an interjection, and "Tib" is a name. See York Mysteries for explanations.

Transeamus usque bethalem. Et uideamus hoc verbum quod factum est quod fecit dominus & ostendit nobis. [This versicle is noted for voices: from Luke ii. 15.]

[ii. Pas.] to knowe.
iii. Pas. For no-þing thar vs drede,
But thank god of alle gode;
þis light euer wil vs lede
To fynde þat frely fode.

[ii. Pas. Now wat 3e what] I mene.*
iii. Pas. ¶ A! loke to me, my lord dere, alle if I put me nocht in þe
To suche a prince with-out[en] þe haue I no þessand þat may þese.
¶ But lo, a horn-spone haue I here þat may herbar an hundrith þese;
þis gift I gif þe with gode chere;
suche dayntese wil do no dise.
¶ Fare wele now, swete swayn,
God graunt þe lifyng lang!
[i. Pas. And go we hame agayn,
And mak mirth as we gang.] †

SCENE II.—THE THREE MARIAS AT THE SEPULCHRE.

Hic incipit officium Resurreccionis in die pasche [in red].

Tertia Maria [MS. ijja ma.]

Heu redemptio israel: ut quid mortem sustinuit [in red].

[ii. Maria.] payne.
iii. Maria. Allas! he þat men wend schuld by Alle israel, bothe knyght & knaue,
Why suffred he so forto dy
Sith he may alle sekene saue?
Heu, cur ligno fixus clauis:
fuit doctor tam suauis!
Heu, cur fuit ille natus:
qui perdidit eius latus?

[ii. Maria.] is oght.
iii. Maria. Allas! þat we suche bale schuld bide þat sodayn sight so forto see!
þe best techer in world wide with nayles be tached to a tre!
¶ Allas! þat euer so schuld be-tyde
Or þat so bold mon born schuld be
For to assay our sauour side
And open hit with-oute pite.
Iam iam ecce. Iam properemus ad tumulum vngentes dilecti corpus sanctissimum [noted for voices].

Et appropiantes sepulcro cantent [in red].
O deus, quis reuoluet nobis lapidem ab hostio monumenti [noted for voices: from Mark xvi. 3].

[ii. Maria.] him leid.
iii. Maria. he þat þus kyndely vs has kend vn-to þe hole where he was hid,
Sum socours sone he wil vs send,
at help to lift away þis lid.
¶ Alleluia schal be our song,
Sithen crist our lord, by angellus steuen, Schewus him as mon here vs among and is goddis son, heghest in heuen.

[A red line here]

[ii. Maria.] was gon.
[Angelus.] Surrexit christus spes nostra: pre-cedet vos in galileam [in red; cf. Matt. xxviii. 7].
iii. Maria. "Crist is rysen," wittenes we,
by tokenes þat we haue sen þis morn;
Ours hope, ours help, ours hele is he,
And hase bene best, sith he were born.
¶ If we wil seke him for to se, lettes nocht þis lesson be for-lorn,
"But gose euen vn-to galilee, þere schal 3e fynd him 3ow beforn."

[A red line here.]

* The words "now wat ye what" are supplied from the York Mysteries xv. 119. Before the next line there is a star, which star refers to some lines in a later hand, which were to be sung here, viz., Saluatorem christum dominum, infantem pannis inuolutum, secundum sermonem angelicam.

† I supply these two lines from the York Mysteries, and assign them to the First Shepherd instead of to the Third, because the MS. has here two blank lines, showing that the Third Shepherd did not speak them.

SCENE III.—THE TWO DISCIPLES GOING TO EMMAUS.

Feria secunda in ebdomada pasche discipuli insimul cantent [in red].

[Chorus.] Infidelis incursum populi fugiamus ihesum [ihesu?] discipuli; suspenderunt ihesum patibulo; nulli parcent eius discipulo [noted for voices].

[A red line here.]

[A Disciple.] fast to fle.
Olephas.* But if we fle, þai wil vs fang,
And ful felly þai wil vs flay;
Agayn to Emause wil we gang
And fonde to get þe gaynest way.
¶ And make in mynd euer vs amang
Of oure gode maister as we may,
how he was put to paynes strang;
On þat he tristed on him be-tray.

[A red line here. Probably Jesus enters here.]

[Jesus.] but agayn.
Olephas. ¶ By wymmen wordis wele wit may we,
Christ is risen vp in gode aray;
For to oure-self þe sothe say[d] he,
Where we went in þis world away,
þat he schuld dye & doluen be,
And rise fro þe dethe þe thrid day;
And þat we myȝt þat eȝt now se
he wisse vs, lord, as he wele may.

[Jesus?] resoun riȝt.
Et quoniam tradiderunt eum summi sacerdotes & principes nostri in dampnatione[m] mortis & crucifixerunt eum [in red; from Luke xxiv. 20].

Olephas. Right is þat we reherce by raw þe maters þat we may on mene, þow prestis & princes of oure lawe
Ful tenely toke him, hom be-twen,
And dampned him with-outen awe
For to be dede with dele be-dene; þai crucified him, wele we know,
at caluary with caris kene.

Dixerunt eadem se visionem angelorum vidisse: qui dicunt eum viuere [Luke xxiv. 23].

[Jesus.] wraist.
Olephas. þe wymmen gret, for he was gon,
But ȝet þai told of meruales mo;
þai saw angellus stondyng on þe ston,
And sayn how he was farne hom fro.
¶ Sithen of oures went ful gode wone
To se þat sight, & said riȝt so;
Herfore we murne & make þis mon,
Now wot þou wele of alle oure wo.

[Luke?] in pese.
Mane nobiscum quoniam advesperascit, et inclina-ta est iam dies. Alleluia.

[Noted for voices; from Luke xxiv. 29.]

[Jesus.] wight.
¶ Amaw oure mournyng, maister dere,
And fonde oure freynes for to felle;
Herk, broþer, help to hold him here,
Ful nobel talis wil he vs telle.

[Luke?] lent.
Olephas. ¶ And gode wyne schal vs wont non
For þer-to schal I take entent

[Luke.] he went.
Olephas. ¶ Went he is, & we ne wot how,
For here is nocht left in his sted; ¶
Allas, where were oure wittis now,
With wo now walk we, wil of red.

[Luke.] [he brak] oure bred.
Olephas. ¶ Ours bred he brak & blessed hit;
On mold were neuer so mased men,
When þat we saw him by vs sit,
þat we couthe nocht consayue him þen.

[Luke.] ay.
Quid agamus uel dicamus, ignorantes quo eamus, qui doctorem sciencie et patrem consolacionis amissimus? [noted for voices.]

[Luke.] gode state.
Olephas. ¶ We schal hom telle, with-outen trayn,
Bothe word & werk, how hit was;
I se hom sitt samyn in a playn,
Forthe in apert dar I not pas.

[A red line here. Olephas and Luke join the other disciples.]

* The name is not given, but it must be Olephas.
The "other disciple" on the journey was (traditionally) Luke, who was not one of the twelve.

† Catchword—how prestis.

‡ MS. stid.

[Luke?] & wife.
Olephas. ¶ We saw him holle, hide & hewe, þerfore be still, & stint 3oure strife;
þat hit was crist ful wele we knewe,
He cutt oure bred with-outen knyfe.
Gloria tibi, domine, qui surrexisti a mortuis, cum patre & sancto spiritu in sempiterna secula. Amen [noted for voices].

SCENE IV.—THE INCREDULITY OF THOMAS.

[No break in the MS.]

Olephas (sings in chorus). Frater Thoma, causa tristitie, nobis tulit summa leticie [end of scene].

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

CAILLIET, A. Les origines de la troisième République.
Etude et documents historiques. Paris: Savine.
8 fr. 50 c.

GURDY, Th. Musées de France et collections particu-lières. Paris: Jorol. 5 fr.

TBOYE, V. Thomas Carlyle, hans liv og hans værk.
Bergen: Glertsen. 5 kr.

HISTORY, ETC.

CONSTANTINOPLE, ancien plan de, imprimé entre 1566 et 1574. Avec notes explicatives par Oedicius.
Constantinople: Lorentz. 3 fr.

EDLMANN, A. Schützenwesen u. Schützenfeste der deutschen Städte vom XIII. bis zum XVIII.
Jahrh. München: Fohl. 6 M.

KREBS, J. Hans Ulrich Freiherr v. Schaffgotsch. Ein Lebensbild aus der Zeit d. 30jähr. Kriege.
Breslau: Korn. 5 M.

MONUMENTA Germaniae historica. Legum Tom. V.
Fasc. III. Hannover: Hahn. 10 M.

URBLOHDE, A. Die Interdikte d. römischen Rechtes.
1. Thl. Erlangen: Palm. 12 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

ARBEITEN aus dem Zoologischen Institute der Universität Wien u. der zoologischen Station in Triest.
Hrsg. v. O. Claus. Tom. VIII. 3. Hft. Wien:
Hölder. 21 M. 60 Pf.

BUSCHBAUM, O. Untersuchungen ab. die Bahn d.
Kometen 1894 IX. (Barnard-Hartwig). Göttingen:
Vandenhoeck. 3 M. 40 Pf.

CLAUS, O. Ueb. neue od. wenig bekannte halb-parasitische Copepoden. Wien: Hölder. 16 M.

GETTÉ, G. Ueb. die hiesigen Brachiopoden d. Hier-lat bei Hallestatt. Wien: Hölder. 24 M.

NEHRING, A. Ueb. Sus Celebens u. Verwandte.
Berlin: Friedländer. 6 M.

PINTNER, Th. Neue Untersuchungen ab. den Bau d.
Bandwurmkörpers. I. Zur Kenntnis der Gattung
Echinobothrium. Wien: Hölder. 8 M.

STAHR, G. Die liburnische Stufe u. deren Grenzhorizonte. 1. Hft. 1. Abth. Wien: Hölder.
81 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

BUGGE, S. Beiträge zur etymologischen Erläuterung der armenischen Sprache. Christiania: Dybwad.
1 kr.

ERMAN, A. Die Sprache d. Papyrus Westcar. Eine Vorarbeit zur Grammatik der älteren ägypt.
Sprache. Göttingen: Dieterich. 18 M.

GEFFCKEN, J. De Stephano Byzantio. Göttingen:
Dieterich. 3 M.

KNUDTZON, J. A. Om det saakaldte perfektum og imperfektum in hebraisk. Christiania: Aschehoug.
4 kr.

SCHACK, L. De Telephoro deo. Göttingen: Vanden-hoeck. 1 M. 40 Pf.

SCHÜTZ, H. Sophokleische Studien. Kritisch-exegetische Untersuchungen der schwierigeren Stellen in den Tragödien d. Sophokles. Potsdam: Stein.
6 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SIXTH CENTENARY OF DANTE'S BEATRICE.
16 Montagu Street, Portman Square: Jan. 4, 1890.

Count Angelo De Gubernatis has just elaborated a plan for a new exhibition which cannot fail to add a fresh attraction to Florence this spring.

In 1865 Florence celebrated the sixth centenary of the birth of Dante. In April—June, 1890, she will celebrate the sixth centenary of the death of Beatrice.

Count De Gubernatis's plan is to treat the Beatrice of the Divina Commedia and the Vita Nuova as a type of modern womanhood in general and Italian womanhood in particular. From the starting-point that she was the ispiratrice sublime of one of the greatest poets—in herself a model among women of their highest attainments in beauty, purity, and sagacity; chosen by Dante to be his guide through the empyrean flights of his loftiest beliefs and most daring fancy—he traces out in her personality the norma on which the true risorgimento della donna should be based.

Hence the first item of his programme consists in a series of prize essays by Italian women on the chief points of contact between real and ideal womanhood. Such as—"La Donna italiana nel Trecento," "La Donna italiana nel Rinascimento," "La Donna italiana nel Settecento," "Le Pittricci," "Le Novellatrici," "Le Scultrici," "Le Poetesse," "Le Educatrici," "Le Scienziate," "Le Operarie," "Le Eroine," "Il Tipo fisico della Donna italiana," "La Donna italiana in famiglia," and "La Donna ispiratrice."

The proposed exhibition will embrace all objects in producing or encouraging the creation of which women have had a special part—painting, illuminating, tapestry, sculpture, engraving, literature, needlework, embroidery, jewels, personal ornaments, objects connected with education, domestic hygiene, and various industries.

It will be enlivened with tableaux vivants—in arranging which Italians are proficient above others—of scenes illustrating the Vita Nuova. Musical displays of course there will be in great variety. Also the exceedingly interesting and, to most Englishmen, novel performance of Calendimaggi in costume, with May-songs sung by peasants selected from among those who still retain something of their now too rare poetical afflatus. Effects of Italian scenery and costume will heighten the picturesqueness and gracefulness of the ensemble.

Local committees have been formed in all "the hundred cities of Italy" to garner in collections of every kind which may tend to render the exhibition complete and nationally representative.

As I have been asked by Count De Gubernatis to bring his idea to the knowledge of English people who love Italy—and who among us does not?—may I beg the favour of your insertion of this letter in the ACADEMY as one most important means of bidding them to the feast, and perhaps also of obtaining some valuable, though necessarily rare, co-operation also?

R. H. BUSK.

MIDDLE ENGLISH NOTES.

London: Jan. 8, 1890.

I do not know whether anyone has pointed out the existence in Middle English of the interesting word tramountayne, meaning the North Pole star (O.F. tramountaigne, Med. Lat. transmontana). It occurs in the Early English Alliterative Poems edited by Dr. Morris in 1864, but is there printed in two words, tra being explained in the glossary as "high." The passage (B 211) represents Lucifer as saying "I schal talde up my trone in the tramountayne." The obvious correction, which certainly adds greatly to the poetical beauty of the line, may very likely have been made before, but I have not met with it. I should be glad to know whether the word has been found elsewhere in Middle English.

The word steem, in Robert of Brunne's reference to the poem of Thomas of Ercildoune ("over gastes it has the steem"), has, I think, usually been identified with "esteem." It seems to be a form of stevens (cf. seem for even), voice, vote.

No plausible etymology has, so far as I know, been suggested for the word oltrance, ostentation, pomp, occurring in the Alliterative Poems, in Robert of Brunne's Handlyng Synne, and in the Scottish poem of Peebles to the Play. It is also given in the Northamptonshire glossaries as being still current in the dialect of that county. I would suggest, with some diffidence, that it may represent an Old French oltrance*, from the proper name Olybrius, which has given rise in French to other derivatives of cognate meaning. The Anglo-French original of the Handlyng Synne has orprauce, but this can scarcely be other than a corrupt form.

Notwithstanding the high authority of Prof. Skeat, I am strongly convinced that ragman, in ragman-roll (whence rigmarole), has no connexion with the Icelandic ragmenn, "craven." For one thing, I think ragmenn, if adopted into English, would have been spelt with z or w, not with g. For another thing, the sense "craven" receives no support from any of the recorded uses of the word; and the meaning of "ragman-roll" may be accounted for in another way. In my childish days, the "ragman" or itinerant rag-collector (in Derbyshire villages) seldom made any payments in money, but gave sweetmeats or small wares in exchange for rags. It is not a very unlikely supposition that in the thirteenth and succeeding centuries he may have carried with him a fortune-telling roll with strings, similar to that used in the often-described children's game of "ragman-roll." Hence the use of "ragman-roll" as a contemptuous name for a document with many seals, such as a papal bull; and in this sense it was applied by the Scots to the deeds of allegiance to Edward I. Langland's application of the word ragman to "the first deceiver of mankind" seems to me to occasion no difficulty.

The common explanation of the word tryst, "a station in hunting," "a rendezvous," regards it as a form of trust. This is not perfectly satisfactory with regard to the sense; but a more formidable objection is that it does not account for the very frequent form tristre or tristur. What the true etymology may be I cannot conjecture; but it is worth while to remark that Du Cange gives an example of the mediæval Latin tristra in this sense, taken from a document apparently belonging to the neighbourhood of Lyons.

HENRY BRADLEY.

AN IRISH MERMAID.

Gateacre, Liverpool: Jan. 6, 1890.

I notice Mr. Axon's query of October 5 in looking over some back numbers of the ACADEMY. An explanation, in part at least, of this curious entry in the Chronicon Scotorum is obtained by a reference to the Aided Echach mic Máireda, a tale in "Lebor na h-Uidhre" (39a), of which an edition (unfortunately unknown to me) appeared in the Journal of the Royal Historical and Archaeological Society of Ireland for January 1870. The tale shows how Eochaidh mac Máireda was drowned by the magic outflow of Loch n Eochach (Lough Neagh) or Lake of Eochaidh, and how his daughter Liban resided in her Grianan at the bottom of the sea for three hundred years. A sentence very interesting for our present purpose is at 39b, line 3, from bottom:

"Conid st feil noimnis aimtheclhta do beóan mase innil diaragaib hi ina lnaib."

"And she herself relates her wanderings to Beóan son of Innle through his having taken her in his nets."

And the poem she recited on the occasion appropriately follows. At the end of this poem (h. na H., 40b 5) we have:

"Dorated dā aism do liban iarnabaisted (leg. baited) i. murgew i. gela mara."

"And a name was given to Liban at her baptism, to wit, Murgew, i.e., a being of the sea."

On the first column of the succeeding page we are told how Beóan prevails upon the mermaid to be captured in order to relate her story to St. Comgall and the clerics of Banger. The Aided finishes with due solemnity; but one sentence will suffice us here (h. na H., 41b top): "Robaist comgall hi 7 isse aism dorat di murgew i. gela mara. no murgew i. gela mara." "Comgall baptised her, and this is the name he gave to her, Murgew, i.e., being of the sea. Or Murgew, i.e., wild-maid of the sea."

JAMES QUINN.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Jan. 13, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "National Life and Thought in Servia and Montenegro," by Mr. J. G. Cotton Minchin.

MONDAY, Jan. 13, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Lower Limb," I., by Prof. J. Marshall.

5 p.m. London Institution: "University Education in London," by Sir Philip Magnus.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Old Masters' Exhibition of 1890," III., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.

TUESDAY, Jan. 14, 8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: Anniversary Meeting; Election of Council and Officers.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "Hongkong and its Trade Connections," by Mr. W. Kewick.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "A New Species of Otter from the Lower Pliocene of Eppelsheim," by Mr. R. Lydekker; "A Complete List of the Sphingids and Bombyces known to occur on the Nilgiri Hills of Southern India, with Descriptions of new Species," by Mr. G. F. Hampson; "Some Cranial and Dental Characters of the Domestic Dog," by Prof. Bertram C. A. Windle and Mr. John Humphreys; "The Herpetology of the Solomon Islands," IV., by Mr. G. A. Boulenger.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "Recent Dock Extensions at Liverpool," by Mr. George Fosbery Lyster.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 15, 4 p.m. Royal Institution: Demonstration, "The Lower Limb," II., by Prof. J. Marshall.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Discussion, "London Sewerage and Sewage," by Sir Robert Rawlinson.

THURSDAY, Jan. 16, 3 p.m. London Institution: "The Sugar Islands of the West," by Mr. D. Morris.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Old Masters' Exhibition of 1890," IV., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.

8 p.m. Linnean: "Life History of a remarkable Uredine on Jasminum Grandiflora," by Mr. A. Barclay; "Certain Protective Provisions in some Larval British Teleostei," by Mr. E. Prince.

FRIDAY, Jan. 17, 11 a.m. Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching: General Meeting, Presidential Address by Prof. Minchin.

4 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Lower Limb," III., by Prof. J. Marshall.

5 p.m. Society of Arts: "The India-Office Records," by Mr. F. C. Danvers.

5 p.m. Physical: "A Carbon Deposit in a Blake Telephone Transmitter," by Mr. F. B. Hawes; "Electric Splashes," by Prof. S. P. Thompson; "Galvanometers," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton, Mr. T. Mather, and Mr. W. E. Sumpner.

SCIENCE.

LEIST'S EARLY ARYAN LAW.

Alt-Arischen Jus Gentium. Von Dr. B. W. Leist. (Jena.)

Jus gentium, according to the Roman legists, means the laws which all men agree in observing. By the jus gentium of the early Aryans Prof. Leist means the laws which were common to the ancient Indians on the one side, and to their kinsmen in ancient Greece and Italy on the other. That there did exist such an original community of customs and institutions between races afterwards so widely separated, and that traces of it may be discovered in their later written legislation, seems to be proved, although there are differences of opinion as to how far it extends. From some expressions let fall by the author one gathers that the comparative method, as used to ascertain the historical evolution of jurisprudence, is still unfamiliar in Germany—less familiar, at any rate, than in England and France, where it has long been popularised by the brilliant researches of Sir H. Maine and M. Fustel de Coulanges. Prof. Leist's work has neither the literary charm and interest of Ancient Law and its successors, nor the classic polish and lucid concision of La Cité Antique. A more skilful or a more painstaking writer would have reduced the volume to half or a third of its present bulk, and increased its usefulness inversely in the same proportion. On the other hand, the thoroughgoing, though clumsy, method of the German secures advantages that are wanting to the too rigid systematisation of the French historian and to the disconnected, not to say chaotic, aperçus of the English jurist.

In studying early Greek law, or, rather, those immemorially binding and sacred customs which preceded positive legal enactment, and which the Greeks called Themis, Prof. Leist draws largely on the indications furnished by Homer, Aeschylus, and Plato's Laws—a circumstance that should make his work interesting to every Hellenist. For the Italian equivalent of Themis, which is Fas, he goes, of course, to the rich literature of Roman jurisprudence. Precisely the same notion he tells us is represented by the Sanskrit word Dharma, and what this covered must be learned from the sacred books of the Hindus. The author is not himself a Sanskrit scholar; but his deficiencies in this respect were, as he informs us, made good by the co-operation of his friend Delbrück. For the rest, Indian law is here studied, not for its own sake, but for the light that it may be supposed to shed on the corresponding Greek and Roman institutions. By the aid of this method we are enabled to put in its proper place whatever is isolated and fragmentary in the traditions relating to those institutions. It would have singularly facilitated the reviewer's task had Prof. Leist briefly recapitulated the chief results which he claims to have established. I can now only mention those by which I have myself been most impressed.

Former writers have dwelt on the importance of kinship, real or supposed, as the sole bond of union in early Aryan societies, each family exercising a repellent influence on the rest of mankind. Our author shows from Hindu and Greek sources that hospitality to strangers and suppliants was one of the primary duties of the Aryan householder, whose humanity in this respect he rather bitterly contrasts with the treatment now meted out to German travellers in France. Within the family itself he dwells much on the dignified position of the wife, who appears in his pages as almost her husband's equal. The Roman patria potestas, which placed her in the position of a daughter, he describes as a later transformation or deformation of the primitive conjugal relations. On the other hand, he repeatedly insists on the entire absence of any evidence tending to show that the so-called "Mutterrecht" or matriarchate—in other words, the supremacy of the mother—ever prevailed in Aryan households. Here he finds himself in opposition to his "old friend Bachofen," to whom Prof. Karl Pearson recently referred, with characteristic dogmatism, as having proved his case. The whole question ought to interest English newspaper readers, as to it they are partly indebted for the correspondence which raged little more than a year ago in the columns of the Daily Telegraph on the problem, "Is Marriage a Failure?" It is true that of those who took part in the controversy probably not one in a thousand had ever heard of Bachofen; nevertheless, its connexion with his speculations may be traced through a very few links. For the whole discussion was avowedly provoked by Mrs. Mona Caird's famous article in the Westminster Review. This was based on Prof. Karl Pearson's Ethic of Freethought, which, again, in the historical part of the chapters on the sex-relations repeats the views of Bachofen and his school. As regards the historical question, Prof. Leist's opinion must, from his intimate acquaintance with the evidence, carry great weight; but, in describing Bachofen's assertion that the Erinyes belonged not to both parents, but to the mother only, as "entirely foreign to Graeco-Italian antiquity" (p. 227), he seems to forget that, according to the Odyssey (Book xi. 280), Oedipus was pursued by the Erinyes of Epicaste only, not of Laius, although it was the latter, not the former, whom he had slain.

The pages in which Prof. Leist traces the process by which murder came to be regarded as a crime seem to me the most important and original part of his work. To the early Aryans the slaying of father or mother was at first the only inextinguishable form of homicide. The death of any other fellow-creature might be justified by the exigencies of self-defence; the pollution incurred might be washed out by ceremonial purifications; the vengeance of kinsmen might be averted by payment of damages. In the case of a parent no excuse was admissible, no atonement possible. But neither could the community interfere to exact retribution in this any more than in any other blood-feud. Apparently the guilty son, as nearest of kin to the deceased, was expected to punish himself by a cruel death if he would escape from a worse fate in the next world. But in time cases presented themselves of which the story of Orestes is a type—cases in which the slaying of a parent seemed not only justifiable, but obligatory. Then the law-courts would intervene to decide on the validity of the accused person's plea, thus drawing all cases of parenticide within their jurisdiction. We know from the famous trial represented on the shield of Achilles that ordinary homicides might indirectly be brought under the cognizance of a public tribunal by its arbitration being invoked on the side issue of whether damages had or had not been paid to the kinsmen of the deceased. Thus two separate lines of development led up to the creation of a criminal judicature. And to these, according to Prof. Leist, must be added a process of generalisation by which the notion of parenticide was so extended as to embrace every species of unjustifiable homicide. Only in Greece and Italy the mode of generalisation was different from what it was in India, and the difference is characteristic. In the West the notion of sanctity as attaching to human life spread through the various degrees of blood relationship until it embraced all citizens; whereas in India, under sacerdotal influence, it was extended from the father to the teacher, from the teacher to any man of learning, from the learned to the whole Brahmin caste (p. 323).

The Hindu mind has, Prof. Leist tells us, never outgrown that stage of jural evolution represented by the notion of Dharma, Themis, or Fas. It has never learned to look on law as a creation of the common will acting for the common weal. And this is because Hindu society did not pass through the indispensable stage of the Polis, or city-state, but remained in the rudimentary form of village-communities, aggregated into great military monarchies, "probably under Semitic influence," on whose governments the village folk looked with distrust and dislike (p. 354).

Prof. Leist disclaims the name of comparative jurisprudence for his science, otherwise I should have cited these profound and striking ideas as luminous examples of what such a science may teach.

ALFRED W. BENN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME OLD AND PROVINCIAL PLANT-NAMES.

Carlisle: Dec. 23, 1889.

I have for a decade past been occupied during my leisure hours in the study of this subject, and have accumulated a considerable store of material. The object of these notes is to throw some light on names found in the works of Earle, Prior, Britten and Holland, and other students of plant-names.

POD-THISTLE is given in the Northamptonshire Glossaries as the name of the stemless thistle (Carduus acutis, L.). Mr. Britten takes exception to this, and suggests that some other species is intended—why I know not. The Glossaries are right; for when I resided in Northamptonshire the people at Brackley (where O. acutis grows plentifully) always spoke of the stemless thistle as the "pod-thistle." It may be derived from (1) a broad or open pronunciation of the word pad, a path (A.S. pæð and pæð), like poppy from papig (Papaver), and so be the equivalent of the German Wegdistel—the thistle of the path or wayside; or (2) pod may be the provincial term applied to what is bulging or protuberant (like a pot), and thus refer to the large, swollen or pot-shaped flower-heads.

BEDAGRAGE is given by Earle (vide Wright) in a trilingual vocabulary of plant-names belonging to the thirteenth century. It stands without note or comment thus: "Bedagrage, Spina alba, wit born" (English Plant-Names, p. 48). The glosses are clear enough, and we still retain the name "whitethorn" as the local equivalent of hawthorn (Crataegus oxyacantha, L.) in Sussex, Devonshire, and elsewhere. No one, not even the ingenious Prior, though he wrote an explanation of Albespyne, has attempted, so far as I know, to throw light on the foregoing collocation, or on the meaning of Bedagrage. Mr. Mowat's note on Bedegar (Sinonoma Bartholomei, p. 12) includes the foregoing gloss, and a reference to Ray (1677), who in turn quotes Lobelius; but all their ideas are centered on the curious growth on the rose caused by an insect, and no light is afforded us respecting the connexion between "Bedagrage" and Spina alba. We must go back to the period which lies between the appearance of the trilingual glossary and that of Gerarde's Herbal to find a clue. Fuchs tells us, for example, that the lady's thistle (Carduus Marianus, L.) is called Spina alba, whereon another old writer remarks:

Fuchsius Spinæ albae unum genus, putat Carduum illum Beatae Mariae. Italica herba del lacte [cp. our Milk Thistle], quam alii Leucacanthum Diosc. putant, &c. Carduus Sanctae Mariae.

Our next quotation solves the difficulty, and, as John Bauhin has indicated, shows how confusion was introduced. Eucharius (A.D. 1533) has:

Bedegar, Spina alba, Carduus S. mariae, labrum Veneris, Chamaeleon, Mergen [i.e., Marien] distel, Sehedistel [= sea-thistle, Eryngium maritimum, L., and Crithmum maritimum, L., have both borne this name]. Unser Frauen distel.

Thus we see that "Bedegar" was glossed by Spina alba and Spina alba by "whitethorn." From Camerarius (In Horto, p. 35) we learn that the Arabic term was Bogdaguar (see, Bauhin, De Plantis, pp. 50-53). If now we turn to Gerard we find some further confirmation of our position:

"The spongie balls which are found upon the branches [of the rose] are most aptly and properly called Spongiolae sylvestris Rosae, the little sponges of the wilde rose. The shops mistake it by the name of Bedegar; for Bedegar among the Arabians is a kind of thistle, which is called in Greeke Ἀκανθα λευκα—that is to say, Spina alba the white thistle, not the white thorne, though the word doe import so much" (Ger. Emac., 1271).

It is curious that Mr. Mowat (Alphita, p. 22) does not seem to see how this quotation (part only of which he gives) explains the trilingual gloss which he copied in Sinonoma Barth. (p. 12). We have now to ask: What is Bedegar, Bedagrage, or Bogdegaur? I have never seen any attempted etymology; but I think there is little difficulty about it when we remember that it is not a spongy mass, but a sharp, spinous plant which is referred to. In the Semitic languages we have a root dāqar, dākar, or dekar, meaning "to stab," "pierce," "bore through" (with which we may compare the word "dagger" and its cognates, though etymologically distinct perhaps). From this root we obtain in Hebrew the names Deker or Bideker (1 Kings iv. 9) and Bidegar or Bidkar (2 Kings ix. 25), "the stabber." We may, therefore, conclude that "Bedegar" is the plant which pricks, and thus corresponds with Spina alba and whitethorn.

CAMEL'S STRAW.—This name is given by Britten as occurring in Lyte's Herbal for the common rush (Juncus communis, Mey.). No explanation is offered, but it is well known that Lyte frequently perpetuates old German and other foreign terms. Now, in Ruellius's edition of Dioscorides (1543) we read:

"Odonatus juncus in Africa & Arabia nascitur. Ἰχθυόεις (Schoenus) Graecis dicitur [including all the species]. Juncus odoratus et rotundus Latinis. Camelseshew ["Camels hew" in the index] Germanis. Gallis pasture de chameaux ["chameaux" in the index], hoc est, pastum Camelorum nominatur."

We thus see that the name "camel's hay" or "food" was given to some species of rush, and hence its retention by Lyte.

SISTRA.—Prior gives this name from the Grete Herball, but offers no explanation. "Sistra" is dyll, some call it Meu, but that is not so." Britten is incorrect therefore in saying that Turner invented the name Meu. Turner himself asserts that it already bore that name among the apothecaries. What then is Sistra? Ruellius (1593, i.e., five years before Turner's Names of Herbes) says:

"Graecis Μύρα, Meu seu Meon Latinis, Germanis Eberwurts, Gallis vulgo Feniculus tortuosus dicitur; apud Allobroges montanos, Citrach."

We thus infer that Sistra is the same as Citrach. Now it seems from the Grete Herball that Sistra or Citrach had been confused with Meum, and we therefore have to ask what this plant could be. In Alphita we read (p. 39) "Citrat herba est similis capillo veneris sed habet folia longiora." On this Mr. Mowat remarks: "Matth. Silv. c. clix, Cetarach id est Citrach." Thus the fern Cetarach had been confused with the umbels "dyll" and Meum. The name has undergone many changes in orthography—Sistra, Citrach, Citrac, Citrat, Ceterach—but it is the same word throughout. We can now come back to Prior, who says "Ceterach, according to Du Cange, is from an Arabic word." We thus eventually revert to a Semitic root Chāter (or Khadira, Arabic, cf. Fuerst's Hebrew and Chaldean Lexicon), meaning to be green, sprout forth, or blossom, whence Chateir, grass and herbs, with which we may further compare the words derived from the softened root zāhar.

Further examples must be reserved for another occasion.

HILDERIC FRIEND.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE general meeting of the Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching will be held at University College, Gower-street, on Friday next, January 17. At the morning sitting (11 a.m.), the reports of the council and committees will be presented, and new officers and members will be elected. At the afternoon sitting (2 p.m.), the following papers will be read: "A New Treatment of the Hyperbola," by the Rev. Dr. C. Taylor; "The Teaching of Trigonometry," by Mr. G. Heppel; "Some Geometrical Theorems," by Mr. E. M. Langley; and "Statics and Geometry," by the president, Prof. Minchin.

THE seventy-second anniversary of the Institution of Civil Engineers occurred on Thursday last week, when a revised list of the members of all classes showed that the numbers now on the books amounted to 5804, representing an increase of more than three per cent. in the past twelve months.

THE Journal of Microscopy has been greatly enlarged, owing to its amalgamation with the Wesley Naturalist, which has for the past three years been the recognised organ of the Wesley Scientific Society. The current issue contains a paper on "Sea Urchins," by Mr. Swainson, and another on "the Romance of Science," by the Rev. Hilderic Friend.

THE Geological Society of France has decided to issue a new quarterly publication to be entitled Mémoires de Paléontologie. Arrangements have already been made for the appearance of several important memoirs, mostly on the fossils of special localities.

UNDER the title of L'Anthropologie, a new French serial will be published at intervals of two months. This will take the place of the three publications known as the Matériaux pour l'Histoire de l'Homme, Revue d'Ethnographie, and Revue d'Anthropologie. The new work will be conducted by the editors of the three defunct journals, viz., M. Cartailhac, Dr. Hamy, and Prof. Topinard.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

M. J. B. ISTAS, of Louvain, has in the press a complete translation, with copious extracts from the various commentaries, of the I-li, by Prof. de Harlez. The I-li is the old ceremonial of China, and the only one of the great Kings which has never been translated.

PROF. DE HARLEZ is also preparing a version of the chief philosophical works of the Chinese school which bears the name of Sing-li, or "system of nature," to which belong the celebrated thinkers Tchou-tze, Toheng-tze, Tohang-tze, Yang-tze, Shao-tze, &c.

MESSESS. TRÜBNER have just issued the long expected Arabic Dictionary of Prof. H. Anthony Salmoné. It consists of two volumes: (1) Arabic-English; and (2) English-Arabic. And though the former contains 1254 pages, and the latter only 179, both alike show the novel principles of arrangement which the author has adopted to economise space, without sacrificing clearness or facility of reference. Briefly stated, his method is—not to attempt to include all derivative formations in alphabetical order, but to give only the roots, referring the reader for the characteristic modifications to a table, which is printed twice. So again, under the English words, the Arabic equivalents are not repeated, but references are given to the page and line where they occur in the Arabic volume. We must be content now to state that the work seems to be excellently printed.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

JAWS' COLLEGE LITERARY SOCIETY.—(Sunday, January 5.)

DR. M. FRIEDLANDER, principal of the college, is in the chair.—Mr. James Heckescher delivered a lecture on the life and works of the great lexicographer of Germany, Dr. Daniel Sanders, of Altschulitz. The lecturer reviewed all the literary work of Dr. Sanders, prominence being given to his great German Dictionary, his Fremdwörterbuch, and Ergänzungswörterbuch. Prof. Hugo von Maltze called these works the three colossi upon which the most modern German philology is based up to the present, Grimm's grandly conceived German Dictionary, begun in 1859, being still a torso. Mr. Heckescher next alluded to the excellence of Sanders's Wörterbuch der Hauptschwierigkeiten in der deutschen Sprache, of which the nineteenth edition appeared last year. Passing then to his Sprachbriefe and his Sprachschatz, he afterwards reviewed his admirable works on German synonyms. The second part of the lecture was devoted to Sanders's poetical works, his translations of Biblical, Greek, and Roman writers, in which the sweetness and euphony of the German language, faithfully reflecting the original, are of special merit. The number of the lexicographical and grammatical works of Sanders is twenty-nine, that of other works eleven; and among these a prominent place must be given to his History of the German Language and Literature, and his History of Modern Greek Literature published jointly with M. Rangabé, of Athens. The septuagenarian—Dr. Sanders was born on November 2, 1819—is still hard at work. A poetical work from his pen will shortly appear under the title Für die frühliche Jugend; and for the last three years he has published in Hamburg a monthly periodical, Zeitschrift für die deutsche Sprache, which, like all his writings, combines profundity with practical erudition. In fact, he scientifically popularises science. The lecturer concluded by saying that, even if Dr. Sanders had written nothing but his grand German dictionary, he would have erected for himself an everlasting monument.—Mr. Lewis Emanuel and Dr. Hermann Adler, opened a discussion at the end of the lecture by dwelling upon the merits of Dr. Sanders's literary achievements, which were of immense value to the science of philology.—Dr. Friedländer likewise emphasised the services rendered by Dr. Sanders.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, January 6.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. R. E. Mitcheson read a paper on "Practical Certainty the Highest Certainty." That to be certain is no more than to have the courage of our opinions is at the root of Kant's philosophy. Greater or less certainty is measured by the gravity of the interest which we are willing to stake upon it, just as Kant says of pragmatic or contingent belief that its best test is a bet. Other forms of belief, distinguished from pragmatic belief by Kant, are the same in kind. This he practically admits of all but mathematical knowledge. Judgments dealing with the facts of nature and the laws derived from their observation are empirical and not necessary; and the categories which make such judgments possible are applicable only to possible experience, and do not justify the anticipation of its existence. He agrees with Hume that the principle of causality rests on no a priori necessity, but on a kind of subjective necessity arising from its general usefulness in experience. He differs from him in insisting on its necessity when referred to a possible experience; but without the anticipation of the existence of such experience necessity has no meaning. What of the a priori synthetic judgments of mathematics? Their possibility depends on the pure intuition of space and time, the universal conditions under which the manifold of sense becomes an object. The argument requires that we should have a priori intuition of the object itself, for the a priori character of the conditions means only their universality within experience. The principles of mathematics are thus regulative, not constitutive. In the ideas of reason Kant only professes to give regulative principles. The highest of them are, however, morally certain, for the absolute imperativeness of moral laws makes us postulate a moral governor of the world. But this imperativeness means only that we are compelled to act upon them. This is all we mean by the highest certainty; and if we speculate on the possibility of higher intelligences the greater certainty of their knowledge would be shown in greater immediacy of action.—A discussion followed.

FINE ART.

THE OLD MASTERS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE.

I.

THERE is, by comparison with the shows of former years, no diminution in the variety of attractions provided by the Royal Academy at this its twenty-first winter exhibition, no abatement in the supply of pictures of the first rank, new, at any rate, to the present generation. We naturally deplore that this year, as last, not a single Italian picture graces the walls of Burlington House; but we must applaud the decision of the Academicians to show nothing of this class of inferior quality, where so many masterpieces of the first rank have been seen during the last twenty years. If the art-history of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries is for the present no more to be illustrated and developed by the exhibition of works of the profoundly interesting class which have, from time to time, found a home in the Fourth Gallery—there providing us with many a difficult and fascinating problem to solve—ample compensation is now, as last winter, afforded in other directions in which further exploration is not less necessary.

The exhibition may be said to be divided into four—or, perhaps, we might say five—distinct sections: of which one contains an interesting and already much discussed series of Spanish pictures; the second a singularly choice gathering of Flemish and Dutch works; the third a series of historical portraits of the seventeenth century by Daniel Mytens, and some contemporary Anonimi of a Dutch school other than his—these being contributed entirely by the Marquis of Bristol and the Earl of Suffolk; the fourth a collection, not less charming than its forerunners, of English works of the last and the present century. This last division contains a separate section entirely devoted to the glorification—a tardy, but a complete one—of Alfred Stevens, the sculptor, painter, draughtsman, and decorator, whose genius would have attained a completer development, and received an ampler recognition during his lifetime, had he worked in the Florence of the sixteenth century instead of in the London of the nineteenth.

Among the Spanish pictures, the first place, both for size and interest, must be accorded to the great "Venus and Cupid," by Velasquez, which comes to us from Mr. R. A. Morrill's collection at Rokeby; a work which, although well-known by repute, and quite recently engraved in Herr Carl Justi's exhaustive biography of the artist, has not, so far as I am aware, been previously exhibited in any public gallery. According to Herr Justi it remained in the Royal Spanish collection until the end of the seventeenth century, passing thence into the collections of the Duke of Alba and of Godoy, Prince of the Peace, successively, and finally, after some intermediate vicissitudes, into that of its present owner. The goddess—if we must follow Velasquez in so styling this well-built and bien cambree Andalusian damsel—lies with her back to the spectator in a graceful attitude, reposing on loosely cast draperies of bluish-grey and white, and gazing indolently into a hand-mirror which is held up to her gaze by a robust and naturalistic Cupid furnished with wings, and wearing only a tiny blue scarf. Overhanging the whole are draperies of that peculiar lie de vin colour which the painter so much affects, while a paler variety of the same tint is repeated in a ribbon loosely cast over the ebony-framed mirror. As a study of the nude—a glorified naturalistic académie carried out on a large scale, and finished with extraordinary breadth and thoroughness—the picture is remarkable even among the works of Velasquez, besides being practically unique in the Spanish art of the time. Parts of the canvas, which is on the whole fresh and well-preserved, must have suffered much injury; for the averted head of Venus is so empty, and so poor even in handling, that it cannot have been left thus by the masterly Sevillian, while the modelling of the left shoulder appears by contrast with the rest of the undraped form empty and insufficient. With these exceptions the painting, in a full even light, of the flesh is of extraordinary unity and force, lacking, of course, the golden transparency of the Venetians, but showing an elasticity in the rendering of the firm, muscular tissues under the skin which even they hardly attained. Velasquez revels naturally in such technical difficulties as the suggestion of the head reflected in the mirror, the wings of the Cupid, and the tangle of light muslin draperies lying in a heap between the goddess and the wall. The general tone is of such strength that it crushes all that is placed beside it—even the master's own works. Here, however, praise may well abate; for the "Venus and Cupid," with all the incomparable mastery of execution revealed by certain portions, shows very clearly the limits of Velasquez's genius. Of a personal conception of the subject, going beyond and really focussing into an organic whole the living models and the artistic properties skillfully arranged by the painter, there is here—even if we accept his naturalistic standpoint—hardly a question. Think, by comparison, with how exquisite a grace Correggio presents his own re-creation of similar subjects in pictures such as the "Antiope," the "Leda," or the "Danaë"; how far from the common-places of the dressing-room is Giorgione's beautiful Venus at the Dresden Gallery, in which the true Venetian voluptuousness and vitality are combined with an almost classic beauty. Of all these supreme masters, Titian comes nearest to earth in his famous "Venus of the Tribune," which is so nearly a portrait of the fair Eleonore, Duchess of Urbino; but even here the amorous glow which gives colour to the work is of a higher and stronger, and yet a less personal, order than that unimpassioned sensuousness which peeps forth from the admirable study of Velasquez. Next come a whole series of portraits by the same great master, which are of high interest, though none perhaps attains the level upon which stand—to leave out of the question the Madrid masterpieces—such well-known works as the "Infante Marguerite" of the Louvre, our own smaller "Philip IV.," the splendid "Juan Mateos" of Dresden, the unfinished head at Munich, the "Leo X.," of the Doria Palace, or the painter's own portrait at the Capitol. The portrait of Philip's consort, the young Queen Maria Anna of Austria, lent by Sir Clare Ford, is an uninviting performance—clearly an atelier replica, or copy of an original of which much better repetitions are known. The splendid full-length of "Admiral Adrian Pulido Pareja," contributed by the Duke of Bedford, appears to be an original repetition of the great work which still remains in Spain in the possession of the Duke of Arcos. Another representation of the same personage, in simpler and more sombre attire, is at Longford Castle, and was seen at Burlington House when the famous "Ambassadors" and "Erasmus" of Holbein, from the same collection, were exhibited. The present example shows such splendour of sombre colour, such vivacity and strength in the rendering of the details of the drees, that we cannot believe that another than Velasquez had originally a hand in its execution. The powerful head—characterised by the ardour of the warrior with an infusion of that cold restrained ferocity peculiar to the Spaniard—may have been tampered with at the time when some inferior and later painter put in the background, showing a naval engagement half veiled by a falling curtain, and to the left of the foreground an escutcheon with a posthumous inscription. The portrait of the Infant, "Don Balthasar Carlos," from Manchester House, shows him as a baby, clad in a frock of pale grey satin, richly embroidered with silver, maintaining with difficulty his equilibrium, as he stands framed in a curtain of green and gold. The face of the baby-boy is painted with exquisite delicacy, and recalls, though it is far from equalling, the already cited "Infante Marguerite" of the Louvre. The present is the only known example of exactly the type and colour-scheme described; the far more beautiful Castle Howard likeness of the prince—once called a "Prince of Parma," and attributed to Correggio—showing a much richer and an entirely different chord of harmony. The green hanging may possibly be pupil's work. The Duke of Devonshire's "Portrait of a Lady," from Chiswick, manifestly represents the same fascinating and yet in a way repellent Spanish woman who appears in that masterpiece, the "Femme à l'Eventail," owned by Sir Richard Wallace, and recently seen here; but it is by no means a repetition of that work. On the contrary, it may have been a first sketch or design for it, carried far and then abandoned; for the head alone, with its burning, enigmatical eyes, is identical in both versions, while the dress in the Duke of Devonshire's sketch is brown, and of richer fashion than the plain grey and black robe of Sir Richard Wallace's larger and more finished portrait. From Buckingham Palace comes a full-length of "Don Balthasar Carlos," at the age of about fourteen years, wearing splendid gala half-armour and a rich costume, while his uniformly crimson-hued surroundings are of unusual richness. This is said to be the picture despatched by the Spanish to the English royal house in 1639, when a matrimonial alliance between the two courts was again in the air. Such a picture is indeed distinctly mentioned in the catalogue of Charles I.'s collection. It is stated that the present example was, not very long since, found rolled up at Windsor, and thence transferred to Buckingham Palace. However this may be, the painting, with all its richness of colour, lacks the supreme decision and the strength of tone which mark the work of Velasquez himself. From the atelier of Philip's court-painter the canvas undoubtedly comes, and some touches of the master it may have; but it cannot on the whole take higher rank than that of a good studio-piece painted under the eye of the master. The two large sketches from the collections of Sir Richard Wallace and the Duke of Westminster respectively, both of them showing the young Don Balthasar Carlos riding a sturdy pony in the court manège, but with backgrounds differing altogether from each other in design, are in my opinion both undoubted originals; although the one and the other—and especially the Duke of Westminster's version—have since the opening of this exhibition been doubted by some competent critics. The finer and more typical performance, so far as regards the equestrian portrait of the young prince, is the picture from Manchester House, which is somewhat smaller and, as to its background, in a far less advanced state than its rival. This last is painted in broadly and hastily in semi-transparent colours, with figures barely indicated. In the more elaborate version coming from Grosvenor House there appears in the middle distance the great Conde-Duque Olivarez himself, officiating apparently as master of horse, while in a balcony in the farther distance are figures which have been identified as those of the king and queen watching the equestrian performances of their little boy. This background is painted in with a swiftness and masterly dexterity of touch which no copyist or pupil—beit Juan Bautista del Mazo himself, whose name has been brought forward in connexion with the work—could well emulate. Besides which a sketch of this character is precisely the kind of painting which a pupil would not copy, save as an exercise, and of which a copy would hardly be required. Moreover, no other version of the present picture exactly similar in design is known to exist. What the imitative art of this same Juan Bautista del Mazo amounted to, when he was left to his own devices, is well shown in the interesting but, notwithstanding its Velasquez-like technique, decidedly inferior portrait of the widowed Queen Maria Anna of Austria, painted some years after the death of Mazo's great master.

The lovers of Murillo's so-called sacred art will admire the two, in their ways first-rate, examples which come from Lord Rothschild's collection. The one is the famous "Good Shepherd"—perhaps the best of a very numerous family of similar pieces, and certainly beautiful, so far as anything so flimsy and insincere in sentiment can be beautiful: the head is very fine in draughtsmanship, but the sheep are feeble and far from convincing. To another and apparently an earlier manner, marked by less of the deliberately cloudy and vaporous, is the "Virgin and Child," also empty in sentiment, but remarkable for the boldness with which the superabundant draperies—mainly of that bottle-green peculiar to Murillo—are cast. In strong contrast with the art of his two great contemporaries stands forth that of the not less truly Spanish Zurbaran, whose work, notwithstanding a certain element of monotonous persistency, derives an intense force, a convincing authority, from the glow of fervid unquestioning piety which pervades all his conceptions of sacred personages and sacred scenes. Lord Heytesbury sends two large full-lengths of Church-Fathers, "St. Benedict" and "St. Jerome," which perhaps exemplify some of Zurbaran's defects—among them the rigid perpendicular fold of his draperies, and their metallic quality—more strongly than they bring out his characteristic merits. These qualities lend a unique charm of unconscious naïveté and perfect sincerity, such as we might expect to find rather in works of the fourteenth and fifteenth than in those of the seventeenth century, to three single figures of saints of smaller dimensions, "St. Andrew," "St. Thomas," and "St. Cyril," all contributed by the Duke of Sutherland. Especially the "St. Thomas"—a white-robed figure wearing a black hat—and the "St. Cyril"—wearing also robes of black and white, but of different fashion, and shown gazing upwards in an attitude of fervent prayer—are thoroughly characteristic of what is rarest and strongest in the master's peculiar individuality.

Flanders holds its own well between Spain on the one hand and Holland on the other, although its masters are represented by but very few specimens. There are few finer Vandycks, in that second Flemish manner, which was perhaps the painter's finest, than the Duke of Sutherland's beautiful so-called "Portrait of an Artist," which, from its aspect, should represent rather an aristocratic dilettante or dabbler in science. Consummate drawing, courting rather than avoiding difficulties, and composition of balanced excellence, are here employed in the service of a conception of great pathos and of a truth which is coloured, but not obliterated, by the artist's engaging personality. Worthy to be mentioned with this is the same painter's "Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel," showing a half-figure of the great collector gazing at a precious medallion which he holds in his hand. It represents him at a much earlier age than the Duke of Norfolk's famous example, in which he is portrayed with one of his grandsons; and it is more rapid if less solid in execution than that noble work. The landscape background is brushed in with a force and sureness of effect which almost suggests Rubens. We need do no more than mention here the latter master's superb, yet not altogether attractive, colour-study, "The Daughter of Herodias, with the Head of St. John the Baptist," which comes from Castle Howard. A curious puzzle is provided by the masterly portrait of "John, Count of Nassau - Dillenburg," ascribed, manifestly in error, to Vandyck. The martial, somewhat self-assertive, yet noble personage who here appears, almost fronting the spectator, wearing elaborately engraved half-armour, is conceived in a fashion totally at variance with that of the gentle Antwerp; the opaque flesh-painting, the blackish-grey half-tones and shadows of the consummately well-drawn head are not his; the singularly accurate rendering of the costume lacks the subtle charm of colour which he would have known how to impart to it. After carefully passing in review the contemporary Flemings who could not have painted the picture, I put forward the suggestion, though with some hesitation, that it may be by Gaspar de Crayer, the Antwerp artist who, after Rubens and Vandyck, may be considered to have occupied the foremost place in the eyes of his contemporaries, but who is now more widely known as the painter of important altar-pieces and vast ecclesiastical machines than as a portrait-painter.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE Sports and Arts Exhibition will open at the Grosvenor Gallery on this day week, Saturday, January 18. We understand that very representative collections have been brought together of the work both of Sir Edwin Landseer and of Stubbs.

THERE will be on view next week at the Burlington Fine Arts Club a collection of drawings in water-colour and in black-and-white by the late Spencer Vincent. Admission may be obtained, on the introduction of a member, daily between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m., and on Thursdays also from 8 to 11 p.m.

PROF. REGINALD STUART POOLE'S course of lectures at University College, London, during the coming term will be devoted to British and English archaeology; and each lecture will be followed by a demonstration on the following day in the galleries of the British Museum. The professor himself will deliver the inaugural lecture of the course on Wednesday next, January 15; and, later on, a lecture on "The Place of Coins in the History of Britain." At his invitation, the following subjects will be treated by specialists: "Iberic, Celtic, Roman, English, and Danish Britain," in three lectures by Prof. Boyd Dawkins; "The Mediaeval House," by Prof. Roger Smith, illustrated by a visit to Mrs. Pullan's house in Melbury-road; "Illuminated Manuscripts," by Mr. T. Matesdorf; "The Monastery in Mediaeval England," two lectures by Mr. Maurice Hewlett. The lectures are open to the public without payment or ticket; for the demonstrations a fee of one guinea is charged. Prof. Poole hopes also to give another course of twelve lessons on "Classical Art, Vases, Sculpture, and Coins" at the British Museum, and the Museum of Casts, South Kensington.

THE STAGE.

"A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM" AT THE GLOBE.

MR. F. R. BENSON'S company has for the last few years been known as one of but two or three travelling companies devoted wholly to what is called "legitimate" work. Mr. Edward Compton and, of late, Miss Kate Vaughan have taken about the provinces troops of actors devoted to much the same service; save that their efforts, while confined to the "legitimate," are yet more narrowly confined, we believe, to comedy. Mr. Benson—whose success as an amateur at Oxford is probably responsible for his subsequent choice of the profession of the stage—has made it his especial business to play Shakspeare in the provinces; and, for our own part, we are inclined to put it to his credit that he has relied mainly upon what was at all events meant to be an intelligent and worthy interpretation of the plays, and has given to "spectacle" a quite secondary place. With his appearance at the Globe Theatre, things are changed a little. The performance, no doubt, has been rendered more generally attractive; but we are not now seeing Mr. Benson and his comrades quite as they are accustomed to be beheld in the provinces. In that respect his experiment differs from that which Mr. Edward Compton made at the Strand, three or four years ago, when he produced not only the plays, but likewise exactly the performers, he was accustomed to produce in the country. Not that I would grumble for a moment at the opportunity which Mr. Benson affords me of seeing Miss Kate Rorke—whom the provinces know not—in a performance that is at least eminently picturesque. Not that I would grumble at that measure of spectacle which Mr. Benson—as a concession, it may be, to the weaker brethren—has vouchsafed to afford us at the Globe.

No; the fashion in which the piece is treated at the Globe is, on the whole, a wise one. Given the determination to produce "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and, doubtless, it was necessary to produce it with a goodly show. What is there in the story—what in the characters—that can really hold public attention? No one wants to take very seriously this exquisite fancy, save for the literature which its framework enshrines; and it is not to the Globe nor to any other theatre that we need go for the full enjoyment of that literature. When a piece like "A Midsummer Night's Dream" is presented on the boards, one of the things we feel is the absence of characterisation, of individuality, in its heroines. For the piece to be a purely theatrical success, one of two things is almost necessary, or seems at all events to be regarded as almost necessary. Either the comic scenes must be so much drawn out—not to say exaggerated—that they shall come within the range of the appreciation of the gallery; or the fairy element must be made such an excuse for exquisite spectacle that the man in the stalls or private boxes—the man who has dined, and wishes nobody ill—must be roused from the polite indifference which is proper to him. And may we say that, to some extent at least, both of these things have been done at the Globe, under Mr. Benson? The comic scenes are taken—to my mind—at a pace at which they drag. The fairy scenes are the occasion of a show that is so pretty as to be almost rousing.

Perhaps Mr. Benson was desirous of beginning in London with a piece in which at least the good "all-round" character of the performances he organises should be perceptible, and not the attainments of any particular actor. If so, then again "The Midsummer Night's Dream" was, to some extent, a wise choice. It is clearly shown that intelligence is looked for, under his management, from star to super; but it is not as clearly evident that his company has great dramatic capacity. Mr. Benson himself plays Lysander, with discretion and taste; but, like several of his comrades, his technical resources in the matter of elocution appear to be limited. We await the opportunity of seeing him in more important parts. Mr. Herbert Ross is Demetrius. Mr. G. R. Weir was not impressive as Bottom. He was competent—if one may use the word in such a connexion—rather than ingenious and entertaining. But some of those who know this confessedly valued actor claim for him, with confidence, the rare gift of versatility; and, from what has been heard of him, we shall particularly welcome his appearance as Falstaff, later in the season. He is said to endow the part with the unctuousness which has so often been missed. As Titania, Mrs. Benson pleases. Miss Ada Ferrer is a sufficiently capable Hermia. Miss Kate Rorke—who looks at her best, but is not easier than the rest of the world in the delivery of blank verse—plays Helena earnestly, in a tawny wig, and manages her draperies better than do some of her associates. Actual passion I do not feel that she reaches. As Hippolyta, Miss Marion Grey presents a picture of singular charm. Puck is excellent of movement, but faulty of speech. There is much to praise in individual effort. There are many shortcomings—so many, indeed, that an unknown person might make a reputation by writing a magazine article to point them all out. But the impression that remains, when all is said and done, is a favourable one. An exceedingly tasteful and refined show has passed before us—one that witnesses to any amount of ingenious consideration on the part of those who have planned it. Nothing is merely gorgeous; yet no labour and no cost has been spared whereby the text, and the spirit of the text, could be illustrated. When we have declared this, and have added that Mendelssohn's exquisite music—with song and choral, wedding march and fairy dance—is heard from the evening's beginning to its end, the opinion has practically been expressed that the present performance of the Shaksperian Fairy Comedy is one that ought by no means to be missed.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. BURNAND'S burlesque on "La Tosca," with Mr. Roberts and Miss Margaret Ayrton in the principal parts, was to be produced at the Royalty on Thursday evening—too late for notice here. It can, however, hardly be doubted that the piece and its interpreters will supply all the entertainment that could be desired. "La Tosca" offers a hundred opportunities, which Mr. Burnand is not likely to lose.

MR. ALBERY'S "Forgiven" is to be revived to-night at the Criterion, with Mr. David James, Mr. Leonard Boyne, Mr. Kerr, and Miss Olga Brandon in the chief parts.

MISS ANNIE IRISH has written a play which is to be brought out at a matinée at Terry's, in ten days' time.

At the Avenue Theatre, the performances of "The Field of the Cloth of Gold"—which are perhaps chiefly attractive by reason of the grace of Miss Marie Linden and Miss Amalia Gruhn, and of the extreme smartness of William Brough's punning—will be continued, we hear, until the eve of the day when the theatre passes into other hands. The little musical piece, "The Rose of Auvergne," which precedes the principal attraction of the evening, is not at all badly done.

MUSIC.

THE NATIONAL SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL MUSICIANS.

Bristol: Jan. 8, 1890.

THE rapid and continuous progress of this society, since it was started in 1882 by some of the leading professors of music in Lancashire, shows how welcome is the idea of co-operation and unity. There is no musical creed connected with it, but members holding the most antagonistic views meet together "to foster and develop the progress of a truly national art in Great Britain." Annual conferences have already been held in London, Birmingham, and Cambridge. This year Bristol, a city famous for its Madrigal and Orpheus societies, has been selected for the meeting.

Last Tuesday there was a reception by the general council at the Royal Hotel; and in the evening a pleasant conversazione, at which there was a performance of music selected from works by members of the society—a pianoforte Trio by Dr. Bunnett, a Sonata for violin and piano by Dr. Walter Stokes, and a Duo Concertante for two pianofortes by Mr. C. E. Stephens. The last-named, a clever and attractive work in three movements, was well rendered by Mdme. Emily Lawrence and the composer himself, and was much applauded.

On Wednesday morning, the conference was opened by Sir Charles Wathen, Mayor of Bristol, at the Merchants' Venturers' Hall. The chair was to have been taken by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie; but he was unable to leave London, and his place was supplied by Mr. E. Stephens. After speeches from the mayor and the chairman, and a report, testifying to the prosperous condition of the society, from the secretary, Mr. E. Chadfield, Mr. Ebenezer Prout read a short but extremely practical and interesting paper on "The Study of Counterpoint." It was, as Mr. Panister in the after-discussion humourously observed, a "counterblast" to a paper on the same subject read at the Cambridge conference in 1889 by Dr. Hiles. Mr. Prout believes that there is no better training for the musical mind than strict counterpoint. A strong point in his favour, and one which he did not forget to mention, was the time and attention which all the great composers had given to it. No, not all: there was one, Franz Schubert, who, in early youth, had no systematic training. Yet he, with all his rare gifts and ready pen, felt the want of it; and only a few weeks before his death had decided to work at counterpoint with S. Sechter. Mr. Prout, in his recent work on Harmony, has shown us that he is well aware of the strides which music has made since the rules of counterpoint were fixed by such men as Fux, Albrechtsberger, Cherubini; and he wisely proposes certain modifications in those rules. But he would have strict counterpoint taught, using only common chords and their first inversions. This he believes is the best way to teach pupils how to gain an insight into the progression of chords. In the discussion which followed, Dr. Hiles naturally took a leading part. His contention that the great composers, even including Bach, refused to be fettered by the ancient rules had really nothing to do with the matter; for, as Mr. Prout observed, he (Mr. Prout) was not laying down the law for geniuses, but discussing the best method of training persons who were learning music. Dr. Hiles considered strict counterpoint useless to the student. While trying to modify rules so as to keep pace with the spirit of the age, it is surely wise not suddenly to break with a system which produced a Haydn, a Mozart, and a Beethoven. The matter has been taken up in order to come to some practical decision as to the kind of questions to be asked in the examinations conducted by this society. On Thursday morning a resolution will be proposed by Mr. Prout "That it is desirable that a due proportion of questions in strict counterpoint be added to the present Examinations Questions Book."

In the afternoon Mr. Curwen contributed a valuable paper on "The Elementary Musical Education of the People"; in the evening Sir George W. Edwards, president of the far-famed Bristol Madrigal Society, invited the members to a concert at the Victoria Rooms, Clifton. A performance of some of the finest madrigals by ancient and modern composers, under Mr. D. W. Rootham's able direction, proved a rare treat.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

WE have received from Messrs. Ascherberg:—

Handel's Choruses for the Organ, arranged by Henry Smart. Two volumes in one. There are in all twenty-four numbers: five from the "Messiah," four from "Israel," three from "Judas," three from "Solomon," and the rest from favourite works of the Saxon master. It is, of course, unnecessary to dilate upon the beauty and grandeur of the music, while the name of Smart is an assurance that the arrangements are well done. The pedal parts are only of moderate difficulty.

Of songs we would mention The Vampire, by Michael Watson, a stirring and effective composition; Love's Réverie, by H. Krenz, a light, fanciful song, with a Tempo di Valse; Epanita, by Antonio L. Mori, a light, showy Spanish love-song, composed expressly for Mdme Marie Roze; John's Wife, by J. L. Roeckel, a simple ballad in which the words play chief part; and Love can Wait, by H. Trotère, a quiet, expressive song. Besides, we have Sydney Smith's song "For You," neatly transcribed for violin with pianoforte accompaniment by Guido Papini, and also arranged as an easy pianoforte waltz, by May Ostlere.

From Messrs. Hutchings:—

The Silver Bridge. Cantata, by J. Hoffmann. The libretto, by E. Oxenford, is based upon a popular Norse legend. It tells how some maidens in danger of drowning were rescued by a knight clad in silver armour. His task accomplished, he disappeared under the water and was seen no more. To commemorate the event, a "silver bridge" was erected near the spot, and ever after peasant maidens repeat the tale in song. The music for treble voices, consisting of soli, concerted pieces, and recitatives, is light and extremely pretty.

Soft, soft wind: Song with violin obbligato, by A. S. Gatty, is a quiet, taking song.

Six Grand Marches, arranged for three performers upon one pianoforte, by Dr. W. J. Westbrook. Teachers will find these trifling transcriptions useful and agreeable exercises in ensemble playing.

Grande Fantasia sur des Airs Stamois, by J. Romano, is a pianoforte piece of considerable difficulty, but of little merit.

Harvest Time, rondo for pianoforte, by Arthur Berridge, is a light, agreeable little piece.

On airs from Tito Mattei's Opera Comique, "La Prima-Donna," we have a Valse and Lancers which will be novelties for the festive season. They are arranged by John Crook.

Hirondelle, by G. Brittain is a lively little polka.

Wavelets: composed by R. Roche, transcribed for violin with pianoforte accompaniment by Tivadar Machéz, is a showy drawing-room piece of moderate difficulty.

From Messrs. Duoci:—

When Twilight comes, by A. Strelezki, a quiet, sentimental song, with violin obbligato part by Guido Pajuni.

Minuetto, for pianoforte, by Ant. Dvorák, is a piece full of grace and charm. There are phrases in it which show how strongly the composer is imbued with the spirit of Schubert. In its original form, it was written for a small orchestra.

Printemps et Jeunesse, by E. Rubini, is a light and graceful "Valse de Salon" for pianoforte, dedicated to M. V. de Pachmann.

Revue Mauresque, for pianoforte, by A. H. West, is a spirited piece of moderate difficulty.

Zizine, by L. Badia; a lively and easy waltz.

Intermezzo, for piano and violin, by G. St. George (Woolhouse), is a light, graceful, and easy piece.

Joyous Moments, No. 2 of Two Melodies for Piano, by A. Buhl (Duff & Stewart); a light drawing-room piece.

Six Anthems from the Oratorio "Immanuel," by Dr. W. Spark (J. Heywood). Two of these are short, simple, and effective: "I delight to do thy will," for unaccompanied quartet or semi-chorus; and the Christmas Carol, "It came upon the midnight clear," for chorus. The air for bass "Why are ye so fearful," and the soprano and tenor duet with chorus "Unto thee, O Lord," are smooth and flowing. "This is the day" is a longer anthem, consisting of trio and chorus connected by a few bars recitative and short organ symphony: the music is melodious, but has no distinctive character. "Hosanna to the Son of David" has evidently been suggested by Gounod's "Calvary" March, but the music is not of an equally elevated order.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

WILKIE COLLINS'S LAST NOVEL.—Now ready, 3 vols., at every Library.

BLIND LOVE.

By WILKIE COLLINS, Author of "The Woman in White."

With a Preface by WALTER BESANT, and 36 Illustrations by A. Forestier.

. The FIRST EDITION having been exhausted before publication, a SECOND EDITION is now in the press, and will be ready early next week.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CARVED CARTOON."
Immediately, 2 vols. square 8vo., 12s., and at all Libraries.

FOR the LOVE of a LASS: a Tale of Tynedale. By AUSTIN CLARE, Author of "A Child of the Menhir."

OUIDA'S NEW NOVEL.—To be ready shortly, 3 vols., crown 8vo., at all Libraries.

POSITION: a Novel.

By OUIDA, Author of "Under Two Flags," "Moths," &c.

THREE STRIKING NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE BELL of ST. PAUL'S. By Walter Besant.

Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c. 3 vols.

FETTERED for LIFE. By Frank Barrett, Author of

"The Admirable Lady Biddy Fane," &c. 3 vols.

PASSION'S SLAVE. By Richard Ashe King, Author of "The Wearing of the Green," &c. 3 vols.

MARK TWAIN'S NEW BOOK.

A YANKEE at the COURT of KING ARTHUR. By

MARK TWAIN. With 220 Illustrations by Dan. Beard. Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"Mark Twain's new book is undoubtedly one of the funniest, if not absolutely the funniest, that he has ever written," Scotsman.

HENRY MURRAY'S NEW NOVEL.

A GAME of BLUFF. By Henry Murray, joint-Author with CHRISTIE MURRAY of "A Dangerous Catapaw." Post 8vo., picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

A NEW ADVENTURE BOOK.

THE DEAD MAN'S SECRET; or, The Valley of

Gold; being a Narrative of Strange and Wild Adventure. By J. E. MUDDOCK, Author of "Stories Weird and Wonderful," &c. With a Frontispiece by F. Barnard. Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 6s.

"The expectations to which the title of Mr. Muddock's story give rise are more than realised before the reader closes the volume, for seldom has anything more startling been served up for the benefit of those who delight to sup on horrors."
Glasgow Herald.

NEW VOLUME OF MCCARTHY'S "GEORGES."—On Jan. 16, demy 8vo., cloth extra, 12s.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF

A HISTORY of the FOUR GEORGES. By Justin

MCCARTHY, M.P., Author of "A History of Our Own Times," &c. To be completed in 4 vols.

MR. EDWARD WALFORD'S NEW BOOK.

WILLIAM PITT: a Biography. By Edward Walford,

M.A., Editor of "The County Families," &c. Post 8vo., cloth extra, 6s.

COUNT PAUL VASIL'S NEW BOOK.

SOCIETY in PARIS: the Upper Ten Thousand. A

Series of Letters from COUNT PAUL VASIL to a young French Diplomat. Translated by R. L. de BEAUFORT. Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 6s.

THE HUMOURS OF "THE CLOTH."

ANECDOTES of the CLERGY. By Jacob Larwood.

Post 8vo., printed on laid paper, and half-bound (uniform with "The Essays of Elia," and "Gastronomy as a Fine Art"). 2s.

LIFE IN THE WILD WEST.

FIFTY YEARS on the TRAIL: the Adventures of

John Y. Nelson, Scout, Guide, and Interpreter in the Wild West. By HARRINGTON O'REILLY. With over 100 Illustrations by Paul Frenzeny. Square 8vo., picture cover, 8s. 6d.; cloth, 4s. 6d.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

BLACKIE & SON'S EDUCATIONAL LIST.

Deschanel's Natural Philosophy. Translated and Edited by Prof. J. D. EVERETT. Tenth Edition. Revised throughout. Copiously Illustrated. Medium 8vo, cloth, 18s. In Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

- Part I. Mechanics, Hydrostatics, &c.
- II. Heat.
- III. Electricity and Magnetism.
- IV. Sound and Light

Outlines of Natural Philosophy: a Text-Book of Elementary Physics. By Prof. EVERETT. Enlarged Edition. Cloth, 4s.

Elementary Text-Book of Physics. By Prof. EVERETT. Illustrated by many Woodcuts. Fourth Edition, Revised. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

Euclid's Elements of Geometry. With Notes, Examples, and Exercises. Arranged by A. E. LAYNG, M.A. Crown 8vo. Books I. to IV. complete in 1 vol., 2s. 6d.; or separately. Book I. 1s.; Book II., 6d.; Book III., 1s.; Book IV., 6d.

Text-Book of Organic Chemistry. By Prof. A. BERNTHSEN, Ph.D. Translated by GEORGE McHOWNAN, Ph.D.; Demonstrator in Chemistry, University College of North Wales, Bangor. Cloth, 9s. [Just published.]

Inorganic Chemistry: Theoretical and Practical. With a Course of Chemical Analysis and a Series of Examples in Chemical Arithmetic. By Prof. A. HUMBOLDT SEXTON. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

An Elementary Text-Book of Geology. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S. Copiously Illustrated. Cloth, 2s. [Just published.]

An Elementary Text-Book of Physiology. By J. M'GREGOR-ROBERTSON, M.A., M.B. Cloth, 4s.

Outlines of the World's History. By EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A., late Scholar of Clare College, Cambridge. Numerous Illustrations and Eight Coloured Maps. Cloth, 6s. 6d.

Also separately:—

- Part I. Ancient Oriental History. 1s.
- II. Greece and Rome. 2s.
- III. Medieval History. 1s.
- IV. Modern History. 2s. 6d.

History of the British Empire. By EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A., late Scholar of Clare College, Cambridge. Brought down to the Year 1898. With Illustrations, Genealogical Tables, Maps, and Plans. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

A Synopsis of English History; or, Historical Note Book. For the Use of Students. Compiled by HERBERT WILLS. Cloth, 2s.

Blackie's Geographical Manuals for Schools. By W. G. BAKER, M.A.

No. 1. Realistic Elementary Geography. Taught by Picture and Plan. Embracing Direction, the Elements of Maps, Definitions, &c. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

No. 2. The British Empire. Part I. The Home Countries—England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland. With Seven Coloured Maps. Cloth, 2s. [Just published.]

Commercial Geography: a Complete Manual of the Countries of the World—their Chief Centres of Trade and Means of Communication, Natural Productions, Mineral Resources, Exports, Manufactures, &c. By Dr. CARL ZIEHDEN. Translated by FINDLAY MUIRHEAD, M.A. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

How to Teach Drawing in Elementary Schools. By T. R. ABLATT, Hon. Director and Secretary of the Drawing Society of Great Britain and Ireland. Cloth, 1s. 6d. [Just published.]

Baynham's Elocution. Select Readings and Recitations, with Rules and Exercises on Pronunciation, Gesture, Tone, and Emphasis. By GEORGE W. BAYNHAM, Teacher of Elocution in the Glasgow University, &c. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Dr. Burns' Praxis Primaria: Progressive Exercises in Writing Latin, with Notes on Syntax, Idiomatic Differences and Latin Style. Eighth Edition. Cloth, 7s.—KEY, 2s. 6d.

*. BLACKIE & SON'S Catalogues of Educational Books post free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON,
49 AND 50, OLD BAILEY.

H. RIDER HAGGARD'S NEW STORY.

Now ready at all Booksellers' and Libraries, 1 vol., 6s.

ALLAN'S WIFE.

By the Author of "Dawn," "Mr. Meeson's Will," &c.

With Thirty-four Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen and Charles Kerr.

Also Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 numbered copies, large paper, half-Rox., gilt top, price 21s. net. "Altogether a fascinating book."—The World.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

No. 891.—JANUARY, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

- IN THE DAYS OF THE DANDIES.
- A GLIMPSE OF LAKE NYASSA. BY CAPTAIN F. D. LUGARD.
- HIS UNCLE AND HER GRANDMOTHER. CHAPS. I.—VI.
- THE MOUND BY YELLOW CREEK.
- THE GHOST BABY.
- OPENING UP INDO-CHINA.
- LADY BABY. CHAPS. XII., XLII.
- CARDINAL LAVIGERIE AND THE SLAVE-TRADE.
- BY COURTS TROTTER.
- ROBERT BROWNING. A SONNET.
- BY SIR THEODORE MARTIN, K.C.B.
- A WINTER'S DRIVE FROM SEDAN TO VERSAILLES AND ROUND PARIS DURING THE SIEGE.
- BY W. H. (BULLOCK) HALL.
- THE BURN. BY PETER BAYNE, LL.D.
- THE OLD SALOON.
- THE POLITICAL POSITION.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 339, will be published on SATURDAY, JANUARY 18TH.

CONTENTS.

- I. SIR JOHN HAWKWOOD AND ITALIAN CONDOTTIERI.
- II. SIR WILLIAM ROWAN HAMILTON.
- III. THE BLIND and the DEAF.
- IV. ALEXANDER I. of RUSSIA and the POLES.
- V. THE CHURCH in WALES.
- VI. HADDON HALL.
- VII. EXTRADITION.
- VIII. EARLY CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHY.
- IX. COUNTY COUNCILS.
- X. THE COMING SESSION.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL REVIEW.

Vol. IV. No. 6. JANUARY. 2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

- EARTH-HOUSES and their INHABITANTS. By DAVID MACRITCHIE. Illustrated.
- THE CONDITIONS for the SURVIVAL of ARCHAIC CUSTOM. By G. L. GOMME.
- THE ANTIQUITY of the CINQUE PORTS' CHARTERS. By Professor MONTAGU BURROWS.
- RETROSPECT and PROSPECT.
- REVIEWS.
- CORRESPONDENCE.
- INDEX to VOLUME IV.
- SUPPLEMENT: CONTENTS of ARCHÆOLOGICAL REVIEWS. TITLE and CONTENTS to VOLUME IV.

DAVID NUTT, 270, Strand, W.C.

THE LATE BISHOP OF DURHAM.

An Article on the INTERNAL EVIDENCE for the AUTHENTICITY and GENUINENESS of ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL, by the Right Rev. J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D., appears in the JANUARY Number of

THE EXPOSITOR,

which also contains—

- Rev. Prof. J. Agar Beet.—NEW TESTAMENT TEACHING on FUTURE PUNISHMENT.
- Rev. Prof. T. K. Cheyne, D.D.—TWENTY-SIXTH and TWENTY-EIGHTH PSALMS.
- Rev. J. Oswald Dykes, D.D.—OUR LORD'S FIRST APPEARANCE at the FEAST of TABERNALES.
- Rev. Charles F. D'Arcy.—MICAH'S VISION.
- Rev. Samuel Cox, D.D.—ST. JAMES and his EPISTLE.

*. Among other Articles expected to appear during the year may be mentioned Contributions by Rev. Prof. Godet, D.D., Rev. Principal Fairbairn, D.D., the late Prof. Eimale, D.D., Rev. G. Adam Smith, M.A., and the Rev. Canon Westcott, D.D.

THE JANUARY NUMBER commences the FOURTH SERIES.

One Shilling Monthly.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free.

LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treason and Loyalty.—The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET HOLBORN.

NEW WORK by the BISHOP of ST. ANDREWS. Now ready, crown 8vo, gilt edges, 8s.

THE COLLECTS OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Together with certain PSALMS and HYMNS APPROPRIATE TO THE PRINCIPAL FESTIVALS, rendered into LATIN VERSE.

By CHARLES WORDSWORTH, Bishop of St. Andrews. JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

Ready immediately at all the Libraries.

Cloth, handsomely bound, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

By MADAME OARETTE,

Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

THE EVE of an EMPIRE'S FALL.

Being Intimate Recollections of the Court of the Tuilleries.

Now ready, crown 8vo, One Shilling.

By EDITH HERAUD,

Authoress of "A Handbook of Elocution and Oratory."

ELOCUTION MADE EASY.

The Elocutionary Pause, its Nature, Use, and Value. A Complete and Practical System of Elocution.

LONDON: DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet-street, E.C.

Price One Penny; post-free, Twopence.

"FIFTY YEARS' PROGRESS" of the BRITISH EMPIRE, comprising the Term of the Reign of HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA.

Containing:—The "Howard Vincent" Map of the British Empire. Four Full-page Coloured Diagram, in Reference to Population, Trade, Shipping, Revenue, &c.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 27, Chancery Lane, London.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS.—CASES OF THE WEEK.—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS.—SOLICITORS' CASES.—REVIEWS.—NEW ORDERS.—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.—COURTS.—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION.—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER. £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
Every Evening, at 8,
LONDON DAY BY DAY.
Mr. Geo. Alexander; Messrs. Marins, Beveridge, Shine, Rignold, Abingdon, Balfour, Wilfred, Russell, East, &c.; Mesdames A. Murray, M. Rorke, K. James, C. Elliot, and Clara Jocka.
Preceded, at 7.15, by POLLY'S VENTURE.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9,
THE FIELD OF THE CLOTH OF GOLD.
Messrs. Chevalier, Tapley, Sinclair, Capel, Grattan, Ward, Shone, and Cross; Mesdames Lindon, Byron, Evelyn, Polak, Grubb, Davies, Ellisson, &c.
At 8.15, LA ROSE D'AUVERGNE.
At 7.30, IN THE EXPRESS.
At 5.30, BELLES OF THE VILLAGE.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, PINK DOMINOES.
Messrs. Herbert Standing, Alfred Malby, A. Bonicault, E. Dagnall, Williams, Bearne, and C. H. Hawley; Mesdames Rose Baker, Goldney, Robertson, Lydia Cowell, and Alma Stanley.
Preceded, at 8, by ONE SUMMER NIGHT.
Messrs. Day, Legg, Bonicault, &c.; Miss Rickards, &c.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, AUNT JACK.
Preceded, at 8.15, by TO THE RESCUE.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
THIS DAY, at 1.30 and 7.15,
JACK AND THE BEANSTALK.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Every evening, at 8,
RUY BLAS AND THE BLASE ROUE.
Messrs. Fred Leslie, Fred Storey, and Dalton Souers; Mesdames Ellen Farron, Marion Hood, Sylvia Grey, Linda Verner, Blanche Massey, and Lotty Lind.

GLOBE THEATRE

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. F. R. BENSON.
MR. F. R. BENSON'S SHAKESPEARIAN COMPANY every Evening, at 8, Thursdays and Fridays excepted, in Shakespeare's Fairy Comedy, with Mendelssohn's incidental Music.
A. MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.
Doors open 7.30; Overture, 7.45. Box office open 10.0 to 5.0. Acting Manager, Mr. H. JAILLAND. No fees. MATINEES OF A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, every Saturday and Wednesday, until further notice. Doors open at 2, commencing 2.30. Children half-price to Stalls and Dress circle to Matinee.

GLOBE THEATRE.—THURSDAY and FRIDAY, JAN. 16 and 17, and every following THURSDAY and FRIDAY, until further notice,
SHAKESPEARE'S COMEDY,
"THE TAMING OF THE SHREW."

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BRERBORN-TREK.
Every evening, at 8.30, A MAN'S SHADOW.
Messrs. Tree, Farquhar, Kumble, C. Callette, E. M. Robson, Allan, Harcourt, Tapping, Gurney, and Harwood; Mesdames Tree, Minnie Terry, Morris, and Julia Neilson.
Preceded, at 7.45, by GOOD FOR NOTHING,
Miss Morris.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, HENRY J. LESLIE.
This evening, at 8.30, THE RED LIGHT.
At 7.40, WARRANTED BURGLAR-PROOF.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGWICK.
This Evening, at 8.15, PAUL JONES.
Preceded, at 7.30, JOHN SMITH.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE

Every Evening, at 7.45, MASTER AND MAN.
Messrs. Henry Neville, J. H. Barnes, Robert Pateman, Bassett Roe, C. Dalton, E. W. Gardiner, Sidney Howard, F. Shepherd, Geo. Dixhall, E. Mayeur, E. W. Lawson, Morton Baker, &c.; Mesdames Bella Pateman, Fanny Brough, — Huntly, &c.

SHAFESBURY THEATRE.

Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LART, Lessees and Managers.
Every Evening, at 8, THE MIDDLEMAN.
Messrs. Willard, Mackintosh, E. W. Garden, H. Cane, H. V. Esmond, Ivan Watson, C. Crofton, W. E. Blatchley, R. Keith; Mesdames M. Millett, A. Hughes, E. H. Brooke, A. Verity, St. Ange, R. Moore, &c.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical comedy in London,
OUR FLAT.
Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Every Evening at 7.30, A BROKEN SIXPENCE.
At 8.30, PAUL PRY.
Messrs. J. L. Toole, J. Billington, G. Shelton, C. M. Lowe, Wilson, Brenton, Arlton, Gunn, and Westland; Mesdames Eliza Johnstone, Mary Brough, J. Donald, F. Hens, E. Linton, and Irene Vanbrugh, &c.
Conclude with DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.
Every Evening, at 8, THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL.
Messrs. Fred Thorne, Thalberg, Cyril Maude, Frank Gillmore, J. S. Bythe, F. Grove, Oswald York, and Henry W. Westman, J. Hooton, Litch, and John Maclean; Mesdames Mary Collette, Coralie Owen, L. Byer, Baubury, and Winifred Emery.

NIAGARA IN LONDON.

Colossal PICTURE of the GREAT FALLS. Original effects by Philip Mitchell. Pleasant lounge, music, American sweetest store. Refreshments by Beguinet. Electric Light. Building cooled throughout. Admission 1s. 10 to 10.—York-street, Westminster (St James's-park Station). Second year. Nearly one million visitors.

Literary Men, Artists, and all Brain Workers

WILL FIND

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

a most refreshing beverage,

especially during work when solid food cannot be taken.—It satisfies without loading the stomach, stimulates the system, and leaves none of the neurotic effects of tea and coffee.

The perfect purity and delicacy of this Cocoa is testified to by

Dr. HASSALL, the LANCET, the BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL, HEALTH &c. &c.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5 lb.), post free, Right Stamp.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

THROAT
IRRITATION
AND COUGH.

Soreness and Dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough, and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. In boxes, 7d.; tins, 1s. 1d.; labelled "JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists."

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.
Liberal Loss Settlements.
Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THERE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS HAVENROFT, Manager.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT

WORDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1866.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Free Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. WORDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

Publishers, Printers, and Binders,

21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

GOLD PEN,
WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete - - - 1s.

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete - - - - - 5s. 6d.

Engine-turned Pattern, complete - - - - - 6s. 6d.

Fluted Pattern, Telescopic - - - - - 10s. 6d.

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE COLLECTED MATHEMATICAL PAPERS of ARTHUR CAYLEY, M.A., F.R.S., Sadlerian Professor of Pure Mathematics in the University of Cambridge. Demy 4to. Now ready, Vol. II., 25s. (To be completed in 10 vols.)

A TREATISE on ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS. By S. L. LONEY, M.A., Fellow of Sidney Sussex College. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on QUATERNIONS. By P. G. TAIT, M.A., Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Edinburgh. Demy 8vo. Third Edition, much Enlarged. 18s.

THE GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE during the EARLY and MIDDLE AGES. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D. New Edition. Demy 8vo, 16s.

THE COLLECTED PAPERS of HENRY BRADSHAW, including his Memoranda and Communications read before the Cambridge Antiquarian Society. With Thirteen Facsimiles. Edited by F. J. H. JENKINSON, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College. Demy 8vo, 18s.

THE LITERARY REMAINS of ALBRECHT DÜRER. By W. M. CONWAY. With Transcripts from the British Museum MSS., and Notes by LINA ECKENSTEIN. Royal 8vo, with Illustrations, 21s.

THE HISTORY of ALEXANDER the GREAT; being the Syriac Version of the Pseudo-Callisthenes. Edited from Five Manuscripts, with an English Translation and Notes, by E. A. W. BUDGE, M.A., Assistant in the Department of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities, British Museum. Demy 8vo, 25s.

THE CONSTITUTION of CANADA. By J. E. C. MUNRO, LL.M., Professor of Law and Political Economy at Victoria University, Manchester. Demy 8vo, 10s.

THE GOSPEL HISTORY of OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST in the LANGUAGE of the REVISED VERSION, arranged in a Connected Narrative, especially for the Use of Teachers and Preachers. By the Rev. O. C. JAMES, M.A., Rector of Wortham, Suffolk, and formerly Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. 8s. 6d. [In the press.]

New Volumes of the Pitt Press Series.

PLUTARCH.—LIFE of TIMOLEON. With Introduction, Notes, and Lexicon by Rev. HUDEBART A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. 6s.

PLATO.—EUTHYPHRO. With Introduction and Notes by J. ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Classical Lecturer of Emmanuel College. [In the press.]

EURIPIDES.—IPHIGENEIA in AULIS. [By C. E. S. HEADLAM, B.A., Fellow of Trinity Hall. 2s. 6d.]

VERGIL.—THE COMPLETE WORKS. Edited, with Notes, by A. SIDGWICK, M.A. 2 vols. Vol. I., containing the Text. Vol. II., The Notes. [In the press.]

LIVY.—BOOK IV. With Introduction and Notes by H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 2s. [Nearly ready.]

MOLIERE.—LES PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES. With Introduction and Notes. By E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. [In the press.]

BRITISH INDIA, A SHORT HISTORY of. (Uniform with Dr. Mill's "Elementary Commercial Geography.") By Rev. E. S. CARLOS, M.A., late Head Master of Exeter Grammar School. With a Map. 1s.

The Smaller Cambridge Bible for Schools.

Price ONE SHILLING each Volume.

THE FIRST BOOK of SAMUEL. By the Rev. Professor KIRKPATRICK, D.D.

THE SECOND BOOK of SAMUEL. By the Rev. Professor KIRKPATRICK, D.D.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MATTHEW. By the Rev. A. OARR, M.A.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MARK. By the Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. LUKE. By Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D.

BOOKS SUITABLE FOR CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1890.

Pitt Press Series, &c.

XAVIER DE MAISTRE.—LA JEUNE SIBÉRIENNE.

LE LÉPREUX de la CITE D'AOSTE, with Biographical Notice, Critical Appreciations, and Notes. By the late G. MASSON, B.A. 1s. 6d.

RACINE.—LES PLAIDEURS, with Introduction and Notes by E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. 2s.

RIEHL.—CULTURGESCHICHTLICHE NOVELLEN, with Grammatical, Philological, and Historical Notes, and a Complete Index, by H. J. WOLSTENHOLME, B.A. (Lond.). 3s. 6d.

SCHILLER.—WILHELM TELL, with Maps, Introduction, and Notes by KARL HERMANN BREUL, M.A., University Lecturer in German. 2s. 6d.

CAESAR.—DE BELLO GALlico, Book VI., with Maps and English Notes by A. G. PESKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College. 1s. 6d.

VERGIL.—AENEID, Book V., with Notes by A. Sidgwick, M.A., Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. 1s. 6d.

LIVY.—Book V., with Notes and Introduction by L. WHIBLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College. 2s. 6d. [Shortly.]

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS, Book III., with English Notes by ALFRED PRETOR, M.A., Fellow of St. Catharine's College. 2s.

HOMER.—ODYSSEY, Book XXI., with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices by G. M. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow of Sidney Sussex College. 2s.

EURIPIDES.—HIPPOLYTUS, with Notes and Introduction by W. S. HADLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College. 2s.

LUCIAN, SOMNIUM, CHARON, PISCATOR et de LUCTU, with English Notes by W. E. HEITLAND, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. New Edition, with Appendix. 3s. 6d.

HERODOTUS.—Book V., with Notes, Introduction, and Map, by E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A., late Fellow of Emmanuel College. 3s.

Now ready, royal 4to, 3s.

AN ATLAS OF COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY.

By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S.

With an Introduction by Dr. H. R. MILL.

Intended as a companion volume to Dr. Mill's "Elementary Commercial Geography."

COMPLETE CATALOGUES ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.
GLASGOW: 263, ARGYLE STREET.

Pitt Press Mathematical Series.

EUCLID'S ELEMENTS of GEOMETRY, Books I. and II. Edited by H. M. TAYLOR, M.A., Fellow and formerly Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY CHEMISTRY. By M. M. Pattison Muir, M.A., Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, and CHARLES SLATER, M.A., M.B. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

PRACTICAL CHEMISTRY. A Course of Laboratory Work. By M. M. PATTISON MUIR, M.A., and D. J. CARNEGIE, B.A. Crown 8vo, 3s.

NOTES on QUALITATIVE ANALYSIS. Concise and Explanatory. By H. J. H. FENTON, M.A. Crown 4to, 6s.

The Cambridge Bible for Schools.

THE BOOK of JOSHUA. By the Rev. G. F. Maclear, D.D. With Two Maps. 2s. 6d.

THE BOOK of JUDGES. By the Rev. J. J. Lias, M.A. With Map. 3s. 6d.

THE FIRST BOOK of SAMUEL. By the Rev. Professor KIRKPATRICK, D.D. With Map. 8s. 6d.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MATTHEW. By the Rev. A. OARR, M.A. With Two Maps. 2s. 6d.

THE ACTS of the APOSTLES. By the Rev. Professor LUMBY, D.D. With Four Maps. 4s. 6d.

THE EPISTLE to the GALATIANS. By the Rev. E. H. PEROWNE, D.D. [In the press.]

THE EPISTLES of ST. PETER and ST. JUDE. By the Very Rev. E. H. PLUMPTRE, D.D. 2s. 6d.

The Smaller Cambridge Bible for Schools.

THE FIRST BOOK of SAMUEL. By the Rev. Professor KIRKPATRICK, D.D. With Map. 1s.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MATTHEW. By the Rev. A. OARR, M.A. With Map. 1s.

The Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MATTHEW. By the Rev. A. OARR, M.A. With Four Maps. 4s. 6d.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 924.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JANUARY 18, 1890.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

WARD & DOWNEY'S LIST OF NEW AND FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

SOCIAL LIFE under the REGENCY. By John Ashton, Author of "The Dawn of the Nineteenth Century," &c. 2 vols., demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations.
[Shortly.]

'TWIXT OLD TIMES and NEW : the Reminiscences of the Baron de MALORTIE. Demy 8vo. [Just ready.]

AN ARTIST'S TOUR in NORTH and CENTRAL AMERICA, and in the SANDWICH ISLANDS. By B. KROUPA. Royal 8vo, with 36 Whole-page Illustrations by the Author, 21s. [Just ready.]

The LOVES and MARRIAGES of SOME EMINENT PERSONS.
By T. F. THISELTON-DYER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 25s. [Just ready.]

CHARMS, OMENS, and SUPERSTITIONS of IRELAND. By LADY WILDE, Author of "Ancient Legends of Ireland." Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

MEMORIES of the MONTH. By Hume Nisbet. With Photo-gravure Frontispiece, 11 Whole-page Engravings, and numerous smaller Illustrations by the Author.
Crown 4to, 21s. Edition limited to 250 Copies.

AN EDITION DE LUXE OF
AS IN A LOOKING GLASS. By F. C. Philips. With 13 Whole-Page Illustrations and Vignette. Title drawn by G. du Maurier, and engraved by J. Swain. Extra crown 4to, 31s. 6d.

NOOKS and CORNERS. By Mrs. Panton. Crown 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 6s.

TWO NEW ILLUSTRATED BOOKS BY THE AUTHOR OF "RUDDER GRANGE."
THE FLOATING PRINCE. By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Fcap. 4to, 6s.
TING - A - LING TALES. By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BRAVE MEN in ACTION : Thrilling Stories of the British Flag.
By the late STEPHEN J. MACKENNA and JOHN AUGUSTUS O'SHEA. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

RECOLLECTIONS of a CLERICAL and LITERARY LIFE.
By the AUTHOR of "THREE-CORNERED ESSAYS" 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

COSMOPOLITAN RECOLLECTIONS. By Madame Van de
VELDE, Author of "Random Recollections of Courts and Society." 2 vols., post 8vo, 21s.

MARRIAGE and HEREDITY : some Aspects of Social Evolution.
By J. F. NISBET. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AT THE RED GLOVE."
COSETTE. By Katharine S. Macquoid.
2 vols., 2's. [Just ready.]

MIDST SURREY HILLS. By A. C.
BICKLEY. 8 vols. [This day.]

BY the AUTHOR of "COMIN' THRO' the RYE."
BLIND JUSTICE. By Helen Mathers.
1r.; cloth, 1s. 6d. [Twenty-first thousand now ready.]

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VALENTINO."
SFORZA. By W. W. Astor. 6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GALLOPING DAYS AT THE DEANERY."
AN EARLY FROST. By C. T. James.
Picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 9s. 6d. [Just ready.]

BROUGHTON. By A. S. Arnold.
3 vols., 31s. 6d. [Just ready.]

TWO PARDONS By Henry Scott.
VINCE. 3 vols., 3's 6d.
"The plot of the tale is ingeniously woven. It is written with abounding vigour and cleverness."—Examiner

FOR ONE and the WORLD. By M.
BETHAM-EDWARDS. 2 vols., 21s.
"The story is exciting, and, we need hardly add, well written."—St. James's Gazette.

MIKE FLETCHER. By George
MOORE. 2s.
"The pages are full of original ideas.....The style throughout is crisp and incisive."—Athenæum.

BROWNIE'S PLOT. By Thomas
COBB. 2 vols., 12s.
"The tone throughout is healthy, and the characters are early, all honest, and right minded."—Athenæum.

IN BLACK and WHITE. By Percy
HULBURD. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.
"A clever and ambitious book."—Life.

MISS TODD'S DREAM. By Mrs.
HUDDLESTON. 1r.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
"The tale is well told, and the interest is sustained to the end."—Pall Mall Gazette.

OF HIGH DESCENT. By George
MANVILLE FENN. 3 vols., 31s. 6d.
"Has all his best qualities of vigour and naturalness."—Scotsman.
"His prolific pen has lost none of its cunning.....
Fertile in action, incident, and plot."—Athenæum.

The SPANISH GALLEON. A West-
Country Romance. By F. O. BADRICK 3s. 6d.

WARD & DOWNEY, 12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
SIR GEORGE BOWEN'S COLONIAL CAREER, by W. WICKHAM	37
THE TWO LAST PLAYS OF IBSEN, by PROF. HERFORD	38
THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY'S CHARGES, by the REV. RONALD BAYNE	39
JACOBS'S EDITION OF AINSOP, by J. S. COTTON	39
ASBOTH'S BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA, by W. R. MOFFILL	40
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP	41
SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE	43
NOTES AND NEWS	44
TWO TRANSLATIONS, by OLIVER ELTON	45
OBITUARY: REV. DR. LITLEDALE, by H. T. MACKENZIE BELL; PERCY GREGG, by W. E. A. A.	45
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	45
GLASSES FROM TURIN AND THE VATICAN, by WHITLEY STOKES	46
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	47
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Line-Numbering in Browning's "Ring and the Book," by Dr. Furnivall; Middle-English Notes, by H. Bradley; "Ragman," "Ragman-Roll," by Sir James Ramsay	47
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	48
SIMCOX'S LANGUAGE OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, by the REV. R. B. DRUMMOND	48
MATHEMATICAL BOOKS	48
SCIENCE NOTES	49
PHILOLOGY NOTES	49
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	50
DR. SIMPSON'S GLEANINGS FROM OLD ST. PAUL'S, by the REV. C. J. ROBINSON	50
SOME NEW PRINTS	51
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	51
OBITUARY: WESTLAND MARSTON, by F. W.	52
STAGE NOTES	52
THE NATIONAL SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL MUSICIANS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	53
MUSIC NOTES	53

HALF-GUINEA NOVELS, 6d. per volume; 49,000 to clear; sample half-dozen, 3s. Thought reading puzzle, 3d., post-free. Birthday cards, 5d. per dozen. 1s. toy books, 4d.; new, 1s., 2s., and 3s. 6d. Novels, third publishers' price.—BLINGER, Bookseller, 14, Blenheim Road, W.

A SITUATION wanted as LIBRARIAN (a Nobleman (or as Assistant to a Scientific Society or Public Library) by a Young Gentleman with a good classical education and twelve years' experience (four of which in Germany and five in Paris). Good catalogue, well acquainted with Scientific Literature. Could get all books English and Foreign at trade prices.—Address: "C. A. 77," ACADEMY, 27, Chancery Lane, E.C.

COINS.—English, Roman, and Greek Gold, Silver, and Copper Coins FOR SALE; also 17th and 18th Century Tokens. Moderate prices.—Apply to W. H. TAYLOR (Member Numis. Soc., London), Ivy View, Edginton.

TO AUTHORS.—MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS, 18, Boulevard-travel, Fleet-street, London, E.C. are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. Digby & Long have also every convenience and ample facilities for the publication of MAGAZINES. Editorial offices if required.

TO BE LET.—A COMPLETE WING of a BUILDING with a distinct annex in the rear, suitable for the purpose of a Collegiate, Academic, or Students' Residence, containing 35 Rooms exclusive of Kitchens and Offices. The Building is pleasantly situated in a Square, and is in close proximity to some of the most important Educational Institutions of the Metropolis. Particulars and orders to view may be obtained from Mr. THOMAS CHATFIELD CLARK, Architect and Surveyor, 63, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C. And offers for the same are to be sent to him not later than WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 5TH, 1890.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS, Limited, HOLLESLEY BAY, SUFFOLK. For the TRAINING of YOUTHS for COLONIAL LIFE, &c. Under the auspices of Agents-General for the Colonies, His Majesty's Public Schools, leading Members of the Royal Colonial Institute, &c. The COLLEGE ESTATE dominates HOLLESLEY BAY. Invigorating climate, dry soil, pure water. MIXED FARMS, 1,500 acres in extent. Horse, Cattle, and Sheep Breeding. LARGE DAIRY, with modern appliances. 5ml he, Carpenters', Wheelwrights', and Saddlery Workshops. Geology, Botany, Forestry, and Gardening. Building Construction, Surveying, and Levelling. Veterinary Surgery, Ambulance Work, Fencing, Swimming, &c. Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

In consequence of the election of Professor Ward to the Principalship, a rearrangement of the History and English Literature Departments has become necessary, and the Council INVITE APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP in HISTORY. The Professor will have charge of the Classes in History, with such assistance as may be granted by the Council. The Professor may also, if he is desirous of doing so, be called upon to conduct the Classes in English Literature, with such assistance as may be granted by the Council, and Candidates are requested in their applications to state if they are prepared to undertake this.

The stipend is £350 per annum, together with two-thirds of the fees paid by students attending the Classes of the Department.

A fuller statement of duties, &c., may be obtained on application.

Applications, with Testimonials, should be sent under cover to the Registrar, not later than 27TH JANUARY, 1890.

HENRY WM. HOLDER, M.A., Registrar.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION of SKETCHES and STUDIES is now Open, 6, Pall Mall East from 10 till 5. Admission 1s.; Catalogue 6d.

ELECTION of ASSOCIATES.—The day appointed for receiving works by Candidates is MONDAY, FEBRUARY 17TH, and the day of Election THURSDAY, 20TH.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, Secretary R.W.S.

Mr. WILLIAM HEINEMANN begs to announce that he will shortly publish the following works:—

THE BONDMAN: A New Saga. By HALL CAINE, author of "The Deemster." In three volumes, crown 8vo. At all Libraries, February 1st, 1890.

HAUNTINGS: Fantastic Stories. By VERNON LEE, Author of "Euphorion," "The Prince of the Hundred Souls," &c., &c. One volume, crown 8vo. 6s.

A VERY STRANGE FAMILY. A Novel. By F. W. ROBINSON, Author of "Women are Strange," "The Hands of Justice," &c., &c. One volume, crown 8vo. 6s.

IDLE MUSINGS: Studies in Social Mosaic. By CONDER GRAY, Author of "Wise Words and Loving Deeds," &c., &c. One volume, crown 8vo. 6s.

COME FORTH! A Tale of Jewish Life in the time of Christ. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, Author of "The Gates Ajar," "An Old Maid's Paradise," &c., &c. One volume, imperial 16mo.

IVY AND PASSION FLOWER: THE MANUAL OF ASSAYING: Poems. By GERARD BEN-DALL, Author of "Estelle," &c., &c. One volume, crown 8vo. Gold, Silver, Copper, and Lead Ores. One volume, crown 8vo, with numerous illustrations.

PHILOSOPHICAL CLASSICS. A series of handy volumes each complete in itself, and treating in a concise and lucid manner the different philosophical systems of the world. Written by eminent authorities, and suitable alike for students and general readers. Fuller announcements of this series will be made shortly and a prospectus issued.

21, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,
FOR THE CIRCULATION AND SALE OF ALL THE
BEST AND NEWEST BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per Annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per Annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per Annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

TOWN AND VILLAGE CLUBS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the Leading Books of Past Seasons are on Sale, Second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON 241, Brompton-road, S.W., and 2, King-street, Cheapside, E.C.

"A triumph of magnificent illustration and masterly editing."—Times.

"The art magazine which best provides for the needs of the really cultivated student of art."—Standard.

"That always welcome periodical."—Daily News.

"Begins the year well. Changes which are really improvements have been introduced in the number of January."—Leeds Mercury.

THE PORTFOLIO

An Artistic Periodical.

Edited by P. G. HAMERTON.

Published Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE PORTFOLIO, having now nearly completed the twentieth year of its existence, the Editor and Publishers have decided to take the beginning of the year 1890 as a convenient opportunity for the introduction of several important improvements.

The text will be printed in a larger and handsomer type. The double columns will be abolished, except in the case of the ART CHRONICLE, which will be so paged that when the volume is bound it can be placed consecutively at the end.

The new page will afford opportunities for the introduction of ornamental initial letters (which the narrow column did not admit), headpieces, and tail-pieces, copied from good examples, or expressly designed. As it will contain somewhat less matter than before, the number of pages will be proportionately increased.

The INDUSTRIAL ARTS of the present day will receive fuller notice than hitherto.

The wrapper will bear a new device, and the cloth binding will be improved in colour and design. These alterations will contribute to the noble appearance of the yearly volume.

JANUARY contains—

PREFACE by the EDITOR.

A MARTYR Etched by H. Touse after HERMON.

THE BRITISH SEAS.—I. THE DOWNS. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. With a Plate—"Dover from the Sea"—and other illustrations.

THE DESIGNS of WALTER CRANE. By F. G. STEPHENS. With illustrations.

BENSON'S LAMPS. By Prof. A. H. CHURCH. With illustrations.

ART CHRONICLE.

FEBRUARY contains—

PORTRAIT of a YOUNG LADY. Etched by Mdlle. Poynor after O. CHAPLIN.

PEN DRAWING and PEN DRAUGHTSMEN. By the EDITOR DAVID RYCKHART. Etched by MACBETH RABURN after VANDYCK.

THE HIGHLANDS of WEST SOMERSET. By J. LI. W. PAGE. With illustrations.

THE BRITISH SEAS.—II. THE DOWNS. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. With a Plate after TURNER, and other illustrations.

POWELL'S SODA-LIME GLASS. By Prof. A. H. CHURCH. ART CHRONICLE.

The Portfolio Volume for 1889

Is now ready, containing 36 Plates, and about 150 minor Illustrations. Price 35s., cloth, gilt edges, or 42s., half-morocco.

London: SEELEY & CO., LIMITED, Essex Street, Strand.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

NOVELS AT ALL CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

MRS. BOB. 2 vols.

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER, Author of "Booties' Baby," "Booties' Chil Iren" (1s.), "Buttons" (1s.), "Beautiful Jim" (1s. and 7s. 6d.), &c.

A LIFE'S REMORSE. 3 vols.

By the Author of "Molly Bawn," "The Hon. Mrs. Vereker" (7s. 6d.), "A Troublesome Girl" (1s.), &c.

A CRUEL WRONG. 3 vols.

By Mrs. HOUSTON, Author of "Recommended to Mercy," "Barbara's Warning" (7s. 6d.), "Sink or Swim" (1s.), "Saved in Time" (1s.), &c.

SYBIL ROSS'S MARRIAGE.

The Romance of an Unexperienced Girl. 1 vol., 6s.

By F. C. PHILLIPS, Author of "As in a Looking Glass," "The Dear and his Daughter," &c., and O. J. WILLS, Author of "The Pit Town Coronet," &c. (And at all Booksellers)

An UNRULY SPIRIT. 3 vols.

By Mrs. AYLMEY GOWING, Author of "The Jewel Reputation," &c.

The M.F.H.'S DAUGHTER. 3 vols.

By Mrs. ROBERT JOOELYN, Author of "£100,000 versus Ghost," (2 vols.), "A Distracting Guest" (1 vol.), &c.

ON THE CHILDREN. 3 vols.

By ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. PENDER OUDLIP), Author of "Allerton Towers" (7s. 6d.), "Eyre of Blendon" (1s.), "Denis Donne," &c. (Immediately)

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

BEAUTIFUL JIM.

(Fifth Edition) By JOHN STRANGE WINTER. Picture Board, 7s.

LONG ODDS.

By HAWLEY SMART. 1 vol., cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

VIOLET VYVIAN, M.F.H.

By MAY OROMMELIN, Author of "Brown Eyes," "Queenie," &c., and J. MORAY BROWN, Author of "Shikar Sketches," &c. 1 vol., cloth, 2s. 6d. (Immediately.)

THE

PERIL of RICHARD PARDON.

By B. L. FARJEON, Author of "A Strange Enchantment" (1s.), &c. In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. (Immediately.)

A FRENCH MARRIAGE.

By F. O. PHILLIPS, Author of "As in a Looking Glass," &c. In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

AND

MISS MEPHISTOPHELES.

A New and Original Novel.

By FERGUS HUME, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," &c. In Picture boards, 2s.; cloth (Library Edition), 2s. 6d. (Immediately.)

The JANUARY CATALOGUE containing works by John Strange Winter; Hawley Smart; Fergus Hume; B. L. Farjeon; Mrs. Edward Kennard; Mrs. H. Lovett Cameron; Mrs. Alexander; Mrs. Alexander Fraser; the Author of "Molly Bawn"; Bret Harte; F. C. Phillips; Florence Marryat; Rita; Samuel Laing; Maria Corelli; and other well-known Authors.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, Southampton-street, Strand, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—A New Story by Rhoda Broughton, entitled, "ALAS!" and by Mrs. Annie Edwardes, entitled, "PEARL POWDER," are commenced in the JANUARY NUMBER of The TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE. Now ready, price One Shilling.

NEW WORKS.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of the PRINCESS LIEVEN and EARL GREY. Translated and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GUY LE STRANGE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with portraits, 30s.

THE FIRST of the BOURBONS. By CATHERINE CHARLOTTE LADY JACKSON, Author of "Old Paris," &c. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with portraits, 34s.

SARDINIA and the SARDES. By CHARLES EDWARDES, Author of "Letters from Crete." In demy 8vo, 14s.

IN an ENCHANTED ISLAND: A VISIT to CYPRUS in 1889. By W. H. MALLOUK. Second Edition. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Frontispiece, 12s.

A TOUR in a PHAETON THROUGH the EASTERN COUNTIES. By JAMES JOHN HISEY. In demy 8vo, with Map and Illustrations, 16s.

A MEMOIR of E. A. SOTHERN. By T. EDGAR PEMBERTON. Second Edition. In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles, 18s.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY.

STRANGE GODS. By Constance COTTERELL. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF
"MASTERS OF THE WORLD," &c.

THE LOCKET. A Tale of Old Guernsey. By MARY A. M. HOPPUS (Mrs. MARKS). 2 vols. "A pretty yet tragic story of love and jealousy, told with a certain grace and simplicity of manner." Athenaeum.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENETIA'S LOVERS."
A HURRICANE in PETTICOATS. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "The Chilcotes," &c. 3 vols. "There is no incident or character in this exceptionally artistic piece of work which one could wish to find otherwise than it is presented." Graphic.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A MODERN BRIGAND."
MAYGROVE. By W. Fraser Rae, Author of "Miss Bayle's Romance," &c. 3 vols. "Mr. Fraser Rae's novels are always clever, and 'Maygrove' is no exception to the rule. The delineation of character is dexterous, the analysis skilful, the satire brilliant as of old." Daily News.

ALSO, NOW READY.

A New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, scarlet cloth, 3s. 6d.

BESSY RANE. By Mrs. Henry Wood. Forming the 25th Volume of the New Serial Issue of Mrs. Wood's Novels, now in course of publication. Each volume appears at monthly intervals.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

NOW READY.

HARVARD STUDIES in CLASSICAL PHILOLOGY. Edited by a Committee of the Classical Instructors of Harvard University. It is expected that one volume will be issued each year. Vol. I. now ready. Demy 8vo, 208 pp., boards, subscription price, 4s.; by post, 4s. 6d.

CONTENTS OF VOL. I.
THE FAUCES of the ROMAN HOUSE. By JAMES B. GREENOUGH.
DE IGNIS ELICIENDI MODIS apud ANTIQVOS. By MORRIS H. MORGAN.
ON THE ORIGIN of the CONSTRUCTION of οὐ μὴ with the SUBJUNCTIVE and the FUTURE INDICATIVE. By WILLIAM W. GOODWIN.
ON SOME DISPUTED POINTS in the CONSTRUCTION of ἔδει, χρῆν, etc., with the INFINITIVE. By WILLIAM W. GOODWIN.
NOTES on QUINTILIAN. By GEORGE M. LAKE.
SOME LATIN ETYMOLOGIES. By JAMES B. GREENOUGH.
ON "EGREGIUM PUBLICUM" (Tac. Ann. III. 70. 4). By CLEMENT LAWRENCE SMITH.
ON THE USE of the PERFECT INFINITIVE in LATIN with the FORCE of the PRESENT. By ALBERT A. HOWARD.
PLUTARCH repl' edōvmas. By HAROLD N. FOWLER.
VITRUVIANA. By GEORGE M. RICHARDSON.
THE SOCIAL and DOMESTIC POSITION of WOMEN in ARISTOPHANES. By HERMAN W. HALEY.
NOTES.—INDEX.

WILLIAMS and LASCELLES' INTRODUCTION to CHEMICAL SCIENCE Edited by B. P. LASCELLES, M.A., F.C.S., Assistant-Master and Librarian at Harrow School. Crown 8vo, 283 pp., cloth, 8s. 6d., with 50 illustrations.

The distinctive features of this book are that (1) it recognises the importance of not overloading the pupil's mind with minute details, while thoroughly grounding him in the broad outlines of science; (2) it aims at making the teaching of Chemistry a true educational instrument, not merely the acquisition of a certain number of out-and-dried facts; (3) it compels the pupil to test and prove his knowledge, by constantly questioning him and forcing him to observe and record the results of his work.

"There could hardly be a more concise and well-digested summary of elementary chemical principles and applications than that contained in this work." Nature.

MODERN FRENCH READINGS, with HELPS for COMPOSITION. Edited by A. JACOBSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham. The Volume consists of sustained Extracts from Dumas, Victor Hugo, Gautier, Guizot, &c. Crown 8vo, 263 pp., cloth, 8s.

A. G. Allcock, Esq., Head Master of the Modern School, Wellington College. "It is a handy little book of a kind very much needed in schools where French is taught systematically. The selections are certainly admirable, and the notes very clear and suggestive. I can strongly recommend it."

H. Bendall, Esq., Head Master, Blackheath Proprietary School. "The book contains an excellent selection of extracts from modern French writers, judiciously arranged with regard to variety and difficulty. The notes are practical and instructive, and especially useful in directing the pupil's attention to the difference of idiom between French and English. But the most valuable feature of the book seems to me the combination of translation and composition, and the practical hints given for the latter."

Dr. Poole, Head Master, Bedford Modern School. "I think it will prove a useful addition to school-books. The graduation in difficulty, the length of the pieces, and their variety, seem to me to differentiate it from previous Readers, and the Helps to Composition will, I think, be very valuable."

"The whole Empire owes a debt of gratitude to Sir Rawson Rawson." The Times.

SIR RAWSON RAWSON'S STATISTICAL WORKS.

1. Tariffs and Trade of the British Empire, with numerous Tables, showing invaluable Statistics never before brought together. By Sir RAWSON RAWSON, K.O.M.G., C.B., Chairman of the Commercial Committee of the Imperial Federation League. Demy 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

2. The Trade of the British Empire, From 1851 to 1888, showing the interdependence of the various Colonies upon each other and upon the United Kingdom in Commercial relations. By Sir RAWSON RAWSON, K.O.M.G., C.B. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"A work which will rank among the statistical achievements of the reign. It may be regarded as a great panorama of the grandeur and wealth of the Empire." Daily News.

NOTICE TO AUTHORS.

Mr. ARNOLD is now prepared to undertake the Publication of MSS. on all subjects; and from his connection with Messrs. Ginn & Co., and other American publishers, is in the best position for assisting Authors to secure a market for their books in the United States.

NOTICE.—IMPORTED BOOKS.

Mr. ARNOLD begs to announce that he has arranged for rapid and regular shipment of American and Foreign Books. He will be glad to supply any information as to prices, &c., or to receive subscriptions for American periodicals and Serial publications.

EDWARD ARNOLD,
18, WARWICK SQUARE, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.
In connection with
GINN & Co., Boston and New York.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "A Princess of Thule,"
"A Daughter of Heth," "In Silk Attire," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

KIT AND KITTY.

A Story of West Middlesex.

By R. D. BLACKMORE,

Author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

"The plot, good as it is, is not the point in this charming romance. The finer and the truer point is in the admirable literature of the book, in the sense of open air and freshness, in the descriptions—the fruit ripening under your eye, the wind blowing the open page. The dialogue is exquisitely chiselled." Daily News.

IN SATAN'S BONDS: a STORY of LOVE and CRIME. By FREDERICK EASTWOOD, Author of "Calumny," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

THE LIFE of HARRIET BEECHER STOWE. Edited by her Son, Rev. CHARLES E. STOWE. Numerous illustrations and portraits. 1 vol., demy 8vo, about 500 pp., cloth, 15s.

"It is an extremely interesting and instructive book. . . . A singularly truthful picture of the life of a brave woman and a successful author." Athenaeum.

THE LANCASHIRE LIFE of BISHOP FRASER.

By JOHN W. DIGGLE, M.A., Vicar of Mosely Hill, Liverpool, Hon. Canon of Liverpool; Author of "Godliness and Manliness," "True Religion," &c., also Editor of Bishop Fraser's Sermons. Third Edition. 1 vol., illustrated, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"This important work is the history of a very grand episcopacy. The story of what can be done in fifteen years—and that by the simplest means—in a bit of blue sky—indeed, an expanse of blue sky—in our cloudy heavens." Times.

THE STORY of EMIN'S RESCUE as told in STANLEY'S LETTERS.

(Published by Mr. Stanley's permission.) Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. With a Map of the Route from the Congo to the Coast. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s.

"* It will of course be distinctly understood that this little Volume will in no way trench upon Mr. Stanley's great Work, which cannot possibly be published for several months."

Ready on Monday, Price ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FEBRUARY NUMBER.

Containing an article by GENERAL VISCOUNT WOLSELEY, K.P., &c., on "The STANDING ARMY of GREAT BRITAIN," with illustrations by R. CATON WOODVILLE, besides numerous other Stories and Poems.

WITH 70 ILLUSTRATIONS.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED),
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 18, 1890.

No. 924, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Thirty Years of Colonial Government. A Selection from the Despatches and Letters of the Right Hon. Sir George Ferguson Bowen. Edited by Stanley Lane-Poole. In 2 vols. (Longmans.)

SIR GEORGE BOWEN's career has been both successful and remarkable, and justifies the publication of the two volumes which have been so ably edited by Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole. Not that Sir George required an editor—no one can doubt his own literary ability; still it is, perhaps, as well that the prefatory memoir came from another pen than his own. This memoir is full of interest and good stories. We will only quote one. In a conversation held by Sir George with Victor Emmanuel, the talk turned to the Franco-German War of 1870-71, and the fall of Napoleon III.

"The king lamented the imprudent conduct of M. Benedetti, the French Ambassador at Berlin in 1870, quel benedetto Benedetti, as he styled him. 'I warned my friend the emperor,' continued his majesty, 'that his army was not in a fit state to cope with the Prussian veterans who conquered at Sadowa; a large portion of the French troops had been employed in hunting Arabs in Algeria, which really is little better as a preparation for European warfare than your hunting kangaroos in Australia.'"

Sir George Bowen's successful career furnishes a strong argument—if such were wanting, with the recent and present examples of Lord Palmerston, the late Lord Derby, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Balfour before us—in favour of the old classical system of education. He was educated under the old régime at the Charter House and Trinity College, Oxford; he attained a first class in classical honours; and throughout the present work his acquaintance with and affection for the great authors of antiquity is constantly appearing. At the early age of twenty-six he was offered and accepted a congenial post—that of reorganising, as president, the Ionian University, which had been founded at Corfu in 1820. He gained the approval both of the government at home and the Ionian Senate by his conduct of this mission, which no doubt led to his first political appointment—that of chief secretary to the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. In 1859 he was appointed the first governor of the new colony of Queensland, which up to that date had formed part of the colony of New South Wales. His views on the position of a governor are expressed in a despatch to the Duke of Newcastle, when secretary of state for the colonies:

"There cannot in my opinion be a greater mistake than the view which some public writers in England appear to hold—viz., that the governor of a colony, under the system of responsible government, should be merely a roi fainéant. So far as my observation extends, nothing can be more opposed than this theory to the wishes of the Anglo-Australians themselves. The governor of each of the colonies in this group is expected not only to act as the head of society, to encourage literature, science, and art, to keep alive by personal visits to every district under his jurisdiction the feelings of loyalty to the Queen, and of attachment to the mother country, and so to cherish what may be termed the imperial sentiment; but he is also expected, as head of the administration, to maintain, with the assistance of his executive council, a vigilant control and supervision over every department of the public service. In short, he is in a position in which he can exercise an influence over the whole course of affairs exactly proportionate to the strength of his character, the activity of his mind and body, the capacity of his understanding, and the extent of his knowledge."

Here we have the key to Sir George Bowen's exceptional success as a colonial governor. He was not only possessed of the faculties and qualities, on the value of which he enlarges; but he added to them geniality and tact. His skill in organising the new colony was recognised at home, and rewarded not only with the Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George, but by the much greater honour of the extension of his term of office to eight years.

The land question in Queensland recalled to his mind the agrarian disputes of ancient Rome. In a letter to Sir E. Bulwer Lytton, he writes:

"The great question to be settled when the Parliament meets is the land question. It threatens in all these colonies to become an irritating contest between rival interests—between the towns and the country—like the corn laws in England, and the agrarian laws in ancient Rome. How exactly the squatter question resembles the strife between the patricians and plebeians about the ager publicus! We want an Australian Licinius Stobo. I think I remarked to you once before that it is also curious that 'runs' (the colonial term for wide ranges of pasture) should seem a literal translation of the δρόμοι ἐπείας of Homer, when Greek shepherd kings fed their cattle in a climate similar to that of Australia. How refreshing amid my daily cares are these classical parallels!"

And in another letter addressed to Mr. Merivale we read:

"If their country is like Thessaly, the squatters of Merivale are complete Centaurs. The cavalcade of well-mounted horsemen that everywhere came out to meet the first representative of their queen eclipsed anything of the kind that could be exhibited in ancient Greece, or, indeed, in any part of the world except in England or in Australia. I was escorted into your county town of Warwick by 400 horsemen. I rode one day, to the delight of the Centaurs—I mean of the squatters—and without the slightest fatigue, seventy miles in eight hours—of course, with a change of horses. You should never send a governor here who cannot ride and shoot. His performances across country are one of the secrets of Sir W. Denison's success as Governor of Tasmania and of New South Wales successively."

In 1867 Sir George Bowen was promoted to the government of New Zealand—a post, at that time, of great difficulty, owing to the Maori war, which had continued since the year 1860, and which he had the honour and satisfaction of bringing to a close. This part of the book abounds in picturesque accounts of the Maoris. Sir George compares them to the Scotch Highlanders of a century and a half ago, and says that whoever should wish to understand their then condition ought to read with care the description of the Highlanders in the thirteenth chapter of Macaulay's History of England. Sir George based his policy towards the enemy on that adopted by William III. towards the Highlanders after the defeat of the English at Killiecrankie. Another interesting point to which Sir George Bowen calls attention is that the colonisation of New Zealand, although it has led to wars between the settlers and the natives in some parts of the North Island, has, at the same time, stopped the savage and internecine strife which formerly raged throughout the country among the Maoris themselves.

To our mind the most attractive part of the book we are now reviewing ends with the departure of Sir George Bowen from New Zealand. The governments that he held afterwards had less of a specially interesting and picturesque character than Queensland in its first state and New Zealand with its native wars. From New Zealand Sir George Bowen succeeded to Victoria, often called the "blue ribbon" of colonial governments. After the usual six years of office he was appointed to Mauritius, and after that to Hong Kong, with which ended his career as a colonial governor, but not, we trust, his career of public usefulness. He is not yet seventy years of age, and has evidently plenty of vigour left. It is earnestly to be hoped that his great experience and knowledge will continue to be made use of in some way by the state.

Sir George Bowen is a strong advocate of Imperial Federation, between the colonies and the mother-country. At the end of the second volume he has reprinted a paper on that subject, which he read before the Royal Colonial Institute in 1886. Indeed, Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole tells us that the setting forth of the views of the veteran consul, as Sir George has been styled, is the main reason for the present work; and, above all, that that work will have attained its chief object if it helps to promote the movement towards Imperial Federation.

We would notice, in conclusion, the remarkable change of feeling among the permanent officials of the Colonial Office in their attitude towards the colonies themselves. Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole quotes some of the most distinguished of those officials of the last generation to show how imbued they were with the so-called Manchester-school doctrine—that the colonies were rather encumbrances than valuable parts of the empire. We remember in former years hearing that Sir George Bowen did not always stand entirely in the good graces of those officials; and the reason doubtless was that he had, to his honour be it said, adopted from the beginning a higher and nobler view—a view now happily in accordance with popular feeling.

WM. WICKHAM.

THE TWO LAST PLAYS OF IBSEN.

Rosmersholm. By Henrik Ibsen. Translated by Louis N. Palmer. (Griffith, Farran, & Co.)

The Lady from the Sea. Translated by Eleanor Marx-Aveling. With a Critical Introduction by Edmund Gosse. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE translation of the two last dramas of Ibsen adds appreciably to the materials for study, as well as to the provocatives of debate, already in the possession of his large and growing English audience. Both are highly original variations of the fundamental motive upon which Ibsen's social, and in part also his historical, drama is built—the conflict of a more or less individual nature with a false position created for it in part by its own singularity, in part by the stress of current conventions. It is only a tribute to Ibsen's dramatic genius that one might describe the fundamental motive of Shakspearean tragedy in nearly the same terms. While in Shakspeare, however, we, as a rule, watch the creation of the "false position" as well as its violent dissolution; in Ibsen the play commonly derives its initial impulse from a state of acute tension already reached at the outset. The false position is the given fact, to the significance of which the victim and the spectator gradually awake. In "Ghosts" the whole tragedy lies in this awakening, since the bondage which it reveals is riveted in the past, and cannot by any effort be annulled. Elsewhere, the issue is not in this blank and passive horror, but in action, action dominated, in general, by what has been termed the idée mère of Ibsen's poetry—the conception of the "call" first definitively announced in the inexorable imperatives of "Brand." Nora and Stockmann in their different ways obey such a call; while Lona, in the "Pillars," is the voice through which it is obtruded upon the ears and heart of the respectable sinner Bernick. In this last case the climax is least well grounded; Bernick's repentance is not adequately justified by his past, and stands on a par with many another fifth-act conversion. Indeed, Ibsen's strength hardly lies in exhibiting gradual revolutions of character. His men and women are four-square, sharply defined, and changing (like himself) by sudden transformations if they change at all, or at least by transitions the nuances and stealing steps of which are not habitually disclosed.

As a case of "conversion," though hardly in any other respect, the "Pillars" may be compared with the earlier and more powerful of the two plays before us—the lurid tragedy of "Rosmersholm." A revolution is wrought in the impulsive Rebekka West by her friendship with the pastor, Johannes Rosmer. Rebekka, one of the most remarkable creations in Ibsen's gallery of women, is (like Lona) "emancipated"; but her nature, while not less fresh and vigorous, is more passionate and less sound. Child of a Finland doctor though she be, she has grown up to womanhood with the vehement impulses of a Southern girl. She conceives a secret love for Rosmer, whose liberal and sympathetic mind is predisposed to her opinions; obtains entrance into his house, grows intimate, wins his entire confidence, and permits his poor sickly, and still believing, wife to torment herself with unuttered suspicions, and finally to put an end to a life which she felt to be only an obstacle to their happiness. After the wife's death, to the cause of which Rosmer is entirely blind, Rebekka remains in the house by his wish. They feel strong enough to assert the rights of pure friendship between man and woman without regard to the comments of the world. At the opening of the play this has gone on a year. The world has not failed to comment; and not merely do Rosmer's former clerical allies now cover him with abuse, but the astute Radicals, to whom he has gone over, broadly hint that his adhesion would be of more value if his life were quite unequivocal. The gentle and refined Rosmer, shrinking from the rude touch of the world, profoundly distrustful of himself, and deeply attached to Rebekka, offers her marriage. For a moment her involuntary gladness breaks out; then, she firmly and finally rejects what she had throughout striven to compass. He does not comprehend her renunciation; and, on hearing her confession of the past, feels his faint faith in human-nature shattered and his vital energy sapped. In vain she pleads that he has purified and ennobled her: he feels only that she has deceived him. She passionately begs him to put her to the test. "Will you," he asks, "go the way that she went?" Having sacrificed passion, she eagerly welcomes the sacrifice of life also, by which she may at once atone her truth and atone for her sin. But her acceptance of the test removes every bar between them, her death is the token and instrument of their complete union, and the act by which she restores to him the power of life, makes it impossible for him to live. Husband and wife they go forth together—"but whether I follow you, or you follow me, Rebekka, that is a question we shall never fathom"; and the curtain falls upon their plunge into the waters in which the dead wife had sought release.

It is impossible to convey in a few sentences the art with which Ibsen has solved the extraordinarily difficult problem he has here set himself. We have to do, plainly, with something sufficiently unlike the ordinary "realist" drama of crime and suicide. The climax is—like that of "Brand," of "Peer Gynt," of "Et Dukkehjem"—not so much an incident borrowed from actual life, as an ideal solution postulated by a set of assumed conditions. And there are touches enough which remind us that Ibsen bears within him a sleeping romantic poet, who, however resolutely lulled, will sometimes stir and cry. The fate of Rosmer, although worked out in every detail with the most masterly psychology, is permitted to gather about it a sort of half light of supernatural mystery from the bodeful legend of his house. The white horses which portend death have appeared to the old housekeeper; and in her mouth are put the terrible closing words in which the poet comments on the meaning of his catastrophe, in one sense for her, in another for his readers—"No! there's no help here! The dead wife has taken them!"

A much bolder step in this direction is represented, however, in the next, and at present the last, play of Ibsen, the "Fruen

fra havet." It is an attempt, as our readers are aware, to render in terms of modern life the beautiful myth, of which every folklore has its characteristic variant, of the mermaid wedded on land and still hungering for the sea. The transformation is accomplished with minute care, and every detail repays study. The lighthouse-keeper's daughter is the second wife, sincerely loved but hastily chosen, of a man whose daughters are scarcely younger than herself. She has, moreover, plighted herself to a sailor—a veritable child of the sea, whose personality, charged with all the experience and the mystery of sea life, dominates here, not by passion but by a daemonic spell, and becomes the embodiment of her strongest instinct acting upon her through a definite and terribly resolute human will. It is in the development of this relation, which the ordinary dramatist would have made a simple amour with a sailor-lover, that the power of the play chiefly lies. When it opens, the false position into which Ellida has been drawn by her fascination, has reached a crisis of intolerable tension. Her situation in so far resembles Rebekka's that she is dominated by a blind impulse which makes her alien to the home in which she finds herself. Rebekka leads the wife to ruin that she may take her place; Ellida refuses in any degree to fill the place which the dead wife has left. Each works her way out of this false position under the influence, entirely unconscious, of the husband. Wangel, the country doctor, is a much less interesting figure than the fastidious and unworldly free-thinker, Rosmer; but he has a like ineptitude in practical emergencies, and he is led by circumstances, not by design, to the true solution of the problem. It resembles that of "Rosmersholm," though far more slightly handled and to a less tragic issue. Both women renounce their dream at the moment in which it is brought within their grasp. Liberty to yield entirely to the spell releases both from its power. Ellida's awakening involves no such terrible issue as Rebekka's, simply because the consequences of her dream can be redressed, while those of Rebekka's can only be atoned. The conclusion is accordingly—what is so rare in Ibsen—entirely harmonious and sunny. Ellida discovers that "when you have become a laud creature, you can no longer find your way back to the sea."

The setting of this translated mermaid legend appears at first sight commonplace enough; and indeed Ibsen has scarcely ever consented to adopt with so little mitigation the bald language of ordinary middle-class discourse. But when Ibsen is commonplace it is usually with a purpose; and we easily detect how finely the atmosphere is here tempered to the subject. The course of the action required that the "land life" should be outwardly trivial and empty, devoid of any obvious and salient interests that might capture the alien's averted sympathy. We are placed accordingly in a remote provincial town, for which its summer visitors are the great event, and untroubled by any breath of the religious and political excitement which electrifies the air of "Rosmersholm." All the men too are landmen of the least heroic and adventurous type. On the other hand, the action required equally that there should be roots of possible sympathy hidden under this indifferent and trivial exterior. Ellida had to be won for her family. Accordingly, we find that the two daughters, who do not "get on" with their stepmother, have nevertheless points of sympathy with her which are gradually revealed both to them and to us. Hilde has her susceptibility to a personal spell, Bolette her vague longing for the vast unknown world. And in their love affairs, as in her's, these instincts have to do duty altogether for passion. How delicate, too, is the symbolism by which Hilde's struggling sympathy with Ellida is rendered, in the contrast (Act V. ad init.) between her adventurous familiarity with the sea and the timorous incapacity of Lyngstrand and Arholm!

We have little space left to speak of the translations as such. To render Ibsen's prose dramas is not a very exacting task, and it has been in both cases adequately, if not quite faultlessly, performed. "Rosmersholm" is no doubt by much the more difficult, and Mr. Palmer may be especially congratulated upon his idiomatic and often powerful version. He has, however, one or two oddities which we cannot quite away with, such as "I clear out" (p. 36), in the mouth of an elderly schoolmaster, and an occasional jarring use of "look here" (pp. 13, 31); while one may question his tact in rendering the Johannes Rosmer of the original by the verbally equivalent, but far less characteristic, "John." Mrs. Aveling, too, puts into the mouth of all her characters without distinction the vulgar idiom, "I'll try to," "I should like to," &c. We can only add a reference to Mr. Gosse's sympathetic introduction to the later play, and Mr. Palmer's dedication of the earlier to the only actress whom any student of Ibsen would care to see take its leading part—Miss Alma Murray.

C. H. HERFORD

Christ and His Times. Addressed to the Diocese of Canterbury in his Second Visitation. By Edward White, Archbishop. (Macmillan.)

THE introductory sentences of these charges connect them with the last Lambeth Conference. "Public organs," says the archbishop, "remarked, not without some sort of kindly surprise," that such an assemblage concentrated its attention earnestly and almost exclusively on moral and social questions. That this surprise should be felt scandalises the archbishop, and the charges of his second visitation are directed to prevent any such scandal in the future. His book, dealing for the most part with just those social and moral topics which the Lambeth Conference reported on, is an elaborate and passionate protest against the heresy that the Christian Church has nothing to do with social questions or with society. The first charge, entitled "Society the Church's Test," puts the question generally, asserting that "the effect of the Church upon society is the final test of her faithfulness"; and that all her work is vain unless she earnestly and obviously advances "the morals of the people, the substantial welfare of the nation." That this is the teaching of the New Testament is shown by an analysis of the first Epistle of St. Peter, remarkable for its originality and spiritual insight; that "none of the great Fathers of the Church thought ever otherwise," is almost taken for granted; and Christians of to-day are warned that whenever Churches have confined their activities to matters of doctrine and worship, "the great society of mankind has found them out again and again and rejected and overthrown them." And this clear and convinced statement of a great principle is accompanied by an intimation from the archbishop that it is scarcely grasped by the clergy as it might be. Social problems, he says, must not be "left to well-meaningness excited by religion." The Church must attack them "scientifically and constructively."

This introduction is followed by charges on "Suffering Populations," "Purity," "Temperance," and "Church Citizenship," which apply particularly what has already been said generally. These charges are eloquent and impressive. They are lacking in none of the excellencies which we usually look for in the sermons and addresses of our distinguished divines. But they have besides some special merits of their own which will make them of interest to many who are accustomed to ignore theological literature.

The addresses on "Suffering Populations" and "Temperance" are obviously planned scientifically. They are careful critical summaries of the present state of opinion on these subjects. They are excellent examples, not only for clergymen but for all serious students, of the proper method of approaching and studying social problems. The conscience of the religious person, who constantly makes "well-meaningness" do duty for patience and knowledge, cannot fail to be touched when he finds the head of the English Church abstracting blue books and summarising the views of foreign schools of socialism as carefully and impartially as if he were a professor of political economy. It is not easy to over-estimate the stimulus which philanthropic effort would receive if the clergy would emulate in their study of social questions the scholarly and rigorous method of these addresses of their archbishop. The addresses, moreover, are unusually outspoken. There is among us, we read, a population "which can only just exist, hanging on a sharp edge of illness, hunger, uncleanness physical and moral, incapacity mental and bodily, in full sight of abundance, luxury, and waste"; and "the word 'terrible' is too light to describe the importance of the problem" presented by the conditions of life-long wretchedness "under which a vast part of our town population lives its life and works its work." In the charges on intemperance and purity the language is equally explicit. There is no shirking of the problems of socialism. The admirable analysis, under the heading "remedies conceived," of socialistic schemes begins by pointing out that there is "much which is purely religious and Christian" in socialism as we now understand it; and insists of the most extreme opinions that "free discussion is the best treatment of them," while "repression is the hot-bed and forcing-house of truculence." At the end of the schemes comes "the once accepted 'English' theory" of non-interference with economic conditions, which is dismissed as "unjustifiable, and unhistorical." Considerable space is given to the teaching of the New Testament on riches and poverty, which "does not assent to the labour of one class being consecrated to the accumulations of others"; and finally, after summarising those matters in which already the state interferes, the archbishop arrives at the conclusion that "at this moment the pitiable and formidable condition of the poor asks for some similar treatment up to some as yet unfixed point." In the discussion of socialism M. de Laveleye's Le Socialisme Contemporain is referred to, and the views of the archbishop would seem to be not very far removed from the opinions of that book; but the charges do not aim so much at expressing Archbishop Benson's exact views as his conviction of the importance to all Christians of the question.

"No young man can be considered as fully equipped for ordination until he has some knowledge of these subjects. . . . The attention of the clergy has been for many years so much absorbed by what is beautiful, and comely, and correct, and in a limited way restorative, that they have less weight in social questions."

The charge on "Temperance" is a careful investigation founded on the statistics of blue-books and other reliable sources of the thorny question of prohibition laws. It is valuable, like the address on "Suffering Populations," because it grapples so closely with a point of acknowledged difficulty, and because its method is strictly scientific. These two charges will probably strike most readers as the best, but the others are equally careful and thorough. The exposition of the wisest methods of "the teaching of purity in pure ways," the stimulating call for lay workers, the picturesque sketch of the Church's work in Wales, are original and exhaustive papers. The Cardiff address, however, will not be admitted by all readers to be out of the sphere of religious party politics, and for this reason hardly harmonises with the rest of the volume.

We have left unnoticed many points of interest which the charges suggest, and in conclusion can only comment very shortly upon their style. This at once arrests our attention, and holds it. It is eloquent and emotional, but always terse and strong. The archbishop uses it with equal effect to sum up clearly and epigrammatically the views of German socialists, or to appeal earnestly to the rich man for help in the social battle. We have dwelt upon the care with which the subjects expounded have been studied, upon the scientific method pursued by the student; but this nowhere injures the literary excellence of the composition. Nor do the striking felicities of word and phrase, the excellent artistic workmanship, interfere with the archbishop's force and fire. The charges are sermons in the highest sense of the word, keenly felt in every line, and convey the impression, in spite of their wisdom, their accuracy, and their knowledge, that they come straight from the heart of the preacher.

RONALD BAYNE.

The Fables of Aesop. As first printed by Caxton in 1484, with those of Avian, Alfonso, and Poggio, now again edited and induced by Joseph Jacobs. In 2 vols. (David Nutt)

In this latest addition to the "Bibliothèque de Carabas," Mr. Joseph Jacobs—taking Caxton's Aesop for his text—gives another example of what may be called the new science of "comparative folklore." Following the same plan which he had before applied to Bidpai in the same series, he here traces the pedigree of the great family of fables connected with the name of Aesop. That all his conclusions will win complete acceptance he hardly hopes himself; for in more than one line of investigation his work is that of an original pioneer, and the subject-matter does not admit of conclusive proof. But we have no hesitation in saying that his method is the only fruitful one in the study of folklore; all else, indeed, is little better than the craze for collecting curiosities characteristic of the pseudo-antiquary. If folklore is ever to be raised to the rank of a science, by the side of philology, it must be by the application to it of the comparative method; and, in order to apply that method, it is, in our judgment, necessary to assume the theory of borrowing as a working hypothesis. To quote analogies from Maoris and Mexicans, Hottentots and Hurons, is merely to confuse the issue, though we are far from asserting that some universal principle may not hereafter be discovered underlying the entire mass of mythology. But, while so much still remains obscure, the one sound mode of investigation is to start from that which is relatively well known, and to endeavour to explain the growth and diffusion of folklore by the same laws which have been proved to hold good in corresponding domains of thought. Myth is undoubtedly a near relation of speech; and the entire science of linguistics owes its origin to the fruitful conception of a genealogy of languages. Even though philologists are unable to construct a family tree of the so-called Turanian tongues, they do not therefore reject the comparative method as false. So, too, in folklore, every successful application of the comparative method is so much reclaimed for science out of the unknown, and points the way to future triumphs.

The fables of Aesop have supplied Mr. Jacob with a more attractive subject than the fables of Bidpai. The interest of the latter is mainly oriental; and to the ordinary English mind the East is still the land of the marvellous, and there seems no difficulty in supposing that any particular story is due to the fertile imagination of an improvisatore. But Aesop is familiar to the nursery, and has besides a long literary history. Mr. Jacobs, with prodigious pains, has here traced this literary history in each of its three provinces—the classical, the oriental, and the mediaeval. To a large extent, indeed, he is merely expounding the results of numerous foreign scholars; but the comprehensiveness of treatment is his own, and he has been able to add, out of his special erudition, not a few original arguments.

Concerning the classical sources of Aesop there is not much controversy. In the not very elegant phrase with which Mr. Jacobs opens his essay, "our Aesop is Phaedrus with trimmings." In other words, the earliest literary source of the bulk of Aesop's fables cannot be referred further back than the well-known Latin collection of Phaedrus (circa A.D. 25). But Mr. Jacobs adds—and this is one of his original observations—that there is internal evidence for believing that Phaedrus had before him a compilation of fables said to have been compiled by Demetrius Phalereus (circa 300 B.C.), and even then associated with the name of Aesop. Apart from Phaedrus, there also exists a collection of fables in Greek prose which, in uncritical times, was thought to be the genuine Aesop. The romance of modern scholarship has no more interesting chapter than that connected with this subject. Bentley was the first to point out that these Greek prose fables were not ancient, but were probably derived from an unknown Greek verse-writer named Babrius. At last, in 1840, a MS. of Babrius was discovered on Mount Athos; and the author has been proved to be a Roman (circa A.D. 230). From Babrius derive the late-Latin fables of Avian or Avienus (circa A.D. 380), which have quite lately been edited by Mr. Robinson Ellis, as those of Babrius have been by Mr. Rutherford; but neither editor concerned himself with the question of sources.

The oriental history of the counterparts of some of Aesop's fables is a much more disputed question. The resemblances in certain cases are so striking that there must inevitably have been borrowing on one side or the other. Benfey may be taken as the champion of those who hold that India borrowed from Greece. Mr. Jacobs, on the other hand, maintains—after an elaborate comparison of the Jātakas or Buddhist Birth-Stories with Phaedrus—that about a dozen of "Aesop's fables" are derived from India; while he would provisionally allow all the rest to be of Greek origin. It is in this connexion that he introduces the most novel of his arguments, which is based upon his acquaintance with Rabbinical literature. Shortly put, it is as follows. Babrius used, besides the collection of Aesopic fables which were also used by Phaedrus, another collection of so-called "Libyan" fables, which were really of Indian origin. These "Libyan" fables are likewise to be traced in the Talmud and other Jewish sources towards the end of the first century A.D. The connecting link is to be found in the name of "Kibysos," whom Babrius gives as the author of his "Libyan" fables. This "Kibysos" Mr. Jacobs also finds in the Mishle Kobsim of the Talmud, which has hitherto been interpreted to mean "fables of the washermen"; and he goes on to identify him conjecturally with Kasyapa of the Jātakas. Of the extreme ingenuity of this argument there can be no question; and it is right to add that its author supports it by a number of curious illustrations from Rabbinical lore.

Upon the mediaeval history of Aesop we have no space to dwell. We can only mention two points which are emphasised by Mr. Jacobs. One of these is the prominent part played by England in the diffusion of the fables. Indeed, Mr. Jacobs goes so far as to suggest that London in the latter half of the twelfth century, as the capital of the Angevin empire, was the centre of the whole romantic movement which characterises mediaeval literature; and he promises to develop this thesis elsewhere. The other point, which is more closely connected with Aesop, affords a good example of the happy results that occasionally reward the student. Marie de France, who wrote a French Aesop in the early half of the thirteenth century, states that she translated it from "the English of King Alfred." A German scholar (Herr Mall) has proved from internal evidence that the translation was made not from the Anglo-Saxon, but from Middle-English. Mr. Jacobs here takes up the quest by showing (1) that Marie's Aesop has elements which can only be explained from an Arabic source; (2) that a certain "Alfred the Englishman" was translating (from the Arabic?) circa 1170; and (3) that at about the same date there was a Jew living at Oxford named "Benedictus le Puncteur," who may plausibly be identified with the Berachyah ha-Nakdan who himself wrote a Hebrew version of Aesop, and who may possibly have served as Arabic dragoman to Alfred.

In our notice of this remarkable book we have thought it our duty to draw attention to the original matter it contains, which is all comprised in the first volume. The second volume consists of a verbatim and literatim reprint of Caxton's Aesop (1484), the black-letter only being changed into ordinary type. It is introduced by a graceful set of verses of Mr. Andrew Lang; and it has for its two frontispieces some Aesopic animals from the Bayeux tapestry, and an idyllic sketch by Mr. H. Ryland.

JAS. S. COTTON.

An Official Tour through Bosnia and Herzegovina, with an Account of the History, Antiquities, Agrarian Conditions, Religion, Ethnology, Folklore, and Social Life of the People. By J. de Asboth, Member of the Hungarian Parliament. (Sonnenschein.)

BOSNIA and Herzegovina, although little known thirty or forty years ago, have been rendered familiar to Englishmen by the excellent books of Mr. A. J. Evans and Miss Irby. The work of M. Asboth, therefore, has not much to tell us that is new; but it is written in an agreeable style, and furnished with a considerable number of spirited illustrations.

There is a vein of Turcophilism running throughout; and the writer tries to show his sympathy with his lost kindred, as we suspect he imagines them to be, in spite of the labours of Budenz and Hunfalvy. He talks about the Turks everywhere allowing their Slavonic and Christian subjects a modus vivendi, which, in our author's judgment, is as regularly refused by the Orthodox to their Moslem dependents. But have people heard nothing of the Tatars in Russia and the active Mohammedan press at Kazan; and do not Turks to the present day live peaceably side by side with Greeks in Euboea? It would be curious to know exactly what M. Asboth means by a modus vivendi. Have, for example, the Armenians anything of the kind at the present time? Have the Macedonian Bulgarians?

While, however, speaking in favourable terms of his Moslem friends, M. Asboth cannot pass over the terrible scenes of bloodshed which these picturesque lands have witnessed during the rule of the Turk. Page after page of his book bears witness to quiet valleys drenched with blood, to robbery, decapitation, and impalement. We get a tolerably clear account of the Bosnian feudal aristocracy, which, as is well known, accepted Islam en masse, retaining its old institutions and such a degree of independence that Mahmoud II., when introducing his reforms, only subdued them by cruelty and treachery. When the new uniforms, cut after the European fashion, with musket-belts crossed upon the breast, were to be introduced, they said, "If we are to accept the cross, we will not accept it from the Sultan, but from the Viennese Emperor." The new vizier, Abdurrahman, was forced to take Serajevo by storm. In the same spirit the Bosnians received the hatti-sherif of Abdul-Medjid in 1839, which granted to the Christians a certain equality before the law, but soon became a dead letter. In 1850 the notorious Omar Pasha was sent by the Sultan to quell the opposition which it had aroused; and he succeeded in doing so with the same disregard of human life which he afterwards showed in the Cretan insurrection, as Mr. Stillman the American Consul, has told us. In some respects Islam appears to have sat but lightly upon these Bosnian Beggars, for we find them continually threatening to go over to Christianity unless their wishes are gratified.

By the way, on p. 390, M. Asboth speaks of the celebrated poem, "The Death of Čengić-Agha," as if it had been only published by Ivan Mažuranić, the Croatian Ban, whereas it was really composed by him. This fine production, which has all the fire of a regular folk-song, tells how the Agha was slain by some Christians in his own camp in 1840: a terrible vengeance was inflicted upon him for his many cruelties. It is curious to find M. Asboth meeting the son of this man during his travels.

Our author ventures upon a somewhat lengthy discussion of the Bogomiles and their doctrines, but mis-states the opinions of Mr. A. J. Evans, to whose able books he does but scant justice. Even if the doctrines of the Bogomiles did not contain all which some people have fancied they found in them, it is strange to be told that these sectaries "stand very near to the prophets, John of Leyden (!), the Albigenes, the Waldenses, the Hussites" — certainly an odd mixture. In his picturesque description of the town of Serajevo, M. Asboth says nothing of the schools founded by Miss Irby there, nor of her labours in the cause of education among the people, who have so many reasons to be grateful to her. Bosnia and Herzegovina, under Mohammedan rule, remained isolated from the rest of Europe and plunged in ignorance. That they have morally and materially improved under the government of Austro-Hungary there can be no question, but their natural tendency is to gravitate towards Serbia.

The account of Bosnian authors using the Serbo-Croatian language, which is given in the last chapter, is interesting, but not always quite accurate. There is no Serbian original of the Memoirs of a Janissary, alluded to on p. 476; and the name of the great Slavonic ethnologist should not be metamorphosed into Schaffarik, an impossible form. Pipin supposes that the Polish version, which was published in the year 1828 at Warsaw in the Zbiór Pisarzy Polskich, is the original from which the Bohemian translation was made. The manuscript was found in a monastery at Berdichev. The spelling of Slavonic names throughout M. Asboth's book is in the highest degree capricious; thus, we have Jireček and Jiretschek, sometimes Jagić and sometimes Jagitsch, so also Kačić and Kasthitch. Similar instances might be quoted almost ad infinitum. We do not know whether the author or his translator is responsible for the rather slipshod way in which the authorities are cited at the beginning of the volume—e.g., Plinius the Elder, Kosmas, d. Bulgar Presbyter (Kosmas der Bulgarische Presbyter?). So also to find a book referred to as Istwanfi Historiarum de rebus Hung. is curious.

The list of works given in the bibliography is elaborate, it must be confessed, and, in the main, useful; but the writers are of very varying merit. For example, the History of the Serbs by Raič, originally published at Vienna in 1794, is a work of great interest as having made its appearance in the infancy of their literature, but not of much historical value. Among other strange opinions, Raič held the Bulgarians on the Volga to have been Slavs. The titles of some of the works are needlessly repeated. Thus the Istoria Bolgar of Jireček, quoted on p. 15 as printed at Odessa in 1878, can be nothing but the Russian translation of Dejiny Bulharského Naroda of the same author published in Bohemian and German at Prague in 1875. Again, the work of Strauss, Bosnia: the Land and People, is cited both in Hungarian and German. From some of these details we are induced to believe that the bibliography has been hastily compiled.

The account given on p. 479 of the Glagolitic alphabet by M. Asboth does not show him to be well acquainted with the subject. Although among his authorities he cites the Glagolita Clozianus of Kopitar, he evidently knows little or nothing of the MS. printed in that work, or its great importance in the solution of the question of this alphabet's antiquity. He gives an interesting account of the strangely varied life of Dositeus Obradović, who visited even England in his travels and made many friends here; and on p. 483 he sketches the career of Vuk Stephano- vić Karajić and the opposition which was raised in the principality to the use of vernacular Serbian and that writer's orthography. Of course it was much better for the country that they ultimately prevailed; but we cannot wonder that the learned Serbs at first clung to the older style, in which all the books which they cherished had been written. We must also remember what strange ideas then prevailed about the early home of Old Slavonic, which was only beginning to be scientifically studied. We are surprised that M. Asboth never refers to Schafarik's Serbische Lesekörner, which contains so much that is curious about the early language.

Some of the Roman antiquities of these countries are illustrated by interesting engravings; but for a much fuller treatment of the whole subject, the reader must consult the Antiquarian Researches in Illyricum, published in 1883 by Mr. A. J. Evans, who has gone over the ground very carefully.

M. Asboth has produced a bright and readable book, and his descriptions of the places which he visited and the persons whom he met are generally entertaining. The account of Serajevo and its picturesque inhabitants strikes us as exceedingly well done; and he has many allusions to the songs and superstitions of the people. But the parts of his work dealing with the history, antiquities, and literature, seem less successful. The latter subject, however, has been rarely touched on in English, if we except, perhaps, the translations of Sir John Bowring and one or two other works. We do not see any references to the Sitte und Brauch der Sudslaven by F. S. Krauss (Vienna, 1883), an excellent work. The Wila (Serbische Volkslieder und Heldenmärchen), cited in the bibliography as a man's name, is, of course, the mere title of the book, from Wila or Vila, the Slavonic fairy about which M. Asboth sometimes speaks; the confusion shows carelessness. Finally, we have noticed some bungling translations of the original here and there which mar this otherwise very readable and attractive volume.

W. R. MORFILL.

NEW NOVELS.

A Hazard of New Fortunes. In 2 vols. By W. D. Howells. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.)

Olga Zanelli. In 3 vols. By F. L. Cartwright. (Sonnenschein.)

A Hurricane in Petticoats. In 3 vols. By Leslie Keith. (Bentley.)

Brownie's Plot. In 2 vols. By Thos. Cobb. (Ward & Downey.)

Lord Allanros; or, Marriage not a Failure. By B. E. T. A. (Digby & Long.)

Rogues. By R. H. Sherard. (Chatto & Windus.)

My Wonderful Wife. By Marie Corelli. (White.)

Basil Morton's Transgression. By the Marquise Lanza. (New York: Minerva Publishing Co.)

Miss Meredith. By Amy Levy. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

MR. HOWELLS'S new novel will be accepted by many as his ablest production. It is unquestionably inferior only to The Rise of Silas Lapham, if to that. Mr. Howells has now taken an assured place among those novelists who are read because they are the vogue. That his writings will withstand the veering of the popular breeze remains to be proved. It is by no means the certainty his ardent admirers so vehemently assert. There has been ample occasion for this novelist to show his range, to display his profundity of insight, to fulfil convincingly his "mission." To assert that he has adequately acted up to his pronouncement, that he has won victory all along the line, that his standard has allured the worthiest adherents, would be to be as uncritical as to state that his method is no more his own than that of a dozen scribes of the day, that his successes have been side-issues of little significance, that he has no following because he has no leadership. It seems not unlikely that in the healthy reaction which is setting in against the pseudo-realism of which Mr. Howells is one of the most eminent exponents, much injustice may be done to an author who has so often, and for so prolonged a period, charmed us by his graces of style, delicacy of humour, and winsome sentiment. Possibly it is inevitable; and, after all, the rude justice of the public taste is no such barbaric tyrant as it is often represented. But the critic who studies the drift of the newer fiction, who looks to the causes of "mutations infinite," as well as merely to their advent, who, in particular, has carefully studied the writings of Mr. Howells, will recognise that in him we have the genuine connecting link between the crude realists in method like Tolstoi, and the crude realists in thought like Zola. He is a realist, by his own account and by that of his friends and enemies alike; and, though in no one of his books, nor in them all collectively, do I find warrant for the application, yet it may be allowed to pass for the present, as this is not the occasion for an examination into the absurdity of the claim of realism by a school of writers who are, one and all, hopelessly blind, or indifferent, to the most imperative requirements of the true realistic method. Perhaps realism in literary art may be approximately defined as the science of exact presentment of many complexities, abstract and concrete, in one truthful, because absolutely reasonable and apparently inevitable, synthesis; this, plus the creative energy which in high development involves what is misleadingly called the romantic spirit, and minus that weakness of the selective faculty which is the dominant factor in the work of the so-called realists of the Zolaesque school. Thus regarded, realism and romance are found to be as indissoluble as soul and body in a living human being. The true artist, no doubt, is he who is neither a realist nor a romanticist, but in whose work is observable the shaping power of the higher qualities of the methods of genuine realism and the higher qualities of the methods of genuine romance. It is no slight tribute to Mr. Howells that he so often has, as it were, steered his bark within sight of the haven of the ideal novelist. Unfortunately, against his helm is the opposing weight of a theory which, inadequately apprehended or stubbornly adhered to, has ever influenced him to a less happy course. Not only has he written much, and liberally changed his characters and scenery, he has also guided us himself to the proper standpoint whence to regard his collective achievement. The result, on the whole, from the promise of The Undiscovered Country to his maturest productions, Silas Lapham and A Hazard of New Fortunes, is one of disappointment. He has, very inaptly it seems to me, been termed the American Tolstoi, the counterpart of the celebrated Russian novelist whom he so enthusiastically admires, and one of whose books he ranks as among the very foremost, if not (as I seem to remember) the foremost, novel of the world. While Tolstoi, however, is a fascinating painter of human life and human events, despite of certain radical artistic shortcomings, Mr. Howells is an agreeable depicter of types and situations, not by virtue of rare insight or sympathy, but through sheer faculty of artistic presentment. The one is primarily a thinker, a philosopher, a historian perhaps, and only an artist intermittently and transiently; the other, so it seems to me at least, is primarily and almost invariably the artist, but seldom the adequate historian of any complex episode, rarely a philosopher in any deep sense, never, almost, a profound thinker. He is not shallow; but it would be rash to go beyond the courteous reticence of negatives. Still, I am tempted to repeat of him what I have in effect recently written elsewhere upon Tolstoi's collective work, namely, to indicate his radical inability to focus essential and unessential details into one quintessential picture as the real cause of his failure to fascinate us in any very high degree. This fatal lack of discrimination, this too impartial regard of all the dross and débris of every-day life, this equality of emphasis upon the important and the trivial, the vital and the altogether irrelevant, means just so much loss in art. One of the acutest of Mr. Howells's critics (Mr. John M. Robertson) has observed that the ethical significance of his books is too small in proportion to their elaboration. What was true then is still truer now. It was the same critic who, when appreciating certain differences between Mr. Howells and Tourguénieff, remarked that the latter as a rule leaves us contemplating life in the light of his story, while the former sets us considering his story in the light of life. The distinction is admirable. To this day (and shall it be so always?) Mr. Howells is to be judged with the scrupulously suspicious heed we should pay to the record of observance on the part of a very short-sighted man. But lest there should seem anything churlish in this acknowledgment of such a book as Mr. Howells's latest, let me hasten to add that it is written with the wonted charm and grace, the familiar delicate humour, and with the happy, epigrammatic concision of, say, its most serious rival, The Rise of Silas Lapham. It is, however, only fair to add that the author is guilty of several annoying lapses in style, as, for instance, the atrocious barbarism, "he fed it into himself."

Olya Zarelli purports to be "a Tale of an Imperial City." That city is Berlin. No doubt Mr. Cartwright is right in many of the pictures he draws; for in all cities there are the same episodes of grace and disgrace, the same kinds of sins and follies, the same species of rogues and vagabonds, the same innumerable petty dramas of domestic life. But beyond this one may be well inclined to accept his portraiture of social life in Berlin with the proverbial grain of salt. It is an interesting story in parts, and the pseudo-realistic portions want but a touch or two to make them genuinely realistic, and therefore of deep interest; as they stand they are sometimes obviously banal, and, artistically, they are frequently insincere. The hero, Count Klinkenstein, is not at all the romantic Lothario, still less the Don Juan, Mr. Cartwright would have us regard him; in common with the generality of Don Juans, he is merely selfish and vulgar, with an added stupidity of his own.

Fortunately, the new story by the author of The Chilcotes is better than its exceedingly foolish title would lead one to expect—albeit the words are Heine's, where, however, with their context, they are sufficiently apt: "in all her turbulence of soul a very hurricane in petticoats." The present "Hurricane" has already appeared serially under the more attractive title "Great-Grandmamma Severn." Under either name the story will be read with pleasure. It is brightly written, often with noticeable verve, and its characterisation is so lifelike that an occasional flagging of plot-interest may be forgiven. Judith Severn is as winsome in her own way—the way of beauty and youth—as "great-grandmamma" herself in hers. The maid, Farthing, is an acquisition to that great company of fictitious servants wherein there is "such pleasant infinite variety," from Sam Weller to the old steward in The Moonstone. It is one of the very few three-volume novels that are not much too long, though the inference would be rash that it would not have gained artistically by greater concentration. It is, in a word, a delightful story, and one of exceptional promise.

Except for some occasional forced sentiment or absurd hyperbole (e.g., "the lark singing overhead charmed away every vestige of a cloud"), Brownie's Plot is readable enough. It is not an exciting plot that is here unfolded, and to some readers, at least, this will be a matter of congratulation. Even the dénouement, with its "hypnotic accompaniments," as travelling showmen now say with a grandiloquence alien to the Doric of such old-time artists as Codlin and Short, is not at all thrilling. The villain is hypnotised in the most amusingly unreal fashion; and the story, which is commonplace throughout, comes to a satisfactory close.

The lady (assuredly the author of Lord Allanros is a lady), whose pseudonym has such a classic twang, has published a novel with a purpose. It has also an inordinately long and fulsome dedication, tastefully arranged in the shape of a nondescript vase. Item: the quotation, "marriages are made in heaven." Item: "Blessed are all they that fear the Lord, and walk in His ways." The interest of the book falls off after this. If the narrative were not too deadly dull, its perusal might here and there repay the reader, for sometimes the author can unconsciously be very amusing. As it is, so liberally are excerpts from the famous "Marriage a Failure" correspondence in the Daily Telegraph introduced that Mrs. Mona Caird might find the book invaluable for reference. If that lady cares to apply for Lord Allanros—but no, even one who bore her a grudge would scarce go this wanton length. It is, however, eminently satisfactory that B. E. T. A. can, after four hundred and four pages, arrive at exactly the same conclusion as that wherewith she started, the "earnest and emphatic" conclusion that marriage is not a failure.

The best that I can say of Mr. Sherard's Rogues is that it is ridiculous as a picture of actual life, and second-rate as a mere bit of fantastical fooling. If it were not that the book has some promise here and there, it would scarce be worth condemnation. There is no reason why, having worked this off, as children do the measles, Mr. Sherard should not produce something worth reading.

Mr. Sherard may or may not have had much literary experience, but the same cannot be said for Miss Marie Corelli, who has been writing for many years. That she should publish such a trashy story as My Wonderful Wife will disappoint those who, for all their faults of proportion and style, find this lady's longer novels entertaining.

It has seldom been my lot to have to review a novel so badly printed and on such execrable paper as Basil Morton's Transgression; but, notwithstanding these drawbacks, I have read the story, which is mainly about Bohemian life in New York, with steadily growing interest. The Marquise Lanza knows the sordid life of New York as well as Balzac knew the sordid life of Paris. Her latest is much the best of her books. Its realism is strong and true; and, if the nicest literary sense does not dominate Basil Morton's Transgression, much may be forgiven to so vigorous and striking a book. Mme. Lanza is one of the most promising of the so-called American "Balzacians." When she has acquired as much literary tact as will give her writings that quality which they at present lack in too marked measure, she will certainly write a book that will justify the application to her of the honourable and much abused term.

The little posthumous volume by Miss Amy Levy will be gladly purchased by many of the readers of her interesting work in prose and verse. Miss Meredith is very prettily written; and its charm, for all its sedateness, is one to be enhanced by re-perusal—and this is one of the best things that can be said about a book. Miss Meredith, however, has almost nothing of the vigour noticeable in Reuben Sachs—a story of singular promise, now, alas, never to be fulfilled!

WILLIAM SHARP.

SOME VOLUMES OF VERSE.

Merlin: a Dramatic Poem. By Ralph Macleod Fullarton. (Blackwood.) It is, perhaps, remarkable that the story of Merlin has produced such a small quantity of literature. If we except the voluminous prophecies in his name by Partridge, Sidrophel Lilly, and others, the appearances of Merlin in literature are confined to two or three romances, ballads, and plays, until we come to Scott's "Bridal of Triermain" and Tennyson's "Vivien." The very name, Merlin, is fascinating; his story is most romantic, and possesses strong human interest; yet it was left for Tennyson to discover its value. For centuries it lay in the quarry like a block of marble, hieroglyphs scrawled over it by almanack-makers, bits of it chipped off and carried away for doorsteps and pedestals, until the eye that could see beheld the immortal group in the forest of Brocéhände, and liberated it from the tomb where, like the enchanter himself, spell-bound it had slept for centuries. That Tennyson has told the story finally it would be unwise to assert. There is as yet no outstanding feminine embodiment of "the spirit that denies," and in Vivien is a possible female Mephistopheles. Mr. Fullarton's drama is, however, no improvement on the laureate's idyl. In the latter the story is a most modern instance of wisdom seduced by designing youth; such a story as Goethe might have written of himself and Bettina. Mr. Fullarton sees it also in this light, but is more beholden to Goethe than to Tennyson. The opening "Chorus of Spirits," and other passages are reminiscences of "Faust." The language is sprinkled with Miltonic and Shakspearean turns and phrases. Nothing could be fuller of promise in a youthful, and consequently reminiscent, work than the choice, doubtless involuntary, of such models. There are lyrical passages of beauty and power. These lines, from the opening chorus referred to above, may be taken as a specimen:

"The stainless height of heaven rejoices,
The winds shake music from their wings,
And ocean with ten thousand voices
His thunder-psalm majestic sings.
The sun with vast reverberations
Amid his shining choir above,
Awakes with magical vibrations
All earth to bloom, all souls to love.
Night falls; a planetary splendour
Deepens the deep mysterious sky;
With expectation dread yet tender
The sons of God look up on high."

The blank verse, as it could hardly help being in a juvenile work, is characterless; but it is uniformly careful, indeed we do not know whether to regard it as a favourable indication for the future or not that the writer never abandons himself. Thomas Heywood in his curious "Life of Merlin," concerned as to whether the magician had been a heathen, does not overcome the difficulty with the ease of William Rowley, who says plainly that his father was the devil. He rather arrives at the conclusion that he was a stepbrother of Plato's. Mr. Fullarton solves the matter, and reconciles opposites, by making him an evangelical Christian with command over the Platonic elemental spirits; from which we may infer that if he must have had Apollo for father, yet his mother, in all likelihood, would be an erring Christian damsel of Britain. The "old tragic story" is closely followed, and use is made, as in the French romances, of Vivien's jealousy of Morgan; but it is from a lazy altruistic motive that Merlin allows himself to be overcome by his own spell. Vivien is little better than a spiteful drawing-room miss. In attempting to make the dialogue natural Mr. Fullarton degrades it as low as "Ta-ta. Love to Guyomar." It is difficult to predict one way or another from this work; but Mr. Fullarton may do something yet.

Acadian Legends and Lyrics. By Arthur Wentworth Eaton. (White & Allen.) An American book of verse may generally be known by one or other of these tokens. Its average as verse is as a rule higher than that of the usual English volume. There is an attempt at taste in its "get-up"—an attempt, however, which most often just fails, by reason of a certain gaucherie of style. It would fain achieve the dainty perfection of Mr. Austin Dobson's volumes. One can see it striving after that. Another turn of the wheel, so to say, another passage through some process of refinement, and it might have succeeded; but, as it is, it just misses. And the third token comes in the shape of a printed slip of "criticism," usually of impenetrable anonymity both as regards critic and journal—the publishers hoping, we suppose, by its means either to bias the judgment or appeal to the indolence of the reviewer. It is possible, perhaps, that it may occasionally operate in this desirable manner; but our experience is that it only acts as an irritant, and impresses us with nothing except the melancholy fact that such bad criticism is possible. Mr. Eaton's book comes to us with at least the two latter of these birth-marks. His slip of criticism is not, however, ashamed of its parentage. We are told that "Alchemist" of the Toronto Week is responsible for it. It is to him we are to be grateful for interesting personal particulars concerning Mr. Eaton, which need not detain us here; and certainly we should never have known, but for him, that Mr. Eaton "is no common 'poet of melody.'" The truth is—that is, as we see it—that Mr. Eaton is of all too common a type. He is simply respectable. He neither shocks nor delights us—he simply wearies us. Here and there may be a pleasant line, even a strong one, here and there even a whole poem that is pretty; but with life so short, it is hard to imagine anyone except his own friends, or his congregation, devoting a precious hour to their discovery. "La Douleur du Peintre" is probably Mr. Eaton's best thing. There is a pleasant melody and a certain richness about the verse or two we quote, which may perhaps seem to belie our rather depreciatory criticism—but we have to speak of the book as a whole. Here are the verses:

"Their is crape on the studio door
And none pass in to-day,
And the sunlight on the floor
Falls cold and grey;
And the painter's head on his hand is bent
In a new and strange bewilderment.

He has brought a flower of gold,
The daffodil of her France,
It lies in her fingers cold,
A glittering lance;
And he lives once more, with her alone,
The sunny life of Barbizon."

Mr. Eaton's Acadia is not Longfellow's. His Legends but make us feel what a really good poem "Evangeline" is. Perhaps we should have liked his volume better if he had not spoken of his "poet's brain" on the first page, and written a sonnet to his "restless poet soul" later on. Other people should always be left to speak of these.

New Verse in old Vesture. By John Cameron Grant. (E. W. Allen.) This volume is somewhat of an anachronism. It was all very well when "French forms" were first introduced, and every rhymist bought his Théodore de Banville and began to try Ballades and Rondeaux, and the more enthusiastic essayed Sestinas and Chants Royaux—then the experiments were hailed for their novelty, and had an interest as feats of ingenuity. But this time has passed. It has been found that anyone with a turn for rhyme may, without much labour, beat his words into the most complex of these old shapes; and that so practised a versifier as Mr. J. C. Grant can do so will cause no one any surprise or pleasure. Perhaps there may be a few still so much enamoured of the difficulties of such composition that they will carefully examine each separate poem to see whether it strictly follows French examples, both in form and rhyme. Some even may regard with awful wonder such travaux de force as a double Sestina and a double Chant Royal; gloat over the Glosses, sigh over the Virelais, and go into tremors of excitement over the audacity of a Pantoum on the Crucifixion. But they will not be many—at least not among true students and lovers of poetry—for their interest in the movement as a movement is over. The more artificial and complex of the forms have been set aside as unsuitable for the language and for the age; and such a high standard has been reached by a few writers of English Ballades, Rondeaux, and a few other of the shorter forms, that inferior work of the kind has ceased to have any interest. In other words, there is no longer any excuse for versewriters to use these forms for experimental purposes; or, at least, to publish their experiments. They may, as Mr. Gleeson White says, in his preface, be "not bad schooling"; but the "exercises" are waste paper. And we are compelled to say of Mr. Grant's "forms" that they are exercises and nothing more. There is a good deal of poetical thought spread through them, a good deal of ingenious versification; but the rhymes are continually forced, and words twisted to unaccustomed meanings, in order to comply with the rules of "the game." What poet, except in the direst need for a rhyme, would say that he "marked through the spray's salt stinging, the song of Eternity"; or that "the rear with music closed," meaning the end of a feast; or write such a stanza as this?

"Heaven give you peace, and honour hold
You safe in keeping! Never slipp
A valorous spirit from our fold
On earth but we should have it gript
And held in memory, kindly stript
Of little faults which once might be,
For high hearts' sake that faced, tho' whipt,
The 'Corseaire Anglois qui nous prit.'"

Such mangle-tangle as this is frequent throughout the volume; and even in the shorter poems, where there is really no excuse for clumsiness of any kind, we come upon lines like these:

"We cannot read; Time holds the key,
His everlasting movements showing;
They will not change for you and me!"

If Mr. Grant were writing in freer verse he would never sing of keys that show movements. Even his triplets are poor. Here is one of them:

Skip little Triplet
Back to your race,
You are no violet—
Skip little Triplet.
Vainly you sigh, O let Me have a place!
Skip little Triplet
Back to your place.

Why "little Triplet" should be banished because she is not a violet, perhaps only the exigencies of rhyme can explain. One might as well banish the "ballad," because it is not a "salad." In fact, in every instance in this book the form hampers expression instead of aiding it, so that you get neither the beauty of the thought nor the beauty of the form. Unless you can get both, these forms are not worth writing—have, indeed, no reason for existence. Mr. Gleeson White evidently perceives this; but he goes too far when he says:

"It may be stated with dogmatic confidence, and with obstinate insistency, that a ballade (or any of these shapes), although ideally correct in form, is yet but a negative good. All its merits as a poem must be above and beyond this passive obedience to mechanical rules."

If the form be a "good" at all, it must be a positive one; and if all the merits of the poem are above and beyond it, the form is not either a negative or a positive good. The sense may be highly poetical, the form very pretty, but if one does not fit the other the result is abortive.

City Legends. By Will Carleton. (Sampson Low.) In his universally popular Farm Ballads Mr. Will Carleton achieved a success which does not seem at all likely to be repeated; indeed, each succeeding work from his pen seems to have stamped on the mind of the public a fainter impression than that left by its predecessor. In this volume, as in City Ballads, Mr. Carleton has committed what seems to us an error in literary tactics by stringing his poems together in a series of what he calls "chains," which are often mere artificial links, giving to poems entirely unrelated to each other a factitious appearance of unity. There is plenty of variety in the new book, for Mr. Carleton attacks very various themes and treats them in very various ways. In his handling of the more dignified subjects—as, for example, in the dramatic poem dealing with the treason of Benedict Arnold—there is a good deal of fine rhetoric which is often effective and occasionally something more; but here, as in his previous works, Mr. Carleton is seen at his best in those homelier pieces whose themes lend themselves readily to the display of his peculiar gifts of humour and pathos. There is nothing so good as the best of the Farm Ballads, but several times we recognise the unmistakable handling of their author. The volume is very prettily got up, and most attractively illustrated.

NOTES AND NEWS.

DR. SCHWEINFURTH is spending the winter in Cairo, putting together for publication the results of his botanical researches last winter in South-Western Arabia.

WANTON injury has been done to the famous tombs of Beni-Hassan in Egypt, the cartouches having been cut out of the walls of the principal tomb. So far, all attempts to discover the perpetrators of the outrage have been unsuccessful.

MR. ANDREW LANG has a new volume in the press, entitled Old Friends: Essays in Epistolary Parody.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN has made arrangements for the publication of the following books, in addition to Mr. Hall Caine's three-volume novel of The Bondman, announced in the ACADEMY of last week: Hauntings: Fantastic Stories, by Vernon Lee; A Very Strange Family, a novel, in one volume, by Mr. F. W. Robinson; Come Forth! a tale of Jewish life in the time of Christ, by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; Joy and Passion Flower: Poems, by Gerard Bendall; and Idle Musings: Studies in Social Mosaic, by Conder Gray.

MESSRS SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. have in the press a volume by Dr. E. Berdoe, to be entitled Browning's Message to his Time. Dr. Berdoe deals with the poet's religious philosophy and scientific opinions, more especially in reference to the present-day philosophy of the cultivated classes. The volume will also contain some letters from Browning to the author, on religious and scientific subjects.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish before the end of this month an abridged edition of the late Dr. Edersheim's Life and Times of Jesus the Messiah, with a preface by Prof. W. W. Sanday.

MR. W. A. CLOUSTON, to whom we are indebted for so many volumes popularising the folklore of the East, has in the press another work of a similar character, which will be published by Mr. David Nutt. It will take its title, Flowers from a Persian Garden, from the leading essay, which consists of extracts from the Gulistan of Sa'di, with illustrative notes. Other essays will deal in the same way with the well-known Tuti Nama, or "Parrot-Book," the Arabian love-story of Majnun and Layla, Rabbinical legends from the Talmud, and anecdotes of oriental wit and humour. At the end will be added a collection of amusing stories of the middle ages.

MESSRS GEORGE BELL & SONS will publish immediately Dr. R. Giffen's new volume of economical studies entitled The Growth of Capital.

THOSE who read last year that remarkable historical novel, Micah Clarke, will be glad to hear that the author has another volume in the press, even though it is to consist only of short stories. It will be published by Messrs. Longmans, under the title of The Captain of the Polestar.

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD will publish next month in three-volume form the novel, Lady Baby, which has lately been running in their magazine, with the name of the author, Mme. Gerard, on the title-page.

MR. R. McLINTOCK—who will be known to readers of the ACADEMY as a devoted student and translator of Heine—will publish immediately a volume of English versions of some of his longer works, under the title Heine: Novelist and Dramatist. The book, which will be illustrated with a portrait, will be issued by Messrs. Roper & Drowley.

The Metropolitan Year Book for 1890 will be published in a few days by Messrs. Cassell &

Co. Special attention has been devoted to the municipal portion, which will be greatly extended; while the commercial and social sections have been largely developed, and many new features added.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. will publish shortly, in their "Social and Philosophical Series," Socialism in England, by Mr. Sidney Webb. The work was originally prepared at the request of the American Economic Association, and published in their series of monographs. It has now been thoroughly revised and brought up to date for publication here.

A VOLUME containing a reprint of the Market Harborough Parish Records, from the end of the twelfth century to the year 1530, is being edited by the Rev. J. E. Stocks, and will be issued shortly, under the sanction of the trustees, by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MR. J. MEADOWS COOPER—who has put into print so many historical documents relating to Canterbury, including the registers of St. Dunstan's and St. Peter's—has now nearly ready the registers of three more parishes. The first of these to appear will be the register of St. Alphage, which is remarkable for the large proportion of names of French and Flemish origin, as well as of representatives of East Kent families. The volume also contains the will of John, brother of William Caxton; and it is illustrated with plates of memorial brasses. Mr. Cooper's books are privately printed, and the issue of each is limited to 105 copies.

THE next volume in the series of "Philosophical Classics for English Readers" will be Locke, by Prof. A. Campbell Fraser, of Edinburgh.

Two Women or One? from the manuscripts of Dr. Leonard Benary, is the title of a new work by Mr. Henry Harland, which will shortly be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

MESSRS. SONNENSCHNEIN will issue shortly a volume of school sermons, by the Rev. J. T. Bramston, assistant master at Winchester, and son of the late dean.

A NEW serial detective story, called "Written in Red, or the Conspiracy in the North Case," will commence in No. 330 of Cassell's Saturday Journal, to be published on January 22.

THE third volume of Prof. Masson's new edition of The Collected Writings of De Quincey (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black) contains (1) a series of papers here brought together under the title of "London Reminiscences"; and (2) the famous "Confessions of an English Opium Eater." Of this last—which was greatly altered by the author from time to time—Prof. Masson gives a careful history. The form of it which he prints is that which De Quincey himself gave to it when preparing the collective edition of his works (1856), not the shorter form which is familiar from the time when it was first issued as a book. In the Appendix is given the letter in which De Quincey promised the readers of the London Magazine to add a third part to the original two. For frontispiece, the volume has three portraits—De Quincey's father and mother, and his "Bengal uncle" (Col. Penson)—from miniatures in the possession of his daughter, Mrs. F. Baird Smith, the widow of one of the heroes of the Mutiny.

THE nineteenth Fascicule of the Archives Historiques de la Gascogne is vol. ii. (pp. xiv.-451) of the "Ambassade en Turquie de Jean de Gontaut Biron, Baron de Salignac." The volume contains his diplomatic correspondence from November 24, 1605, to September 17, 1610, a month before his death. The work is annotated and enriched with additional letters, and other inedited documents, by one of his descendants, the Comte Th. de Gontaut Biron. There is much in it of interest to Englishmen. The rivalry between French and English agents at the Porte was as keen, and far more unscrupulous, in the seventeenth century than it is in Egypt in the nineteenth. Unexpected details are given of the court of James I., and of the visit of Mustapha Aga to England. The stories of the corsairs, of the rise and downfall of Pashas, and of rebels, read more like pages from the "Arabian Nights" than from actual history.

Correction.—Owing to the non-return of a proof, there was a confusing misprint in the review of Miss Bradley's Life of Arabella Stuart in the ACADEMY of last week. In l. 7 from the end, omit the word "not." The sentence will then read: "The point is that they were out of favour with the people," &c.

TWO TRANSLATIONS.

THE FIRST SONNET OF PETRARCH.

O ye who heed, in these stray leaves of rhyme,
The music of those sighs whereon my heart
Was fed, when I, another man in part
From what I am, passed my first faultful prime!
From him who hath proved love at any time
I trust for pity (pardon all apart)
When between idle hopes and idle smart
I weep and I discourse in changing chime.
Well now I see how I (oft when alone
I redden at myself for very shame)
Was hawked on all men's lips, their common theme;
And of that madness I reap shame, and moan
Repenting, and see clearly how such fame
As the world loves is all a flying dream.

THE FIRST BALLATA OF PETRARCH.

LADY, nor sun nor shade made thee untie
That veil in any fashion,
Soon as thou saw'st in me that lordly passion
Whence from my heart all other longings fly.
Whilst those fair thoughts I could within repress
Which make my spirits periah as they crave,
I saw thy face aflower with pity of me:
But, once my Love his signal to thee gave,
Then the veil swathed again each golden tree;
And love-looks into hiding back must flee;
Thus have I lost what most I wished in thee.
That veil doth sway me quite Which shrouds thy sweet and radiant eyes in night
Whether it shine or freeze, till I must die.

OLIVER ELTON.

OBITUARY.

RICHARD FREDERICK LITTLEDALE, LL.D.

THE Rev. Dr. Littledale, widely known as a theological controversialist, and one of the earliest contributors to the ACADEMY, died on the afternoon of Saturday last, January 11, at his chambers in 9, Red Lion Square. But it is not as a controversialist, nor yet as a theologian (though theology was his life's occupation), that he can fittingly be commemorated here. This is the place, however, to record his scholarship, wide as it was deep, and the skill with which he brought his stores of erudition to bear on all the subjects he touched when those subjects were within his especial range. As a critic of novels, which he read with extraordinary avidity, he often seemed to the present writer somewhat lacking in sympathy and discrimination.

Born at Dublin in 1833, he was educated at Trinity College, of which he became a foundation scholar, took a first-class classical B.A. in 1854, and the degree of LL.D. in 1862. Ordained in 1856, he subsequently held curacies both in Norwich and in London. The state of his health, however, for more than twenty years past had prevented him from undertaking regular clerical duty; but he was continuously engaged in literary work mainly of a theological kind. His conspicuous ability soon brought him distinction, and he received the friendship of many eminent men. So many are his books that space forbids their enumeration. It must be sufficient, therefore, to say they consist of liturgical and exegetic, as well as controversial, works. The best known is, of course, Plain Reasons against joining the Church of Rome; and his recently published volume on the Petrine Claims was chiefly devoted to another aspect of the same subject. Besides writing constantly on ecclesiastical topics in the journals, he was the author of several important articles in the Encyclopaedia Britannica and in the new edition of Chambers's Encyclopaedia. He showed his versatility by translating into Greek verse Thackeray's "Little Billee," and the piece has obtained some celebrity. Nor was this the only instance on his part of literary tours de force.

It is in his private capacity that I wish more particularly to speak of Dr. Littledale here; for on theological questions we widely differed. When engaged in polemics he was, I suppose, a hard bitter: one who gave his opponents little mercy, and, therefore, received little from them in return. But, in private intercourse, there never lived a man whose charm of manner was more perfect; although a close observer could easily perceive the qualities which made his public career what it was. With his keen and clear, though deeply-sunken, eyes, and long grey beard sweeping over his breast, he always embodied my ideal of some benevolent and learned monk of the third or fourth century in the midst of an Alexandrian library; and his chambers, full of ecclesiastical ornaments, and resembling the abode of a recluse, heightened this impression. Nevertheless, his character had another, and very different, side. He was an excellent talker, and his humour was intensified by a perceptible brogue. No one liked better to tell a good story, or could tell it with better effect; and on such occasions he threw aside, almost with a boyish gusto, the bearing of the scholar. His library—an extensive and a most valuable one—was especially rich in tomes treating of the subjects in which he was a master; and he never seemed more thoroughly at his ease than when expatiating, to an appreciative listener, on the contents or merits of some half-forgotten folio. His own pleasure in such talk was very evident; and, as I write, I can see in imagination the student figure, bent with ill-health and study, yet moving with wonderful alertness among his beloved books. Nor was his library confined entirely to serious literature. The last time I saw him he showed me the tiny book he thought the smallest ever printed, and concerning which he had written to the Fall Mall Gazette. Few people, on looking at it, would doubt the correctness of his opinion. Meant for the waistcoat pocket, it was a bijou Annual, consisting of verses by L.E.L. and others, which almost required a microscope to decipher them.

Dr. Littledale suffered from a disease of the spinal cord, the nature of which, he told me, his physicians never fully understood. This prevented his travelling by rail, or taking carriage exercise, though, happily, he was able to walk with comparative comfort. He used laughingly to remark that his brain would never work except in sight of brick walls; and this, for him, was a fortunate circumstance, as he almost constantly lived in London. After all, what most impressed me about him was the cheerful and uncomplaining bravery with which he encountered, amid perpetual physical suffering (he said himself that he was never conscious of freedom from pain), the daily toil that was to him a necessity. In this there was something noble and stimulating; and—to some of us, at least—the world without him will never seem quite so attractive.

H. T. MACKENZIE BELL.

PERCY GREG.

MR. PERCY GREG, who died on Christmas Eve, was a native of Manchester, where he was born in 1836. His father was Mr. William Rathbone Greg, the well-known writer on social and economical questions. Mr. Percy Greg devoted himself to literature and journalism; and, after serving on the Manchester Guardian, removed to London, where he wrote leading articles for the Standard and other papers. Some of his earliest work appeared under the name of Lionel H. Holdreth. Two volumes, entitled Shadows of the Past and The Spirit of Inquiry, were radical in their tone, as to both theology and politics. The list of books published under his own name is lengthy: Interleaves in the Work-day Prose of Twenty Years (1875), The Devil's Advocate (1878), Across the Zodiac (1880), Errant (1880), Ivy, Cousin and Bride (1881), Sanguelac (1883), Without God (1883), The Verge of Night (1885), The History of the United States (1887). Mr. Greg was to the last a fierce partisan of the South in the war of the Secession, and the "Lost Cause" had no advocate on the other side of the Atlantic so warm and so implacable. Perhaps his best book is Interleaves—a little volume of verse that is very little known. Here too the Southern Confederacy is heroically sung; but, apart from these mistaken efforts, it contains "The Martyr of Doubt," "The Martyr of Faith," "Why should the Atheist fear to Die?" "Thy Kingdom come," and "Hallowed be thy Name." These pieces are expressive of widely different sentiments; but all are marked by strong poetic feeling. The two last-named have been included in the recent Hymnal edited by the Rev. John Hunter.

W. E. A. A.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THERE is a great improvement in the Antiquary with the new year. The articles, with but a single exception, are good. The chief fault we have to find is that the writers have too rigorously practised the art of compression. This may be wise where mere literature is concerned, but it is harmful when the writer is dealing with facts. The account of the magical processes used for the discovery of a theft of valuables from Holbeach Church is most curious. We should like to know whence it comes; from the records of the Star Chamber we imagine. Mr. R. C. Hope's article on "Holy Wells" is but a fragment. We trust it will be continued through many numbers. This is at present an almost unworked mine. Our own experience leads us to conjecture that St. Helen was a common patron of miraculous wells. Can anyone explain the reason? The Rev. G. F. Browne contributes a paper on a supposed Saxon altar-slab found at Cambridge. It is a relic well worthy of preservation. We do not see, however, any data on which to ground a theory as to its age.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for January contains a very valuable article (forty-two pages long) by Dr. Kuenen on the history of the Old Testament priesthood and the antiquity of the priestly law. It is chiefly directed to removing the scruple which Graf Baudissin's recent work may have raised in some minds, as if the results thought to have been gained were insecure. Dr. van Bell discusses Paulsen's System der Ethik, and A. C. Leendertz treats of the posthumous work of Kant, Vom Uebergange von den metaphysischen Anfangsgründen der Naturwissenschaft zur Physik, and of an early Dutch "apostle" of Kant. Among other notices, that of Sayce's Hibbert Lectures, by Prof. Tiele, is attractive from its width of knowledge and geniality of tone. Nowhere has the author met with a kinder and juster appreciation than in this Dutch review.

GLOSSES FROM TURIN AND THE VATICAN.

Turin: Dec. 19, 1889.

For the last seven weeks I have been gloses-hunting in the Latin MSS. older than the thirteenth century which are preserved in the libraries of Turin, Ivrea, Vercelli, Parma, Modena, and Rome. I now propose to lay before the readers of the ACADEMY—those especially who are interested in Celtic or in Teutonic philology—some of the results of my expedition. For the present I shall set forth my finds under five heads: (1) Old-Irish, (2) Old-Breton, (3) Anglo-Saxon, (4) Old-High-German, and (5) Mediaeval Latin. A list of ancient documents relating to the history and Latin literature of Great Britain and Ireland, which I saw in one or other of the aforesaid libraries, must be reserved for a future communication.

I. OLD-IRISH.

One of the Bobbio MSS. now in the Biblioteca Nazionale, Turin, is an eleventh-century copy of Walafrid Strabo's Life of S. Gall, marked F. IV. 24. The last folio (93) of this codex is palimpsest, the original writing being a fragment of a Latin version of the second Epistle General of Peter, in an Irish hand of the ninth century. This fragment contains many glosses—some in Latin, others in Irish. Of the latter (eighteen in number) the following are specimens: Recto—ni freadireoi (gl. non praesto sunt haec); enuded [f] isidai (gl. et quidem scientes); inresomni * (gl. suscitare nos), noch testaidai (gl. ut frequenter habere nos possitis). Verso—inmar (gl. quasi), glaidete (gl. rugientibus); gande (gl. acturi sunt); forbriate (gl. obpressum); sama cor l. inna eulach (gl. nefandorum); adnoodur (gl. reservare); is daddir duib [leg. duaid] oi forrgot (gl. inrationabilia peccata), and i nertis (gl. fortitudinis), where nertis is the dat. sg. of nerte = W. nerthedd.

One of the fragments in a portfolio in the same library, marked F. VI. 2, is a commentary on S. Matthew, c. 27, also in an Irish hand, of the ninth century. Here, over "iesum flagellatum," the scribe has written dilas com beto, which seems to mean "forfeiture without faults" (beto, acc. pl. of béi). I miscopied this gloss in 1861; and in consequence, my Goidelica, p. 2, and Prof. Zimmer's Glossae Hibernicae, p. xviii, require to be corrected.

In the Vatican library, also, I found, in the MSS. marked Palatine 68 and Regina 215, a few Irish glosses (e.g. fer gl. herba, boitha gl. tabernaculis, barr gl. pilliculus, olban gl. brucus), which had not previously been noticed. But they are of small importance, unlike, in this respect, the Old-Breton glosses, which will now be set forth.

II. OLD-BRETON.

The Old-Breton glosses in the Vatican library are twenty-eight in number, twenty-five in a tenth-century copy of Orosius' Historia, written at the cost of a deacon named Lioemonoc, and now marked Regina 296, and three in a twelfth-century copy of the same work marked Regina 691. The rarity of Breton glosses, and the light which they often throw on the other Celtic languages, make this find not only interesting but important.

Regina 296.

Fo. 3b 1, triquadrum triolinoe [= Irish triwilmach].
15a 2, placito ear. iu contionem (sainis) protraxit.

27b 1, obse guisail.

32a 2, spiculis .i. telis .i. guugoiuou.

34b 2, conducunt .i. condadant .i. conduc-tionem faciunt.

* This gloss, which means "wherein we shall arise," is obviously misplaced, as it refers to the "tabernaculo" (corporis) immediately preceding "suscitare uos."

Fo. 35a 1, duas factiones .i. guerin.
35b 2, pulcibus euenn [W. chwain].
36a 1, nauseantem alemauh.
36a 2, proletarios erublobion.
37b 2, hebesceret blino .i. stupesceret.
40a 2, sustulit .i. guntricsot.
58a 1, ademptatis [leg. ademptis] guuprinisti- cion.
58b 2, ammentis .i. innbisiou. 74b 2, ammenta
.i. innbisiou.
59a 1, stratoris .i. saumucou [from sagma].
59b 1, pessum .i. in-madu [= Old-Irish im- mada].
64a 2, sarmentis .i. uineae purgamentis .i.
minutolou.
70a 1, pendulo [rectius putres] boco.
73a 1, aestuaria .i. morgablou .i. per quae mare reciprocum tum accedit tum recedit.
73b 2, Trinouantum firmissima ciuitas .i. ciuitas quae britannice dicitur torntrient.
75b 1, agger .i. calchuit .i. pice .i. a pie .i. saouo
[leg. sevo or sebo] .i. soui.
100a 1, a burgos .i. burgolion ["Burgundiones"]
a burgi .i. burgolion.

Regina 691.

Fo. 50b, impensis .i. impineticion.
51b, gestatorum .i. euuouion.
53a, corbem .i. caguel [from the Low-Latin cauella].

Of these glosses sainis, erublobion, torn-trient, and euuouion are obscure to me, and I shall be grateful to any Celtic scholar who will explain them. I conjecture that the second stands for eru-bolbion "agrestes," "coloni," where eru is = Corn. eru (gl. ager), W. erw, and bolbion is a mutation of poblion, pl. of popl = Lat. populus.

There is also in Regina 465, fo. 83a, a list of the bishops of Nantes, among which are some Latinised Breton names, eg. Nonnechius, Alannus, Trugarius.

III. ANGLO-SAXON.

There are at least three fragments of Anglo-Saxon prose in the Vatican library. The first in Regina 497, fo. 71b, is a portion of Alfred's translation of Orosius, book iv., c. 11. The second, in Regina 946, fo. 75b, is the introduction to, and the first section of, the law of King Ethelred printed in Ancient Laws and Institutes of England, i. 304, where the introduction is omitted. The third, in Regina 1283, fo. 114b, begins, "On sumum geara bið se mōna xli. eifum geniwod, fram þare halgan easteritit," and agrees with the translation of Bede de temporibus, printed in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 234, 248, 250. All these fragments, as I learn from Prof. Napier, have been published by Prof. Steinmeyer in the Zeitschrift für deutsches Alterthum, xxiv. 192-3. But Steinmeyer seems to have missed the following glosses, which Mr. Lindsay and I found in a copy of Bede's hexametrical poem on S. Guthbert's miracles, marked Regina 204. I use w for the rune wen.

Fo. 5b, Peruigil én (nu) modico magnalia tempore crevi.
8b, Ipsa sui leuitate perit. patriasque (grecynde)
sub umbras (under scada)
17a, Caederet ut pectori arboreo de pabula cono
(i. coppe).
20a, Qua (onðæra) uigil (i. weart) e speculis pernox seruauerat (i. wearduda) horam [hora, Giles].
20b, Elatos coram gremio (on fæþme) leuis inderet arcae.
21a, Hanc findi placuit, medium (healf) pia
membra receptant,
Seruatur medium signi memorabilis
(gemyn) index.
24a, Atque genas maculis Huor (lael) respergit adurens (suelende).

The context of each of the above lines may be found in Giles' Venerabilis Bedae Opera, i., pp. 6, 12, 24, 28, 29, 33.

There are also, in a calendar prefixed to Regina 12 (an eleventh-century codex which formerly belonged to S. Edmund's in Suffolk), twenty-one Anglo-Saxon names of male and female saints Latinised and in the gen. sg.

IV. OLD-HIGH-GERMAN.

There is a large number of Old-High-German glosses in the Vatican Library, some of which have been published by Prof. Steinmeyer in his Althoch-deutsche Glossen, ii. 409, others (from Regina 1701) by M. L. Duvau in the Mélanges de l'Ecole française de Rome, t. vii., and in the Mémoires de la Société de Linguistique de Paris, t. vi., pp. 359-367. So far as I can ascertain, the following have not yet appeared in print, though Bethmann mentioned the existence of some of them in the Archiv der Gesellschaft für ältere deutsche Geschichtskunde, vol. xii. pp. 258, 332, 333.

Vatic. 7222.

This is a collection of canons, written apparently in the ninth century. At the end (pp. 488, 489) is a large number of glosses in double columns, headed Incipiunt Glossae. Most of these are in Latin; but among them are the following Old-High-German:

Seditiosus id est qui rixas et dissensiones uel iniurias necnon qui dicitur in rustica parabola ungareh. Pernitiosum quam per peius. frauah. Refrictur ridet (leg. ribent?). Pernitio est fraisa ist. Sollicitare halon. Suggestionem manunga. Proteruus abuh. Emergentes farsenchen. Conqueri uel quaeati conplangere. chumen. Nihil obesse Niouet niterae. Ignauia unuistum. Ludicris einu(u)gi. Fraudes furationes l. feich.

So far as they go, these agree closely with the glosses printed by Steinmeyer, ii. 89-90 (No. DLXXXVII.), from MSS. in Paris and Rheims.

Palatina 242.

This comprises an eleventh-century copy of certain prose works by Sedulius Scottus. In the part relating to S. Jerome's prefaces and prologue to the Gospels there are the following Old-High-German glosses:

Fo. 9b, collationem esiamens prahti. temeritate frauah. 10a, Exemplaria piidpuoch. 10b, Exemplar piidpuoch. 12a, imbibent keelintem. 12b, imbibit keelant. a temerariis frauallen. 13a, arguta. subtili chleiner. suspicionem uidarsiht. zurtriuuida. solidissimum argumentum chleini. list. maledicos skellara. 14a, maledicorum skellarro. 15a, A uitiosis interpretibus. malis. puosuwirdigen. dormitantibus. indoctis propria incuria captis engueu(a)rem. 15b, notauit seraluoc. institutum kemeintas. cum industria keuuerido. chleini. klesti. uiistume. 18a, emendarios puosilapuooh. hebraice ueritatis consideratione keuuerido. 19b, industria. ingenio. klesti. 20a, de curiosis foraklinen. fruuuigernem. 21b, ceterum andarsuabo. 23b, argumento chleini. 25b, recurrens uidarilente. 23b, de continuatis samhaften. continuatas samhaften. 58a, sperat ferdingit.

There is also in fo. 29b a gloss on "praesignauerint," which I could not read with certainty. Perhaps it is keestichomont.

Regina 469.

A tenth-century copy of Walafrid Strabo's Carmina. At the end are three or four German glosses, written as probationes pennae, one of which is mitra huot.

Regina 598.

This is a collection of fragments of different codices. On fo. 16b is a small Latin glossary, in which is catax dehothalo. And on fo. 26 is a piece in a hand of the tenth (?) century, entitled Epistola Hypocratis, which contains the following glosses: 26a, alopitia [ἀλωπεκία] orint. scrofae pula. 26b, nasturtium oreuo. cilicacus kel:unt. desinteria askan. emorroidas pula in aroe.

Regina 1861.

This is a copy of Chalcidius in Timaeum. It contains on fo. 4a a single Old-High-German gloss, which is written in cipher, namely: orbitis xxbgbnfkspm. Here each vowel is represented by the consonant which in the Latin alphabet immediately follows it. Read, therefore, uuaganleison. In Regina 358 there are eighteen Old-High-German glosses in a similar cipher, which have been published by Steinmeyer.

* Half of the third letter of this word has been cut off by the bookbinder.

Palatina 288.

This codex (in 8°, ff. 302), written in the eleventh century, contains, besides a number of biblical glosses, Baeda super Tobiam, Rabanus Maurus super nonnullos libros bible, tracts on the Sacraments, quaedam ex iure canonico, &c. The glosses are in ff. 53a—61a. Most of them are in Latin; but the following late Old-High-German occur:

- Fo. 54b, Virgultum sumorladda. leuigatus githigenen.
 55a 1, craticula hurl. a craterost. ex occipicio innullon. capitulum houbitlooh. Feminalia (in druch).
 55a 2, Reticulum nezi. lecoris leberum. piperis peffores. Acet[a]bulum esschfas. in finibus in ängon.
 55b 1, Strues huffo. Ascellas oeheson. tenuis (leg. azyza) derbi. Renunculi lumbola. Noctua uula. niticorax [νυκτι-κόραξ] nathram. Bubo huwo. onocratalon horäumal.
 55b 2, Vpupa videhoffo. Stellio mol. Talpa mul uulph.
 56a 1, Nouerca stiff muder. Gupus *hooer. Lippus weihouger l. surouger. Colonus knos. Cicatrix uestigium uulneris lilevi. Liba flado. Spatulæ suerdalon l. elata folia palmarum eo quod erecte et spatia. i. gladiis sunt similes. Mortarium mursert. Batilla seuueli. Zelotiple seiruasgermi (over w is written f, over g is written h).
 56a 2, Actinum. uilis potus seruorum uisibus aptus. id est lürum. Pops [leg. pepo] pedema. Enigma rediles questio obscura. Lupanar huarhu.
 56b 1, Manzer hurkin filii scorti. Procaz fraser improbus. protelentur gilmet werden.
 56b 2, Amici hironice dixit. i. munici.
 57a a, Siro quando per iota (i. iota) scribitur thaho significat. Vnde sirtes dicuntur.
 57b 1, sudes stipites sticken.
 57b 2, Anaboladium sabsaban [leg. saban] amictorium lineum feminarum quo humeri operiuntur. Stuppa. awirke†. canabi hānaffes. Aria denns. l. houestat.
 58a 1, campestris pharan. geflidi. Subtemen ueual. In canalibus in nolin l. dragin (o written over a). Palæa stro. Vadum wert [leg. wurt]. Sicoel hebraice genus ponderis. i. enza (i written over v). Theristrum hulleduch. pallium subtilissimum dicitur quo in estate mulieres utuntur. Pincerna büttigilari. Pistor druchesso. Canistrum seina. Conicitor interpretis radissari (e written over the second a).
 58a 2, Dinersorium gastnissi. Marsupium sekkil. Acrarium drese hus. domus ubi aes ponitur. Loculum keits (t), in marg. beddi. Fiscellam curbilen. Scirpeam binizzin. in carecto in binisse. in loco paluati ubi carex habundat. in papione in binizzanfasse. Rubus dorn studa. § lignum spinosum 58b 1, Sciniphes knellissa. Patruellis stieren sun (in marg. federen sun). Adpensum cicagum. coturnices quahtelum. Pilo. tonsum stamphe.
 58b 2, Coriandrum colander (v written over o). Subula uilla. Stips gizing. Contestare zigureundine. Luscus einoger. Scabro hurnis. Sperulas soibun. Emunctorie. kluni. i. klufdun quibus candelæ mundauntur. Fibula nuga ||
 59b 2, Cucuma cohma. fuscina kroovel. fenus ueddi. sistorcie malaha l. dasga.
 60a 1, fornix euibugo. Oubitus clafdera. Palmus mun. Cassis helm. Ocrea beinberga. formella formizzi†. i. caseus. Perendie egesterem.

* hooer (gl. gippus), Reg. 1701.† morsari, Reg. 1701.‡ = auirchi (gl. stuppa), Reg. 1701.§ studa (gl. frutex), Reg. 1701.|| = nusca (gl. lunula), Reg. 1701. Cognate with Old-Irish nasc.¶ A loan from formaticum, whence formaggio, formage. The "forinissi" in Steinmeyer, i. 407, is obviously a scribal error.

Fo. 60a 2, Alligatura hangilla. Capsella capitlin.
 61a 2, De dolatis lapidibus gimasseton steinon.
 Coccleæ scale l. uentilachin.
 There are many German names in Vatican 3101, fo. 73, which would be worth copying for a new edition of Förstemann's Altddeutsches Namenbuch.

V. MEDIAEVAL LATIN.

Turin, Bibl. Nazionale, F. IV. 12 (Vita Columbani), fo. 1, parōra genus nauis. scarbea aspera.
 lintris nauis. ascoque* similiter genus nauis.
 The following are from the Vatican library:
 Regina 849 (Canones, saec. x.), fo. 115a, tumultu nauis; 115b, tumultus nauis. Hence (and not from noza or nausea) is the French and English noise.
 Regina 549 (Gesta Francorum, saec. xii.), fo.
 136b, col. 1. Ite et forsitate [in marg.] teutoni-cum uerbum, id est inquire.
 Regina 81 (Hisperica Famina, saec. x.), fo. 1b, iduma. manu. 8a horanos caelum. 10b trabias nestes regales. Here iduma seems formed from the Hebrew gādhayim. Horanos is, of course, oiparés, and trabias trabes.
 Vaticana, 7222, p. 488 (glossary to canons, saec. x.). Obtilti tituli. Philasteria. id est .x.
 uerba legis, uel scriptura uena quod ligat homo aut super caballum aut super caput suum. P.
 489. temellici† locutores. tafidus credulus.
 Appareor oboedior. Lesus debitor. Perfindiant.
 perueniat. Decessor. dispectior. Platum.
 homo uel corpus. Telleum terrestre. Affiam.
 animam. Rentur sperant. Contant. temptant.
 Penplices quincupli. Quamplices quadrupli. Circumcelliones qui e diuersis cellis circumueunt.
 But the greatest collection of strange Latin words in the Vatican library is in Vatic. 3321—a seventh-century codex in uncials—whence it has just been printed by Goetz, in the fourth volume of the Corpus Glossariorum Latinorum, pp. 3-198.
 Of these words, the most interesting, perhaps, is uidubium, ‡ a loan from a Gaulish uidu-lion, represented by the Irish fid-ba (gl. falcstrum), the Prov. vesoig, and the French vouge, as to the etymology of which, all that Littré says is "Origine inconnue."

WHITLEY STOKES

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

ROSENBERG, A. Aus der Düsseldorf'schen Malerschule.
 Studien u. Skizzen. Leipzig: Seemann. 95 M.

HISTORY.

HANSEN, G. v. Alte russische Urkunden, die im
 Revaler Stadtarchiv aufbewahrt werden. Reval:
 Kluge. 2 M. 50 Pf.
 PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven.
 41. Bd. Protokolle u. Relationen d. branden-burgischen Geheimen Rathes aus der Zeit d.
 Kurfürsten Friedrich Wilhelm. Von O. Meierardu. 1. Bd. Bis zum 14. Apr. 1648. Leipzig:
 Hirzel. 30 M.

THEOLOGY.

KUHNEN, A. Historisch-kritisch Onderzoek naar het Ontstaan en de Versameling van de Boeken des ouden Verbonds. Tweede Deel. De profetische
 Boeken. Leiden: Eegels en Zoon. Fl. 5.85.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

ZITTEL, K. A. Handbuch der Paläontologie. 1. Abth.
 Paläozoologie. 1. Lfg. 8 M. 2. Abth. Paläophysologie. Bearb. v. A. Schenk. 8. Lfg. 8 M.
 60 Pf. München: Oldenbourg.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

BIDDER, H. De Strabonis studii Homerici capita selecta. Königsberg-L.-Pr.: Koch. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 HARTMANN, J. J. Analecta Xenophontea nova. Leiden:
 van Doesburgh. 5 fl. 80 c.
 Κορυδαίνης, Σ. Δ. Διορθώτικα εἰς τὰ ἔθνη Στεφανοῦ τοῦ Βυζαντίου. Ἐκδοτὴς α'. Jena: Doebereiner
 6 M.
 KUTTNER, M. Das Naturgefühl der Altfranzosen u. sein Einfluss auf ihre Dichtung. Leipzig: Fock.
 2 M.

* See Ducange, s.v. ascus.† The first letter is doubtful. Read thymelici.‡ It occurs on fo. 141a (Corpus G. L. iv. 171):
 Sica genus armorum est simile uidubio [leg. uidubio]. Ducange's bidubium is corrupt. See Thurneyssen in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, xxxi. 83-84.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LINE-NUMBERING IN BROWNING'S
"RING AND THE BOOK."

London: Jan. 14, 1890.

Mr. Benjamin Sagar, of Willow Bank, Heaton Moor, near Manchester, has already started work upon his self-imposed task, the compilation of a Subject-and-Word-Lexicon to Browning's Works. I having told him the established rule for numbering broken lines of verse—that all bits of one line counted as a single whole—he called my attention to the fact that this was not the system adopted in The Ring and the Book; for in that poem, the only one of Browning's which was published with line-numbers, every half-line was counted as a whole one. Incredible as this statement appears, it is nevertheless true. Not only in the original edition printed by Smith, Elder & Co., but in the reprint in the sixteen-volume edition of Browning's Works, printed by Spottiswoode & Co., the two opening half-lines of the poem—

"Do you see this Ring?"

'Tis Rome-work, made to match"— are numbered as two whole lines, and so are every other two halves or parts right through the complete work. Needless to say that the blunder was not Browning's. His MS. has no such numbering, as the facsimiles in the Pall Mall Budget of December 19, 1889, show. This mis-numbering of The Ring and the Book escaped my notice when compiling my Browning Bibliography, though I had corrected mistakes in the numbering of the "Globe" Shakspeare.

All Browning students will wish Mr. Sagar success in his arduous undertaking. Possibly some may care to offer him help.

F. J. FURNIVALL.

MIDDLE-ENGLISH NOTES.

London: January 11, 1890.

By way of supplement to my remarks on the word tryst in the ACADEMY of this day, I wish to remark that Du Cange gives terstra as a variant of tristra, and that a poem of Froisart, cited by Lacurne, has tristre (masc.), apparently in the sense of tertre "mound." These facts seem to point to the identity of the words tristre and tertre. The latter word occurs in the sense "piece of ground," as well as in the sense still current. The derivation from terrae torus, sanctioned by Diez, Scheler, and Littré, is surely not phonetically possible. I do not know whether Romanic philologists will entertain the suggestion that terra may, in Gaul, have given rise to a derivative of the form teristrum*, teristra*, with the accent fluctuating between the first and the second syllable. If this hypothesis be admissible, it will, I suppose, account for the forms tristre, terstre, tertre, and also for the twofold sense in which tertre occurs; and the original English meaning of tristre, tryst would be the "portion of ground" assigned to each person in certain modes of hunting. The wider sense "rendezvous" might easily have been developed from this, and it is very likely that the word would be at an early period confused with trist=trust.

HENRY BRADLEY.

"RAGMAN," "RAGMAN-ROLL."

Wimbledon: Jan. 13, 1890.

With reference to Mr. Bradley's remarks on this word in the ACADEMY of January 11, I can state that the records in connexion with the financial operations of Richard II. and Richard III. make it clear that a "ragman" or "rageman"—I believe the word is spelled both ways—meant simply a bond or personal obligation; in legal phrase, a "deed poll," as opposed to an indenture. The "ragmans" of the two Richards were money-bonds, which the gentry were required to subscribe for amounts corresponding to their means. The "ragmans" of the Scottish gentry were bonds of personal allegiance to Edward I. A ragman-roll is simply a file or engrossment of ragmans or bonds; as an indenture roll is a file or engrossment of indentures.

The historical "Ragman-Roll" might be rendered in modern English as "Roll of the [homage] bonds [of the Scottish gentry]." On the etymology of the word I can throw no light.

J. H. RAMSAY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Jan. 19, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "National Life and Thought among Gipsies," by F. Hindes Groomer.

MONDAY, Jan. 20, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Trunk," I., by Prof. J. Marshall.

5 p.m. London Institution: "Coal and what we get from it," by Prof. R. Meldola.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Old Masters' Exhibition of 1890," V., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Universals," by Mr. M. H. Dzielicki.

8.50 p.m. Geographical: "Mr. J. R. W. Pigott's Journey to the Upper Tana in 1889," by Mr. E. G. Ravenstein; "The Mouths of the Zambesi," by Mr. Daniel J. Rankin.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Electromagnet," I., by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.

TUESDAY, Jan. 21, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Post-Darwinian Period," I., by Prof. G. J. Romanes.

5 p.m. Society of Arts: "Tea, Coffee, and Cocoa Industries of Ceylon," by Mr. John Loudoun Shand.

7.45 p.m. Statistical: "Popular Education in England and Wales since 1839," by Mr. Rowland Hamilton.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "Recent Dock Extensions at Liverpool," by Mr. G. F. Lyster.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 22, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Trunk," II., by Prof. J. Marshall.

8 p.m. Geological: "The Crystalline Schists and their Relation to the Mesozoic Rocks in the Lepontine Alps," by Prof. T. G. Bonney; "The Variscite Rocks of Mont Genève," by Messrs. Grenville A. J. Cole and J. W. Gregory.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Vision-Testing for Practical Purposes," by Mr. R. Brudenell Carter.

THURSDAY, Jan. 23, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Sculpture in Relation to the Age," I., by Mr. E. R. Mullins.

6 p.m. London Institution: "The Shape of Leaves and Cotyledons," by Mr. John Lubbock.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Old Masters' Exhibition of 1890," VI., by Mr. J. E. Hodgson.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Discussion, "Electricity," by the President.

FRIDAY, Jan. 24, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Upper Limb," I., by Prof. J. Marshall.

7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting, "The Up-keep of Metalled Roads in Ceylon," by Mr. T. H. Chapman.

8 p.m. Philological: A Dictionary Meeting, by Dr. J. A. H. Murray.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Scientific Work of Joule," by Prof. Dewar.

SATURDAY, Jan. 25, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Natural History of the Horse and of its Extinct and Existing Allies," I., by Prof. Flower.

8.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

The Language of the New Testament. By the late Rev. William Henry Simcox. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

It is curious to look back now, as one may so easily do with the help of one's Winer, on the controversy that went on for something like two centuries or more about the language of the New Testament: one party maintaining that it was the best and purest of Greek, except perhaps where a Hebraism was purposely introduced to express that for which any other language was inadequate, on the principle, no doubt, that the Holy Spirit could not commit a solecism; the other following the lead of Erasmus in contending that the speech of the Apostles was altogether rude and unpolished, and remote from the accuracy and elegance of the classical writers.

The commonsense view would seem to be that the authors of the New Testament wrote in the current Greek of their day; that this language, having been modified by the course of time and by the many disturbing influences to which it would be exposed in its rapid diffusion among the different peoples embraced in Alexander's empire, could not be pure Greek according to the standard of Plato or Demosthenes; that, being men of various degrees of culture and capacity, the New Testament writers would use this language with different degrees of elegance and mastery; and that, so far as, in their hands, it received any foreign colouring, that colouring would be Hebrew. This is the view which, I suppose, now universally prevails, though it may be, perhaps, that a certain pedantry still influences our exegesis, and that help in the interpretation of the New Testament has not yet been sufficiently sought from modern Greek. It is certainly the view taken in this excellent little work; and nothing could well be better in its way than Mr. Simcox's short introduction, in which he treats of the "the Greek Nation and Language after Alexander," and shows how inevitable it was that the new Greek should be a modified form of Attic, but with a tendency to break up into new varieties under the widely differing influences of particular localities.

In his first chapter Mr. Simcox goes on to treat specially of the language of the Jewish Hellenists, which he describes as "a form of the post-Alexandrine or 'common dialect' of Greek, modified partly by the local or dialectal peculiarities of Alexandria and its neighbourhood, but more extensively by a simplification of grammar and idiom, by an abandonment of the antithetical and rhetorical form of sentence usual in classical Greek, and by some adoption or imitation of Semitic idioms, or at least the choice of such Greek idioms as resembled the Semitic most."

We may or may not agree with him in thinking that this language was specially designed by Providence as a medium of divine revelation; we may possibly think him too sweeping in characterising the Greek of the New Testament as a whole, without distinction of authors, as "half-Hebraised," and as "neither a very elegant nor a very expressive language"; but no one will dispute with him that it is "a many-sided language, an eminently translatable language." Yet this is certainly true in differing degrees of the different books of the New Testament.

It is not necessary to follow the author in his detailed treatment of the characteristics of New Testament Greek in its various grammatical relations; but one great merit of the work may be pointed out—that it draws the line so firmly between grammar and exegesis, letting neither intrude on the province of the other. Thus, in regard to John i. 1, there is the very just remark that Θεός in the last clause of the verse is without the article, not because John either wished to teach Arianism on the one hand, or to avoid Sabellianism on the other, but simply because it is the predicate in the sentence. It may be noticed, too, in reference to another vexed passage, Titus ii. 13, that Mr. Simcox decides unhesitatingly against the text of the Revised Version, for the less orthodox (if it be so) of the two possible versions, regarding Θεοῦ and σωτήρ as two Persons, though only the former has the article. The same remark, of course, applies to 2 Peter i. 1. "The gen. ἡμῶν," says Mr. Simcox, "which is expressed in St. Paul and supplied in St. Peter, makes σωτήρ sufficiently definite without it." In fact, may we not add, if Paul had been thinking of only one Person, he would have written τοῦ μεγάλου Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ σωτήρος? This, however, is just what the author of 2 Peter does write, omitting the μέγαν; and ought we not therefore to have a different rendering there, though this was not Mr. Simcox's opinion?

It is but right to say, before concluding this notice, that those who possess Winer's Grammatik need not think that they will find they have nothing to learn from this much smaller and less complete work, which is, notwithstanding, evidently the result of independent study and scholarship. The only fault to be found with it is perhaps its name, which seems to promise more than is either performed or attempted. It is really a work on the grammar of the New Testament language; but the work of another recently deceased Oxford scholar—Dr. Hatch's Essays in Biblical Greek—shows that the dictionary offers a yet almost unexplored field to the student.

ROBERT B. DRUMMOND.

MATHEMATICAL BOOKS.

American Journal of Mathematics. Vol. xii., Nos. 1, 2. (Baltimore.) These two numbers contain five memoirs. Mr. A. R. Forsyth writes on "Systems of Ternariants that are algebraically complete" (pp. 1-60, 115-160). The memoir is divided into three parts, and deals with "the theory of the algebraically independent concomitants of ternary quantics, taking as the starting point the six linear partial differential equations of the first order satisfied by them." Numerous tables accompany the text, and an abstract puts the reader en rapport with the matters discussed. Captain (now Major) MacMahon follows up previous work (see Vol. xi., No. 1) by a "Second Memoir on a New Theory of Symmetric Functions" (pp. 61-102). In connection with this, reference is made to the writer's paper on "Symmetric Functions and the Theory of Distributions" in vol. xix. of the London Mathematical Society's Proceedings, and to the "Théorie des Formes Binaires," by Faà de Bruno. In a note, "De l'homographie en mécanique" (pp. 103-114), M. P. Appell applies the principles of central projection, "au mouvement d'un ou de plusieurs points libres sollicités par des forces qui ne dépendent que des positions des points." In Vol. x., M. Humbert gave some theorems relating to the orientation of systems of lines; these and some more general results due to Laguerre and Humbert are interestingly discussed by Prof. Franklin in an article "On some Applications of Circular Coordinates" (pp. 161-190). In a memoir, which is preliminary to a discussion of groups of rotations in four-dimensional space, Mr. F. N. Cole writes "On Rotations in Space of Four Dimensions" (pp. 191-212) under the heads of (1) Linear Configuration, and (2) the General Theory of Rotation, in four-dimensional space. The first number is illustrated with a portrait of the distinguished mathematician Poincaré—for so we read the name after a painful consideration of the autograph signature.

Algebra: an Elementary Text-Book for the Higher Classes of Secondary Schools and for Colleges. By Dr. G. Chrystal. Part II. (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black.) Such a work as this is sure to win universal approval. The author knows well what he wants to say, and says it so as to be understood by his readers. He need hardly have apologised for delay; for, considering the great store which is opened up to the student, the wonder is how, with the great press of other work, he could bring out such a volume in so short a time. In this place we need only say that all is of the best, and we shall confine ourselves to a brief résumé of the subjects discussed. Chapter xxiii. is on permutations and combinations; xxiv., on the general theory of inequalities; xxv., on limits; xxvi., on the convergence of infinite series and of infinite products; xxvii., xxviii., on the binomial and multinomial series for any index, and on exponential and logarithmic series; xxix., on the summation of the fundamental power-series for complete values of the variable; xxx., general theorems regarding the expansion of functions in infinite forms; xxxi., summation and transformation of series in general; xxxii.-xxxiv., on continued fractions; xxxv., general properties of integral numbers; and xxxvi., on probability, or the theory of averages. Those who have read the first part will be prepared to find that this bare enumeration conceals very much more than meets the eye in reading it. In addition to a skilful arrangement of other men's proofs, there is constantly cropping up some neat addition of the writer's own, and all is vivified by the touch of a master hand. Not the least interesting feature is the frequent "Historical Note." We have noted a few trivial mistakes in examples; but such a work must be thoroughly studied before one can detect errors of importance, if such exist.

Key to Todhunter's Integral Calculus. By H. St. J. Hunter. (Macmillan.) The book before us must have occupied the author many hours, for there are many tough questions which he had to tackle. Not content with single proofs, in many cases he indicates alternative methods. As is fitting, the solutions of the questions in the earlier chapters are given in some detail; for the student who can grapple with the advanced questions wants little more than a hint, and, in fact, prefers to do the greater part of the work himself. Our remarks must not be supposed to imply that there is any scamping in any part, but in the elementary parts every little step is clearly put before the student to meet the case of ordinary readers who want little more than these elementary chapters. Here and there some students will solve the questions in other ways, but it is a matter of taste in some cases whether these solutions would be better than those here given. The solutions are clearly stated, and sometimes illustrated by figures which are a great advantage. The exigencies of space have caused in some cases a putting down of the solution in a form which jars upon our feelings.

Hydrostatics for Beginners. By F. W. Sanderson. (Macmillan.) This is a capital introduction to the subject. In the case of beginners, the author considers it necessary that the experiments should be worked concurrently with the class work, and that all the class should be working the same experiment at the same time. A great number of experiments are described, and well illustrated by diagrams; and a large collection of exercises is furnished, which ought to drive the instruction given in the text well home. Ample information is given as to how the work may be used with large classes, and as to the apparatus required. Sets of examination papers are furnished at the end. For an elementary course on Hydrostatics we know of no better book than this.

The Shorthand of Arithmetic. By J. Jackson. (Sampson Low.) This work is intended to be "a companion to all arithmetics for teachers, students, middle and upper forms, and candidates preparing for examinations." We had occasion to speak favourably of the author's previous work, entitled "A Practical Arithmetic," which commendation we can extend to the small book before us. It is not intended to supersede any text-book, but to be a companion to all of them. The methods are very compendious, but we should imagine that many, if not all of them, are in more general use than Mr. Jackson supposes. He himself remarks that "the large majority of the abbreviations are taught by the best masters in nearly all our large and important schools, but no text-book, so far as the author knows, has attempted to deal with them in a separate compilation." The whole field of arithmetic is treated under forty-three methods. There is special insistence upon the short methods, in the elementary parts, as in contracted division, advocated by De Morgan. Such a book as this is likely to be of special use for "commercial" examinations.

First Mathematical Course: comprising Arithmetic, Algebra (to Simple Equations), and the First Book of Euclid. (Blackie.) The special object of the compiler is to write a book "adapted to the requirements of the examinations of the Science and Art Department in Mathematics, First Stage." From our knowledge of what is required for these examinations we can recommend this work as a capital handbook for junior students. It is furnished with a good collection of exercises in all the subjects, and contains in addition specimen papers set during the last three years, and also numerous exercises culled from the papers set during the years 1877-1886.

Key to Lock's Arithmetic for Beginners. By Rev. R. G. Watson. (Macmillan.) The solutions are well arranged, concisely stated, and yet give ample information. The proof sheets have passed under Mr. Lock's eye, and the fact of the publication of the work proves that the solutions have his approval. The result is a useful book for both teachers and students.

SCIENCE NOTES.

PROF. MARSH has described and figured in the American Journal of Science the skull of a gigantic horned reptile termed Triceratops, belonging to his group of Ceratopidae. The skull is larger than that of any land-animal, living or extinct, some specimens indicating a head more than eight feet in length. The huge skull was furnished with a sharp cutting beak in front, a strong horn on the nose, and a pair of very large pointed horns on the top of the head. The dinosaurs carrying this terrible armature have left their remains in beds of Upper Cretaceous age, traceable for nearly 800 miles along the eastern flank of the Rocky Mountains.

Proceedings of the Linnean Society of New South Wales. Second Series. Vol. IV. Part Second. Containing Papers read at Meetings in April, May, and June, 1889. With Eight Plates. 408 pages. (Sydney; London: Trübner.) This part contains a valuable addition to the interesting series of memoirs mentioned recently in THE ACADEMY in the notices of previous parts of these Proceedings. There is an article entitled "Notes on possible Means of Dispersal of Species, and on the Effects of eating Pigeons nourished by the Seeds of Euphorbia Drummondii," by C. T. Mugson. In Vertebrate Zoology, Messrs.

J. D. Cox and Hamilton contribute a "List of the Birds of the Mudgee District, with Notes on their Habits"; and "Observations on the Oviposition and Habits of certain Australian Batrachians," are published by Mr. J. J. Fletcher. In Entomology, Mr. Skuse continues his elaborate Memoir on the Diptera of Australia, part vi., containing the extensive family of the small midges (Chironomidae), well-illustrated; Mr. Blackburn publishes a third part of his revision of the Lamellicorn genus of beetles Heteronyx, with descriptions of new species; and a third portion of his "Notes on Australian Coleoptera" of various families, with descriptions of new species; and Mr. T. G. Sloane gives a review of the genus Sarticus (Fam. Carabidae). In Bacteriology, Dr. Katz publishes (1) a note on the Bacillus of Leprosy; (2) on "Air-gas" for bacteriological work; and (3) Experimental Researches with the Microbes of Chicken-cholera. In Botany, Baron N. Müller publishes a note on the Probable Occurrence of Aldrovanda vesiculosa in New South Wales; and "Descriptions of Plants collected at King George's Sound by the Rev. R. Collie" are given by the Rev. Dr. Woolls. In Geology, Mr. R. Etheridge, jun., publishes "Remarks on Fossils of the Permian-Carboniferous Age from North-Western Australia in the MacLeay Museum"; Prof. Stephens contributes the result of an attempt to synchronise the Australian, South African, and Indian coal-measures: Part I.—The Australasian and New Zealand Formations; and Mr. T. W. David a note on the Origin of Kerosene Shale.

Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. Vol. LVIII. Part II. Nos. 1 and 2. (Trübner.) The first of these two numbers is entirely occupied with zoological articles: (1) On a new species and genus of scale insects (Coccidae), named Pseudo-pulvinaria Sikkimensis, by E. T. Atkinson, found on Quercus incana, Castanea indica, and C. tribuloides, fully illustrated; (2) Notes on Indian Rhynchota, Heteroptera, by the same author, containing descriptions of numerous species of Cimicidae allied to the genera Acanthosoma and Urostyides; (3) Notes on butterflies from Upper Assam, by William Doherty, of Oincinnati, with a coloured plate; (4) On the species of Thelyphonus inhabiting continental India, Burma, and the Malay Peninsula, by E. W. Oates; and (5) On certain earthworms from the Western Himalayas and Dehra Dun, by A. G. Bourne. The second number is of a more miscellaneous character. It contains several articles of a purely mathematical nature, by Asutosh Mukhopadhyay; a paper on the tornadoes and hailstorms of April and May, 1888, in the Doab and Rohilkhand, by S. A. Hill; and one on a Neolithic Celt from Jashpur, by J. Wood Mason. On the volatility of some of the compounds of mercury and of the metal itself, by Alex. Pedler. In zoology, the description of a stag's head allied to Cervus dybowskii procured from the Darjiling bazar, with a photograph, is published by W. L. Slater, of the Indian Museum; descriptions of three new Homoptera (gen. Idiocerus) found in great abundance on the mango tree, by M. L. Lethierry; and lastly, a memoir on the Uredinea (Puccinia) from Simla, Part 2, by A. Barclay.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE growing interest taken by America in Oriental research has more than once been noticed in the ACADEMY. We now hear that Mr. Jacob Schiff, of New York, has made a donation of 50,000 dollars (£10,000) to Harvard University, to found a special department for the study of the literature, history, and relics of the Semitic peoples.

Zur Geschichte der englisch-friesischen Sprache. I. Von Th. Siebs. The author tells us in his preface that this treatise is a preparation for an Old-Frisian Grammar which will form one of the series of Germanic Grammars edited by Prof. Braune. The most important part of the work is the information it gives on the phonology of the living Frisian dialects. The present volume deals only with the vowels, the consonants being apparently reserved for a second part. But it also contains introductory matter dealing with the territorial extent and boundaries of the Anglo-Frisian dialects, a full bibliography and index being added. Such a work as this ought to throw light on the relations of the Old-English dialects to one another and to the Frisian dialects, and to help in determining the difficult question: what dialectal divergencies in Old-English were developed before and after the migration to Britain. But it is to be hoped that the author will carefully reconsider his views on the older stages of Anglo-Frisian. When we find him gravely maintaining the possibility of a direct mutation of ō into ē in Anglo-Frisian, and that Germanic au passed through ā into Old-English ē, we cannot help altogether distrusting his judgment. It is unfortunate that he does not seem to be acquainted with Dr. Sweet's History of English Sounds, which gives the latest summary of our knowledge of prehistoric Old-English.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CLIFTON SHAKESPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, December 28.)

MR. E. G. CREW, Esq., vice-president, in the chair.—Miss Florence Herapath read a paper on "The Source of 'Othello,'" calling attention to the differences between Giraldi's tale and Shakespeare's play. The most unnatural part of the drama—at least to our English minds—is the very slight evidence required to convince Othello of his wife's infidelity. But in the story it is even less. In the closing scene we see in its fullest extent how easily Shakespeare throws off artificial trammels, how independent he is of the framework he has himself selected. In the tale, the death of Desdemona is barbarous and destitute of probability; and with this clumsy, unnatural, inartistic series of brutalities, stands out in fine comparison the passionate pathos of the self-torture, guilt, remorse, and death of Shakespeare's Othello.—Mr. Leo. H. Grindon, in a paper on "The Figurative Language of 'Othello,'" stated that although "Othello" is emphatically the most powerful and dramatic presentation of jealousy ever placed before the world, perhaps the greatest tragedy of human passion ever written, there is that in it which in a certain sense may be called refreshing. While stricken by the painful grandeur, very significant is it to note how Shakespeare discerns and elicits the poetry that lies latent in the very simplest of our surroundings. Othello's reference to Desdemona's needlework may be taken as an instance of this, which came from the Shakespearian possession of that most royal of the faculties, the faculty of seeing, on the instant, not only the entire substance of nature, but the whole mind of man, which gives his work a completeness otherwise not realised. The "little things" of Shakespeare show that, whatever he may be upon the stage, he is a far more precious possession in the college and the university—yes, even more precious yet in times of private culture. Never anywhere will Shakespeare be proved so perfectly himself, and so consummately useful to mankind, as when made the pleasant friend and companion of the home-circle. Many instances can be given in this play of the beauty of Shakespeare's metaphors and similes. The only one upon which a blemish could be charged is that in which Othello compares the smoothness of Desdemona's skin to monumental alabaster. The surface of sculptured marble may be likened to that of the body of woman; but the simile should not be reversed. But in a short paper it is not possible to do justice to the figurative language of this play, which in that respect is a diamond of many facets. No human composition is more distinguished for intellectual iridescence than "Othello." It is rich in incomparable pathos. With all its tremendous force, it is magnificently quiet and from beginning to end there is not a touch of artificiality.—Mr. J. W. Mills, in a paper on "The Versification of 'Othello,'" dealt mainly with Dr. Price's recent small work, The Construction and Types of Shakespeare's Verse as seen in the 'Othello.' Dr. Price would have us believe that half of Shakespeare's verses scanned by feet are "incorrect and lawless." But the inaccuracy of this amazing statement can be easily shown by the simple process of taking at random any one of his plays and applying the test. We are told that the true unit of versification is not the foot but the stave, "a group of feet from one to four in number, which can be pronounced together, without pause, upon one breath, and be dominated by one accent." But as the stave "can be analysed into its separate feet," the distinction seems artificial and unnecessary. According to Dr. Price's theory, the perfect form of the Shakespearian iambic line consists of eleven syllables, or in other words is a double-ending line, and all lines of only ten syllables are defective. The intellectual atmosphere both in England and America so reeks of paradoxes that one more or less may well pass as a matter of course. But this "theory" of Shakespearian versification is a natural and fitting climax to the Baconian "theory" of authorship.—Mrs. E. A. Harvey in a paper on "Desdemona" said that in "Othello" Shakespeare set forth in glowing poetry the truth expressed by the heroine in the Italian tale when she said—"I must serve as a warning to young maidens not to marry against the wish of their parents." Desdemona, excelling in all qualities of the heart, had neither circumspection, activity of mind, nor knowledge of human nature. Her highest charms are her humility, ingenuousness and innocence; and, therefore, she is quite unsuspecting. The first thing that settled in Othello's soul was the warning uttered by Brabantio when he said that, having deceived her father, she would be likely to deceive her husband also. We see, at last, the unhappy effects of the different nature and descent of both, and of her abandonment of the paternal home. Not alone did Othello intend, but the poet intended also, that the death of Desdemona should be brought as a sacrifice, and that of Othello as an atonement, to the manes of the broken-hearted father.—Mr. W. O. H. Cross also read a paper on "Desdemona," in which he said that Shakespeare knew his business far too well to destroy our interest in a human character by making it inhumanly perfect. Desdemona's conduct raises the whole question of the ethics of elopement. But her heartless indifference to her aged father's wishes broke the old man's heart. In the matter of Othello, her interference was without the shadow of an excuse. Othello, as a prudent commander, was quite right to dismiss him. As her life was a series of weaknesses, her popularity must be ascribed to the pitiful tragedy of her death.—Mr. L. M. Griffiths read a paper on "Various Readings in 'Othello,'" calling attention to the principal discrepancies between the 1622 Quarto and the 1623 Folio, and to the more noteworthy emendations in the first act of the play.

SHELLEY SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, January 8.)

DR. TODDUNTER read a paper on "Shelley as a Prose Writer." Commencing with a reference to Matthew Arnold's assertion that Shelley's future fame would rest on his letters rather than on his poetry, the lecturer remarked that Shelley might possibly have been a great prose writer, but that he had not enjoyed the benefit of Mr. Arnold's advice. Having traced back the several influences observable in Shelley's prose style, from Godwin to Bacon, he proceeded to consider his prose works under two heads. First, the earlier writings, such as the Irish pamphlets, the "Declaration of Rights," the "Letter to Lord Ellenborough," and the "Notes to Queen Mab," all of which are more or less polemical in tone; and, though conceived in a philosophical spirit, show that their author was at that time not a philosopher, but merely a brilliant questioner, intent on his own scheme of morals. The political pamphlets are, as a rule, better than the religious. Secondly, the later writings, among which may be instanced the short treatises on "Love," "Life," "Morals," the important essay on Christianity, the letters from Italy, and the "Defence of Poetry." At this period Shelley had discarded the materialism of his earlier years and had become a Berkeleyan idealist—a change which is clearly reflected in his prose writings, which are maturer and more moderate in tone, and more limpid in expression. The latter portion of Dr. Toddhunter's paper was devoted to an analysis of the "Defence of Poetry," which is generally considered to be the finest of Shelley's prose works. In conclusion, he pointed out that, while Shelley must be regarded as to some extent a mystic, he is far less so than Blake, his mysticism being tempered and balanced by a strong admixture of rationalism.—A discussion followed, in which Mr. W. M. Rossetti, Dr. Farnivall, Miss Mathilde Blind, and others took part. The hope was expressed that Lady Shelley would see her way to publishing the "Philosophical View of Reform," of which an epitome has been given by Prof. Dowden.

FINE ART.

Gleanings from Old St. Paul's. By W. Sparrow Simpson. (Elliot Stock.)

It is now some fifteen years or more since the late Mr. William Longman gave to the world his history of the three cathedrals dedicated to St. Paul in London. It dealt mainly with the architectural history of the several structures and with the means employed for raising the necessary funds—Dean Milman's Annals of St. Paul's having already, and in a masterly way, recorded the chief events with which the cathedrals have been connected. These books, however, did not exhaust the subject nor the interest of the public in it. Nine years ago Dr. Simpson edited for the Camden Society an interesting series of documents illustrating the history of St. Paul's; and now he offers us a similar miscellaneous volume, and gives us reason to hope that it may be followed by a further contribution from that storehouse of knowledge to which he is continually adding. While grateful to him for permitting us to share in these results of an industry stimulated by affection, we cannot help expressing our regret that the important task of re-editing Dugdale's great history should have been left to other hands than his to perform. It needs, as he himself has told us, "a learned and competent editor, who can devote time and loving labour to the work"; and we know no one who fulfils these conditions more exactly than Dr. Simpson himself. He has already shown that he is something more than a mere accumulator of antiquarian fragments, and we do not for one moment suppose that the enthusiasm with which he has conducted his past researches is at all likely to flag in the future that is still before him.

The present volume—delightfully suggestive of Hearne in its binding—deals a good deal with the cathedral music and with those who took part in it. The earlier records of the cathedral, or such of them as escaped the Great Fire, give very little information on this subject. It is true that among the statutes of St. Paul's compiled before the year 1313 mention is made of Cantus Organicus, but it would be a mistake to suppose that this means an organ chant. In truth, it was a kind of music which it was forbidden to sing in the vestibule of the church, and is explained by Sir John Stainer in the following terms:

"It seems to have consisted of adding a part above a given melody at the interval of a fifth, and another below it at the interval of a fourth. The relation of the parts to the melody being strictly adhered to, as the melody proceeded there resulted a succession of parallel quarts, quintes, and octaves, which would be intolerable to modern ears. . . . The middle part (in an example subjoined) is the melody, and was probably sung louder than the parts above and below it, which form the whole into an organum."

As early as 1307 the Temple Church, London, had its "two pairs of organs," but Dr. Simpson does not appear to have satisfied himself of the existence of such musical instruments at St. Paul's until a much later date. In the sixteenth century England had its own school of cathedral music; and the degree of excellence to which it had attained may be gathered from the fact that one of the anthems, composed by John Redford, who was organist and master of the choristers from 1530 to 1540, is frequently sung in the cathedral at the present day, and is characterized by Sir George Grove as "remarkable for its melody and expression." Redford, who heads the list of eminent musicians noticed by Dr. Simpson, is commemorated by his pupil Tusser, the author of the Five Hundred good points of Husbandrie in the following quaint lines:

But mark the chance; myself to 'vance
By friendship's lot to Paules I got;
So found I grace a certain space
Still to remaine
With Redford there, the like no where
For cunning such and vertue much,
By whom some part of musicke art
So did I gaine "

Better known, however, than Redford is Thomas Tallis, born early in the reign of Henry VIII., and still living on the lips and in the hearts of all true lovers of Church music. Farrant, Bird, and Blow, were worthy successors of Tallis; but the progress of their art was sadly interrupted by the great Civil War and the troubles of the Interregnum. Probably there were other Puritans besides Milton who could appreciate the compositions and execution of Lawes:

"Harry, whose tuneful and well-measured song
First taught our English music how to span
Words with just note and accent—not to scan
With Midas' ears, committing short and long."

But the style of psalmody which we associate with that party was incongruous with cathedral services. The Roundheads were, therefore, consistent in destroying the organs and banishing the choirs and burning—to our great loss—the prick-song books, as they were called, out of which the old chants were learned. The injury done by them was never fully repaired till our own day. At the close of the eighteenth century some of the cathedrals were in wretched plight, and Dr. Simpson records an incident that occurred to Samuel Sebastian Wesley, which is sufficiently suggestive:

"Easter Day was near at hand; for Easter Day, in a cathedral, Wesley had only at his command the choir boys and one bass voice, one adult singer. Most men would have broken down, would have thought it enough to declaim against the evil days. He put forth his strength and wrote the anthem, Blessed be the God and Father. Good came out of evil. The literature of the Church was enriched by a noble addition to its stores."

The striking contrast of this condition of things with that which has prevailed since Sir John Stainer presided at the organ does not require to be pointed out. But the revolution that has been effected is due not to him only, but in part to his predecessors Attwood and Goss, and in part to the warmer appreciation of good music on the part of the public at large. That the present organist, Dr. Martin, will prove a worthy successor of these great men there is happily no reason to doubt.

Another interesting section of Dr. Simpson's volume is devoted to the materials still extant for ascertaining the features and dimensions of Old St. Paul's. By Old St. Paul's we mean not the fabric erected by Ethelbert and destroyed by fire in 1087, nor that which took its place and shared a similar fate in 1137, but the cathedral which gradually rose out of these ruins and with which the engravings of Hollar have made us tolerably familiar. It was of great size, and its position on the summit of the highest hill in London gave it additional dignity.

"The imposing mass of the long nave with its twelve bays, of the choir with its equally numerous arches, of the well-developed transepts crowned by the delicate and lofty spire, far exceeding in height that of Salisbury, must have presented a very remarkable coup d'œil."

And there is no doubt that it was an object of universal admiration. Dr. Simpson quotes from a chronicle of the date 1314 some details of measurement, from which we gather that the length of the church was 690 feet and its breadth 130, and that the height of the campanile tower from the ground was 260 feet, and the height of the wooden fabric of the campanile, 274 feet. The chronicler introduces a marginal sketch of the west front, above which rises the lofty spire, surmounted by a very large ball and cross. It is this spire that in the sketch of the chronicler as well as in some other ancient drawings forms the conspicuous feature. Unfortunately, it was destroyed by fire in 1561; and we have, therefore, in Hollar's beautiful views (published in Dugdale's S. Paul's, 1658) only the truncated tower given to us. Dr. Simpson has done his best to help us in realising what was lost in the destruction of the edifice which preceded Wren's cathedral. Without disparaging the latter, we have cause indeed to regret the utter annihilation of the former.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

SOME NEW PRINTS.

WE have received from the Autotype Company a reproduction of a drawing by Mr. Frederick Shields, which, by the tenderness of its religious sentiment, reminds us of the very popular autotype of "The Gentle Shepherd," by the same artist. The design is called "The Angel Guardian," and consists of two figures—a beautiful boy and an angel, who are crossing a dangerous pass. The angel—who is crowned with fire—shields the child with her wings, and helps him to bear the lantern of truth and the staff of faith. Apparently unconscious of his guardian's protection, the child walks on without fear, and treads a serpent under his foot.

WE have also received some very successful autotypes after some of the earlier pictures of Mr. Holman Hunt, including the celebrated scene from "The Two Gentlemen of Verona," the "Rienzi" vowing vengeance over the beautiful body of his slaughtered brother, the "Early Christian Missionaries fleeing from the Druids," and that beautiful head of an Italian child plaiting straw—the latest and simplest, but not the least beautiful, of the series. Whether regarded for their beauty as works of art, or as typical records of the most striking movement in the history of British painting, these admirable reproductions of some of the best works of the most faithful of the "Pre-Raphaelites" are equally welcome.

MR. A. WALKER RIMINGTON—whose fine etching of the Frauenkirche at Nuremberg we noticed at the time of its publication—has completed with equal success a much more difficult task. The subject of his latest etching—of which we have received an artist's proof—is the Campanile of Giotto at Florence, taken from the east, showing the south side of the Duomo on the right, and the beautiful little Loggia of the Bigallo on the left. The etching is of a large size, and gives a true sense of the height of the tower and the beauty of its proportions. Italian Gothic of this kind, with its clearly defined outlines and smooth surfaces of marble, its delicate carving and variegated inlay, requires great skill in tone, and precision in draughtsmanship, to render it satisfactorily with the needle. But Mr. Rimington's lines are accurate without being hard; and he has made the Campanile stand out fair and soft and beautiful in the morning sunshine at Florence. The etching is published by the Fine Art Society.

THE growing popularity of etching is shown in the new departure made by the Art Union of London. In return for the subscription for 1890, the council has resolved to issue to each member a set of eight etchings, contained in a handsome portfolio, instead of the usual large line-engraving. The etchings are by different hands; and all are landscapes, or at least out-of-door scenes. That by Mr. F. Slocombe is, as might be expected, the most successful, both for choice of subject and for technical accomplishment. Next we should be disposed to rank Mr. Percy Robertson's "Bridge"; though other tastes might prefer Mr. O. E. Holloway's "St. Paul's," or Mr. A. Morris's "Silver Strand." Taken altogether, they may be described as good, workmanlike examples of the art, especially when we bear in mind the vast number of impressions that will be required. It is to be hoped the flowing tide of industrial prosperity will bring with it an increase of subscribers to this old-established and most deserving institution.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE learn that the Queen has conferred the title of "Royal" upon the Porcelain Works at Derby, or rather upon the Crown Derby Porcelain Company (Limited). Though established for about ten years only, the productions of this manufactory have acquired a just celebrity for the beauty of their workmanship and "body," for originality of design, as well as for their reproduction of the old patterns of "Crown Derby." The prestige of Derby china, once so high, had sadly decayed before the establishment of the new company; but it may be now said to be completely restored. There are now two "Royal" Porcelain Factories, one at Worcester and the other at Derby; and it is difficult to say which best deserves such a distinction. The "Royalty" of Worcester dates from 1788; and it was in the year 1773 that George III. paid the visit to the Derby works, after which the crown, which was the origin of the term "Crown Derby," was added to Duesbury's mark.

THE Royal Anglo-Australian Society of Artists will hold a conversation in the galleries of the Institute on the evening of Wednesday next, January 24, when the collection of pictures to be exhibited shortly at Melbourne, Sydney, and Adelaide will be on view.

THE following have been elected members of the Royal Society of British Artists:—A. E. Brookbank, Gordon Browne, Val. Davis, Charles H. M. Kerr, Davidson Knowles, F. H. A. Parker, J. L. Pickering, S. Sidley, and Arch. Webb.

IN connexion with the Chelsea centre of the Lohdon University Extension Society, Miss Jane Harrison will deliver a course of ten lectures on "Athens, its Mythology and Art," illustrated with lantern photographs. The first lecture of the course, to which admission is free, will be given at the Chelsea town-hall on Friday next, January 24. A collection of photographs of Greek sculpture and painting, and a number of books dealing with the subject, have been placed for consultation in the Chelsea free library; and it is proposed that visits shall be paid both to the British Museum and to the gallery of casts at South Kensington.

MR. CLAUDE DE NEUVILLE—whose water-colour drawings of Oxford architecture were recently mentioned in the ACADEMY—has been commissioned to etch a large plate of Magdalen College Tower and several vignettes illustrative of the scenery of Oxford.

IN consequence of a fire at the Chiswick Press, it is feared that most of the back numbers of the Hobby Horse have been destroyed. The January number has to be reprinted; and, it cannot be issued until the latter part of the month.

As readers of the ACADEMY may remember Dr. Schliemann recently made an offer to Capt Bötticher to settle the discussion between them as to the real nature of the ruins at Hissarlik by a fresh examination on the spot. This examination took place during the first week of December, Dr. Schliemann being accompanied by Dr. Dörpfeld. There were also present, as arbitrators, Prof. George Niemann, of the Vienna Academy; and Major Steffen, of the Prussian Artillery. In the course of the examination, which was most thoroughly carried out, Capt. Bötticher withdrew his charge that Dr. Schliemann had tampered with the remains; and the two arbitrators have now signed a formal document, to the effect that, in their opinion, the remains are not those of a necropolis, as alleged by Capt. Bötticher, but of an inhabited town, including a temple and halls.

THE STAGE.

OBITUARY.

[WESTLAND MARSTON.]

To the ordinary playgoer of to-day the name of Westland Marston—who died but a week since in his lodgings in the Euston Road—conveyed very little. The playgoer of a quarter of a century ago recognised in Dr. Marston a writer legitimately prominent—one who was accustomed to furnish some of the best of our actors with parts in which they might hope to attract the approval of the literary. But it was at a still earlier period that Westland Marston was doing his most original and most characteristic work; and it is doubtful if the merits of "The Patrician's Daughter"—written when he was at most but twenty-three years old—have ever, in the author's subsequent career, been surpassed. This piece was produced by Macready at Drury Lane, in the year 1842. "The Heart and the World" followed in 1847; "Anne Blake"—which had the Charles Keans among its interpreters—in 1852. Later on, Westland Marston made many adaptations, among which "Donna Diana," for Mr. Hermann Vezin and Mrs. Charles Young, and "A Hero of Romance" for Mr. Sothorn, ought to be mentioned. We remember seeing at the Lyceum, just twenty years ago, an effective play which was among the first successes of Miss Neilson; and only four years ago, Mr. Thomas Thorne, at the Vaudeville, produced "Under Fire." That, however, had no success; the fashion of the time no longer permitting Marston to repeat his earlier triumphs. Something more highly spiced was wanted, and something more stirring—we shall dare even to say that a certain lack of recent observation of life and society did fairly lay the writer open to some want of appreciation by his audience. But Dr. Marston, even when he was not actually poetic, was at all events literary. He wrote with admirable finish and grace. In his ornament there was an abundance of fine taste. Less than two years ago, we think, he published a book of Reminiscences, not common and trivial gossip—of that he was incapable—but well-considered and sagacious criticism chiefly of the stage that he had known so well, and in which he never altogether lost interest. A very high opinion of this book was expressed in the ACADEMY, we remember, when it appeared; and it is indeed a model volume of its kind, alike in its confessions and in its reticence. It is the worthy contribution of a true man of letters, who would pain nobody, yet would never merely flatter—it was the work of a man who was above all things both gentleman and artist.

In the latest days of the well-known assemblages at Northumberland-terrace, Regent's Park, it was the privilege of the present writer to be introduced to Dr. Marston. It was characteristic of Dr. Marston that years afterwards, when he was no longer a prominent person of the moment, it never seemed to occur to him to consider that the kindness of long ago had laid anybody under obligations to him. His entire independence and scrupulous chivalry were, indeed, thoroughly remarkable. Few people who were present when Mr. Irving tendered a benefit to him at the Lyceum can forget the impression made upon the house by the pathetic, but manly, appearance of the gentleman bereft of fortune and kindred, and by the singular appropriateness of the few words of thanks which he chose to address to the public and to Mr. Irving before the footlights. The behaviour of the man at such a difficult moment was faultless, and curiously indicative of character. That Dr. Marston was subsequently cheered a little by the reception accorded almost universally to his book, we have reason to know. But though much of his personal charm had remained, the interests of his own life had within the last few years sadly narrowed. We should suppose that one of the last occasions—perhaps the very last—on which he was seen in society was on an afternoon last summer, when he attended a party at the rooms of a long-attached friend—Mrs. Chandler Moulton. Though his health was very much broken, his graciousness and readiness of happy speech had not even then deserted him. His fortunes in life have well been compared with those of Job. He lost nearly everything that he valued—friends, money and, if not exactly reputation, at all events what stands for reputation with some people—immediate success. Yet it never occurred to him—as to the less courageous and less resigned—to "curse God and die." He put up, blandly and graciously, with the most modest of lodgings in the Euston-road; and, it is said, even with the station-bookstall for a reading-room, and with the meats of the third-rate foreign restaurant. An admirable example of truth to his own convictions and truth to his art in writing—an admirable example, likewise, as a man of courage and serenity under misfortune!

F. W.

STAGE NOTES.

IN consequence of Mrs. Pfeiffer's serious illness, the production of her drama, which was to have been performed at a matinée in February, is indefinitely postponed.

MR. BENSON has been compelled to postpone his first performance of "The Taming of the Shrew" at the Globe Theatre, which had been fixed for this week, until Thursday next, January 23.

MUSIC.

THE NATIONAL SOCIETY OF PROFESSIONAL MUSICIANS.

ON Thursday morning (January 9) Dr. Longhurst, of Canterbury, read a short paper on "The Orchestra, Past and Present," beginning with the sixteenth century. The big orchestra of Wagner was evidently not to his taste, but a visit to Bayreuth would probably help him better to appreciate its merits. He was followed by Mr. E. Prout who, wishing for a practical result from the paper which he had read on the previous day, now proposed that a due proportion of questions in strict counterpoint be added to the present examination questions book of the society. In a brief but forcible speech he begged the society to acknowledge strict counterpoint, and by this means to satisfy musical conservatives as well as radicals. He was supported by Dr. Vincent, who stated that he knew members of the musical profession who kept aloof from them on account of their action in this matter. Dr. Hiles opposed the resolution, as a retrograde course. After much discussion, an amendment was finally proposed by Mr. W. H. Cummings. To Mr. Prout's resolution he proposed to add "for optional adoption." This Mr. Prout accepted, feeling that, at any rate, strict counterpoint would thus be recognised as an important part of the education of a musical student. The resolution thus amended was put to the vote, and carried unanimously.

On Friday morning Dr. E. J. Hopkins read an instructive and, at the same time, entertaining paper on old organs and organ-builders. He read quaint extracts from the diary of Thomas Dallam preserved in the British Museum. This famous organ-builder was commissioned to convey to the Sultan at Constantinople an elaborate mechanical instrument of his own design, as a present from Queen Elizabeth. Dr. Hopkins concluded with some curious extracts from old parish registers.

Mr. W. H. Cummings followed with a paper on "Fingering, Past, Present, and Future," in connexion specially with pianoforte and organ music. Like Mr. Prout, he had a practical object in view. He desires to arrive at universality in the matter of fingering. In England we mark the thumb with a cross, whereas on the continent the thumb is considered the first of five fingers. Teachers are, we believe, generally in favour of the latter system, but national pride probably more than anything else has preserved the former. It was Mr. Cummings's good fortune to show, as the result of much research, that the 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 fingering was first used in England, and that what we are in the habit of calling the "English" method was introduced here by foreign musicians. This discovery ought to prove the death blow to the cross mark for the thumb. English publishers ought, as indeed Messrs. Novello have already done, to announce their determination to abandon the cross method. It would prove a great boon to teachers, and still more so to pupils. Both, at present, find the two systems of marking confusing; and, further, English music would thus stand a better chance of being played and studied abroad.

The congress concluded with a business meeting at which various matters were discussed. Liverpool has been fixed on for the conference of next year. In the evening there was a banquet, over which the mayor presided, and thus the proceedings were brought to a convivial conclusion.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

SCHUBERT's Octet was played at the first Monday Popular Concert of the new year, and was led by M^{me}. Néruda with her accustomed charm and skill. Miss Geisler-Schubert, grand-niece of the composer, joined Signor Piatti in Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat for pianoforte and 'cello, and the lady played in a clear and intelligent manner. It was unfortunate that Miss Schubert's solo should come at the end of the programme. Chopin's Ballade in G minor has but a poor chance after the Octet. Miss Geisler-Schubert interpreted the piece with good feeling and a certain refinement. It is to be hoped that at her next appearance she will give a Sonata of Schubert's. She showed last season at her concert how admirably she can interpret the music of that master. Mr. Plunket Greene, the vocalist, somewhat hoarse in voice, sang with intelligence songs by Schubert and Schumann.

Hush, a vocal Berceuse by E. F. Spence (Woolhouse), is a soft, soothing song, sung with success at the Princess's in the monologue "Grown Up."

ROYAL SOCIETY of LITERATURE.—

This Society will meet on WEDNESDAY EVENING, the 22ND INST., at 8 o'clock, at their ROOMS, 21, DELAWARE STREET, ST. JAMES'S PARK, when will be read a Paper by Sir PATRICK COLQUHOUN, Q.C., F.R.S.L., on "SOME OF THE POPULAR, POETIC, AND PROSE SATIRISTS OF THE LAST HUNDRED YEARS."—E. GILBERT HIGHTON, M.A., Secretary.

MERCHANT VENTURERS SCHOOL, BRISTOL.

The HEAD MASTERSHIP of this School of Science, Art, Technology, and Commerce will become VACANT after the Examinations in May, 1891.

The School works in connection with the Department of Science and Art, and the Head Master must be qualified to teach and superintend teaching, under the conditions laid down by that Department.

He will be required to devote his whole time to the work of the School, and to be responsible personally for the Chemical branch of it, which has large and well-appointed laboratories.

There are upwards of 1,300 students now in attendance.

Evening classes form an important part of the School.

Applications for the Head Mastership must be sent in to the underwritten address before the 31ST JANUARY, 1890, and may be accompanied by copies of not more than five testimonials.

Applications from candidates, who cannot show that they have had experience in teaching and in organising schools, and in the modes of scientific and technical education, or from candidates above the age of 35, will not be considered.

The salary, made up partly of a fixed payment, partly of capitation fees, and partly of a share of grants on results of examinations, will be guaranteed at not less than £500 a year.

Further information may be obtained from GEORGE H. POPE, Merchant's Hall, Bristol.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. F. R. BENSON.

MR. F. R. BENSON'S SHAKESPEARIAN COMPANY every Evening, at 8, Thursdays and Fridays excepted, in Shakespeare's Fairy Comedy, with the Mendelssohn incidental Music.

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

Doors open 7.30; Overture, 7.45. Box office open 10.0 to 5.0. Acting Manager, Mr. H. JALLAND. No fees. MATINEES OF A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, every Saturday and Wednesday, until further notice. Box office open at 2, commencing 2.30. Overture, 2.15. Children half-price to stalls and Dress Circle to Matinees.

GLOBE THEATRE.—NEXT THURS-

DAY and FRIDAY EVENING, JAN. 23 and 24, and every following THURSDAY and FRIDAY at 8, until further notice, will be presented,

SHAKESPEARE'S COMEDY,

"THE TAMING OF THE SHREW."

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

WILKIE COLLINS'S LAST NOVEL.—3 vols., at every Library.

BLIND LOVE.

By WILKIE COLLINS, Author of "The Woman in White."

With a Preface by WALTER BESANT, and 36 Illustrations by A. Forestier.

* * The FIRST EDITION having been exhausted before publication, a SECOND EDITION has been prepared, and is now ready at all Libraries.

NEW VOLUME OF MCCARTHY'S "GEORGES."—Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 12s.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF

A HISTORY OF THE FOUR GEORGES.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P., Author of "A History of Our Own Times," &c.

To be completed in 4 vols.

CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW NOVEL.

Immediately. 8 vols., Crown 8vo, at all Libraries.

AN OCEAN TRAGEDY.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Romance of Jenny Harlowe," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CARVED CARTOON."

2 vols. square 8vo., 12s., and at all Libraries.

FOR the LOVE of a LASS: a Tale of Tynedale. By

AUSTIN CLARE, Author of "A Child of the Menhir," &c.

TWO NEW FIVE SHILLING NOVELS.

A LAST LOVE: a Romance. By Georges Ohnet, Author of "Dr. Rameau," &c. Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. [Jan. 27.]

A NOBLE WOMAN. By Henry Greville. Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. [Jan. 20.]

MR. WALTER BESANT'S NEW NOVEL.

THE BELL of ST. PAUL'S. By Walter Besant.

Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c. 3 vols., at all Libraries.

MARK TWAIN'S NEW BOOK.

A YANKEE at the COURT of KING ARTHUR. By

MARK TWAIN. With 220 Illustrations by Dan. Beard. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

"Mark Twain's new book is undoubtedly one of the funniest, if not absolutely the funniest, that he has ever written." Sentman.

NEW TWO SHILLING BOOKS.

A ROGUE'S LIFE. By Wilkie Collins. Post 8vo, picture cover, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE DEAD HEART. (The Story of Mr. Irving's Lyceum Play.) By CHARLES GIBBON. Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.

BLOOD-MONEY, and Other Stories. By Charles GIBBON, Author of "Robin Gray," &c. Post 8vo, picture boards, 2s.

A GAME of BLUFF. By Henry Murray, Joint-Author with CHRISTIE MURRAY of "A Dangerous Catspaw." Post 8vo, picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

A NEW ADVENTURE BOOK.

THE DEAD MAN'S SECRET; or, The Valley of

Gold; being a Narrative of Strange and Wild Adventure. By J. E. MUDDOCK, Author of "Stories Weird and Wonderful," &c. With a Frontispiece by F. Barnard. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

Seldom has anything more startling been served up for the benefit of those who delight to sup on horrors."

Glasgow Herald

COUNT PAUL VASIL'S NEW BOOK.

SOCIETY in PARIS: the Upper Ten Thousand. A

Series of Letters from COUNT PAUL VASIL to a young French Diplomat. Translated by R. L. de BEAUFORT. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

THE HUMOURS OF "THE CLOTH."

ANECDOTES of the CLERGY. By Jacob Larwood.

Post 8vo, printed on laid paper, and half-bound (uniform with "The Essays of Elia," and "Gastronomy as a Fine Art"). 2s.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready, in 1 vol., royal 8vo, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 31s. 6d.
LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1890. Under the special patronage of Her Majesty, and Corrected by the Nobility. Fifty-ninth Edition. With the Arms beautifully engraved.

"Messrs. Hurst & Blackett have just published the new edition of this well-known work of reference, revised and enlarged for the year 1890. 'Lodge,' which has now been before the world for more than sixty years, has always been distinguished by some special features, among which is the care expended on the engraved armorial bearings which are placed at the head of each genealogical family record."—Daily News, Dec 31st, 1889.

Now ready, in 1 vol., demy 8vo, with a Portrait of the Author, price 12s.
BENCH and BAR: Reminiscences of one of the last of an Ancient Race. By Mr. SERJEANT ROBINSON. Second Edition.

"Full of amusing anecdotes, pleasing recollections, and interesting comments, the book, which contains an excellent portrait of the author, promises to become as popular as Serjeant Ballantine's famous volume."—Globe.

NEW NOVELS.

Now ready at all the Libraries.

A MARCH in the RANKS. By Jessie FOTHERGILL. Author of "The First Violin," "Kith and Kin," &c. 3 vols.

CAST OUT. By Morice Gerard. 3 vols.

"The plot is well constructed, and the author manages to excite interest in the fortunes of two generations."—Morning Post.

HER HEART'S DESIRE. By H. PROTHERO LEWIS. 3 vols.

"Despite its somewhat old-fashioned tone, it is a pretty and winning tale."—Morning Post.

A HARDY NORSEMAN. By Edna LYALL. Author of "Donovan," "We Two," &c.

"On the whole we may say that all the quiet power we praised in 'Donovan' is to be found in the new story. And the humour, though never demonstrative, is as a charm of its own. It is not Edna Lyall's plan to give her readers much elaborate description, but when she does describe scenery her picture is always alive with vividness and grace."—Athenaeum.

NORMAN AND I. By Kate Cousins. 3 vols.

"The author's pictures of the fairy land in which 'Norman and I' gradually arrive through renunciation and sacrifice to the highest moral level are often extremely pretty."—Morning Post.

GEORGE VYVIAN. By E. Katharine BATES. 3 vols.

A HAPPY WOOING. By H. Cliffe HALLIDAY. 3 vols.

"A lively story, written in a rare, sprightly fashion, and with a well-developed plot which is full of interest."—Literary World.

MY LORD OTHELLO. By Henry CRESSWELL. Author of "A Modern Greek Heroine," "The Survivors," "A Willy Willow," &c. 3 vols.

"The author has constructed an elaborately ingenious plot, which is slowly developed through two volumes till it reaches a highly sensational culmination in the third. The ingenuity is admirable, and the arrangement of all the details most skillful."—Scotsman.

GEOFF. By Gertrude Forde, Author of "In the Old Palazzo," "Driven before the Storm," &c. 3 vols.
 "Miss Forde's new story is quite as interesting as any of its predecessors."—Spectator.
 "A bright, pleasant, healthy novel."—Literary World.

NOVELS BY EDNA LYALL.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

DONOVAN: a Modern Englishman.
WE TWO.

IN the GOLDEN DAYS.
KNIGHT-ERRANT.
WON by WAITING.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

MISTRESS BEATRICE COPE; or,
 Passages in the Life of a Jacobite's Daughter. By M. E. LE CLERC.

THE AWAKENING of MARY FENWICK. By BEATRICE WHITBY.

DOCTOR GLENNIE'S DAUGHTER. By B. L. FAJJEON.

THE DEATH SHIP. By W. Clark RUSSELL.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT (LIMITED).

NEW BOOK ON ROBERT BROWNING: Essays and Thoughts.

By JOHN T. NETTLESHIP.
 Also Edition de Luxe, Limited to 75 numbered copies. Whatman large paper, price 21s. net.

THE POETRY OF TENNYSON. By H. Van Dyke, D.D.

Limited to 250 copies only for England.
 LONDON: ELKIN MATHEWS, VIGO STREET, W.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY.

ADMISSION FREE.

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.
 (About 20 doors West of Maud's Library.)

THE GREAT MASTERS.—Botticelli, Lorenzo di Credi, Fra Bartolomeo, Raphael, Titian, Da Vinci, Correggio, Rembrandt, Van Dyke, Murillo, &c. REPRODUCED in AUTOTYPE. Permanent Photography, from the grand Works in the Louvre, Hermitage, Uffizi, Madrid, St. Petersburg, the National Gallery, London; the Royal Collections at Windsor and Buckingham Palace.

The various Galleries have separate Albums, easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Visitors are welcome to come and study them, and will not be solicited to make purchases.

For further particulars, send for the new Pamphlet, 40 pages and Four Illustrations, entitled "AUTOTYPE, a Decorative and Educational Art." Free per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE, 183 pp., fr. 10 per post for 6d.

AUTOTYPE BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY offer their services to AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS to produce by the Autotype Process Book Illustrations of the highest excellence of any subject capable of being photographed.

Amongst the WORK RECENTLY DONE may be cited Wyon's "Great Seal of England"; Dr. Crookshank's "Micro-Photographs of Bacteria"; "Famous Monuments of Central India," for Mr. Lepel Griffin, K.C.B.; "Facsimiles of Early Italian Engravings," for the Trustees of the British Museum; "The Palaeographical Society's Facsimiles for 1888"; Illustrations for the "Journal of the Hellenic Society," &c.

For specimens, prices, and full particulars, apply to the MANAGER.

AUTOTYPE GRAVURE.

The AUTOTYPE PROCESS applied to Photographic Engraving on copper.

Portraits from Paintings by Pettie, R.A., Outess, R.A., Holl, R.A.; Specimens of Copies of Drawings, Etchings, &c.; and Examples of Auto-gravure Reproduction of Photographs from Art Objects, from Life, and from Nature, can be seen at the AUTOTYPE GALLERY.

Estimates and particulars on application.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, W.C.

JUST READY. 1890 EDITION. JUST READY.

DEBRETT'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE,

KNIGHTAGE, and COMPANIONAGE. Beautifully printed, over 1,000 pp., and 1,500 Armorial Bearings. Heraldically Embellished Binding. Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 31s. 6d., or in 3 vols., 16s. each.

London: DEAN & SON, 180A, Fleet-street.

Ready immediately. Price 2s. 6d., crown 8vo, cloth gilt.

By E. P. SCOTT.

STANLEY: and HIS HEROIC RELIEF of EMIN PACHA.

With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations.
 London: DEAN & SON, 180A, Fleet-street, E.C.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW MAGAZINE.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

Now Ready. Part I., Vol. I. Price One Shilling.
 Newly-Designed Cover by Mr. Walter Crane.

THE ART REVIEW,

A MONTHLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF ART, MUSIC, AND LETTERS.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS OF JANUARY PART.
 Three Plates and Two Full-Page Illustrations—The Farmer's Daughter, by W. Q. Orchardson; Two Sea Pieces, by Jules Dupré; Old and New, by Walter Crane.—Amateur Workers, by Mrs. Lynn Linton; The London Impressionists; Robert Browning, &c.

London: WALTER SCOTT, 24, Warwick Lane.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 339, is published THIS DAY.

CONTENTS.

- I. ITALIAN CONDOTTIERI.
- II. SIR WILLIAM ROWAN HAMILTON.
- III. THE BLIND and the DEAF.
- IV. ALEXANDER I. of RUSSIA and the POLES.
- V. THE CHURCH in WALES.
- VI. HADDON HALL.
- VII. EXTRADITION.
- VIII. EARLY CHRISTIAN BIOGRAPHY.
- IX. THE COUNSEL.
- X. SESSION.

MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

REMINGTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE BLACK BOX MURDER. A

Story. By the Man who Discovered the Murderer. Crown 8vo, 6s.
 "May be recommended to those who like detective stories as a good specimen of the class."—Athenaeum. "Interesting and readable; will carry the reader lightly over the weary miles between London and Peterborough."—Saturday Review. "Equal in interest and novelty to the most popular sensational stories."—Liverpool Courier. "May be safely recommended to all who delight in a tale of horror."—Literary World. "The Box is distinctly good."—Pall Mall Gazette. "One of the best books of the kind recently published."—Scott's Leader. "A very good example of the detective story."—Sunday Times. "A capital story."—Glasgow Herald. "Constantly with great skill and power."—Newcastle Daily Chronicle. "Well-knit and excellent."—Red and Green. "An exciting story; the mystery is well maintained to the close."—St. Andrew's Citizen. "The tale is skilfully worked out, and will prove attractive to all who are fond of stories of the detective order."—Star.

SIN of JOOST AVELINGH. A Novel.

By MAARTEN MAARTIENS. 2 vols. crown 8vo, 12s. "A book by a man who, in addition to mere talent, has in him a vein of such genuine genius."—Academy. "Unquestionably a good piece of work."—Athenaeum. "So unmitigably good as to induce the hope that an acquaintance with the Dutch literature of fiction may soon become more general among us."—Morning Post. "So good that it will find many readers here."—Scotsman. "A novel of a very high type. At once strongly realistic and powerfully idealistic."—Literary World. "A book which can hardly fail to awaken a feeling of interest, curiosity, and anticipation."—Manchester Examiner. "Romantic without being sickly, and full of interest without being sensational."—Vanity Fair. "A thoughtful and consistent character study."—Scottish Leader. "A very striking story, touching and true to nature, and forcibly conceived."—Manchester Guardian. "The plot is good and well sustained; the secondary characters are put in with good effect; the hero a fine character."—Church Review. "The author must be complimented on his intimate and humorous explication of Dutch sentimentality."—Scott Observer. "If all Dutch stories were as interesting and as well written as this one, there would be a considerable demand for them in this country."—London Figaro. "This story is full of local colour, and rich in quaint phraseology and suggestion."—Daily Telegraph.

REMINGTON & Co., Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.

NEW NOVEL BY SIR HERBERT MAXWELL.

THE ART OF LOVE;

OR, NEW LESSONS IN OLD LORE.

By SIR HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.,
 Author of "Sir Lucian Elphinstone."

8 vols., 8vo, 31s. 6d.

"The Author's intimate knowledge of the varied phases of life which he describes, his love for, and happy rendering of the beauties of nature, and the skilful tact with which he develops an intricate plot, are qualities that assign to his book a foremost place among the best novels of the day."—Morning Post.

"The novel is one of power and of continuously sustained interest."—Scotsman.

"The conversations in dialect are excellent, and full of racy touches."—Athenaeum.

Edinburgh: DAVID DOUGLAS; and all Booksellers.

Ready immediately at all the Libraries.

Cloth, handsomely bound, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

By MADAME CARETTE,
 Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

THE EVE of an EMPIRE'S FALL.

Being Intimate Recollections of the Court of the Tuilleries.

Now ready, crown 8vo, One Shilling.

By EDITH HERAUD,
 Authoress of "A Handbook of Elocution and Oratory."

ELOCUTION MADE EASY.

The Elocutionary Pause, its Nature, Use, and Value.

A Complete and Practical System of Elocution.

London: DEAN & SON, 180A, Fleet-street, E.C.

Now ready, price 21s.

CHARLES I. ELTON'S ORIGINS of ENGLISH HISTORY. Second Edition, Revised. 8vo, xxiv and 450 pp., with Ten Historical Maps, cloth.

"This fascinating and scholarly book."—Saturday Review, Dec. 28, 1889.
 DEAN & SON, 180A, Fleet-street, London.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,

No. 349.—CONTENTS.

1. THE LIFE OF LORD JOHN RUSSELL.
2. THE CONQUEST OF ALGERIA.
3. THE VOYAGE OF THE "CHALLENGER."
4. VITZTHUM'S LONDON, GASTEIN, and SADOWA.
5. DEMOCRACY IN SWITZERLAND.
6. NAVAL SUPREMACY and NAVAL TACTICS.
7. CURZON'S RUSSIA IN CENTRAL ASIA.
8. THE WAGES OF LABOUR.
9. A HANOVERIAN MARRIAGE.
10. PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE (QUESTIONS).
11. THE ENGLISH IN EGYPT.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by the Rev. MANDELL CREIGHTON, M.A., LL.D.

No. 17, JANUARY. Royal 8vo, price 5s.

1. Articles.

CONTENTS.

- FUSTEL DE COULANGES. By H. A. L. FISHER.
 SIR RICHARD CHURCH. (Part I.) By STANLEY LANE-POOLE.
 THE EXECUTION OF MAJOR ANDRE. By HERBERT HAINES.
 FREDERICK HENRY, PRINCE OF ORANGE. (Part I.) By Rev. GEORGE EDMUNDSON.
 THE GERMAN PEASANT WAR OF 1525. By C. W. C. OMAN.
 THE HUNDREDS OF DOMESDAY. By W. H. STEVENSON.

2. Notes and Documents.—3. Reviews of Books.—4. List of Historical Books recently published.—5. Contents of Periodical Publications.
 London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

On JANUARY 17, price 4s., post free. At all Libraries, Booksellers, and Bookstalls.

THE SCOTTISH REVIEW.

JANUARY, 1890.—CONTENTS.

- ART. I.—ECCLIASTICAL MUSIC IN PRESBYTERIAN SCOTLAND. By J. CUTBERT HADDER.
 II.—THE PREHISTORIC LEVANT.
 III.—THE VIKINGS.
 IV.—THE CAPTURE OF VERSAILLES. From the Moniteur.
 V.—PHILOSOPHY IN SCOTLAND.
 VI.—MORE POPULAR SONGS OF ITALY. By EDITH MAROFT.
 VII.—THE SCOTTISH UNIVERSITIES COMMISSION; CURRICULA OF STUDY, AND ACADEMIC DEGREES. By PROFESSOR KNIGHT.
 VIII.—SUMMARIES OF FOREIGN REVIEWS.
 IX.—CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.
 ALEX. GARDNER, Paisley, and 12, Paternoster-row, London.

THE JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Edited by I. ABRAHAM and C. G. MONTEFIORE.

Vol. II. JANUARY, 1890. No. 2.

Price 3s.; Annual Subscription, post free, 10s.

CONTENTS:

- JEWISH PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION and SAMSON RAPHAEL HIRSCH. By Dr. S. A. HIRSCH.
 A JEWISH BOSWELL. By S. SCHUCHTER.
 MANY MOODS in the HEBREW SCRIPTURES. By C. G. MONTEFIORE.
 ARE the JEWS a NATION TO-DAY? By the Rev. Dr. M. H. HARRIS.
 MARRIAGES ARE MADE in HEAVEN. By I. ABRAHAM.
 NOTES AND DISCUSSION.—CRITICAL NOTICES: (1) Robertson Smith's Religion of the Semites; By C. G. MONTEFIORE; (2) Jacobus Fabius de Meop; By S. A. STROGO; (3) Margoliouth's Edition of Jephthah the Karaites' Commentary on Daniel; By Rev. L. B. SIMMONS. Rabbi Meir and "Cleopatra"; By Prof. W. BACHEN. Translation of the Talmud in England in 1580; By S. SCHUCHTER. "Best-mum"; By Prof. D. KAUFMAN. Algazi's Chronicle and the Names of Patriarchs' Wives. By S. SCHUCHTER.
 POST-BIBLICAL BIBLIOGRAPHY, 1888-9. By Dr. A. NEUBAUER.
 London: D. NUTT, 270, Strand, W.C.

THE TORCH and COLONIAL BOOK CIRCULAR.

No. 10, DECEMBER 31st, 1889, now ready.

Contents.

RECENT ENGLISH and AMERICAN PUBLICATIONS:—

- Dictionaries and Encyclopedias.
 History and Biography.
 Economics and Politics.
 Law and Jurisprudence.
 Trade and Commerce.
 Religion and Philosophy.
 Essays and Belles-Lettres.
 Poetry and the Drama.
 Fine Arts and Illustrated Works.
 Education and Philology.
 Geography, Voyages and Travels.

- Natural and Physical Science.
 Medicine and Surgery.
 Industrial Arts, Handicrafts, Engineering, Chemistry, &c.
 Agriculture, Rural and Domestic Economy, Field Sports, &c.
 Facetiae, Readings, Recitations, &c.
 Novels and Works of Fiction.
 Miscellaneous and Christmas Numbers.
 Books for the Young.

COMPLETE LIST OF ROBERT BROWNING'S WORKS (With Portrait.)

RECENT COLONIAL PUBLICATIONS and BOOKS relating to the BRITISH COLONIES:—

- The Colonies in General.
 Australia.
 Tasmania.
 New Zealand.
 Polynesia.

- Canadian Dominion.
 Newfoundland.
 South African Colonies.
 West Africa.
 West Indies.

PUBLISHERS' SHORT LISTS, &c.

Annual Subscription, posted to any part of the World, 6s. Specimen Copy, 6d.

A few copies of Vol. I. and II. (Nos. 1 to 8) in Roxburgh Style, price 7s. 6d. each; parchment, 10s. 6d. each.

London: E. A. Petherick & Co., Colonial Booksellers' Agency.

32, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

Also at Melbourne and Sydney.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

Established 1769.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

Literary Men, Artists, and all Brain Workers

WILL FIND

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

a most refreshing beverage,

especially during work when solid food cannot be taken.—It satisfies without loading the stomach, stimulates the system, and leaves none of the neurotic effects of tea and coffee.

The perfect purity and delicacy of this Cocoa is testified to by

Dr. HASSALL, the LANCET, the BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL, HEALTH &c. &c.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

EPPS'S

(BREAKFAST)

COCOA.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING

MADE SIMPLY WITH BOILING WATER OR MILK.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

ON MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5 lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEST TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

GOOD

MORNING!

Have you
Used

PEARS' SOAP?

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

ARIS EXHIBITION, 1889.—The CLARENDON PRESS obtained the ONLY GRAND PRIX and TWO out of the five GOLD MEDALS awarded to British Printers and Publishers.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW LIST.

NEW WORK BY PROFESSOR LUIGI CREMONA.
Just ready, 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

THE GRAPHICAL and STATICAL CALCULUS. By LUIGI CREMONA, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Rome, Foreign Member of the Royal Society. Authorised English Translation by J. HUDSON BEARE, Professor of Engineering, Heriot-Watt College, Edinburgh.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 9s.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL DOCUMENTS OF THE PURITAN REVOLUTION, 1628-1660. Selected and Edited with an Historical Introduction, by SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, &c.

The documents in this volume are intended to serve either as a basis for the study of the Constitutional History of an important period, or as a companion to the Political History of the time. The Constitutional Bill of the first Protectorate Parliament has never before been printed.

NEW EDITION OF "LLOYD'S GREEK TESTAMENT, PRINTED ON THE OXFORD THIN INDIA PAPER." Just published, fcap. 8vo, bound in cloth, 6s.; paste-grain, 7s. 6d.; morocco, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

NOVUM TESTAMENTUM GRÆCE Accedunt parallelæ 8. Scripturæ loca, &c. Editit CAROLUS LLOYD, S.T.P.R. Adduntur tres Appendices, curante GUL SANDAY, A.M., S.T.P. Exegetica Sacrae Professor.

* This Edition is printed on the well-known OXFORD THIN INDIA PAPER, which is a speciality of the Oxford University Press, and is used exclusively for Oxford Books. "A model for presentation."—Saturday Review.

NEW VOLUME OF THE TRANSLATIONS OF FOREIGN BIOLOGICAL MEMOIRS.

Medium 8vo, cloth, 21s.

THE ANATOMY of the FROG. By Dr. ALEXANDER ECKER, Professor in the University of Freiburg. Translated, with numerous Annotations and Addresses, by GEORGE HASLAM, M.D., and profusely Illustrated with 259 Woodcuts and 11 Coloured Figures.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

DRYDEN'S ESSAY ON DRAMATIC POEY. Edited, with Notes, by THOMAS ARNOLD, M.A., Fellow of the Royal University of Ireland.

* This Essay, of which no convenient edition with the necessary annotations, has yet been published in a separate form, has been characterised as "the first piece of good modern English prose on which our literature can pride itself."

UNIFORM WITH DR. MERRY'S EDITIONS OF THE "ACHÆNIANS," "CLOUDS," "FROGS," AND "KNIGHTS."

Just Published extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Coloured Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

ARISTOPHANES—BIRDS. With Introduction and Notes by W. W. MERRY, D.D., Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford.

* New volume of the Clarendon Press Series of Aristophanes' Plays.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the COMPARATIVE GRAMMAR OF GREEK AND LATIN. By J. E. KING, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Lincoln College, Oxford, and G. COOKSON, M.A., late Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, Assistant-Master at St. Paul's School, London, Joint Authors of "Principles of Sound and Inflection as illustrated in the Greek and Latin Languages."

UNIFORM WITH "SHAKESPEARE AS A DRAMATIC ARTIST."

Will be published on Jan. 22nd, crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

THE ANCIENT CLASSICAL DRAMA: A Study in Literary Evolution. Intended for Readers in English, and in the original by RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge University (Extension) Lecturer in Literature, Author of "Shakespeare as a Dramatic Artist." Second Edition, 1888.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogue sent free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

Just published, fcap. 4to, half parchment, rough edges, 5s. ECHOES from the OXFORD MAGAZINE, being reprints of seven years.

* The Poems and Parodies which make up this volume have been selected from a large number of fugitive pieces which have appeared in the columns of the "Oxford Magazine," which has had some distinguished contributors since its first issue in January, 1883. This collection is the first which has appeared of its kind in Oxford for many years. Its contents are mainly comic, but some of the pieces are among the best Latin and Greek Parodies which have been produced.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, AMEN CORNER, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1889: The CLARENDON PRESS obtained the ONLY GRAND PRIX and TWO out of the five GOLD MEDALS awarded to British Printers and Publishers.

CLARENDON PRESS STANDARD SCHOOL BOOKS. BOOKS FOR CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1890.

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth.

LIVY. BOOK V. With Introduction and Notes by A. R. CLUER, B.A. Revised and enlarged by P. E. MATHESON, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford. 2s. 6d.

"Admirably adapted for the purposes of an examination. The Notes are clear, sensible and correct." Saturday Review.

CÆSAR.—THE GALLIC WAR. BOOKS VI., VII., VIII. For Schools. With Notes and Maps. By C. E. MOBERLY, M.A. [Immediately.]

"Stands high among the best classics we have met." Saturday Review.

CICERO.—SPEECHES AGAINST CATALINA. With Introduction and Notes by E. A. UPCOTT, M.A., Assistant-Master at Wellington College. 2s. 6d.

"A very useful and well-appointed edition."—Scotsman.

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. BOOK III. For Junior Classes. With Introduction, Notes, and Index. By J. MARSHALL, M.A., Rector of the Royal High School, Edinburgh. 2s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—ALCESTIS. For Schools. With Introduction and Notes by C. S. JERRAM, M.A. Second Edition. 2s. 6d.

ENGLISH CLASS BOOKS.

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth.

AN ELEMENTARY ENGLISH GRAMMAR AND EXERCISE BOOK. By O. W. TANCOCK, M.A., Headmaster of Norwich School. Second Edition, 1s. 6d.

AN ENGLISH GRAMMAR and READING BOOK, for Lower Forms in Classical Schools. By O. W. TANCOCK, M.A., Headmaster of Norwich School. Third Edition, 3s. 6d.

THE PHILOLOGY of the ENGLISH TONGUE. By J. KARLE, M.A., formerly Fellow of Oriel College, and Professor of Anglo-Saxon, Oxford. Fourth Edition, 7s. 6d.

SPECIMENS of EARLY ENGLISH. A New and Revised Edition. With Introduction, Notes, and Glossarial Index. By R. MORRIS, LL.D., and W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D.

PART I. FROM OLD ENGLISH HOMILIES TO KING HORN (A.D. 1150 to A.D. 1300). Second Edition, carefully Revised, 9s. PART II. FROM ROBERT OF GLOUCESTER TO GOWER (A.D. 1298 to A.D. 1393). Third Edition, 7s. 6d.

SPECIMENS of ENGLISH LITERATURE from the "Plowman's Creed" to the "Shepherd's Calendar" (A.D. 1394 to A.D. 1579). With Introduction, Notes, and Glossarial Index. By W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. 7s. 6d.

THE VISION of WILLIAM CONCERNING PIERES the PLOWMAN. By WILLIAM LANGLAND. Edited, with Notes, by W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. Fourth Edition, 4s. 6d.

CHAUCER.—The PRIORESSES TALE; Sir THOMAS; THE MONK'S TALE; THE CLERKES TALE; THE SQUIRE'S TALE, &c. Edited by W. W. SKEAT, Litt.D. Third Edition, 4s. 6d.

CHAUCER.—The PROLOGUE to the CANTERBURY TALES. THE KNIGHT'S TALE; THE NONNE PRESTES TALE. Edited by R. MORRIS, Editor of "Specimens of Early English," &c. Sixth Edition, 2s. 6d.

CHAUCER.—The TALE of the MAN of LAWE; THE PARSONS TALE; THE SECOND NONNES TALE; THE CHANOONS YEMANNES TALE. By the same. New Edition, 4s. 6d.

SPENSER'S FAERY QUEENE. Books I. and II. Designed chiefly for the use of Schools. With Introduction and Notes, by G. W. KITCHIN, D.D., and Glossary by A. L. MAYHEW, M.A. Each, 2s. 6d.

BACON.—ADVANCEMENT of LEARNING. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A. Third Edition, 4s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.—SELECT PLAYS. Edited by W. G. CLARK, M.A., and W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A. Stiff covers.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE, 1s. HAMLET, 2s.
RICHARD THE SECOND, 1s. 6d. MACBETH, 1s. 6d.
— Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A.
THE TEMPEST, 1s. 6d. AS YOU LIKE IT, 1s. 6d.
JULIUS CÆSAR, 2s. RICHARD THE THIRD, 2s. 6d.
KING LEAR, 1s. 6d. A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, 1s. 6d.
CORIOLANUS, 2s. 6d. HENRY THE FIFTH, 2s.
TWELFTH NIGHT, 1s. 6d. KING JOHN, 1s. 6d.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues sent free on Application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

SHAKESPEARE.—JULIUS CÆSAR Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A. Stiff covers, 2s.

"The Notes are a storehouse of information given in a simple and concise fashion."—Athenæum.

EUCLID REVISED. Containing the Essentials of the Elements of Plain Geometry as given by Euclid in his First Six Books. With numerous additional Propositions and Exercises. Edited by R. C. J. NIXON, M.A. Crown 8vo, 6s. Book I., 1s.; Books I. and II., 1s. 6d.; Books I.—IV., 3s.; Books V.—VI., 3s. "The best edition of Euclid for schools that I know." H. P. GURNEY, M.A., of Messrs. Wren & Gurney.

SCHILLER'S WILHELM TELL. Edited by C. H. BUCHHEIM, Ph.D., Professor of German, King's College, London. With a Life of Schiller, Introduction, Arguments, a Complete Commentary, and Map. Sixth Edition. 3s. 6d.

"As complete and satisfactory in every way as could be desired."—Athenæum.

SCHILLER'S WILHELM TELL. School Edition. With Map. 2s.

MILTON.—AREOPAGITICA. With Introduction and Notes. By JOHN W. HALES, M.A. 3s.

MILTON.—POEMS. Edited by R. C. Browne, M.A. Two Vols. Fifth Edition, 4s. 6d. Separately, Vol. I., 4s.; Vol. II., 3s.

MILTON.—PARADISE LOST. BOOK I. Edited by the Rev. H. C. BEECHING, M.A. Stiff covers 1s. 6d.; parchment 3s. 6d.

MILTON.—SAMSON AGONISTES. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by J. CHURTON COLLINS, B.A. Stiff covers, 1s.

CLARENDON'S HISTORY of the REBELLION. BOOK VI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by V. ARNOLD, M.A. 4s. 6d.

DRYDEN.—SELECT POEMS. By W. D. CHRISTIE, M.A. Second Edition, 3s. 6d.

ADDISON.—SELECTIONS from PAPERS in THE "SPECTATOR" With Notes by T. ARNOLD, M.A. 4s. 6d.

STEELE.—SELECTIONS from the "TATLER," "SPECTATOR," and "GUARDIAN" Edited with Introduction and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON, 5s.

POPE. With Introduction and Notes, by MARK PATTISON, B.D.

I. ESSAY ON MAN. Sixth Edition, 1s. 6d.
II. SATIRES AND EPISTLES. Third Edition, 2s.

JOHNSON.—RASSELAS. Edited with Introduction and Notes, by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L. 3s. 6d.

JOHNSON.—LIFE of MILTON. Edited, with Notes, &c., by C. H. FIRTH, M.A., Balliol College. 2s. 6d.; stiff covers, 1s. 6d.

GRAY.—SELECTED POEMS. Edited by EDMUND GOSSE. Stiff covers, 1s. 6d. * An Edition, with Notes for Schools, by FOSTER WATSON, M.A.

GOLDSMITH.—SELECTED POEMS. Edited by AUSTIN DOBSON. 3s. 6d.

GOLDSMITH.—The TRAVELLER. Edited by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., Editor of "Boswell's Life of Johnson." Stiff covers, 1s.

BYRON.—CHILDE HAROLD. With Introduction and Notes, by H. F. TOZER, M.A. 3s. 6d.

SCOTT.—LAY of the LAST MINSTREL. Edited, with Preface and Notes, by W. MINTO, M.A. With Map. Stiff covers, 2s.

SCOTT.—LAY of the LAST MINSTREL. Introduction and Canto I., with Preface and Notes, by the same Editor. 6d.

SCOTT.—MARMION. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by T. BAYNE. 3s. 6d.

CAMPBELL.—GERTRUDE of WYOMING. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by H. MACAULAY FITZGIBBON, M.A. 2s.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 227.
(New Issue.)

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1890.

PRIME 3d.
(Registered as a Newspaper.)

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST

Vol. I. (A—CONO) now ready.

THE CENTURY DICTIONARY:

AN ENCYCLOPÆDIC LEXICON OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Edited by Professor W. D. WHITNEY, Ph.D., LL.D. (Yale University).

PROFUSELY AND ARTISTICALLY ILLUSTRATED.

Cloth gilt, sprinkled edges, £2 2s.; half-morocco, cloth sides, marbled edges, £2 16s.

Also in Twenty-four Monthly Parts, price 10s. 6d. each.

The Standard (Leader).—"This new lexicon of the English tongue is, on its own lines, perhaps the most complete and comprehensive that has ever been attempted. Besides the etymology, the meaning, and the use of each particular word, it gives in a condensed form such explanatory matter as would be required by a person in search of special knowledge. Almost every page contains some picture which enables the eye to easily and rapidly take in the meaning of the text. Such assistance to the understanding of the letterpress is invaluable. It devotes a great deal of its space alike to terms which are usually considered obsolete, and to the more important technical and local words. The present work has every right to claim that it has reached a high standard of excellence. The quotations are apt and numerous, and supply the student with typical examples of the styles of our chief writers."

The Phonetic Journal.—"For the careful selection of contributors; for the copious and exact definitions; for the artistic and truthful illustrations; for the clear type and beautifully-sharp impression on the fine, smooth paper; and for the work as a whole, we have nothing but unstinted praise."

The St. James's Gazette.—"No pains seem to have been spared to render the work scholarly, accurate, useful and, for that matter, entertaining; the derivations are as trustworthy as we naturally expect them to be in a work edited by such a distinguished philologist as Dr. Whitney. The explanations of scientific words are singularly clear and concise, and the quotations from authors for the use of words very appropriate and well selected. We have nothing but praise for the way in which the difficulties of such a vast and burdensome enterprise have been surmounted. Let us add that the illustrations are skilfully executed, and that the paper and printing (the latter a highly important matter in such a work) are all that can be desired."

Notes and Queries.—"The scope and execution of the whole, so far as they are seen and are recognisably original, are praiseworthy."

Published in New York by the CENTURY COMPANY.

THE CAMEO SERIES.

Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, price 3s. 6d.

Volume III., now ready.

By WILLIAM WATSON.

WORDSWORTH'S GRAVE, and other Poems.

"Along with an indubitable vigour and felicity of expression, Mr. Watson has a fervour of sentiment and a rightness of thought."—Scottish Leader.

VOLUME I.

THE LADY from the SEA.

By HENRIK IBSEN.

"A powerful study."—Notes and Queries.

VOLUME II.

A LONDON PLANE-TREE, AND OTHER POEMS.

By AMY LEVY.

"True and tender poetry."—Saturday Review.

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION.

Second Edition, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LETTERS of the DUKE of WELLINGTON to MRS. J.—1824-51. Edited with extracts from the Diary of the latter. By CHRISTINE T. HERRICK.

"The book forms a most interesting psychological study."—Standard.

Illustrated, royal 8vo, bound in buckram, gilt tops.

SIR JOHN HAWKWOOD (L'ACUTO): the Story of a Condottiere. By JOHN TEMPLE LEADER and GIUSEPPE MARCOTTI. Translated by LEADER SCOTT. Limited Edition of 500 Copies, numbered and signed.

"This is a book to be welcomed, alike in the original and in the excellent translation of Mrs. Leader Scott. Simple and accurate, learned and interesting, it appeals almost equally to the student of history and to the lover of adventures."—Athenæum.

Two vols., medium 8vo, cloth, 32s.

THE LETTERS of HORACE WALPOLE. Edited with Introduction and Notes. By Prof. O. D. YONGE, M.A. Portraits and Illustrations. Limited Edition of 750 Copies.

"Nearly two hundred of these vivacious and unconventional epistles have been selected by Mr. Yonge, and they cover a period of nearly sixty years, and every variety of subject. Mr. Yonge has enriched the work with a carefully-written introduction, and some brief but scholarly notes."—Speaker.

A NEW VOLUME (the 22nd) of "THE STORY of the NATIONS."

THE BARBARY CORSAIRS.

By STANLEY LANE-POOLE.

Author of "Turkey," "The Moors in Spain," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.; PRESENTATION EDITION, cloth, gilt edges, 5s. 6d.; LIBRARY EDITION, cloth, red tops, 5s.

"Mr. Lane-Poole, who has already contributed more than one volume to this excellent series, has produced an interesting book on a little-known subject."—Observer.

"The book is written in a spirited style that suits its subject excellently, and has a series of quaint and instructive illustrations."—Scotsman.

OTHER VOLUMES IN THE SERIES.

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. ROME.
By ARTHUR GILMAN, M.A. Third Edition. | 12. THE GOTHES.
By HENRY BRADLEY. Second Edition. |
| 2. THE JEWS.
By Prof. J. K. HOSMER. Second Edition. | 13. ASSYRIA.
By ZENAIDE A. RAGOZIN. |
| 3. GERMANY.
By Rev. S. BARKING-GOULD. Second Edition. | 14. TURKEY.
By STANLEY LANE-POOLE. Second Edition. |
| 4. CARTHAGE.
By Prof. ALFRED J. CHURCH. Third Edition. | 15. HOLLAND.
By Prof. J. E. THOROLD ROGERS. Second Ed. |
| 5. ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE.
By Prof. J. P. MAHAFFY. Fourth Edition. | 16. MEDIEVAL FRANCE.
By GUSTAVE MASSON. Second Edition. |
| 6. THE MOORS IN SPAIN.
By STANLEY LANE-POOLE. Third Edition. | 17. PERFIA.
By S. G. W. BENJAMIN. Second Edition. |
| 7. ANCIENT EGYPT.
By Prof. GEORGE RAWLINSON. Third Ed. | 18. PHENICIA.
By Prof. GEORGE RAWLINSON. |
| 8. HUNGARY.
By Prof. ARMINIUS VAMBERT. Second Ed. | 19. MEDIA.
By ZENAIDE A. RAGOZIN. |
| 9. THE SARACENS.
By ARTHUR GILMAN, M.A. | 20. THE HANSA TOWNS.
By HELEN ZIMMERN. |
| 10. IRELAND.
By the Hon. EMILY LAWLESS. Third Edition. | 21. EARLY BRITAIN.
By Prof. ALFRED J. CHURCH. |
| 11. CHALDEA.
By ZENAIDE A. RAGOZIN. Second Edition. | 22. THE BARBARY CORSAIRS.
By STANLEY LANE-POOLE. |

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE ON APPLICATION.

Just ready, crown 8vo, paper, 6d.; cloth, 1s.

REFORM in EDUCATION: Showing the Improvements possible in the Present Methods. By the Rev. PETER PRESCOTT, Author of "Moral Education," &c.

THE CENTURY for FEBRUARY contains "EMERSON'S TALKS with a COLLEGE BOY," by CHAS. J. WOODBURY, with Portrait; "THE REALM of the CONGO," by the COMMISSIONER of the U.S., and ONE of STANLEY'S FORMER OFFICERS; "AUTOBIOGRAPHY of JOSEPH JEFFERSON ('RIP VAN WINKLE')," Illustrated; "FRIEND OLIVIA," by AMELIA E. BARR; "OLD AGE'S SHIP and CRAFTY DEATH'S," by WALT WHITMAN; "PURSUIT and CAPTURE of JEFFERSON DAVIS," by General WILSON and W. P. STEDMAN; &c., &c. Price 1s. 4d.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE LIFE AND WRITINGS OF LOUISA ALCOOTT, by WALTER LEWIS	55
STOKES'S IRELAND AND THE ANGLO-NORMAN CHURCH, by R. DUNLOP	56
MALLOCH'S IN AN ENCHANTED ISLAND, by the Rev. H. F. TOZER	57
LUCAS'S SKETCHES OF RURAL LIFE, by J. F. ROLFE	58
A DUTCH HANDBOOK TO THE HISTORY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT CANON, by Prof. CHRYNNE	59
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	60
CURRENT LITERATURE	61
NOTES AND NEWS	61
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	62
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	63
AN EPIGRAPH, by J. CHURTON COLLINS	63
OBITUARY	63
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	63
THE LANGUAGE OF MITANNI, by Prof. SAYON	64
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	64
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Wyon's MSS. in the British Museum, by Pym
Yeatsman; Saint Sidwell, by Thomas Kerlake;
Old High-German Glosses in the Vatican, by Whitley Stokes; "Ragman," "Ragman-Roll," by H. Bradley; "The Language of the New Testament," by G. A. SIMCOX	64
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	65
SOME BOOKS ON ANCIENT HISTORY	65
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Lycian Language, by Major Conder	67
SCIENCE NOTES	68
PHILOLOGY NOTES	68
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	69
THE OLD MASTERS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE, II.,
by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	69
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Runic Stones in the Isle of Man, by H.	71
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	71
STAGE NOTES	71
MUSIC NOTES, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	71
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	72

MISS BRAHAM, late of INGLENOOK, DORKING, has just removed to PIXHOLME, DORKING, and has now space for an additional number of BOYS to train for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Miss Braham is assisted by a Graduate of Oxford University, and by other responsible Teachers, and pays special attention to Physical Education. Her gymnasium is fitted with the latest apparatus by Herr Stempel, who will give weekly lessons. Inclusive terms 80 or 100 guineas a year according to age.

References sent to
Miss Bess, North London Collegiate School, N.W.
Rev. J. F. E. Fanning, M.A., King's College, Cambridge.
NEXT TERM will begin MONDAY, JANUARY 20TH.

CHEMISTRY.—An Analytical Chemist, Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry, &c., can RECEIVE a PUPIL into his Laboratory, where he would be thoroughly trained for the profession.—No. 871, ACADEMY Office, 27, Chancery-lane, W.C.

TO LIBRARIANS.—The ACADEMY for SALE, from No. 1 to end of December, 1885 (twenty-eight volumes), in Publisher's Cases.—Offers to Rev. W. T. PILTER, Needham Vicarage, Soile, Norfolk.

TO AUTHORS.—MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS, 18, Bonville-street, Fleet-street, London, E.C., are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS., and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. Digby & Long have also every convenience and ample facilities for the publication of MAGAZINES. Editorial offices if required.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY.
ADMISSION FREE,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.
(About 20 doors West of Mudie's Library.)

THE GREAT MASTERS.—Botticelli, Lorenzo di Credi, Fra Bartolomeo, Raphael, Titian, De Vinci, Correggio, Rembrandt, Van Dyke, Murillo, &c., REPRODUCED IN AUTOTYPES, Permanent Photographs, from the grand Works in the Louvre, Hermitage, Uffizi, Madrid, St. Petersburg, the National Gallery, London, the Royal Collections at Windsor and Buckingham Palace.

The various Galleries have separate Albums, easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of art. Visitors are welcome to come and study them, and will not be solicited to make purchases.

For further particulars, send for the new Pamphlet, 40 pages and Four Illustrations, entitled "AUTOTYPE, a Decorative and Educational Art." Free per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE, 180 pp., free per post for 6d.

AUTOTYPE BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY offer their services to AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS to produce by the Autotype Process Book Illustrations of the highest excellence of any subject capable of being photographed.

Amongst the WORK RECENTLY DONE may be cited Wyon's "Great Seal of England"; Dr. Crookshank's "Micro-Photographs of Bacteria"; "Famous Monuments of Central India," for Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.S.I.; "Facsimiles of Early Italian Engravings," for the Trustees of the British Museum; "The Palaeographical Society's Facsimiles for 1888"; Illustrations for the "Journal of the Hellenic Society," &c.

For specimens, prices, and full particulars, apply to the MANAGER.

AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY.

The AUTOTYPE PROCESS applied to Photographic Engraving on copper.

Portraits from Paintings by Pettie, R.A., Oulsee, R.A., Holl, R.A.; Specimens of Copies of Drawings, Engravings, &c.; and Examples of Auto-gravure Reproduction of Photographs from Art Objects, from Life, and from Nature, can be seen at the AUTOTYPE GALLERY.

Estimates and particulars on application.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, FOR THE CIRCULATION AND SALE OF ALL THE BEST AND NEWEST BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per Annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of books at the House of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per Annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per Annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

TOWN AND VILLAGE CLUBS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the Leading Books of Past Seasons are on Sale, Second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
241, Brompton-road, S.W., and 2, King-street, Cheapside, E.C.

H. RIDER HAGGARD'S NEW STORY.

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Libraries, 1 vol., 6s.

ALLAN'S WIFE.

By the Author of "Dawn," "Mr. Meeson's Will," &c.

With Thirty-four Illustrations by Maurice Greiffenhagen and Charles Kerr.

Also Edition de Luxe, limited to 100 numbered copies, large paper, half Rox., gilt top, price 21s. net.
"Altogether a fascinating book."—The World.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,

No. 349.—CONTENTS.

1. THE LIFE OF LORD JOHN RUSSELL.
2. THE CONQUEST OF ALGERIA.
3. THE VOYAGE OF THE "CHALLENGER."
4. VITZTHUM'S LONDON, GASTIN, and SADOWA.
5. DEMOCRACY IN SWITZERLAND.
6. NAVAL SUPREMACY AND NAVAL TACTICS.
7. CURZON'S RUSSIA IN CENTRAL ASIA.
8. THE WAGES OF LABOUR.
9. A HANOVERIAN MARRIAGE.
10. PARLIAMENTARY PROCEDURE (QUESTIONS).
11. THE ENGLISH IN EGYPT.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by the Rev. MANDRELL CREIGHTON, M.A., LL.D.

No. 17, JANUARY. Royal 8vo, price 5s.

1. Articles.
FUSTEL DE COULANGES. By H. A. L. FISHER.
SIR RICHARD CHURCH. (Part I.) By STANLEY LEANE-POOLE.
THE EXECUTION OF MAJOR ANDRE. By HERBERT HAINES.
FREDERICK HENRY, PRINCE OF ORANGE. (Part I.) By Rev. GEORGE EDMUNDSBORO.
THE GERMAN PEASANT WAR OF 1525. By C. W. C. OMAN.
THE HUNDREDS OF DOMESDAY. By W. H. STEVENSON.
2. Notes and Documents.—3. Reviews of Books.—4. List of Historical Books recently published.—5. Contents of Periodical Publications.
LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

"Growing bigger annually. It is also growing better....For those who have to do with Art and Artists it is simply indispensable. We do not know what we should do without it."—The Athenaeum.
"For completeness and comprehensiveness, this excellent manual might be described as the 'Whitaker' of the Art world."—St. James's Gazette.
"For all who are interested in Art and Artists it is invaluable."
Daily Telegraph.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

THE YEAR'S ART, 1890.

By MARCUS B. HUISE.

Containing a concise Epitome of all matters relating to the Arts of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture, which have occurred during the year 1889, together with information respecting the events of the year 1890. With Portraits of the Members of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours; and including the names and addresses of about 5,000 Artists.

LONDON: J. S. VIRTUE & Co., Limited, 26, Ivy-lane, E.C.

FOLKLORE SOCIETY.

THE NEXT EVENING MEETING will be held on TUESDAY, the 28TH JANUARY, at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, at 8 p.m., when Papers will be read by Mr. NUTT on "THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE 'SHANIAN SAGA,' and Mr. GUMME on "A STRAY TALE OF MR. J. F. CAMPBELL'S and its ORIGIN IN CUSTOM." J. J. FORTER, Hon. Sec.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION OF SKETCHES and STUDIES is now Open, 6, Pall Mall East from 10 till 5. Admission 1s.; Catalogue 6d.

ELECTION OF ASSOCIATES.—The day appointed for receiving works by Candidates is MONDAY, FEBRUARY 12TH, and the day of Election THURSDAY, 30TH.

ALFRED D. FRIFT, Secretary R.W.S.

THIS PART BEGINS A NEW VOLUME.

Price Sevenpence.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

FOR FEBRUARY.

Contents:

MY SHIPMATE LOUISE: The Romance of a Wreck. By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

THE LABOUR COLONIES OF HOLLAND.

JULIUS VERNON: A Story of Hyde Park.

CURIOUSITIES IN OUR ANCIENT CHURCHES.

JIM THE TRAMP. COMPLIMENTS.

LEPERS IN CANADA. THE VACQUEBO.

HOW OUR DRUGS ARE IMPORTED.

A MEMORABLE GAME OF CHESS.

THE STORY OF A WOMAN-HATER.

THE BELLS OF LONDON. THE GIANT SUN.

IN A REGIMENTAL ORDERLY-ROOM.

FUGITIVE FACTS FROM NORMANDY.

SOME PREDICTIONS AND COINCIDENCES.

ABOUT COMMON COLDS AND THE INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC.

By a London Physician.

WITH ROD AND GUN IN THE HIMALAYAS.

THE MONTH: SCIENCE AND ARTS.

TARGET TRAIN-SIGNALLING.

POETICAL PRICES.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL for February.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

COINS.—English, Roman, and Greek Gold, Silver, and Copper Coins, FOR SALE; also 17th and 18th Century Tokens. Moderate prices.—Apply to W. B. TAYLOR (Member Numis. Soc., London), Ivy View, Ealing.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAIN-

ING FARMS, Limited, HOLLESLEY BAY, SUFFOLK.
For the TRAINING of YOUTHS for COLONIAL LIFE, &c. Under the auspices of Agents-General for the Colonies, Head-Masters of Public Schools, leading Members of the Royal Colonial Institute, &c. The COLLEGE ESTATE dominates HOLLESLEY BAY. Invigorating climate, dry soil, pure water. MIXED FARMS, 1,800 acres in extent. Horses, Cattle, and Sheep Breeding. LARGE DAIRY, with modern appliances. Smiths', Carpenters', Wheelwrights', and Saddlers' Workshops. Geology, Botany, Forestry, and Gardening. Building Construction, Bar-voying, and Levelling. Veterinary Surgery, Ambulance Work, Kidding, Swimming, &c. Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

TO BE LET.—A COMPLETE WING OF

A BUILDING with a distinct annex in the rear, suitable for the purposes of a Collegiate, Academic, or Students' Residence, containing 35 rooms exclusive of Kitchens and Offices. The Building is pleasantly situated in a Square, and is in close proximity to some of the most important Educational Institutions of the Metropolis. Particulars and orders to view may be obtained from Mr. THOMAS CHATFIELD CLARKE, Architect and Surveyor, 63, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C. And offers for the same are to be sent to him not later than WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6TH, 1890.

CARMEN MACARONICUM.

THE SEASONS OF THE YEAR,

Being the second volume of this series of Extracts from Foreign and Ancient Literature, with Translations by JOHN W. MOLLETT, B.A., is nearly ready, and contains, inter alia, in the original dialect and the English rhymed translation, a large number of specimens of the Literature of the MINNESINGERS and TROUBADOURS of the 12th and 13th centuries. Price 5s. per volume, beautifully bound in calf.

From Public Opinion, 29th November, 1889.

"Carmen Macaronicum: a Collection of Extracts from Foreign and Ancient Literature, with Translations by John W. Mollett, B.A. (Officier de l'Instruction Publique, France) (Gilbert & Rivington, Limited). This opusculum is the first of a series in the same form, which, one after the other, will embrace all subjects treated in the poetry of all nations and periods, with the exception of the classical, Oriental, and English languages. The utility of these little volumes to the student, and the pleasure they will afford to the cultured and curious, will, if we are not very much mistaken, insure to Mr. Mollett an ample reward for his labours.

"Under the heading 'Creation—Nature' we have lines from Lorenzo de' Medici, Herder, and others. 'Sunset,' 'Evening,' 'Night,' afford ample scope for the author's faculty of selection; and he has selected well. Upon 'Moonlight' Mr. Mollett has brought together some of the most beautiful thoughts to be found in literature.

To attempt to write about Mr. Mollett's book in a cursory kind of manner is to attempt to hold in review a large number of the greatest writers the world has seen, a task scarcely to be accomplished in a few inches of type. The booklet is elegantly bound and printed, and will occupy no more space in the pocket than a cigarette case.

"The difficulty of finding suitable Christmas presents is a general one. Mr. Mollett has done something towards solving the problem."

From the Academy, 21st December, 1889.

"Night and Morning: a Collection of Extracts, &c., by John W. Mollett (Gilbert & Rivington). This exquisite little book, which bears also for an alternative title, 'CARMEN MACARONICUM,' sets forth its claim to attention in the printer's advertisement as 'a unique and choice gift-book.' It is not always that the interested eulogies of publishers and printers are justified by their wares, but in this case the claim must be said to be abundantly substantiated. The book is indeed unique and choice; its dainty external of limp calf and gilt edges serving as the appropriately beautiful casquet of literary gems—not all of the first water, it is true, but all deserving collection and attention. The extracts are drawn from the literature of various ages and languages, but the original is accompanied in most cases with a rhymed translation, oftentimes of great beauty and felicity. The author promises a larger selection if this instalment is favourably received. We hope he may find sufficient encouragement to keep his promise."

From the Bookseller, Christmas.

"Night and Morning: a Collection of Short Pieces, translated by J. W. Mollett, B.A. (Gilbert & Rivington). Originality stamps this little gift-book. Its binding of padded leather and gilt edges betokens some religious manual. A book of prayer, may be? Nothing of the kind. A Carmen Macaronicum indeed; 'pieces from the poetry of various ages and nations on the beauty and influence of Night.' Such is both theme and scheme. Lines from Calderon, Leopardi, V. Hugo, and Wieland: prose extracts from Chateaubriand, Jean Paul, Georges Sand, and Rousseau—these, in the form of brief and concentrated essence of thought and diction, make up the rich contents of the little book."

From the St. James's Gazette, 17th January, 1890.

"Night and Morning, by Mr. J. W. Mollett (Gilbert & Rivington), is an eccentric but elegant little book of quotations from European poets, many of them being little known writers, who have, nevertheless said things about the Night worth remembering. Not only are Dante, Tasso, Voltaire, Victor Hugo, Goethe, Schiller, and Heine laid under contribution, but we also find gems from German, French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese poets whose names and works will only be known by hearsay to the professed student. The translations are in most cases singularly graceful."

A Cheap Edition of the First Volume—NIGHT AND MORNING—is now ready, price 2s. in cloth.

Messrs. GILBERT & RIVINGTON, LD., ST. JOHN'S HOUSE, CLERKENWELL, AND ALL BOOKSELLERS.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s. No. 364, for FEBRUARY, contains:—

- 1.—KIRSTEEN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Chapters XXI.—XXIV.
 - 2.—TO ROBERT BROWNING. By AUBREY DE VEEB.
 - 3.—THE AMERICAN BORDERERS. By A. G. BRADLEY.
 - 4.—LORD CHESTERFIELD. By AUGUSTINE BIRRELL, M.P.
 - 5.—THE DIARY OF A SUCCESSFUL MAN.
 - 6.—OXFORD, DEMOCRATIC AND POPULAR.
 - 7.—THE BALLAD OF THE KING'S JEST. By YUSSUF.
 - 8.—MADAME D'ARBLAY. By E. S. SPOCKBURN.
 - 9.—LOCHGOIN.
 - 10.—NINO DIABLO. By W. H. HUDSON.
 - 11.—CANDOUR IN ENGLISH FICTION. By AN EDITOR.
- MACMILLAN & Co. London.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For FEBRUARY, profusely illustrated, price 6d., by post 8d., contains:—

- 1.—THE CHAPEAU DE PAILLE. After RUBENS. Frontispiece
 - 2.—THE HALL and the WOOD. WILLIAM MORRIS.
 - 3.—A WHITECHAPEL STREET. E. DIXON. Illustrated by HUGH THOMSON.
 - 4.—HOW TO SPEND SUNDAY. Rev. FREDERICK EYTON.
 - 5.—WINCHELSKA. Mrs. COMPTON CARR. Illustrated.
 - 6.—TO 'FRISCO. Sir JULIAN GOLDSMID, Bart., M.P.
 - 7.—BELLS and BELFRIES. Rev. H. R. HAWES, M.A. Illustrated.
 - 8.—THE PROFESSOR'S PIANO. Miss CLEMENTINA BLACK.
 - 9.—TWO AFRICAN CITIES. HAROLD CRICHTON-BROWNE. With Illustrations.
 - 10.—CYCLE OF SIX LOVE-LYRICS.—III. "HE PASSIONATELY BEWAILS HER ABSENCE." Words by JOSEPH BENNETT. Music by HAMISH MACCONE.
 - 11.—FEBRUARY. A Decorated Page. HAYWOOD SUMNER.
 - 12.—THE RING OF AMASIS. Chaps. VI. and VII. The EARL OF LYTON.
- MACMILLAN & Co., London.

ESTABLISHED 1866.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on Demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FEBRUARY PART NOW READY.

FROM ALL BOOKSELLERS.

MR. WALTER SCOTT'S NEW MAGAZINE.

Newly-Designed Cover by Walter Crane.

VOL. I. THE ART REVIEW. No. 2.

A MONTHLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF ART, MUSIC, AND LETTERS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

PLATES and FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

ROBERT BROWNING. Photographure from Photograph taken from Life by Messrs. Cameron & Smith, with Autograph.

ROBERT BROWNING. Intaglio Plate from Portrait by Rudolf Lehmann.

"PRETTY ROSE PETTIGREW." By P. WILSON STEER.

"THE BARGE." By THEODORE ROUSSEL.

"THE CITY ATLAS." By SIDNEY STARR.

ARTICLES, &c.

ART for the MASSES—EMIN PASHA, by Dr. F. W. FALKIN (with facsimile portion of letter)—MATTHEW ARNOLD'S MELIORISM, by Professor WILLIAM MITTO—VELASQUEZ at the ROYAL ACADEMY, by Hon. GILBERT COLNAGHE—THE TUDOR EXHIBITION—LETTERS from EGYPT, by W. M. CONWAY—VICTOR VON SCHEFFEL, by T. W. ROLLESTON—THE GREY BOOK OF LANGLEY, Edited by ERNEST REYS—ROBERT BROWNING: an Elegy, by WILLIAM SHARP—PARIS CAUSERIE—NOTES and REVIEWS, &c.

London: WALTER SCOTT, 24, Warwick Lane, Paternoster Row.

READY ON MONDAY, NO. 3 OF

THE CHILDREN'S GUIDE.

GREAT SUCCESS.

February Number, 23 pp. Richly illustrated. Price 1d.

Edited by DAVID BALSILLIE, M.A.

Of the January Number (16 pp., price 2d) the following were the

Press Opinions:—

"A monthly like this for children is a rarity."—Scotsman. "Altogether this is one of the best magazines for children that we know."—Glasgow Herald. "Makes a brilliant start with a strong staff of accomplished contributors."—Christian Leader. "Starts with high promise, and its low price to subscribers puts it within the reach of all."—Dundee Courier. "A very interesting magazine."—Dundee Evening Telegraph. "A paper entitled 'Our three Rs' is well worth mention."—Literary World. "I congratulate you most heartily on your first number of 'The Children's Guide.' Both in style and matter it ought to make its own way."—JAMES KERR, LL.D., H.M. Senior Inspector of Schools. "Your magazine seems very excellent."—ANDREW LANG.

Published by the Proprietor, DAVID BALSILLIE, at 8, North Bridge-street, Edinburgh.

To be had of all Newsagents.

The Trade supplied by Messrs. JOHN MESSIES & Co., Edinburgh, &c.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

SECOND EDITION. NOW READY.

On antique paper, cloth, 4s. 6d.; hand-made paper, Roxburgh, 7s. 6d. net; large paper, 21s. net.

NEW VOLUME OF

THE BOOK-LOVER'S LIBRARY.

HOW TO CATALOGUE A LIBRARY.

By HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A., Author of "How to Form a Library."

CONTENTS.—Introduction on Cataloguing generally—The Battle of the Rules—Print v. MS.—How to Treat a Title-page—References and Subject Index—The Arrangement of a Catalogue—Something about MSS.—Rules for a Small Library—A List of Latinised Names of Places—A List of Classical Names—An unusually copious Index is added.

"Commencing librarians and bibliophiles, collectors of books, and others needing compendious instruction in the mysteries of cataloguing, will find their wants ministered to in a convenient form by Mr. H. B. Wheatley's shapely little volume."—Saturday Review.

"In this work Mr. Wheatley renders a signal service to bibliography. The book was wanted, and the want could not have been more satisfactorily met."—Sunday Times.

Now ready, small fcap. 8vo, appropriately bound, 5s. large paper, 21s.

A BOOK for BOYS and GIRLS;

or, Country Rhymes for Children. By JOHN BUNYAN. Being a Facsimile of the unique First Edition, published in 1686.

The First Edition of this little work, and which has only been known to Collectors up to the present time through early Catalogues, has always been considered as absolutely lost, no copy being known to exist. A copy was, however, quite recently discovered, and has been secured by the British Museum; from this unique example this facsimile has been made, and is now presented to Students and Collectors.

"The stamp of the individuality of Bunyan is impressed upon every line of this book which has been so strangely brought to light."—Christian World.

"The reproduction of this curious old volume should rejoice the hearts of all lovers of the antique and quaint in literature."—Morning Post.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., post free.

THE POETS AND PEOPLES OF FOREIGN LANDS.

By J. W. CROMBIE.

CONTENTS:

THE FOLK-POETRY OF	FREDERIC MISTRAL.
SPAIN.	KLANA GROT.
A ROYAL MOORISH	STARRING VAN DEN
POET.	WILDEMBORCH.

"A most interesting volume: The ease and fluency with which his versions are cast prove his possession of a rare poetic instinct, and suggest that he might readily win a name in this department of literature."—Dundee Advertiser.

MRS. PIATT'S POEMS.

In crown 8vo, tastefully printed and elegantly bound, price 3s. 6d. post free.

SECOND EDITION. NOW READY.

THE WITCH IN THE GLASS.

And other Poems.

By Mrs. PIATT.

Author of "A Voyage to the Fortunate Isles, &c.," "Child's World Ballads," &c.

(Published in the United States by HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN, and Co., New York and Boston, price 1 Dollar.)

"There is no need at this time of day to assert her claim to recognition on our side of the Atlantic—has not her genius been honoured by a hundred pens? . . . It is just this feminine insight, this fortunate tact in thought and phrase, that gives her verses their unique and incommunicable charm."—Athenaeum.

"But there is not any piece in all the volume that does not please by its delicate suggestiveness of thought and grace of verse."—Scotsman.

"Every little poem by Mrs. Piatt's pen is a testimony to her right to occupy a place among the Brahmins of poetry."—Manchester Guardian.

"Every verse of hers is like the spray of a rose-bush in June, and the roses are of the most exquisite tint and perfume."—Dublin Evening Mail.

"Even the slightest is good."—Public Opinion.

"For those who have been privileged to read Mrs. Piatt's former volumes, it is unnecessary to multiply quotations, for they will assuredly get her latest book for themselves."—Figs.

"Her charming and vigorous verse."—Saturday Review.

"Mrs. Piatt is the best woman poet America has produced."—Truth.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOTICE.—A New Story by Rhoda Broughton, entitled, "ALAS!" and one by Mrs. Annie Edwardes, entitled, "PEARL POWDER," commenced in the JANUARY NUMBER of The TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE. Now ready, price One Shilling.

NEW WORKS.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of the PRINCESS LIEVEN and EARL GREY. Translated and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GUY LE STRANGE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with portraits, 80s.
"A valuable contribution to the history of an important political period."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE FIRST of the BOURBONS. By CATHERINE CHARLOTTE LADY JACKSON, Author of "Old Paris," &c. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with portraits, 24s.

SARDINIA and the SARDES. By CHARLES EDWARDES, Author of "Letters from Oreste." In demy 8vo, 14s.

A TOUR in a PHAETON THROUGH the EASTERN COUNTIES. By JAMES JOHN HISSEY. In demy 8vo, with Map and Illustrations, 16s.

NEW NOVELS.

By the Author of "THE PHANTOM FUTURE."
SUSPENSE. By H. S. Merriman, Author of "Young Mistley," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

STRANGE GODS. By Constance COTTERELL. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"Undeniably charming. Few authors would venture on an idyll in three volumes. Fewer still possess the grace of fancy, delicacy of touch, and also the worldly wisdom to render such a venture successful. The writer comes with flying colours out of this difficult ordeal, and only at the end of the story does the idea suggest itself that its chief merit consists in the spell exercised by an original and picturesque manner."—Morning Post.

BY THE AUTHOR OF
"MASTERS OF THE WORLD," &c.

THE LOCKET. A Tale of Old Guernsey. By MARY A. M. HOPPUS (Mrs. MARKS), 2 vols.
"The descriptions of Guernsey scenery are excellent. The tale has, among other merits, that of being quite unlike the majority of love stories. It has a grace and pathos that set it apart from the ordinary novel."—Morning Post.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENETIA'S LOVERS."
A HURRICANE in PETTICOATS. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "The Chilcotes," &c. 3 vols.

"It is brightly written, often with considerable verve, and is one of the very few three-volume novels that are not much too long. It is in a word, a delightful story and one of exceptional promise."—Academy.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A MODERN BRIGAND."
MAYGROVE. By W. Fraser Rae, Author of "Miss Bayle's Romance," &c. 3 vols.

ALSO, NOW READY.

A New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, scarlet cloth, 3s. 6d.

BESSY RANE,
By Mrs. Henry Wood.

Forming the 25th Volume of the New Serial Issue of Mrs. Wood's Novels, now in course of publication. The volumes appear at intervals of a month.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

The Growth of English Industry and Commerce during the EARLY and MIDDLE AGES. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D. New Edition, Demy 8vo, 16s.

"It will be perceived that Dr. Cunningham's book is one of exceptional interest and usefulness. It cannot be too highly praised. It is characterised by research, and thought, by a remarkable power of marshalling the varied facts in the vast field which has been traversed, and by singular clearness and felicity of expression."—Scotsman, Jan. 30, 1890.

Now ready, royal 4to., 3s.

An Atlas of Commercial Geography. Intended as a Companion to Dr. Mill's Elementary Commercial Geography. By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. With an Introduction by Dr. H. R. MILL. 3s.

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1890.

Pitt Press Series, &c.

Xavier de Maistre.—La jeune Siberienne LE LEPREUX DE LA CITE D'AOSTE, with Biographical Notices, critical Appreciations, and Notes. By the late G. MASON, B.A. 1s. 6d.

Racine.—Les Plaideurs, with Introduction and Notes by R. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. 2s.

Riehl.—Culturgeschichte Novellen, with Grammatical, Philological, and Historical Notes, and a Complete Index, by H. J. WOLSTENHOLME, B.A. (Lond.). 3s. 6d.

Schiller.—Wilhelm Tell, with Maps, Introduction, and Notes by KARL HERMANN DRUKL, M.A., University Lecturer in German. 2s. 6d.

Cæsar.—De Bello Gallico, Book VI., with Maps and English Notes by A. G. PESKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College. 1s. 6d.

Vergil.—Æneid, Book V., with Notes by A. RIDGWAY, M.A., Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. 1s. 6d.

Livy.—Book V, with Notes and Introduction by L. WHIBLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College. 2s. 6d. (Shortly.)

Xenophon.—Anabasis, Book III., with English Notes by ALFRED PRETOR, M.A., Fellow of St. Catherine's College, &c. 2s.

Homer.—Odyssey, Book XXI., with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices by G. M. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow of Sidney Sussex College. 2s.

Euripides.—Hippolytus, with Notes and Introduction by W. S. HADLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College. 2s.

Lucian.—Somnium, Chæron, Piscator et de Luctu, with English Notes by W. K. HEITLAND, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. New Edition, with Appendix. 8s. 6d.

Herodotus.—Book V, with Notes, Introduction, and Map by E. F. SHUCKBURGH, M.A., late Fellow of Emmanuel College. 3s.

Pitt Press Mathematical Series.

Euclid's Elements of Geometry, Books I. and II. Edited by H. M. TAYLOR, M.A., Fellow and formerly Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1s. 6d.

The Cambridge Bible for Schools.
The Book of Joshua. By the Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. With 2 Maps. 2s. 6d.

The Book of Judges. By the Rev. J. J. LIAR, M.A. With Map. 3s. 6d.

The First Book of Samuel. By the Rev. Professor KIRKPATRICK, D.D. With Map. 3s. 6d.

The Gospel according to St. Matthew. By the Rev. A. CARR, M.A. With 2 Maps. 2s. 6d. Also, with Greek Text and Notes by the same Editor, 4s. 6d.

The Acts of the Apostles. By the Rev. Professor LUMBY, D.D. With 1 Map. 4s. 6d.

The Epistle to the Galatians. By the Rev. E. H. PEROWNE, D.D. [In the press.]

The Epistles of St. Peter and St. Jude. By the Rev. E. H. PLUMPTRE, D.D. 2s. 6d.

The Smaller Cambridge Bible for Schools.

The First Book of Samuel. By the Rev. Professor KIRKPATRICK, D.D. With Map. 1s.

The Gospel according to St. Matthew. By the Rev. A. CARR, M.A. With Map. 1s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE,
AVE MARIA LANE.
GLASGOW: 263, ANGLO STREET.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS. By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "In Far Lochaber," "The Strange Adventures of a House-Boat," "A Daughter of Beth," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo. 31s. 6d.

KIT and KITTY: a Story of West Middlesex. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven," &c. Third Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo. 31s. 6d.

"The plot, good as it is, is not the point in this charming romance. The finer and the truer point is in the admirable literature of the book, in the sense of open air and freshness, in the descriptions—the fruit ripening under your eye, the wind blowing the open page. The dialogue is exquisitely chiselled."—Daily News.

IN SATAN'S BONDS: a STORY of LOVE and CRIME. By FREDERICK EASTWOOD, Author of "The Chronicle of Sir Harry Earleleigh, Bart.," "Calumny," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

THE STORY of EMIN'S RESCUE as told in STANLEY'S LETTERS. (Published by Mr. Stanley's permission.) Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. With a Map of the Route from the Congo to the Coast. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

"It will of course be distinctly understood that this little volume will in no way trench upon Mr. Stanley's great work, which cannot possibly be published for several months."

THE LIFE of HARRIET BEECHER STOWE. Edited by her Son, Rev. CHARLES E. STOWE. With Portraits and other Illustrations. 1 vol. demy 8vo, about 500 pp., cloth, 15s.

"It is an extremely interesting and instructive book. . . . A singularly truthful picture of the life of a brave woman and a successful author."—Athenæum.

THE LANCASHIRE LIFE of BISHOP FRASER. By JOHN W. DIGGLE, M.A., Vicar of Mossley Hill, Liverpool, Hon. Canon of Liverpool. Third Edition. 1 vol., illustrated, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"This important work is the history of a very grand episcopacy. The story of what can be done in fifteen years—and that by the simplest means—is a bit of blue sky—indeed, an expanse of blue sky—in our cloudy heavens."—Times.

THE COLONIAL YEAR BOOK. By A. J. R. TRENDELL, O.M.G., of the Inner Temple. With Introduction by Professor SEELEY. Crown 8vo, 760 pages, cloth, 6s.

NEW ZEALAND for the EMIGRANT, INVALID and TOURIST, the result of nine years' experience. By JOHN MURRAY MOORE, M.D., F.R.G.S. Illustrated by 4 Maps, &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

Now ready, Price ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

FEBRUARY NUMBER.

CONTENTS:

THE STANDING ARMY of GREAT BRITAIN. General Viscount WOLSELEY, K.P., &c. 9 Illustrations. Drawn by R. CATON WOODVILLE.

A PLATONIC AFFAIR. A Story. HJALMAR H. BOYSEN.

BENVENUTO ULLINI. ELIZABETH W. LATIMER. 9 Illustrations.

JAMAICA, NEW and OLD. Second Paper. HOWARD PYLE. With 23 Illustrations. Drawn by HOWARD PYLE.

THE LAKE DWELLERS. S. H. M. BYERS. 18 Illustrations.

YOUMA. A Story. Part II. LAFRANCIO HEARN.

TALKS with EDISON. GEORGE PARSONS LATHROP.

THE TWENTY-NINTH of FEBRUARY. BRANDER MATTHEWS.

A MAJESTIC LITERARY FOSSIL. MARK TWAIN.

NIGHTS and DAYS with DE QUINOXY. JAMES HOGG.

THE NEW YORK BANKS. Illustrated. RICHARD WHEATLEY.

Besides numerous Poems, &c. 70 ILLUSTRATIONS.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED),
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 25, 1890.

No. 925, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Louisa May Alcott: her Life, Letters, and Journals. Edited by Ednah D. Cheney. (Sampson Low.)

IN striking contrast with the pretentious Life of William Lloyd Garrison, which I lately reviewed in the ACADEMY, is the biography that Mrs. Cheney has prepared of her friend, the author of Little Women. Mrs. Cheney errs, if at all, in the direction of over-modesty. She does not attempt to magnify either her subject or herself. This, however, in the present case, cannot be considered an error; but, on the contrary, seems to be due to praiseworthy skill and judgment, united with clear insight and sympathy. An editor less sagacious would have aimed at greater elaboration. Mrs. Cheney appears to have understood that the story of Miss Alcott's life needed a plain and simple telling. It is given here almost wholly in her own words, drawn from diaries and letters. The result is a full, sufficient, and lifelike picture. Already, in a general fashion, many of the chief incidents in the life had been known to the world though Miss Alcott's published writings; for, as Mrs. Cheney says, "her capital was her own life and experience, and those of others directly about her." Mrs. Cheney undertook to supply what was needed to supplement, and to verify or correct the more or less irresponsible records in the story-books; and she is to be congratulated on the efficient manner in which she has executed her task.

Louisa May Alcott was born in 1832, the second of four daughters who, as Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy, are the heroines of Little Women. The father, Amos Bronson Alcott, was described by Emerson—his best friend—as "a pure idealist, not at all a man of letters, nor of any practical talent, nor a writer of books; a man quite too cold and contemplative for the alliances of friendship, with rare simplicity and grandeur of perception, who read Plato as an equal, and inspired his companions only in proportion as they were intellectual, whilst the men of talent complained of the want of point and precision in this abstract and religious thinker."—Life and Letters in New England.

He was one of those "children of light" who in worldly wisdom are no match for the "children of this world"; a truthful, trusting man, absorbed in the pursuit of high aims. His lack of practical talent, and not any defect of will or any indolence, rendered him incapable of providing suitably for his family; and the early days of Louisa and her sisters were spent amid chronic poverty, amounting even to positive want of the necessities of life. Mr. Alcott was a pioneer in the matter of education; and his experiments in the training of the young, although, like all his other schemes, failures as a means of livelihood, were in other respects of high importance. In his own household his peculiar ideas on this subject had full sway. Many a worthy Concord matron must have been painfully exercised in her mind at the way in which Mr. Alcott was "ruining" his children. No corporal punishment—Solomon notwithstanding! Positively encouraging them to think for themselves and to balance motives for actions, like rational beings, and to ask the queerest questions! It is, indeed, quite possible that on Mr. Alcott's system introspection was carried too far—at any rate when guided by persons less clear-sighted than Mr. Alcott himself. A child whose temperament inclined to be morbid might be effected injuriously; but the risk of this was less evil than the thought-quelling and spirit-breaking system that prevailed in former days. In the case of the Alcotts at least, the children were, on the whole, free-hearted and happy, notwithstanding that, for the due development of their virtues, and perhaps for economy also, they had to subsist on such diet as "plain-boiled rice without sugar," and "Graham meal without bread and molasses." One of Mrs. Cheney's earliest recollections of Louisa is that, at a Conversation on Vegetarianism, when Mr. Alcott was affirming that a vegetable diet would produce "unruffled sweetness of temper," she heard a voice behind her, saying—"I don't know about that; I've never eaten any meat and I'm awful cross and irritable very often." It would seem, however, that the perfect work of the vegetables was marred, in the case of Louisa and her sisters, by the secret importation, in a band-box, of pie and cake, provided by a compassionate friend. Despite poverty and vegetables—thanks, in large part to a good father and one of the noblest of mothers—those Concord days were, as Miss Alcott afterwards declared, the happiest of her life.

For her mother, in particular, Miss Alcott had a strong, unwavering affection. Highly as she esteemed her father, she was of opinion that "all the philosophy in our house is not in the study; a good deal is in the kitchen, where a fine old lady thinks high thoughts and does kind deeds while she cooks and scrubs." The aim of Miss Alcott's life was to place her mother in comfortable circumstances, and when her mother died she wrote, "a great warmth seems gone out of life and there is no motive to go on now." "I am a busy woman," remarked Mrs. Alcott on one occasion, "but never can forget the calls of my children." She never did. She was their friend and companion, and as such watched over them and gave and received confidence. She believed in and trusted them, not fearing that they would be injured by contact with rougher elements in the world—a contact which, in the case of the Alcotts, who were ever ready to shield and succour the destitute, could not well be avoided. The home-life and character of both Mr. and Mrs. Alcott, and the relation in which they stood to one another and to their children, may be discerned in the following passage:

"When cautious friends asked mother how she dared to have such outcasts among her girls, she always answered, with an expression of confidence which did much to keep us safe, 'I can trust my daughters, and this is the best way to teach them how to shun these sins and comfort these sorrows. They cannot escape the knowledge of them; better gain this under their father's roof and their mother's care, and so be protected by these experiences when their turn comes to face the world and its temptations.' Once we carried our breakfast to a starving family; once lent our whole dinner to a neighbour suddenly taken unprepared by distinguished guests. Another time, one snowy Saturday night, when our wood was very low, a poor child came to beg a little, as the baby was sick and the father on a spree with all his wages. My mother hesitated at first, as we also had a baby. Very cold weather was upon us, and a Sunday to be got through before more wood could be had. My father said, 'Give half our stock and trust in Providence; the weather will moderate or wood will come.' Mother laughed, and answered in her cheery way, 'Well, their need is greater than ours, and, if our half gives out, we can go to bed and tell stories.' So a generous half went to the poor neighbour; and a little later in the eve, while the storm still raged and we were about to cover our fire to keep it, a knock came, and a farmer who usually supplied us appeared, saying anxiously, 'I started for Boston with a load of wood, but it drifts so, I want to go home. Wouldn't you like me to drop the wood here; it would accommodate me, and you needn't hurry about paying for it?' 'Yes,' said father; and as the man went off he turned to mother with a look that much impressed us children with his gifts as a seer, 'Didn't I tell you wood would come if the weather did not moderate?' Mother's motto was, 'Hope and keep busy'; and one of her sayings, 'Cast your bread upon the waters, and after many days it will come back buttered'" (pp. 54-5).

Another glimpse is afforded in the following scene which Miss Alcott had noted in her journal. The date is 1854, and Mr. Alcott had been on a lecturing tour, unsuccessful as usual:

"In February father came home. Paid his way, but no more. A dramatic scene when he arrived in the night. We were waked by hearing the bell. Mother flew down, crying, 'My husband.' We rushed after; and five white figures embraced the half-frozen wanderer, who came in, hungry, tired, cold, and disappointed, but smiling bravely and as serene as ever. We fed and warmed and brooded over him, longing to ask if he had made any money; but no one did until little May said, after he had told all the pleasant things, 'Well, did people pay you?' Then, with a queer look, he opened his pocket-book and showed one dollar, saying, with a smile that made our eyes fill, 'Only that! My overcoat was stolen and I had to buy a shawl. Many promises were not kept, and travelling is costly; but I have opened the way, and another year shall do better.' I shall never forget how beautifully mother answered him, though the dear, hopeful soul had built much on his success; but with a beaming face she kissed him, saying, 'I call that doing very well. Since you are safely home, dear, we don't ask anything more.' Anna and I choked down our tears, and took a little lesson in real love which we never forgot; nor the look that the tired man and the tender woman gave one another" (p. 70).

Such were the influences under which Louisa Alcott and her sisters were trained.

The outcome was, not only that all the children turned out well, but also that Mr. Alcott's ideas were given to the world in the most convincing manner possible. He has written several books himself—good, suggestive, inspiring books; but they can have nothing like the range of influence of his daughter's stories. "False ideas," as Cardinal Newman has told us, "may indeed be refuted by argument; but only by true ideas can they be expelled." The method of the reformer is to refute by argument; but Miss Alcott, consciously or unconsciously, adopted the surer method. Her stories were acceptable just because they were true to life; and, at the same time, they were surprising, because of the depths and possibilities of child-nature which they revealed. Men of science tell of germs floating in our atmosphere which, if they come into contact with certain infusions (each according to its nature), exhibit signs of life. The life was there in the germ. It needed the occasion to call it forth. In like manner, possibilities in the children which had been long suppressed found their opportunity for development in the method of training of which Alcott and Pestalozzi (to mention no others) were, separately, pioneers. The name and system of Pestalozzi are known everywhere; but that system cannot be better understood, or in reality have had more influence, than the kindred truths of the obscure philosopher of Concord which found vent through the books of his daughter. There were "mute inglorious" Megs, and Jos, and Beths, and Amys, always. That the children of to-day seem different from the children of the "good old times" is due to no change in their nature, but to the new possibilities for its development. It is a part—and far from the least important part—of the democratic expansion which marks this age.

Turning to Miss Alcott's own life, we find that the author is even better than the books. "Jo," wild and wayward, but true at heart, was, indeed, in a great degree, her counterfeit presentment. As she says: "I always thought I must have been a deer or a horse in some former state, because it was such a joy to run. No boy could be my friend till I had beaten him in a race, and no girl if she refused to climb trees, leap fences, and be a tom-boy" (p. 30). This and much besides is truly "Jo"; but in her inner life, Louisa Alcott was greater than this ideal. The wild and wayward element, under due control, became the motive force of a noble life of self-devotion. "I was born with a boy's spirit under my bib and tucker," she said "I can't wait when I can work"; and work she did at whatever honest task she could find. There was much need for her aid, to lift her family out of their poverty, and to help each member of it in his or her special career. Her journal contains many passages like this, which is dated September, 1861: "Wrote a story for C., as Plato needs new shirts and Minerva a pair of boots and Hebe a fall hat." We find her sending "neckties and some paper" as gifts to her father, while she herself is wearing such old gowns as she can patch up or friends have given to her; even here, often enough, dispatching the best of them to her sisters. On Christmas Eve 1864 she notes receiving ten copies of Moods, then just issued; and she is encouraged by the fact that "for a week, wherever I went,

I saw, heard, and talked Moods and "found people laughing and crying over it"; but before this and afterwards she is "hammering away at the parlour carpet" and "feeling very moral to-day, having done a big wash alone, baked, swept the house," &c., &c. She did, at length, redeem her family from their poverty. After twenty years of strenuous effort she was able to write: "Debts all paid, even the outlawed ones, and we have enough to be comfortable. It has cost me my health, perhaps [and in truth it had]; but, as I still live, there is more for me to do, I suppose." She went on doing, chiefly for others, for nearly sixteen years more, when her health finally broke down. Then she had to learn how not to do. "The learning not to do is so hard," she said, "after being the hub of the family wheel so long. But it is good for the energetic ones to find that the world can get on without them, and to learn to be still, to give up, and wait cheerfully." Whether doing or not doing, she did not grumble. No one outside her immediate circle knew what she sacrificed and suffered. Nay, no one whatever really knew; her high spirits and humour hid many an anxious thought; her journal was the only receiver of the secret. "Life is my college," she wrote in that journal in 1859, "may I graduate well and earn some honours." Readers of this book will admit that she graduated with high honours. A young woman who had read Work entered her service because she wished to see "if Miss Alcott practices as she preaches." She found that she did, for the experiences of Christie were, in fact, her own. No task, were it mere house-cleaning or plain sewing, was too lowly in its time and place. Emerson, who was her good friend from her childhood until his death, may have been thinking of her when he wrote that passage in "Illusions" where he says that "if we weave a yard of tape in all humility, and as well as we can, long hereafter we shall see it was no cotton tape at all, but some galaxy which we braided, and that the threads were Time and Nature." Her services were not confined to her own family. Had they been, her life might have been a quieter and also a longer one; for overwork, and her brief but brilliant career in the war hospital, undermined her health. She was the good genius of many who had no claim upon her beyond the claim which in her eyes was supreme—that they were in need. So, with success and increased resources came always new demands: "Every poor soul I ever knew comes for help, and expenses increase. I am the only money-maker, and must turn the mill for others, though my own grist is ground and in the barn." In the midst of all, she found time to do her part as citizen, exerting herself in women's and other public movements. She had some contempt for mere theorists, being herself so pre-eminently practical. When a swarm of "budding philosophers" invaded Concord she was not well pleased. "If they were philanthropists," she said, "I should enjoy it; but speculation seems a waste of time when there is so much real work crying to be done. Why discuss the 'unknowable' till our poor are fed and the wicked saved?" Her own abounding sympathy always rushed into action; and happily, unlike many "practical" persons, that sympathy enabled her to be helpful to others in their way even when it was not her own also.

Incidentally, Mrs. Cheney's book gives interesting glimpses of other persons besides Miss Alcott—of the other sisters: Anna, who inherited the "serene, unexact temper of her father"; Elizabeth, until her early death "a serene and saintly presence," as her sister said; the cherished May, who also died all too soon; of Emerson and Theodore Parker, both of whom exercised great influence over Louisa in her early life; of Thoreau, the Hawthornes, and others. Parker knew her when her struggle was keen, and he was well constituted to understand and admire her heroic spirit. A "God bless you!" and the grasp of his hand, gave her, she said, "courage to face another anxious week." When people say, as they sometimes do, that the influence of Theodore Parker is spent, they do not remember how great a power for good he was in his personal contact with many besides Miss Alcott; and that so his influence lives and will live through lives which he helped to bless and make worthy.

WALTER LEWIN.

Ireland and the Anglo-Norman Church. By G. T. Stokes. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

PROF. STOKES has not been long in fulfilling the promise made by him, in his Ireland and the Celtic Church, of writing a companion volume to that work, bringing the ecclesiastical history of Ireland down to the eve of the Reformation.

The period covered by the present volume is not, perhaps, so generally interesting as was the preceding, and there is something not altogether satisfactory in the title of the book. But as a pleasant and intelligible introduction to the study of Irish history it deserves warm commendation. As in the former volume, there is in this little that can be called original; but the story of the conquest is told in a clear and graphic fashion, evincing a thorough mastery of the authorities and a familiar acquaintance with the localities described. Like a certain eminent English historian, Prof. Stokes is a great cyclist, and his holiday excursions into the country have been turned by him to excellent use. As for his method of teaching Irish history there is much to be said in favour of it, and his criticism of those who mistake obscurity for profound thought and pedantic dulness for surpassing learning is not without a spice of truth in it; though, on the other hand, there is the danger, not always avoided by Prof. Stokes, of becoming trivial as well as simple. "To select great personages of light and leading, or great central epochs," round which to "group the onward march of events," is undoubtedly a much simpler and perhaps, on the whole, a more satisfactory way of proceeding than the strictly chronological, where events are apt to lose their true significance amid the multiplicity of detail that surrounds them.

Especially is this so in regard to Irish history at a time when there was really no national life at all. To treat Irish history as one would treat English history appears to be altogether a mistake. In the history of England there is a continuity of national life—sometimes broadening, sometimes narrowing, but at all times visible—which is altogether wanting in that of Ireland. In Ireland it was only after the Cromwellian and Williamite wars had crushed out every separate interest in the island that a national life born of common suffering sprang into being, supplanting the old clan life. Till then each part of the island had its own separate life and its own separate history, which, in order to be understood, must be studied separately and in detail. Here (e.g.) it is the history of the English settlement, stretching out its arms of conquest now in this direction, now in that, and again shrinking to the inconsiderable dimensions of the English pale. Here it is the history of some great Irish clan, like that of the O'Neills, contending at one time against the English, at another against the O'Donnells. Here, again, it is the history of some great Anglo-Irish family, like the Geraldines of Munster, struggling to cut out for themselves a principality independent of English and Irish alike. To the student of English history, familiar with the idea of a central legislative and a central executive authority, such a state of affairs is bewildering in the extreme. In his endeavour to arrive at some sense of unity, he concentrates his attention wholly upon Dublin and the history of the English colony. Such a history may be sufficient and complete in itself, but it is evidently inadequate as a history of Ireland or the Irish people, and it is for this reason that I demur somewhat to the title given by Prof. Stokes to his present volume. What he has given us is not a history of Ireland and the Anglo-Norman Church, but a history of the Anglo-Norman conquest of Ireland and of the subsequent fortunes of the settlement down to about the close of the fifteenth century.

But to turn to the book itself. Prof. Stokes's account of the circumstances that led up to the invasion of Ireland by Strongbow and his comrades, and the subsequent conquest of the island, is complete and graphic. His narrative, enlivened by anecdote and by information of a most recondite sort, is, throughout, brimful of interest. But I must confess to a certain sense of disappointment at his treatment of Henry's legislative work in Ireland. The fact is Prof. Stokes is too prone to exaggeration. No doubt this is in some measure due to the audience to which these lectures were in the first place addressed. But one can hardly repress a smile when reading his description of the conquest of Ireland by Henry as a "great epoch, much talked of, widely celebrated, but almost entirely unknown," which it will be his object "to withdraw from the region of mythical shadows into the clear light of historic day." And, again, on p. 64, he writes: "Prince John's government was in every respect a disastrous one. It lasted but eight months, and yet it sowed seeds of mischief which have not yet fully matured." This is rank nonsense; but it is by no means a solitary instance of the exaggerated manner of writing in which Prof. Stokes occasionally indulges. Ever with an eye to effect, he is best in the descriptive portions of his work. It is when he comes to analyse character and interpret motives that he is slightly disappointing. Every historian is necessarily, at the same time, more or less antiquarian. Occasionally with Prof. Stokes the antiquary overbalances the historian. His account of Henry's landing, of his triumphal progress northward from Waterford, and of the Christmas festivities of his court at Dublin, is excellent. But of Henry's ultimate intentions, of his policy in regard to Ireland, we are left almost completely in the dark. And yet, as every student of Irish constitutional history knows, there are few questions more interesting than that which relates to the scope of Henry's Irish legislation. Did he or did he not intend to establish an independent kingdom in Ireland? What is the meaning of Roger of Hoveden's assertion that at the Council of Oxford in 1177 Henry raised his son John to the dignity of "king of Ireland"? On these points Prof. Stokes is altogether silent. Possibly the requirements of his lecture-room prevented him discussing these and similar topics, less interesting generally, but of greater importance to the student of Irish history than a knowledge of the exact spot where the Anglo-Norman invaders landed, to which Prof. Stokes devotes considerable attention. Still I cannot help thinking that his book would have been more valuable had he done so, even at the expense of curtailing it within the limits marked out by Mr. Sweetman's Calendars of State Papers. For it seems to me useless to rewrite the history of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries until the documents relating to that period are systematised and calendared. Prof. Stokes, it is true, makes good use of the materials at his disposal; but he has no fresh light to throw on the subject; and his remark that "Poynings' Act was the turning-point of Irish history," inclines one to believe that he has not studied this latter period so closely as he has done the former.

I suppose one hardly takes up a book on Irish history nowadays without wondering of what complexion of politics the writer is; but it would be difficult to say whether Prof. Stokes is a Home Ruler or a Unionist. Still, he would not be a true Irishman did he not have some grievance of his own against England.

"Here let me note," he says (p. 72), "one extraordinary piece of editorial folly—I was going to say, of Anglican wrongheadedness. It was bad enough to have Morice Regan's narrative edited and Giraldus Cambrensis translated by a man who, in his notes on Giraldus Cambrensis, identifies Kinsale, a town in Cork, with Kinselagh, an Irish tribe in Wexford; but then, when the government were officially publishing an edition of the collected works of Giraldus Cambrensis, to hand over the editing and annotating of his Topographia Hiberniae and of his Expugnatio Hiberniae to another Englishman equally ignorant of Ireland, was one of those thoughtless, hopelessly stupid actions which help to explain the failure of English policy in this country. One can scarcely imagine how even officialism of the densest character could pass over Irish scholars like Bishop Reeves, Mr. Hennessy, Mr. James Graves, or Mr. Gilbert in favour of any Englishman, no matter how learned in textual criticism, where a history and a geography dealing with Ireland were concerned," &c.

When Prof. Stokes comes to treat of the period covered by the Calendars of Carew MSS. I anticipate his indignation will pass all bounds. Perhaps, however, he is a little inclined to make mountains of mole-hills; for even Irishmen, one must allow, sometimes trip in the matter of Irish topography and Irish pedigrees (and small shame to them!), as witness Prof. Stokes, who informs us that the ancient Offaly is represented by the modern county of Kildare. This is a small matter; but everyone of us who cares anything about the Ireland of the future will join with Prof. Stokes in his earnest protest against the doctrine that it is advisable that Irishmen should know nothing of the history of their own country. It is, as he says, "a narrow, a bigoted, and a dangerous opinion"; and yet I wonder how many Englishmen are aware that at this moment Irish history is a forbidden subject in Irish schools. How much wiser, how much more politic, would it be to place in the hands of each Irish boy—and, for the matter of that, of each English boy—such histories as these which Prof. Stokes has given us, written with a single eye to the truth, but full of sympathy for what is good and noble in Saxon and Celtic nature alike.

R. DUNLOP.

In an Enchanted Island; or, a Winter's Retreat in Cyprus. By W. H. Mallock. (Bentley.)

THIS is a brilliant book, in which a strange country is described from an original point of view. The cause of the author's visit to Cyprus, he tells us, was as follows. When staying in the house of a much-travelled friend in England, he received information from him of the existence in that island of an extensive vein of green marble, resembling verd antique; and this, he conceived, might perhaps be worked as a profitable speculation. The spot where it was said to be found was near a mountain called Pentadactylon, in the northern part of the island; and the objects by which it was to be recognised were a ruined church, a cave, a copious spring of water, and a cypress tree. With these data he started on his exploration; and after one unsuccessful attempt he discovered the place, but only to be disappointed at finding that the marble was scanty in amount and in small pieces.

So much for the immediate object of Mr. Mallock's journey. But, meanwhile, the speculator's thoughts had been diverted into another channel by the magic influence of the first impressions of Eastern scenes and of a life and associations altogether alien to those of modern Europe. In this connexion he propounds a somewhat novel view of the true purpose of travelling, which he repeats with no little insistence in the course of his volume. According to Mr. Mallock, the traveller's function is not to observe facts or to notice what is real in the present or in the remains of the past—to do so would be to have an object, and the true traveller must have no object; but to drink in "the stimulant of a new mental experience." Those who do this "are the only true travellers; for it is they alone who really love change for the sake of change, taking it into their system as a smoker inhales smoke, and finding it exhilarate them like a kind of spiritual hashish." "The true traveller is mentally the émigré of contemporary revolution; and he exiles himself from his country in order that he may escape at intervals, if not from himself, at all events from his generation."

In this respect Mr. Mallock acted up to the principles which he enunciates. We have often been told that the amount which a man learns from travelling is in proportion to the store of information which he collects beforehand; Mr. Mallock assures us that six weeks before he landed in Cyprus he was not even aware of the existence of its capital, Nikosia. When he is present at the excavation of a Phœnician tomb, he says:

"The trench that had just been opened was the grave of a Phœnician child. . . . I had never been present at an occasion like this before, and it changed at once the whole character of the afternoon for me. I did not, as I have said, care sixpence about Phœnicia; but there was something that touched the feelings like a knife or a note of music in seeing after all these centuries the earth giving up her dead, and the toys of a child thrown back to the light which had shone on them last before the dawn of history."

We are half afraid that Mr. Mallock's definition of a traveller would exclude Herodotus and Marco Polo, and a few others to whom that title has usually been applied; and we are not certain that his views on the subject do not resolve themselves into a refined epicurism, which appeals in vain to persons who are not so déillusionné as he professes to be.

But it would be ungenerous to press these points when the result in the present instance has been to give us a most agreeable book. Mr. Mallock's tour in Cyprus comprised a stay at Nikosia in the interior of the island, and visits to Kyrenia on the northern, and Famagusta on the eastern, coast; and he was everywhere entertained by British residents. The Gothic structures, which date from the period of Western occupation, seem especially to have excited his admiration, surrounded as they are in this land by the unusual accompaniment of palm trees and other luxuriant vegetation. Among these he allowed his fancy to run riot; and while he describes them, he endeavours to picture at the same time the dream-land or cloud-land in which he himself lived. His account of Famagusta, with its mediæval fortifications and splendid churches, now deserted, is very romantic; but the place which attracted him more than any other was the Abbey of Bella Pais, in the neighbourhood of Kyrenia. The church and the refectory of this abbey are in perfect preservation; and the cloisters, which reminded him of those of Magdalen College, Oxford, are only ruined on one side. The following is his description of the refectory:

"Its door opened from the cloister on the side facing the precipice and opposite to the church. I entered. I was in a magnificent hall more than a hundred feet in length, more than forty feet in height, and in width more than thirty. Nowhere a stone was chipped, nowhere an angle obliterated. Not York Minster nor Westminster Abbey could show, in all their roofs, groining whose ribs rose and met more gracefully, or more complete preservation of the overarching stone. To another feature they could show no parallel at all—to the palms and oleanders on which the windows opened, and which, seen through this Gothic framework, looked like the work of sorcery. Presently, I espied a passage leading to some regions beneath. I descended some broken steps which led me into a dim twilight; and, advancing a little, I came upon two crypts, perfect as the hall above, but not a third of its height, and sustaining their ponderous vaulting on low hexagonal columns."

Throughout this volume everything is gracefully described and invested with a tinge of romance and poetry; and an element of piquancy is added by the introduction of contrasts with modern European life and quaint and clever observations. In the course of the narrative, also, not a few amusing incidents are related, the prominent figure in which is the author's native travelling-servant, Scotty, whose real name was Abdullah, while this sobriquet had been appended to it owing to his having once visited Glasgow. Nor must we overlook a number of really good sayings, the best of which, to our mind, is the following: "The variety of travel is in inverse proportion to the speed of it." The fault is ours if, after perusing the book, our uncultivated British taste for solid food makes us feel as if we had been dining off pastry. It certainly is not everyone who can feel and describe, as Mr. Mallock has done, the enchantment exercised by the sunshine of the South and romantic memories; and therefore we are grateful to him for imparting to us this quintessence of the impressions of an impressionable traveller.

H. F. TOZER.

Sketches of Rural Life, and other Poems. By Francis Lucas. (Macmillan.)

OUR literature is rich in classical descriptions of the felicities of the peasant's existence. He must indeed be a soulless creature who is insensible to the vivid and picturesque beauty of those idyllic representations of rural life. But, while fully realising their charm, many, perforce, disallow their truth. In depicting a peaceful scene of simplicity, innocence, and joy, Goldsmith, in "The Deserted Village," was conforming to a canon of pastoral art. The pastoral poet, as Steele says, must discover what is agreeable in country life and hide what is wretched. In strong contrast with that charming product of the poet's fancy is the sombre picture—in the propriety of which Dr. Johnson acquiesced—of the peasant's life, with all its meanness and its misery, Crabbe presented in "The Village." Washington Irving's pleasant picture is not less sharply at variance with Cobbett's descriptions in his Rural Rides.

Historical evidence favours the verisimilitude of the darker representation. Once only—when, after the ravages of the Black Death, he found himself master of the labour-market—has the lot of the English land-labourer been more than barely tolerable at best. The first Statute of Labourers promptly determined that period of unfamiliar prosperity; and, from the reign of Edward III. until our own time, notwithstanding frequent legislation—sometimes remedial, but for the most part repressive—his condition generally has been more or less hapless. No substantial betterment of the lot of the labourer in husbandry accompanied the phenomenal progress in other departments of industrial life. He remained, as we have known him, inured to toil at a very tender age, his best years passed in unremitting labour, embittered by anxieties, and haunted by a persistently intrusive vision of the comfortless inactivity, the pain, and the humiliation that awaited his declining powers—a figure at once inspiring pity and commanding respect, pathetic alike in his hopeless acquiescence in his lot and in the patient dignity of his endurance. It may be true that individual effort and kindly intention on the part of those socially above him were not always lacking to relieve with some touches of warmer colour the monotony of his life. But these at most availed very little to brighten the "hueless grey" of his servitude—the harsh term, still in general use in the south-west, itself a significant survival. It was no wonder that, in the first amazement of a fresh-born hope, the field-labourers in the southern shires regarded Joseph Arch as the apostle of a new evangel.

There is almost an absence of shadow in the presentment of rural life in the volume before us. Oppression and sordid care have no place in the lot of Mr. Lucas's peasant. His wage is more than sufficient for his need; he is quite content with his condition; and he can contemplate the future with complacency. "The Shepherd" says—

"I've every comfort I could wish,
And manage to pay my way,
And furthermore I've a little store
Against the rainy day."

Nor does the way in which "The Ploughman" regards his exposure to the weather accord with Crabbe's view of the "slaves" of labour hoarding up "aches and anguish for their age":

"Oh! the ploughman's lot is a humble lot,
And homely is his fare,
And we spend our toil
On our native soil
And breathe our native air.
Though it howls across our broad hillside,
And cuts us to the skin,
Our English blood, so warm and good,
Leaps up to drink it in."

"The Woodman," too, is above the promptings of discontent:

"Oh! the woodman's wages are sure and good,
His tool is keen and his arm is strong,
And though the weather be never so rude,
Lustily in the lonely wood
He labours all day long.
And now and then wakes up the hills
With a bit of an old song.
Of lop and top he gets his share
To furnish his winter's store,
And a faggot or two he well can spare
To lay at the widow's door;
And, if her old heart blesses him,
What could he wish for more?"

But the woodman belongs to the aristocracy of rural labour. Another portrait in this gallery of rustics, and one of the best in the series, is that of "The Hedger and Ditcher":

"Heigho! for the hedger and ditcher,
There's many wiser and many richer;
But leather, all leather from tip to toe,
The very worst weather that ever can blow
Is good enough for the hedger and ditcher.
Where the ragged fence runs up the hill,
With the thick gloves on his hands,
Busy with hook, and billet, and bill,
Yonder the hedger stands;
And he clenches and wrenches, and wattles and twists
The stubborn stems by the strength of his wrists
As if they were hempen strands."

And the brier, whose laughing roses swung
In June's delicious breath,
And the thorn where the linnet perched and sung
To his mate on her nest beneath,
And the berries of waxen pink that blush
On the spindlewood's slender spray,
Those merciless hands will lop and crush
Whenever they come in his way."

Stephen Duck himself, the poetical tasker or thresher who became rector of Byfleet—Crabbe's "honest Duck," whom Gay described as the favourite poet of the Court, and on whom Swift expended a bitter epigram—could not have produced a more sympathetic picture of "a tasker bred and born" than that limned by Mr. Lucas. Ancient memories of an exceedingly agreeable kind will be revived in many minds by the familiar environment of "The Tasker"—the "big old barn with its gloomy bays,

And the moss upon the thatch," where the rats and mice scuttle about, and
"the fierce old tom-cat hides,
And the barn owl snores and blinks,
And between the sheaves the weasel glides";
and where the oaken

"floors send up the sound
Of the swivel's measured stroke."

The book contains pleasing descriptions of natural scenery, more than one of which we would transcribe, were it not for a restraining fear of indulging in the luxury of quotation more freely than courtesy permits. The sketches are largely informed with the feeling of the country, and show great love of beauty and intimate acquaintance with nature's moods and works. They indicate, too, familiarity with the rustic mind; and in no wise is this knowledge more truly illustrated than in the note of natural piety which occurs now and again, but never obtrusively.

It is of an older England that Mr. Lucas has given these transcripts. Nowadays, the leather garb of the hedger and ditcher is never seen, and the sound of the flail is rarely, if ever, heard on the countryside, where, too, the old spirit of faith and reverence is slowly dying out. These things were; but the peasant's life of simple happiness never existed outside the poet's imagination.

Of the other poems in the book, some of them of considerable merit, space will not permit any detailed notice. Two of the "Songs in the Old Style," however, call for mention. Of these "Violet Buds" is too long to quote; besides, "Winter" is more seasonable:

"When hungry fowl go roosting soon,
And nightly shines the crystal moon
O'er silent rills,
And icy winds their bugles blow
And crisping sheet the powdery snow
Oat o'er the hills;
Then merrily, merrily trim the fire,
Merrily troll about the bowl,
And merrily sing to your heart's desire,
For to solace the winter's lack
There's nothing so good as song and sack;
So merrily, merrily trim the fire.
When barns at early eve are fast,
And woodmen from the darkling waste
Their wallets bear,
And teams are housed by lanthorn light,
And fold-yards littered down at night
With special care;
Then merrily, merrily trim the fire,
Merrily troll about the bowl,
And merrily sing to your heart's desire,
For to solace the winter's lack,
There's nothing so good as song and sack;
So merrily, merrily trim the fire."

The echo will be readily recognised, and "special care" is unfortunate; but this is a good song withal.

JOHN F. ROLPH.

A DUTCH HANDBOOK TO THE HISTORY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT CANON.

Het ontstaan van den Kanon des Ouden Testaments. Historisch-kritisch Onderzoek door Dr. G. Wildeboer. (Groningen: Wolters.)

AMONG the many continental works which have found translators in recent years I do not remember one on the origin of the canon of the Old Testament. It is much to be wished that this convenient and thoroughly critical text-book, by Dr. Wildeboer (professor at Groningen), may attract the attention of some one who is alive to the wants of students. It is of a moderate length, and is well arranged. Many inaccuracies have crept into the ordinary hand-books which are here corrected. And the statements to which the author in his preface draws special attention—on the conception of canonicity in the Jewish schools, on the true significance of the history of the canon, and on the reasons why the Christian Church of our day can, and should still, retain the Jewish canon—deserve to be carefully studied as a necessary preliminary to the theological study of the Old Testament.

Some will naturally ask, What is the author's attitude towards Old Testament criticism? This is his reply:

"The history of the collection of the books of the Old Testament can with much justice be regarded as a continuation of the history of the origin of these books. Often our enquiry presupposes certain results as to the origin of the elder Scriptures. But the research as a whole is not based upon these. And the arguments which we borrow from the results of historical criticism are so illustrated and confirmed from another side that they do not much affect the security of our argument."

In a note to this paragraph—the book is in paragraph form—the author remarks that it would be easy to derive from the late origin of Daniel in its present form (about 165 B.C.) and of Chronicles (about 250 B.C.) some evidence with regard to the canonisation of the second and third collection of books. But, he adds, the reader will see that the date given for the canonisation of the second collection rests upon independent grounds, and that the position of Daniel in the third collection of itself testifies to the late origin of the book.

Dr. Wildeboer has a comprehensive knowledge of the literature of the subject, and refers to the most recent books—Dutch, German, and English. His treatment of the subject of the canonisation of the law is circumspect and yet thoroughly up to date. A similar remark may be made of his section on the references to the Old Testament canon in the New Testament, which, he says, on the one hand oppose the theory that a fixed canon existed since the days of Ezra, and on the other hand give some positive hints of value for our conception of the history of the origin of the canon. The book introduces the student to the present state of critical research in this difficult subject, and should not be neglected by Biblical students.

T. K. CHEYNE.

NEW NOVELS.

Two Pardons. By Henry Scott Vince. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Redeemed in Blood. By Lady Florence Dixie. In 3 vols. (Henry.)

Dr. Greystone. By Mme. Van de Velde. (Trischler.)

A Cavalier's Lady. By Constance Mac Ewen (Mrs. A. C. Dickers). (John Heywood.)

A Stage Romance. By Lilith Ellis. (Remington.)

Wheat Certainty. By John Cahill. (Ward & Downey.)

Paul's Friend. By Stella Austin. (Walter Smith & Innes.)

Jonathan Morle. By Elizabeth Boyd Bayly. (Jarrold.)

Cousin Ned. By Louisa M. Gray. (Glasgow: Bryce.)

Boycotted. By Mabel Morley. (Remington.)

THE name of Mr. Scott Vince is unknown to us as a novelist, but he has written a fairly successful work in Two Pardons. It may not call forth much admiration from the literary point of view, but the story is cleverly constructed and evolved. It opens with a dramatic prologue, reciting the tragic circumstances of a duel which takes place at Chagres, on the Isthmus of Panama. Then the scene changes to the quiet English village of Avonham, in Marshshire. Here lives a fascinating widow, Mrs. Stanhope, who has earned the warmest eulogies for her kindness to the poor. The sleepy village is suddenly thrown into excitement by the settlement within its midst of a certain Mr. Galbraith, of whom no one knows anything except that he is a man of great wealth, who buys a large house, and land without stint. Village life as it is still led in some remote parts of the country, with all its gossip and its petty events forming a nine days' wonder, is faithfully delineated. A considerable portion of the first and second volumes is occupied with the account of a Parliamentary election of the good old type, with the time-honoured custom of broken heads and much wilful destruction of property. But the election is only a subordinate incident in the weaving of the plot, which is of a double character. In the first place the wrath and jealousy of two men, Alfred Shelman and his fidus Achates Adolphus Carter, are evoked in consequence of the affection manifested by one Walter Rivers for Mrs. Stanhope, and by Galbraith and certain friends of his for the fair daughters of Mr. Abel Bompas, an Avonham magnate. Little by little they cherish the growth of sinister designs, until these culminate in murder. It would be unfair to the author to follow further this portion of his narrative. Meanwhile, the second branch of the plot is being worked out; and in course of time the past life of the bewitching widow is gradually exposed to view. It has been marked by wicked passages, of which she now bitterly repents, and which she is endeavouring to expiate by good deeds. At last she is deeply enmeshed, and her intimate relation to the actors in the duel described in the prologue is made clear. The novel has plenty of incident, and is unquestionably interesting for its kaleidoscopic views of country life.

Whatever else be said for or against Lady Forence Dixie's novel, it is indubitably exciting. Indeed, it almost takes one's breath away. The very title, Redeemed in Blood, is unpleasant; and one or two of the characters endeavour to live up to it. The woman known as Lady Wrathness is about as fine a specimen of a human tigress as we have met with. She knocks down an innocent girl with a knuckleduster, nearly killing her, and hunts her own husband all over the globe, holding over him the horror of a murder which she knows he is innocent of, but which he himself believes he has unwittingly perpetrated. In order to screw up her courage to the sticking point this strange being swallows tumblerfuls of raw brandy, from whose effects she recovers in the most marvellous manner. She has in her possession the written confession of the real murderer; and a whole system of plotting and counter-plotting ensues for the possession of this document, which is concealed in a black bag. The heroine of the story, Lady Maeva Doon, loves Lord Wrathness, and is resolved on proving his innocence. This she is eventually instrumental in doing. Lady Wrathness suspends the precious bag over a lofty cliff near Santa Cruz; but Maeva, and a youth named Hamilton, who is in love with her, determine to circumvent her. Hamilton cuts the rope and loses his life at the hands of the enraged Lady Wrathness; but as the bag falls into space, it is caught by Maeva and Lord Wrathness, who have timed their arrival to the exact moment in a boat beneath. There are other marvels almost as extraordinary as these. That Lady Florence Dixie can write well is shown not only by her natural sketch of Maeva, but by the character of Lady Ettrick, and her charming sketches at the opening of the youthful lovers Rory and Lorna, who certainly do not bend to the customs of conventional society. Lady Florence Dixie states that this is her first novel. That being the case, the critic ought not to err on the side of severity, but we are quite convinced she will live to see that Redeemed in Blood is a literary mistake; and when she has laid aside the hysterical style, of which it is an almost perfect example, she will do work that is more commensurate with her undoubted talents.

Mdme. Van de Velde is a vivacious writer, and her Doctor Greystone is above the average of single-volume novels. Indeed, the picture of the doctor is invested with a quite unusual measure of individuality. The early blighting of his life, with the trouble that attends him in consequence of the death of his wife, and his subsequent self-immurement in a Leicester-shire village, must evoke sympathy on the part of every reader. He is more sinned against than sinning, and men are always predisposed to regard such a being with affection. Greystone's penchant for vivisection is forgotten in his noble efforts to alleviate human suffering. Into the mouth of one other person in the story, Sir Everett Barston, the writer puts many clever things, as, for instance, "The world is full of great men whom nobody knows, and of little men whom everybody extols." But while Mdme. Van de Velde shows unmistakeable cleverness, why should she commit such solecisms as, "He made an effort to mix into society."

Mrs. Dicker's romance of the Isle of Wight, A Cavalier's Lady, is more successful than the general run of historical novels. It purports to be the journal of Mistress Judith Dyonesia Dyllington, and it is concerned with the troubles which that headstrong and unfortunate monarch, Charles I., brought upon himself. The king is himself introduced into the story, as also are Cromwell and Milton. The characteristics of the Protector have been rendered so familiar to us through the pages of Carlyle that it is not surprising Mrs. Dicker has attained a fair amount of resemblance in her delineation. There is considerable display of antiquarian research in the passages of this story relating to the earlier history of the Isle of Wight.

A Stage Romance is very tragic, perhaps unnecessarily so, for we do not see why it should have been incumbent upon Evelyn Erle and Arnold Rivers to throw their lives away in the manner they did. Perhaps the fact that the lady was a mystic and a fatalist had something to do with it:

"In theory she was a Platonist, tinged with the mysticism of Allan Kardec's theory of re-incarnation. She had not yet met the man who could touch her strangely balanced nature. She influenced all with whom she came in contact, without in return being influenced by any."

But the conqueror came at last, and the end of her love was darkness, gloom, and death. We shall be glad to meet with Miss Ellis again under more cheerful circumstances.

The Cornish story, Wheal Certainty, is very touching. As the name implies, it deals with a mine discovered on the property of Michael Treleven; but this is only a peg on which to hang a moving story of love and revenge. Ruth Treleven is a charming creation, and her sorrows and final deliverance from the persecutions of an aged and fiendish lover excite genuine sympathy. Mr. Cahill writes with ability and freshness.

Paul's Friend excellently fulfils its mission, being "a story for children and the childlike." Miss Austin is one of the few writers who can depict children with all their winning ways and naturalness. Little Paul Charteris and his sister Paulina are delightful, and this record of their youthful joys and trials is just the book to place in the hands of boys and girls. It is also not without its lessons for "children of a larger growth." Socrates the dog and Chum the cat, who figure prominently in the narrative, are exceedingly knowing animals.

The writer of Jonathan Merle: a West-Country Story of the Times, has something in common with Miss Edna Lyall, but her religious philosophy is more healthful and satisfying, if her literary facility be inferior. Jonathan Merle himself is a manly, earnest fellow, a sincere Christian without cant, and consumed with the desire to do all he can for the amelioration of the race. He is better than the hazy philanthropists with vague notions, and by dint of resolutely doing the duty nearest to him he achieves high results. Miss Bayly's story is very thoughtful, and pervaded by a high tone.

The same praise can honestly be awarded to Cousin Ned, and a pathetic interest attaches to it from the fact that it is a posthumous work. Miss Gray had a gift for writing stories with a moral purpose. Her style is simple and effective, with no pretensions to genius. Her latest published production may be read with genuine pleasure, and at the same time with regret that the young have lost a sincere friend.

Boycotted, an Irish story by Miss Morley, is diversified by some pleasant love passages; but we prefer to take our fiction and politics apart, as we can then enjoy the one and discuss the other.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Scenes from a Silent World. By Francis Scougal. (Blackwood.) The readers of Blackwood's Magazine in the past year have had most of these scenes before their eyes, but the present volume is not a mere reprint of what has already appeared. It contains a chapter upon Capital Punishment which is well worth consideration, and an earnest appeal for more sympathetic treatment of the inmates of our prisons. Mr. Scougal believes that much good would result if the silent world to which the criminal is condemned could be visited by a properly organised body of unofficial persons, who would make acquaintance with every individual prisoner and study his case in all its bearings, past and future, with a view to his amelioration. Although he does not put his suggestion into any practical shape, we should hesitate to say that it is impracticable. Mr. Scougal has himself shown what can be done by means of personal intercourse. He found hopeful traits even in condemned murderers, and drew forth, by sympathy, what otherwise would have remained for ever locked up:

"'A friend!' exclaimed a criminal, on whom the chaplain's visits had had no effect. 'A friend!' He remained silent for a few minutes, with his piercing eyes staring into the face of his visitor; then he suddenly flung himself back on his pillows, muttering, 'Well, when I came into this hateful place—ay, and long before—I thought I had done with friends for ever and ever! It goes very hard with me to believe I've got one now.'"

It should be borne in mind that in some few prisons ladies have, of late years, been allowed to visit the women's cells; but this privilege, owing to indiscretion, has in several instances been withdrawn. We are disposed to think that men would prove better visitors than women. They are more ready to recognise the letter of the law and to keep their feelings under control. Mr. Scougal—many of whose over-true stories are stranger than fiction, some rather ghastly, and a few relieved by a touch of humour—is a strong opponent of capital punishment. His language is, we think, more forcible than his logic is convincing; but he deserves to be heard.

Old Age: the Results of Information received respecting nearly 900 Persons who had attained the Age of Eighty Years, including Seventy-four Centenarians. By George Murray Humphry. (Cambridge: Macmillan & Bowes.) This book is welcome, not only for the information it contains, but for the evidence it supplies of the growth of a more scientific method of dealing with the problem of longevity. The frank credulity of Easton and his school, who regarded all centenarian claims as matters to be dealt with by faith and not by evidence, has passed away. Sir G. C. Lewis and Mr. W. J.

Thoms both did good by their persistent demand for evidence; and the latter in particular achieved a great service by the exposure of many imposters—some of whose falsehoods were so glaringly improbable as to seem intended to challenge doubt rather than invite the belief with which they were received. Dr. Humphry's book is not, however, simply a discussion of the question, "Can man live a hundred years?" for that question has been decisively answered in the affirmative, although many make false or mistaken claims to an existence of a century. It is a digest of the information on old age brought together by the Collective Investigation Committee of the British Medical Association, supplemented by some later data. This mass of material is expounded in a very satisfactory manner by Dr. Humphry. That civilisation is lengthening the term of human life seems to be quite clear. The system of birth and death registration now used will in a few more generations probably make this increasingly manifest, as it will then be much easier to trace the life-history of individuals. That our very complex society has its special dangers need not be said; but the greater security of life, the increase of sanitary knowledge, the improvement in cleanliness, the better food, and the wider interests of the mass of the community, have had the effect of lengthening the term of human existence. It is a significant fact that longevity is commoner among women than men. How is this to be explained, except by the greater regularity of the lives of the female sex? This, in fact, appears to be the broad lesson of Dr. Humphry's book. Some old people have been free livers, and possibly have violated every hygienic law; but when the data are examined as a whole, it will be seen that temperance in all things is the highway to a healthy old age. Perhaps the first essential is the most difficult of all; for the centenarian is almost always "well-born" in the physical sense—that is comes of a stock that has a constitutional power of endurance. Yet as vicious habits may destroy the finest physique, so the rational management of life, the alternation of physical and intellectual interests and employments, the cultivation of a cheerful temper, and the careful avoidance of excess whether in eating or drinking, in the play of the passions, in work or in pleasure, will do much to counteract original defects of constitution. This is not a new doctrine; but the moralist who advises a sober, cheerful, and temperate life may now reinforce his counsel by these facts of science, which show that this is the surest method by which to attain length of days—a boon often desired even in an age of superficial pessimism.

The Makers of Modern Italy. By J. A. R. Marriott. (Macmillan.) In this little volume of less than one hundred pages, Mr. Marriott gives us an admirable sketch of the rise of Italian nationality. He describes the unification of Italy as the work of three men—Mazzini, Cavour, and Garibaldi. To these he adds a fourth—Victor Emanuel, the first king of United Italy, "whose coolness and courage, whose temperate zeal and whose unswerving honesty, whose clearness of vision and unfailing commonsense, gave consistency and coherence to the life work of them all." Mr. Marriott carefully avoids the graceless task of appraising the comparative value of the work which each of these great men achieved for Italy. He is content with admiring all. As he eloquently expresses it:

"The Prophet, the Statesman, the Crusader, each was complementary in his lifework to the other. Possessed of widely diverse gifts, dissimilar in temper, and generally opposed in policy, but equal in abnegation of all selfish aims, equal in devotion to a noble cause, equal in the steadfast courage with which it was pursued, each will have his proper niche in the temple of Italian unity, for each contributed most precious gifts—each freely gave his life and lifework—to the building of that imperishable fane."

Mr. Marriott has read Mazzini to some purpose. He points out that with Mazzini "the sole origin of every right is in a duty fulfilled." He describes him as he was—no mere dreamer of vain dreams, no fawning demagogue, but

"a pure-minded, God-sent prophet, self-devoted to the noble task of rescuing his fellow-countrymen from the degrading yoke of alien tyrants, of emancipating his fellow-men throughout the world from the no less ignoble tyranny of selfish passions and of base desires."

We have said enough to show that these three lectures will be an intellectual treat to all who sympathise with the making of modern Italy.

From Kitchen to Garret; Nooks and Corners. By J. E. Pantan. (Ward & Downey.) What Mrs. Pantan calls "the ever fascinating subject of household management and household decoration" forms the subject of these twin volumes. They will prove a useful present to young couples entering upon the rather fearful pleasures of an establishment of their own, and even old stagers may gather from them not a few hints for the improvement of their homes. It will be understood that these books are essentially women's books. We cannot imagine any man taking them in hand except for the purpose of criticism. Moreover they are, to a large extent, class books. The domestic economy about which they treat is that of the middle and upper-middle classes—the professional and mercantile folk—among whom there is an increasing desire to get the largest possible amount of enjoyment out of their incomes, but who, through ignorance, often fail in doing so. Mrs. Pantan will tell them where they can get tasteful things cheaply, and how they can produce satisfactory results out of the least promising materials. She will advise them how to furnish "artistically" their reception rooms, and make their nurseries and bedrooms cheerful and healthy. She will impart to the young housekeeper all those domestic details which, we believe, form the staple of conversation among the newly-married, and she will win the regard of those who are candidates for matrimony by her generous views on the subject of dress.

"Dress," she says, "is, unfortunately, so frightfully expensive nowadays that the problem of how to dress at all, always a serious one, has assumed gigantic proportions of late years."

An allowance of less than £100 a year may clothe, but cannot dress, its recipient. It is only fair to add that in apportioning an income of £1000 a year, she is kind enough to assign one-tenth for "clothes for husband," while only £75 is retained for "clothes and pocket money for wife." Perhaps the lady's dress, in contradistinction to "clothes," is paid for out of the balance for incidentals, which is a big one.

A Guide to District Nurses. By Mrs. Dacre Craven. (Macmillan.) No better qualified person could have been chosen than the author of this little book to write on Nursing. Mrs. Craven was trained at St. Thomas's, and worked at King's College, Hospitals. She has seen the chief continental hospitals, and those of Canada and the United States; and she helped to nurse the sick and wounded in the Franco-German War. It was only natural, therefore, that she should be chosen by the trustees of the Jubilee Fund to write this small manual for the use of the nurses of the Queen Victoria Jubilee Institute. All who are in any way connected with the sick poor will find many useful hints in it, whether they have adopted the profession of a nurse or not. The personal qualifications of the district nurse, arrangement of the sick-room, its ventilation, cleanliness, temperature, and cookery are lucidly treated. There are rules for keeping registers, reports, &c., which will be practically useful in every household where typhoid or scarlet fever make their unwelcome appearance. Indeed, the chapter on the latter disease ought to be studied by all mothers. It is quite needless to commend Mrs. Dacre's book. Without a superfluous word, from beginning to end it forms an admirable handbook of Nursing.

Historical Tales and Legends of Ayrshire. By William Robertson. (Glasgow: Thomas D. Morison; London: Hamilton, Adams & Co.) Mr. Robertson has collected a quantity of interesting matter; but it is unfortunate that he has not made his book more attractive. Only after repeated attempts, indeed, were we able to read it. "Contest for" is used where the preposition is needless; and it is hardly possible that "akin with" could be a right construction. Expressions like "vernal influences," "eventuated," "the jubilate of its strains blending away into the dirge of the coronach," occurring frequently in serious narratives, warn the reader off the ground. Mr. Robertson's writing requires to be drained and stubbed. These strictures apply more especially to the stories in which the author draws on his imagination. When he has facts to deal with the ground is firmer. Putting the language aside, we find in the historical portions research and a laudable impartiality, and in the legendary and romantic narratives a feeling for the picturesque. As Mr. Robertson points out in a preface, which, in style, contrasts favourably with the bulk of the book, Ayrshire is rich in historical associations. Haco was defeated on its shores; Wallace and Bruce "wrought wondrously" within its borders; to it the Lollards came; and Cromwell in the Fort of Ayr "stabled his steeds in the shadow of St. John's." Roman and Pictish remains, crannogs and tumuli, give it a place in archaeology as interesting almost as its place in history. Then there is plenty of material for the study of its social condition past and present. If, instead of giving us twenty-eight disconnected papers, Mr. Robertson had put some method into his work, and beginning with his "Prehistoric Sires of Ayrshire," traced the development of society in Kyle, Carrick, and Cunningham to the present time, his long-winded stories of wraiths and raids and sheep's heads would have found their proper compass and significance as incidental illustrations of the manners and beliefs of the times. He would have taken much greater interest in his work, and so would his readers. Everything required for such a plan is contained in the present volume; and, from the forcible and compact style of one of the papers—"The Story of Kyle and Carrick Four Hundred Years Ago"—we are convinced that Mr. Robertson is equal to something of the kind.

Heroines of Scotland. By Robert Scott Fittis. (Paisley: Alexander Gardner.) Mr. Fittis possesses a familiar knowledge of Scotch history, and of the annals of many Scotch families, and is chiefly interested in the antiquities of his subject. He is too good a patriot not to catch fire sometimes; but his pages are burdened with matter that would have been sufficiently prominent in an appendix, and the style is rather halting. "Many glorious women that are famed for masculine virtue" is the fitting quotation from Webster which Mr. Fittis uses as one of the mottoes of his book. Isobel, Countess of Buchan, who installed Bruce as king of Scotland; the amazons, Black Agnes of Dunbar, Lilliard of Ancrum, Margaret Campbell—the heroine of "Edom o' Gordon"; and the strong-hearted martyrs, Isobel Alison of Perth and Marian Harvie of Bo'ness, are among the harder heroines whom the author seems to prefer; but he writes also of Helen of Kirkconnel, Bessie Bell and Mary Gray, and other ill-starred ladies dear to romance.

Police! By G. T. Clarkson and J. Hall Richardson. (Field & Tuer.) The two authors are a police officer of many years standing and a journalist whose daily duty has brought him into contact with policemen of all ranks. The book does not pretend to contain a complete chronicle of the police, and still less of crime. The writers have co-operated to sketch in broad outlines the constitution of our guardians of the peace. The metropolitan force is especially dealt with, as that body is governed not by the ratepayers but by the Home Secretary. The book is written in a very rambling vein, and embraces all sorts and conditions of men from that delightful artist, the late John Leech, to vulgar murderers like Peace. Chap. xv. gives a very detailed and impartial account of the recent disturbances in Trafalgar Square, and chap. xiii. of the Jubilee Plot. The earliest orders issued to the force in 1830 are given in some detail, and the writers question whether the "frog's march" is not a breach of these orders. The book has something to tell us about London slang. For instance, the cabmen call a stand near a certain club in Trafalgar Square "Poor Man's Corner," because the club members "pay the legal fare" and no more. A burglar's kit is given, and we learn with some surprise that it was not till 1758 that the first forger of a Bank of England note was executed. We have, however, said enough to show that the book gives a good deal of information in a chatty and discursive manner.

From Printing-Office to the Court of St. James's. By W. M. Thayer. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Charles Lamb was not singular in his dislike of the industrious apprentice. A man so obviously capable of advancing himself does not require our sympathy. Benjamin Franklin is the industrious apprentice of history. We cannot say his character loses any of its priggish traits under Mr. Thayer's treatment. On the contrary, the author has added a tone of self-righteousness which is entirely absent from the Autobiography. The book professes to be a biography of Franklin for the first thirty years of his life. The title is, therefore, misleading, as Franklin at the end was still a printer, and had not begun his public career. Hardly one of the 380 pages is without a piece of entirely imaginary dialogue. But the worst feature of the book is that it is not so much a life as a panegyric. "Franklin is the wisest man I ever knew," interjected Coleman (p. 359). Coleman's interjection is the one staple of the book. Eulogy is palatable when met with occasionally; but it soon palls when it seasons every dish. As long as the reader finds the style clear and unpretentious, he has no right to complain; but he may fairly object to the vulgar (or legal) use of such words as "party":

"Once a party applied for several hammers, to whom Maydole was indebted for some favour; and the party said to him—" (p. 215).

The author does not state that he writes for boys; and it is as well he does not, as we doubt whether the perusal of this book would awake any feelings but those of dislike to one whom Bancroft has styled "the true father of the American Union." Such is the natural result of unqualified praise.

Trying to Find Europe. By Jimmy Brown. (Sampson Low.) The title of this book is its worst fault; but we forgive the author after reading it. It is distinctly amusing. The American boy tells his own tale. He runs away from his brother-in-law's house to find his father in Europe. The fun begins in the first chapter with his sister's wedding:

"When I found that things were to be thrown at Sue and Mr. Travers, I thought I would throw something of more consequence than the old slipper that mother meant to throw. . . . There was a big india-rubber boot in the garret which weighed about twenty pounds. I went up into the garret every day for nearly two weeks and practised throwing this boot at a mark. I made a splendid invention, too. Instead of throwing the rice separately, I filled the boot full of rice and then threw it with a circular sort of motion. It would whiz through the air with the stream of rice coming out of it just as fire comes out of a fireworks when it is first lit and moves slowly, and then when the boot struck the mark it would seem first to burst into rice. I practised with this invention till I could hit the mark every time and I felt sure that if there was any luck in throwing things at married people I couldn't fail to get it."

The success of this novel experiment need not be told here. We do not wonder that after this the American boy preferred running away to living with his brother-in-law. The book overflows with humour, and will amuse readers of all ages.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE late Sir Henry Yule was elected a foreign correspondent of the Académie des Inscriptions on December 27 of last year, together with Dr. Neubauer. As our readers know, he died on December 30, but not before he had received the news of his election. From his deathbed he sent the following characteristic telegram, which was read at the meeting of the Académie on January 3:

"Reddo gratias, illustrissimi domini, ob honores tanto nimios quanto immeritos. Mihi robora deficiunt, vita collabitur, accipiat voluntatem pro facto. Cum corde pleno et gratissimo moriturus vos, illustrissimi domini, saluto."

MR. JUSTIN HUNTLY MCCARTHY has been for some time past engaged upon a History of the French Revolution, which will be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus in four volumes, uniform with his father's History of the Four Georges. The first two volumes are already in the press.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish shortly France and her Republic: a Record of Things seen and heard in the Centennial Year 1889, by Mr. W. H. Hurlbert, an American Catholic, well known as the author of Ireland under Coercion.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. will issue shortly The Life and Times of Robert Owen, in two volumes, by Lloyd Jones, edited, with a memoir of the author, by William Cavines Jones.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNY will publish immediately a new book by Mr. John Ashton, entitled Social Life under the Regency. It will be in two volumes, with numerous illustrations.

THE next volume in the "Eminent Women" series will be Mary Shelley, written by Mrs. W. M. Rossetti.

MESSRS. DEAN & SON announce a new edition of Lieut.-Col. Knollys's Shaw the Life-Guardsman, which will contain several new illustrations, and some hitherto unpublished matter relating to Shaw's early life, which has been compiled by a relative from papers in the possession of the family. Among the illustrations will be a picture of the farmhouse in which Shaw was born.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. have in the press a translation (from the second French edition) of Roger de Guimps's Life of Pestalozzi, by Mr. J. Russell. Mr. B. H. Quick is writing an introductory preface. The same publishers are just about to issue a second edition of Compayre's History of Pedagogy, and a fifth edition of the Baroness von Bülow's The Child and Child Nature. The increasing demand for such books on the theory of education seems to augur well for the future of teaching in this country.

MESSRS. TILLOTSON & SON, of Bolton—who claim to be the originators of the plan of publishing novels in a series of newspapers—have already made arrangements for 1891 with some sixteen authors, among whom we may mention Messrs. James Payn, Justin McCarthy, Robert Buchanan, S. Baring Gould, W. Clark Russell, Adeline Sergeant, Mrs. Alexander, Dora Russell, and the author of "Molly Bawn."

SIR HENRY PEEK has offered prizes of £60, £40, and £20, for the three best essays giving information as to the methods and regulations under which meals are given, either by the state or by voluntary agencies, to necessitous children in large centres of population in foreign countries. The essays may be written in either English, French, or German, and should not exceed 40,000 words in length. They must be sent in to the London Schools Dinner Association by April 30.

MRS. ALEXANDER IRELAND will lecture on "Browning" at Toynbee Hall on Sunday evening next, January 26; and she is also to give a series of six lectures at Southport, during February and March, on the poet's works. Dr. Furnivall is to open a discussion on Browning at the Hampstead Vestry Hall, Haverstock Hill, on February 4.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN have just issued the sixth and concluding volume of their cabinet edition of Col. Malleon's History of the Indian Mutiny. It consists of four chapters dealing with the conduct of civil servants during the outbreak, largely expanded from the single chapter devoted to this subject in the original edition; together with notes on the native states (including Sindh), and the services of officers of the Indian Navy. In a pocket at the end is an excellent map of India, with the railways, &c., brought down to date, and the names spelled (for the most part) as in the text. But the most valuable portion of this volume is the index, compiled by Mr. Frederic Pincott, revised from his index to the library edition, which has hitherto (we believe) been obtainable only as a separate work. It covers about 265 pages, and forms an alphabetical summary of the entire history so complete as to render it almost unnecessary to refer to the body of the work except for continuous reading. So long as Col. Malleon's name survives as a military historian, we trust that Mr. Pincott's will also live as a model index-maker.

Correction.—The name of the translator of Ibsen's Rosmersholm, reviewed in the ACADEMY of last week, was unfortunately misprinted. It should be "Louis N. Parker."

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

MR. WILLIAM MORRIS contributes to the English Illustrated Magazine for February a poem of some length, entitled "The Hall and the Wood."

THE Art Review for February will contain two portraits of Robert Browning—from a photograph taken by Messrs. Cameron & Smith, and from the recent picture by Rudolf Lehmann. The same number will also contain an article on "Emin Pasha," by Dr. Felkin, and an article on "Matthew Arnold's Meliorism," by Prof. W. Minto. Among the other contents will be papers on the German humorist poet, Victor von Scheffel, by Mr. T. W. Rolleston; and on Velazquez at the Royal Academy, by Hon. Gilbert Coleridge. Mr. William Sharp also contributes an elegiac poem on Browning.

THE forthcoming number of the Century will contain a descriptive paper on the Congo, by one of Stanley's officers and the United States Commissioner. The article will be freely illustrated.

THE February number of the Bookworm will contain an article on "The Rowfant Library," accompanied by Mr. Du Maurier's characteristic sketch of Mr. Fred Locker-Lampson.

MARK TWAIN contributes a fairy story to the February St. Nicholas, entitled "A Wonderful Pair of Slippers," with illustrations from photographs. The same number will also have a paper on "The Boys and Girls of China," by Yan Phon Lee, illustrated by the author.

THE Scots Magazine for February will contain an article by Sir George Douglas on some unpublished letters of Sir Walter Scott; a paper on the land of the Burneses (Burns's ancestors), by W. J. O. Watt; an account of Robert Browning's funeral, by Miss E. K. Chapman; and an important contribution to the Scots Church question.

THE forthcoming number of the Gentleman's Magazine will contain an article by Mr. Alexander Gordon, on "Examining a Scotch School," which gives reminiscences of the days prior to the introduction of systematic government inspection and the School Board régime.

THE Asiatic Quarterly Review, which has now commenced its ninth half-yearly volume, will henceforth be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

A MEETING will be held in the lodge of Trinity College, Cambridge, on Wednesday next, to consider the question of procuring a portrait of the late Bishop Lightfoot. We may add that the last portrait is that painted by Dr. Haswell, of Sunderland, to whom the bishop gave sittings just before his journey to Bournemouth. This is intended for the University of Durham. It represents him seated in a chair of antique design, with an illuminated volume open in his hands.

THE Oxford University Dramatic Society have determined to produce Browning's play of "Strafford" in the current term, in substitution for Marlowe's "Jew of Malta." It is stated that Mr. Irving, of New College, will take the part of Strafford; while Mr. Alma Tadema has undertaken to design the scenery.

PROF. PELHAM, the successor of Canon Rawlinson in the Camden chair of ancient history at Oxford, will deliver his public inaugural lecture on Wednesday next, January 29. The subject he has chosen is "The Imperial Domains in their bearing on the History of the Roman Empire." It is understood that the delegates of the common university fund have decided to continue the readership in ancient history, vacant by his promotion.

PROF. J. W. HALES, the newly appointed Clark lecturer in English literature at Trinity College, Cambridge, announces a course of six lectures during the present term on "The Elizabethan Period, with special reference to Spenser and Shakspeare."

IN connexion with the Teachers' Training Syndicate at Cambridge, Mr. J. Bass Mullinger will deliver a course of twelve lectures during the present term upon "The History of Education," from the Renaissance down to the present time.

PROF. J. C. ADAMS—who has held the Lowndes chair of astronomy at Cambridge since 1858—is prevented by his recent severe illness from lecturing during the present term.

At the meeting of the Cambridge Philosophical Society next Monday, Prof. Cayley will read a paper on "Non-Euclidian Geometry."

IT is worthy of record that no essays were sent in this year at Cambridge for either the Hulsean or the Burney Prize.

At a meeting of the Convocation of London University, held at Burlington House, on January 21, the following resolution, proposed by Mr. T. Tyler, was, after some debate, carried unanimously:

"That the proposal of the University for London Commission that, under a new charter for this University, special powers and privileges should be conferred on certain institutions in or near London is incompatible with the fair and just treatment of the provincial colleges, and that the acceptance of this proposal would be detrimental alike to the interests of the provincial colleges and to those of the University itself."

Meanwhile, it is understood that a scheme drawn up by the Senate, on the lines of the recommendations of the Commission, has been submitted to University and King's Colleges, which bodies have requested a conference with the Senate on the subject.

In consequence of the election of Prof. J. Ward to the principalship of Owens College, Manchester, a re-arrangement of the departments of history and English literature has become necessary. The council, therefore, invite applications for the chair of history, and candidates are requested to state whether they are willing also to conduct classes in English literature, with such assistance as may be granted.

The Registers of Wadham College, Oxford. Part I. 1613-1719. Edited, with Biographical Notes, by the Rev. R. B. Gardiner. (Bell.) Not only dutiful alumni of Oxford, but all genealogical inquirers, owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Gardiner for undertaking for Wadham what Dr. Bloxam and Mr. C. W. Boase have already done for Magdalen and Exeter. Those who have at any time made use of the Admission Registers of St. Paul's School will not need the assurance that the work has fallen into good hands. It is something to have the lists put into type, as the Oxford Historical Society has done for the early period of the university and Mr. Foster for more modern times. But Mr. Gardiner has achieved much more than this. In the first place, he had several lists before him; and he wisely determined to combine all of them, and to set down every one whom he could find, in university or college records, as either matriculating, graduating, residing, or paying caution-money at Wadham. This catholic principle has enabled him to include the great name of Richard Bentley, who incorporated M.A. in 1689 as tutor to the son of Bishop Stillingfleet. In the second place, he has collected all the various entries (which in the case of some of the fellows are very numerous) under the first mention of each name, so that we are enabled to follow their academic career. And lastly—what is, of course, the most important matter of all—he has added from extraneous sources, wherever possible, brief biographical notes. Herein, as anyone knows who may have attempted such work, infinite time and trouble may be spent without any results apparently commensurate. But we venture to think that Mr. Gardiner has been singularly successful, with that good fortune which not unfrequently rewards sound methods of investigation. We observe, however, that he does not attempt to identify John Pitt, one of the original fellows and fifth warden (1644-1658). Is it not probable that he was of the family which afterwards gave to England two of her greatest statesmen? It is true that he is described as of Somerset, and "pleb. fil."; whereas the great Pitts were a Dorsetshire stock, and well connected even in early times. Their genealogy has been most elaborately traced by the late Sir Henry Yule in his notes to The Diary of William Hedges (Hakluyt Society, 1889). In the family tree there given we can find no place for Warden Pitt; but, on the other hand, it seems more than a coincidence that he should have been succeeded, circa 1645, as rector of Blandford St. Mary, by the father of Governor Pitt and great-grandfather of Chatham. It is also not unworthy of notice in this connexion that several members of the family, including the poet Christopher, were at Wadham in a later generation. Indeed, we find a Joseph Pitt, of Dorsetshire, "gen. fil.," matriculating in the second year after the foundation of the college (1615), though he likewise cannot be identified in Sir H. Yule's family tree. But we have been led away from our main purpose, which is to congratulate Mr. Gardiner on the accomplishment of the first portion of his task. We decline to believe that he will not obtain sufficient encouragement to continue it; and we hope that he will also go on to publish those materials for a general history of the college which he has accumulated in the course of his researches. May his example induce some Oxford residents to print the similar MS. collections which they are known to have made!

AN EPITAPH.

"One name was Elizabeth,
The other let it sleep in death."

ὁὖν μὲν σοὶ ἔδωκε φίλη πατρίς· ἔτρεφεν ἡβην πάνθ' ὅσα χρηστοφίλοις ἐγγυάλιζε τύχη.
ξείνη δ' ἐν ξείνοισι λείνων πάρα τύμβον ἔδειξεν τῇ δόθ' ἀμνηστικῇ, τῇ δόθ' οὐκ ἀπαρτίστῃ.

J. CHURTON COLLINS.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to record the death of the Rev. Aubrey L. Moore, dean of divinity at Magdalen College, and honorary canon of Christ Church, Oxford. He was also tutor at more than one college; and since 1881 he had lectured on ecclesiastical history as deputy for Canon Bright. To the outer world he was best known by Science and the Faith, published early last year, which mainly consists of reviews reprinted from the Guardian and the Quarterly. He also published several sermons and addresses; and the recent volume, entitled Lux Mundi (John Murray) contains a paper by him on "The Christian Doctrine of God." Mr. Moore's interest in all speculative questions was very keen; but he deserves especially to be remembered for his bold and liberal efforts to reconcile the doctrines of evolution with orthodox theology.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Jewish Quarterly Review for January presents a varied and attractive bill of fare. Theology proper is represented by the introductory paper on S. B. Hirsch, an eminent reviver of historical Judaism. Mr. Schechter draws a curious parallel between Boswell and an admiring disciple of Rabbi Jacob the Levite (fifteenth century), better known as Mahari, who excused his interest in trifling details by precisely the same Rabbinical explanation of the Psalm-passage, "His leaf also shall not wither," as our Boswell quotes in his introduction to the Life of Johnson. Mr. Montefiore, in an elaborate and thoughtful essay, traces "Many Moods in the Hebrew Scriptures"; and also gives a valuable notice of Prof. W. R. Smith's Religion of the Semites—valuable, not for the criticism of these lectures, but as an intelligent and helpful survey of an admirably constructed, but difficult, book. Dr. Harris answers the question: "Are the Jews a Nation To-day?" in the negative. Mr. Abrahams illustrates the saying: "Marriages are made in Heaven," from the Midrash. Mr. Strong reviews Jacobs's Fables of Aesop, already noticed in the ACADEMY; Mr. Simmons Prof. Margoliouth's scholarly edition of Jephthah on Daniel in the Anecdota Oxoniensia. Nor have we exhausted the contents of these excellent "Notes and Discussions." Dr. Neubauer concludes with a "post-Biblical Bibliography" for 1888-1889.

"Le Livre est mort: vive Le Livre Moderne!" is such an exceedingly obvious remark that it would be wicked not to make it. "Do make it: it is humanity to make it," as a famous person said. Le Livre Moderne is a very pretty little periodical—indeed, much daintier and more coquettish than its predecessor. We own, as we have owned before, that we rather miss the solid dishes of literature proper. But, though some almost unnecessary apology is made for the difficulties of the start, there is plenty of readable and interesting matter even in this first number; while the get-up is capital. The paper is particularly good, the type agreeable, the initial letters well-designed, the wrapper in good taste; and there are two famous full-page etchings. One gives us a bust of M. Uzanne himself detached upon a fond which seems to be a shower of roses, so that the body of the editor appears to be undergoing the same pleasant process of translation as the soul of Faust. The other is a composite series of vignettes of "Les Lectrices à Travers les Ages," with some facsimile verses to match by M. Jean Richépin. Altogether, a most elegant little thing in periodicals.

THE LANGUAGE OF MITANNI.

AMONG the cuneiform tablets discovered at Tel el-Amarna, and now at Berlin, is a long letter from Dusratta, king of Mitanni, the Nahrina of the Egyptians, written in the native language of the country. The language is a peculiar one, and totally different from that of the letter of Tarkhundara(ba), king of Arzapi, about which I wrote to the ACADEMY a year ago, and which I conjectured to be a Hittite dialect. If this conjecture be right, the language of Mitanni will throw no light on the language of the Hittite hieroglyphs.

The letter of Dusratta has been published by Messrs. Winckler and Abel in their Mittheilungen aus den orientalischen Sammlungen, part i. As in Vannic, the vowels are expressed in it by separate characters, and there is the same confusion between the dentals d and t as in the Assyrian letters of the king of Mitanni. The grammatical forms are distinguished by suffixes, most of which terminate in a nasal; and forms which agree with one another are provided with the same suffixes. There seems to be but little distinction between the noun and the verb; thus, when the suffix -man is attached to the noun, we find it attached also to the verb mannimma-man, "he sent."

Among the deities invoked by Dusratta are the Babylonian Ea-sarri, "Ea the king"; Istar of "Ninua" or Nineveh; Amānu or Amen, "the god of my brother," the Egyptian monarch; and Tessubbe or Tessup, who corresponds to the Rimmon or Air-god of the Assyrian texts of Dusratta. Now, in a tablet published by Dr. Bezold, Tessub or Tessup is stated to be the name of Rimmon among the "Su"; and, as I have lately pointed out, the name is the same as that of Tesba(s), under which the god Rimmon is known in the Vannic inscriptions. By the language of the 'Su is meant the language of the district which, as Dr. Strassmaier has shown, was called 'Suri or 'Surti, and answered, as we now see, to the country termed Nahrini by the Assyrians, and Nahrina by the Egyptians. Perhaps the name survived in that of the city 'Suru on the Euphrates. Whether the language of Mitanni was related to that of the Vannic inscriptions time will show.

An Egyptian scarab, first published by Brugsch, informs us that in the tenth year of the Egyptian king Amenophis III. Kirkipa, the daughter of Satarna, king of Nahrina, was sent to Egypt along with 317 other ladies. The name of Satarna occurs in a mutilated passage of the letter of Dusratta, from which we gather that he was the father and predecessor of Dusratta. The latter tells us that "my father Suttarnā" sent his sister to the Egyptian sovereign. From a later part of the letter, as well as from another letter in the Assyrian language, we learn that the name of the sister was Artatama. Could this have been the native name of the queen of Amenophis III., called Teie by the Egyptians?

The Mitannian word corresponding to the Assyrian akhat, "sister," is ammat-ippi. Other words signifying relationship terminate in the same suffix, as sen-ippi, "brother"; atta-ippi, "father"; attart-ippi, "grandfather" (P); sāla-ippi, "daughter." The same suffix has also a gentile sense, as in Nimmārias Mizirre-pi-nes, "Neb-mā-Ra the Egyptian," and, further, denotes agency. Thus we find Asāli-nnan dubbarr-ippi-u, "Asāli my secretary"; and passi-d-khe-ippi, "a messenger," by the side of passi-d-khe-na, "messengers." It throws light on the name of Aleppo—Khalip or Khilbu in Egyptian, and Khalman in Assyrian—which, as has long been recognised, must be a derivative from the name of the river Khal-ṣa. Since both -ippi and -man are common suffixes in the language of Mitanni, while -ippi has a gentile sense, there is no longer any difficulty in understanding how the city of Aleppo drew its name from the river on which it stood or in explaining the form which it has in Assyrian.

A. H. SAYCE.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BEHRMANN, G. E. Malenfahrt durch Griechenland. Hamburg: Gräfe. 4 M. 80 Pf.
 DAUDRY, E. Daniel de Kerfons: confession d'un homme du monde. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 DOVBERNE, A. (Tchernoff). L'esprit national russe sous Alexandre III. Paris: Ouepientier. 3 fr. 50 c.
 GENVILLER, H. Un mystère. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 GUILLOT, Ad. Les prisons de Paris. Paris: Dentu. 7 fr. 50 c.
 HAUSMAN. Mémoires du Baron. Paris: Victor-Havard. 80 fr.
 LEVASSOUR, E. Le Brésil. Paris: Lahure. 25 fr.
 MÜNCHENBERGER, E. F. A. Zur Kenntnis u. Würdigung der mittelalterlichen Altäre Deutschlands. 7. Lfg. Frankfurt a.-M.: Foeser. 6 M.
 POIRET, Jules. Horace: étude psychologique et littéraire. Paris: Thorin. 3 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BRUCKNER, O. Studien zur Geschichte der sächsischen Kaiser. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 30 Pf.
 CANTEUIN, R. Führ. v. Lehrbuch d. Wechselrechts. Berlin: Heymann. 12 M.
 FRITZ, E. De Juli Frontini strategematon libro IV. Berlin: Hedrich. 1 M. 30 Pf.
 MAURANDER, W. Archivische Beiträge zur Geschichte d. J. 1693. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 1 M. 40 Pf.
 ORLANS, Duc d'. Récits de campagne 1833-1841. Publiés par ses fils le Comte de Paris et le Duc de Chartres. Paris: Oalmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- BRANSON, K. L. Die Taafalter (Rhopalocera) Europas u. d. Caucasus. Berlin: Friedländer. 3 M.
 DALLER, G. Le monde vu par les savants du 19^e siècle. Paris: J. B. Baillière. 18 fr.
 HAMONVILLE, le Baron d'. La vie des oiseaux: scènes d'après nature. Paris: J. B. Baillière. 3 fr. 50 c.

OTTO, A. Zur Geschichte der ältesten Haustiere. Breslau: Preuss. 1 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BOZON, Nicolo. Frère mineur, les Contes moralisés de publiés d'après les manuscrits de Londres et de Cheltenham par L. Toutmin Smith et Paul Meyer. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 16 fr.
 CAGNAT, René. Cours d'épigraphie latine. 3^e édition, entièrement refondue. Paris: Thorin. 12 fr.
 KAUFFMANN, F. Geschichte der schwäbischen Mundart im Mittelalter u. in der Neuzeit, m. Textproben u. e. Geschichte der Schriftsprache in Schwaben. Strassburg: Trübner. 8 M.
 KIRCHHOFF, F. Tafeln zur Berechnung der Jupiter. Jahre nach den Regeln d. Surya-Siddhanta u. d. Jyotistattva. Göttingen: Dieterich. 1 M. 40 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EYTON'S MSS. IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

London: Jan. 22, 1890.

I very greatly regret that some words in the preface to the third volume of my Feudal History of Derbyshire recently issued should have received a construction which I had no intention of giving to them, and which I am sorry to hear has caused pain to an honourable body of men for whom I have ever held the highest respect.

In the course of writing that work I have had frequently to consult the MSS. of the late Robert Eyton, the historian of Shropshire, now in the British Museum, which are of the greatest value to everyone dealing with early baronial history. The chief value of these MSS. consists in the collection of data for founding a great chronology of Anglo-Norman times. With this object Eyton collected the names of the witnesses to many early charters, giving also the itineraries of the kings; and he arranged these names in certain tables, so that the date of a charter attested by any of these witnesses can be approximately ascertained.

Unfortunately, there is the greatest difficulty in utilising these MSS., from several causes. It is necessary to understand the system of references and cross-references which Eyton himself adopted, as well as the method of the tables, which have the prima facie appearance of a cryptogram. For some time I failed in trying to work this complex machine, and I could obtain no help from any of those to whom I have been frequently indebted for literary assistance. I, therefore, with the indulgence of the officers at the Museum, who allowed me to use the whole of these MSS. at once, set myself to discover Eyton's methods and the meaning of his hieroglyphs. I was fortunately successful; but I found that the difficulties I had met with arose from the fact that the MSS. have been deranged rather than arranged. The present arrangement is not that of Eyton himself. Some of the volumes have been renumbered, so that the references and cross-references do not tally. Others are composed of independent MSS., improperly bound up together. Worst of all, some of the most important MSS. are altogether missing; hence the difficulty in discovering Eyton's method, and in utilising it. For example, in Add. MS. 31,937, which consists of a comparative view of the charters of the reign of Henry II., it is stated that there was "an index of witnesses, and with notes as to their various dates, and reasons for assigning the same." This index is missing. Folio 197, Add. MS. 31,936 shows that MS. No. XI. of Eyton's own numbering is gone, and in its place a printed book is given, which, of course, does not supply Eyton's references.

I constructed for myself a plan of the MSS. as they existed in Eyton's time, which I drew up in parallel figures with the present arrangement; and, thinking that others would be glad to avail themselves of my labours, I printed a full account in the preface of my Feudal History of Derbyshire, a copy of which is now at the British Museum with Mr. Eyton's MSS. for public use. In doing so, I wrote :

"It seems incredible, but the present arrangement of the volumes would appear to have been adopted to hide the losses which have been sustained."

These are the words complained of. I have always understood, and I believe it is a fact well-known, that Eyton's MSS. came to the British Museum in their present condition. Assuredly, I had not the remotest intention of making the Museum authorities responsible either for their arrangement or for the losses. I have always felt and expressed my gratitude for the admirable manner in which MSS. are there kept and made accessible to the public—a system which compares favourably with that adopted in any other library in England or on the Continent that I am acquainted with. I hope, therefore, you will allow me to free myself from the charge of having written one word in disparagement of the British Museum.

PYM YEATMAN.

SEE SIDEPULLE.—SOTA. SATIVOLA.—SAINT
SIDWELL.

Wynfrid, Clevedon : Jan. 20, 1890.

Outside the east gate of the city of Exeter extends a large, ancient, and populous suburban parish, known as St. Sidwell's. It is divided throughout by a street which, in popular speech, is known by that name. It is long, straight, and very wide; such as are seen in western towns, which were ancient markets, and which formerly had a row of shambles through the centre, with the width of the street suddenly contracted at each end.

The first of the above three forms of the name is no doubt the original one. It is so found in the Anglo-Saxon catalogue of the graves of saints in England, printed in Dr. Hicke's Dissertatio Epistolaris (p. 120). In Bishop Leofric's account of the alienated lands which he reclaimed to his cathedral, it is "sidefullan hiwiso" (Earle, Land Charters, p. 249; Codex Dipl., no. 940; Thorpe, Dipl., p. 428). This local dedication is believed to be the only original one at the place of her martyrdom. Within the last ten years has been destroyed a remarkable old building, known as her well—a rough, beehive-shaped building, of large size for such a purpose, and probably the most ancient piece of masonry at Exeter. It has given place to a row of small brick cottages. It may have been a "gunshot" (old style) from the church, at a spot formerly called "Lion's Holt."

The second form, "Sativola," may be called the liturgical or cartular form. So she seems to have been commemorated in Exeter Cathedral. So, in the list of reliques in Bishop Leofric's Missal (Warren's Introd., lxii., and his correction to p. 5 in his Index of Proper Names). At Lanecast, Cornwall, the dedication is "SS. Welvela and Sativola," where the second is believed to have been an aftergraft upon the Celtic dedication, arising from a proprietary interest of the bishops of Exeter through Launceston.

The third is the now current form of the name. Some have discredited the legend by attributing the origin of the name to the mediaeval rebus of a scythe and a well, instead of the rebus to the name.

The inhabitants of this parish have sometimes shown a semi-belligerent spirit, and have been called "The Grecians." About seventy years ago they attempted to revive some ancient market rights which they thought they possessed, and actually pitched paniers of country produce, when the Mayor, with his swordbearer and staff of officers, issued from the city and made prize of them.

This dedication, St. Sidwell, formed a part of the argument of a paper which I had the honour to read to the Royal Archaeological Institute, in 1873 ("Celt and Teuton in Exeter," Archeol. Journal, vol. xxx.). Among my audience was Mr. E. A. Freeman, who with great liberality favoured it with much approval, which he also continued in the second of his papers on "King Ine," in 1874. But he suggests that, as it showed the presence of Teutons, before any record that the Saxon conquest had advanced so far westward, there must have been an earlier unrecorded penetration of Damnonia. I have in store a different explanation, which I hope to get into print shortly. The late Mr. J. R. Green included the substance of the paper in The Making of England.

THOMAS KERSLAKE.

OLD HIGH-GERMAN GLOSSES IN THE VATIOAN.
London : Jan. 20, 1890.

In the ACADEMY for January 18 (p. 46, col. 3) I said that, so far as I could ascertain, the glosses in Palatine 242 and in Palatine 288 had not appeared in print. After a proof of my paper had been signed for press and returned to the editor, I heard from Prof. Napier that he had just found that the glosses in Palatine 288 had been published by Reizenstein in Germania, vol. xxxi., p. 331. And to-day I learned from a postcard, sent by Prof. Steinmeyer to Prof. Napier, and kindly forwarded by the latter to me, that most of the glosses which I printed from Palatine 242 had been published by Cardinal Mai, in his Spicilegium Romanum, ix. 29, and reprinted from Mai's book in Steinmeyer and Sievers's Die Althoch-deutschen Glossen, i. 719. Mai omits seven of the glosses printed in the ACADEMY (ubi supra), and his transcripts are not always correct. On the other hand, he gives three glosses which I overlooked, namely: Falsarium, erratum errare, lugenare; Non tam nols so filo; Canones Kerehtida. It is probable that Bartsch's recent edition of these glosses in the appendix to his Beschreibung der altid. Handschriften in Heidelberg (1887)—a work which I have not yet seen—is both complete and accurate.

WHITLEY STOKES.

Corrigendum.—In the ACADEMY for Jan. 18, 1890, p. 46, col. 2, l. 40, for "sg." read "e.g."

"RAGMAN," "RAGMAN-ROLL."

London : January 18, 1890.

I hesitate to accept Sir James Ramsay's view that "ragman" meant a deed-poll as distinguished from an indenture, because of the expression indenturæ ragmannicæ quoted by Jamieson from Fordun. Of course this might be an inaccurate use; but it seems easier to suppose that the wider use, as applied to any sort of formal document, is earlier than its various limited uses. A quotation of 1399 in Du Cange speaks of "raggemans sive Blank Charters"; and the Scotch writers of the fifteenth century use the word freely in the sense of "written engagement."

Is it possible, after all, that ragman as applied to deeds and the like may have been originally a jocular designation, connected with the sense "chiffonnier"? This is the view I have hitherto taken, and there are certainly instances of terms of humorous origin coming into regular official use; one good example is the "budget" of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Still I should feel more satisfied if an etymon could be found for ragman, yielding the sense of "deed" or "written parchment" directly. Sir James Ramsay's suggestion, that ragman-roll is to ragman as indenture-roll to indenture, sounds plausible, though I am not yet convinced that it is correct.

HENRY BRADLEY.

"THE LANGUAGE OF THE NEW TESTAMENT."

Butler's Cross : Jan. 18, 1890.

While thanking Mr. Drummond for his appreciative review of The Language of the New Testament, I may be allowed to say that the title which he thinks too wide was chosen because the author "attempted something less and something more" than an elementary grammar. It was intended to cover a second Part left ready for press, which I hope may shortly appear. In this there is "an attempt to distinguish how far each writer (or each school or group of writers) shares in the special characteristics of Hellenistic or Biblical Greek, how far he has marked linguistic features of his own."

G. A. SIMCOX.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Jan. 26, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "National Life and Thought in Roumania, Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Novi-Bazar," by Mr. A. R. Fairfield.

MONDAY, Jan. 27, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Upper Limb," II., by Prof. J. Marshall.

5 p.m. London Institution: "Electrical Forces," by Prof. A. W. Rücker.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Roman Architecture," I., by Mr. G. Aitchison.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Oration Lecture, "The Electromagnet," II., by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.

TUESDAY, Jan. 28, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Post-Darwinian Period," II., by Prof. G. J. Romanes.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers' Discussion, "Recent Dock Extensions at Liverpool," by Mr. G. F. Lyster; "Bars at the Mouths of Tidal Estuaries," by Mr. W. H. Wheeler.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Relation of the Fine Arts to the Applied Arts," by Mr. Edward O. Robbins.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological: Annual General Meeting; Report of Council; Presidential Address; Election of New Council.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 29, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Neck and Head," by Prof. J. Marshall.

8 p.m. Gymnrodion: "Scientific Farming as applied to Wales," by Prof. Dobbie.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Utilisation of Blast-Furnace Slag," by Mr. Gilbert Redgrave.

THURSDAY, Jan. 30, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Sculpture in Relation to the Age," II., by Mr. E. H. Mullins.

7 p.m. London Institution: "Mendelssohn and his 'Lieder ohne Worte,'" by Mr. Walter Macfarren.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Laurentine Villa of Piny the Younger," by Mr. G. Aitchison.

FRIDAY, Jan. 31, 4 p.m. Royal Academy: Demonstration, "The Figure in Action," by Prof. J. Marshall.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Smokeless Explosives," by Sir Frederick Abel.

SATURDAY, Feb. 1, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Natural History of the Horse and of its Extinct and Existing Allies," II., by Prof. Flower.

SCIENCE.

SOME BOOKS ON ANCIENT HISTORY.

THE subjects of this notice illustrate both the minute study of narrow fields which is characteristic of this generation, and the rarer ability of co-ordinating the results of those studies. In one sense—and not at all a contemptuous one—the industrious students of a particular island or province, of a special tax or a special campaign, are hewers of wood and drawers of water in the service of historians proper. The historian has it for his business to bring out the salient features of the age he deals with, to preserve historical perspective, and to give little space to little points. But he is glad to rely for materials on writers of a different stamp, and to feel that, if he dismisses a subject with a few lines, those few lines are at least right and rest on a full treatment by a specialist.

An immense quantity of special discussions has gone to the masterly survey of two important periods of Greek History which Adolf Holm gives us in his new volume (Griechische Geschichte, Von A. Holm. Zweiter Band. Berlin: Calvary; London: Nutt). Herr Holm here carries his history down to the end of the Peloponnesian War. Till he arrives at the account of the Athenian empire, he has hardly reached the period at which inscriptions begin to yield valuable evidence, but is still gleaning in the well-searched field of our literary authorities. But he is not too late to find a few fresh ears of corn for his own sheaf. And—metaphor apart—his new chapters have the same merits which commended his first volume to the history-loving public. His style is perhaps more compressed than it was. There is so much to be told, and it has all to be told in four volumes; but the German is still easy to read, and space is still found in the notes for ample references to modern authorities on disputed matters. Among these we are glad to find our countrymen Sir George Cox, Mr. Hicks, and Mr. Watkiss Lloyd. Here and there we notice little errors which have escaped revision. We do not know what is the authority for saying (p. 402) that the Athenians expected in 428 B.C. to raise two hundred talents by an Eiephora. It is certainly not Thucydides, 3, 19. The cry of Gorgo (Hdt., v. 51)—Πάτερ, διαφθείρεαι σε δ' εἶνός—hardly meant: "Wenn du nicht weggehst, Vater, wird dich der Fremde zu Grunde richten." διαφθείρεαι is surely "will corrupt you." The Pythian priestess was Perialla, not Periallos. P. 282 seems to confuse the great Miltiades with his uncle. The notes on chap. 24 have evidently fallen into some disorder. But the author's careful application of geographical explanations to historical facts deserves to win oblivion for many such slips. The relation to each other of the actions at Thermopylae and at Artemision has never been more clearly put. It is an interesting and plausible suggestion that after Mykale the Persians began to construct a "Grenzschutz" of buffer-states between themselves and the Greeks, placing friendly tyrants no longer on the coast of Asia Minor, but just inland, e.g. in the towns given to Gongylos, Themistokles, or the family of Demaratos. About Themistokles himself, as about Aristides, Holm recalls us from accepted theories to facts. There is nothing, as he says, to show that Themistokles was specially democratic or Aristides specially conservative in views. Both were Liberals, if we can trust the scanty record of their acts. But when we come to the question: Why Themistokles was banished, Holm, in his turn, begins to theorise: "Because he would not submit to the traditional authority of the leading Liberal houses." Nor can we follow him in denying the old view that maritime activity and democracy went together. He says that the British fleet did not alter our constitution, and that the United States keep no fleet of importance. But here he forgets the difference of size between the United States—or even Great Britain—and the tiny commonwealths of Hellas. Maritime activity affected a whole Greek commonwealth: it only touches the fringe of a great modern state. He cites Duncker for the view that the use of the lot at elections was not always a democratic measure, but was sometimes a protection or compensation to aristocrats, who would otherwise have had no chance. But, as a matter of fact, was not the suggestion made earlier by Müller-Strübing? The account of the Akropolis embodies the last results of excavation, and the theories of Milchhöfer and Lolling. But with all his control of new material Herr Holm resists temptations to alter the old lines of history, or to recast our verdicts upon the great authors. His Herodotus is the Herodotus whom so many generations of scholars have loved. His Perikles is still a man of high aspirations and of great capacity. The attacks of Pflugk-Harttung on Perikles's military ability (see ACADEMY, March 7, 1885) seem to find little favour in Herr Holm's eyes. To sum up, he has read himself full, and the stream of knowledge which he pours out tears up no landmarks, but flows clear, deep, and well-ordered.

Passing to single parts of the Greek world, we take up a little volume of studies on prehistoric Sicily (Fragen der ältesten Geschichte Siciliens. Von S. Heisterbergk. Berlin: Calvary; London: Nutt.) The passion which attracts inquirers towards the unknowable, and the skill which makes baseless hypotheses look plausible, are the most noticeable features in it. Its interest is rather narrow, and its conclusions are hypothetical in the highest degree. They hang together in a sort of sorites-argument, and no one link in the chain is even approximately sure. We think we may pass over Herr Heisterbergk's attempts at finding evidence, and merely indicate his conclusions or assumptions. The theory which looks most plausible on a second reading is that which (as suggested somewhat differently in the last century by D'Orville) brings the names Trinacria and Thrinacia into connexion with the name of the Sicilian town Trinacia. The occurrence of the latter suggested to the Greeks that the mysterious Thrinacia of the Odyssey was to be found in Sicily; it was therefore assumed that Thrinacia was the primitive name of Sicily, and it was presently shaped by a sort of Volksetymologie into the anomalous form Trinacria. Next, there is a series of speculations which start from the river Sicanus. That river was not in Spain, as Thucydides said (vi. 2); it was in Sicily and near Agrigentum. The district Sicania, around Agrigentum, meant therefore merely the district of that river; it was a geographical, not an ethnographical, title. But, if so, it must have been a river of some size—i.e., it must have been either the Himera or the Halyous, and a change of name must have taken place. But there are already traces of another old name for the Halyous; therefore, it was the Himera. Then the name of Sicani was extended, just as the name of dwellers on the Iberus became by degrees a name for all Spaniards; but the whole island cannot have been in the oldest days inhabited by a race called Sicani. It follows, too, that there cannot have been a people of Sicani either in Spain or in Italy. The Sicani (in the earliest sense) can only have been an accidentally distinguished part of the stock of either Elymi or Siculi; and, as they are less likely to have been Siculi, they must have been Elymi. The Elymi were in the island first; the Siculi came later, and drove the already settled Phoenicians from many islets and promontories. It is evident that these theories have many more objections to face than their mere want of probability. It is enough to mention one—their incompatibility with the positive assertion of Thucydides.

Far more solidly based is our present information about the island of Delos (De Deli Insulae Rebus scripsit Valerianus de Schoeffer. Berlin: Calvary; London: Nutt.). The Sibyl who declared, "Ἔσται καὶ Σάμος ἄμιος, ἔσεται Δῆλος ἀήλος," can never have foreseen the revival of interest in Greek paganism and the bodily resurrection of so many remains of the sacred island. Thanks chiefly to the labours of the French commission in Delos (of which Prof. Jebb gave an account in the Journal of Hellenic Studies, i.), we now know a great deal about the affairs of that little rock which twice played so important a part in the Aegean waters. Yet, if our knowledge is considerable in one sense, it is very limited in another. We can draw up inventories of the precious objects which the temples contained. We know who gave the golden wreaths, and how much each weighed.

We can see the distress of Athens in the worst years of the Peloponnesian War reflected in the diminished weight of her golden offering. We can tabulate the sources of income and the items of expenditure of the sacred funds of the island. We know how and by whom they were administered. The farms which belonged to the great temple begin at one time to bring in less than before, and we can follow Herr Schoeffer in conjecturing that it was the disposal of the dead in Rhenea instead of Delos which was beginning to occupy the land in Rhenea which might have been used for cultivation. We can see how buildings and house-rents rose in value when the Romans were creating a new position for Delos—rents always rise with commercial prosperity; and the second great period of Delos was a period of commercial prosperity. But, on the other hand, we have not the means of following, except by conjecture, the foreign policy of Delos. The external history is too imperfect. Nothing could be more interesting than to watch the worldly wisdom of these religious centres—these pagan popedom, if we may be allowed the phrase; but we have seldom the means of doing so for Delos, for Delphi, or for any other centre. What again had the Delians done to the Athenians that the latter should remove them entirely from their land in 422 B.C.? How could so small a population, living in an island, prove dangerous to the lords of the sea? Was it a case of genuine superstition at Athens—the wish to keep Apollo on the Athenian side? Or were the Athenians trying to make much of one god because another would not have them, preparing to magnify Apollo of Delos because Apollo of Delphi did not disguise his hostility? We may roughly divide the historical times of Delian greatness into two periods—the religious and the commercial. Yet in the first period, whether under Athenian or under native administration of his temple, Apollo shared his island with many other deities; and, in the second period, when commerce gave Delos its life, religion was not neglected. The merchants worshipped each the god of his country. They have left records of offerings, and the usual Italian tendency towards collegia shows itself in the groups of Italians or Romans who united to do honour to Hermes (Mercurius). After the Mithradatic War, however, and the two-fold sack of Delos, Apollo seems to have reigned alone. No inscription thenceforth makes mention of any foreign god. Herr Schoeffer has discussed fully and carefully whatever is recorded of Delian history, and also the conjectures to which the numerous inscriptions found on the island have given rise; and he has the advantage of using many inscriptions which are not yet published. We can now trace the story—from the allusion in Homer, and the alleged burnt offering of Datis the Mede, to the last offering of all, that made by Julian's orders when he was starting to invade Persia—with a sense that we are more at home in the temple than earlier students can ever have felt. Herr Schoeffer's account is only defective in that it does not make any attempt to estimate the services of such a centre as Delos to Greek unity, and that it tells us nothing of the topography of the island. We cannot remember that he ever mentions whether Delos had a harbour.

The careful working-up of non-literary material which has taken place of late years has made it possible to control and check the obiter dicta, and even the positive affirmations of classical authors, to a degree which the scholars of a bygone generation would have thought out of the question. On dates and on administrative details generally—points on which it is but natural for human beings to go wrong, and almost impossible for them to be always right, we have acquired important means of correction. In the pamphlet, for instance, which Dr. Ohnesorge has written on Die roemische Provinz-Liste von 297 (Teil i., Duisburg: Mendelssohn), the author has to correct the occasional sayings of Zosimus and Ammianus Marcellinus, in his task of championing a view put forward in 1862 by Mommsen, but left by Mommsen without full justification—that what is called the “Veronese list” contains a tolerably correct enumeration of the Roman provinces as they stood under Diocletian. The arrangement of praefectures and dioceses, the crumbling into little bits of the older provinces, is practically the work of Diocletian, and not, as was formerly argued, of Constantine. Dr. Ohnesorge proposes presently to resume his task and maintain the accuracy of the date, A.D. 297, assigned by Mommsen to the list itself.

There is none of the interest of a continuous story about M. Pallu de Lessert's very painstaking study of Numidian affairs. (Les Fastes de la Numidie sous le Domination Romaine. Par A. Pallu de Lessert. Constantine: A. Braham.) We are not even given the opportunity of following in any one view the administrative history of Numidia. It is no part of the author's plan to trace in any connected way the changes in that administration. We have to pick up the history in bits as we go along. All that he supplies is the series of provincial governors, in so far as it can be reconstructed from records of one sort and another. In the task of reconstruction he attains a larger measure of success than might have been thought likely; and it is surprising to see how many points of contact with political and literary history he is able to indicate. One such is the apparent reference in the bilingual inscription of Vaison, to the oracle given at Apamée, which made the fortune of Julia Domna—a curious link between Europe, Africa, and Asia, as the inscription was very possibly cut by order of Sextus Varius Marcellus, sometime praeses of Numidia, nephew by marriage of the Emperor Septimius Severus. Like other works of the same kind, these Fasti have the advantage of serving as an introduction to the study of epigraphy. It is the author's way to give in full the text of the inscriptions in which the memory of so many governors is enshrined, and it will be the reader's own fault if he fail to pick up a useful knowledge of abbreviations and conventional signs. M. Pallu de Lessert knows a great deal about Roman Africa, on which subject indeed he has made some name by earlier writings; and he is laudably careful not to mix up what he knows with what he thinks. Many more names of governors are found than can be with certainty inserted into a chronological list; and it is wise not to feel too sure that in the inscription which appears in the C.I.L., viii. as No. 1031, we have a trace of the presence in Africa of the historian Vellius Paterculus. It is hard to correlate the inscriptions and the other documents, and nothing is gained by cutting such Gordian knots. We should like to know, more fully than our compiler tells us, on what evidence he identifies the governor O. Puffius Fango with the Frangones of Cic. Att. 14-10; and we must urge that Greek words should be more carefully printed than those which occur on pp. 15, 127.

SOME BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY.

Watts's Dictionary of Chemistry. By M. M. P. Muir and H. F. Morley. Vol. ii. (Longmans.) In our notice of the first volume of this second edition of Watts's Dictionary we discussed the chief points in which this “revised and entirely rewritten” work differs from the original. There is no doubt that its extreme condensations offers a serious obstacle to its ready use as a book of reference. In this second volume some help is furnished towards the decipherment of the numerous hieroglyphs which crowd each page, by means of a cardboard slip printed on both sides with explanations of the chief abbreviations employed. This slip is attached to the binding by means of a silk ribbon, and can be moved from one part of the work to another. The present volume extends from “chenocholic acid” to “indigo.” Besides numerous important articles and minor paragraphs by the editors, there are several special contributions by other chemists. One of these, entitled “Crystallization,” is curiously misnamed, for it is in the main a concise paper on crystallography. Some of these special contributions, if brief, are yet full of condensed information. They are, moreover, well up to date. Amongst them we may name “Relative Densities,” by Miss Ida Freund, of Newham; “Cinchona Bark,” by David Howard; “Haemoglobin,” by Dr. Halliburton; “Cholesterolin,” by Dr. G. McGowan; “Fermentation,” by Dr. S. Rideal; “Dextrin,” by C. O'Sullivan, F.R.S.; and “Formic Acid,” by V. H. Velej.

Handwörterbuch der Chemie. By Dr. A. Ladenburg. VII^e Band. (Breslau: Trewhendt.) The seventh volume of this Dictionary of Chemistry is now complete. The last and most important article in it, which is occupied with naphthalin and its derivatives, extends to more than 220 pages, while the list of references to papers and researches on this group of compounds includes no fewer than 1175 separate entries. Other important subjects treated in the present volume are—magnesium, manganese, mercaptans, methylated bodies, milk, lactic acid, mineral oils, paraffin, ceresin, and molybdenum. The bibliography of each subject is usually full, and appears sometimes to be practically complete. However, justice is not always done to English chemists, as, for instance, in the account of the methods of milk analysis.

A Text-Book of Organic Chemistry. By A. Bernthsen. Translated by G. McGowan. (Blackie.) This is something more than a mere translation of an excellent German textbook; for it has been thoroughly revised both by the translator and by the original author. Dr. Bernthsen prepared this compact digest of chemical facts and theories for the use of his students in the university of Heidelberg, with the intention of placing in their hands a small but philosophical textbook of organic chemistry. He aimed at condensing the descriptive portion, and yet making it strictly scientific; and he desired to emphasise the characteristics of each class of compounds, and the inductive development of the theoretical relations existing between them. We think he has succeeded in realising his intentions. The volume is one that may be confidently recommended.

Service Chemistry. By Vivian B. Lewes. (Whittingham.) The idea of giving in a single volume an account of the applications of chemistry in the naval and military services is novel and useful. Mr. Lewes, the professor of chemistry in the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, has carried out his idea with success, and in a sound as well as interesting manner. He very justly says in his preface that there is but one chemistry, and he does not wish the title, Service Chemistry, to be misunderstood. So he combines with a general sketch or outline of the science such amplifications of particular parts of it as the requirements of the Services demand. And he has added certain details of a technical character which, if not belonging to the domain of chemistry, are yet of the very greatest value in the study of its practical applications. Among the subjects discussed in this volume we may name the following: drinking water and its purification; boiler incrustations; firedamp in collieries and coalbunkers; coal-gas and burners; fuel; the atmosphere and ventilation; explosives; building stones and bricks; mortar and cements; phosphorus and matches; salt, soda, and compounds of lime; iron, steel, and zinc; shot and white lead; and the materials and methods of photography.

Coloured Analytical Tables. By H. Wilson Hake. (G. Philip & Son.) The characteristic feature of this little set of tables for qualitative chemical analysis is to be found in the coloured illustrations. Whenever a coloured or white precipitate or blowpipe reaction is producible in the process of testing, a wonderfully exact representation of it by means of suitable pigments is introduced alongside of the description of the method by which the result is secured. Similar coloured tables are given for salts and oxides.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LYCIAN LANGUAGE.

Southampton: Jan. 16, 1890.

The use of a certain dialect in Lycia about the fifth century B.C., which was employed together with Greek on tomb texts, has been well known for half a century. The texts are alphabetic, and the words are divided by dots. The inscriptions are numerous; some are bilingual; and one (the Xanthus stele) contains 259 lines of Lycian, presenting us with nearly 600 different words. The study of the language is evidently of value for the history of Western Asia, and yet, as far as I can learn, the monuments remain almost entirely undeciphered. When the subject was brought to notice by Sir C. Fellows in 1840, Grotefend pronounced the language Indo-European, and Sharpe suggested a comparison with the old Persian just recovered by Sir H. Rawlinson, and with the kindred Zend. Yet so little was then known of these languages that it was impossible to carry out the comparison; and even in 1869 we find Moriz Schmidt still speaking of the texts as “enigmatic.” After careful cataloguing of the words he arrived at a determination of the plural, the genitive, and the values of a few nouns and pronouns; but he makes no comparison with any other language except Greek.

At the present day scholars are better furnished with means of comparison, but Schmidt's work appears still to represent the utmost that has been done. What I would now suggest is that a scholar familiar with Zend should find no difficulty in reading what is without doubt an ancient Iranian dialect, closely akin to the Persian of the cuneiform monuments. Those monuments by themselves do not provide a sufficiently large vocabulary; but so closely does Lycian compare, both in grammar and in vocabulary, with the Zend that a scholar like Dr. Darmesteter would surely be able to reconstruct the language. The liquid sounds, the numerous long and short vowels, and the inflexions are alike Iranian; and among the latter the genitive singular (he), the nominative plural (he), the genitive plural (neme), the infinitives (ase and ade), the prefixes (tro, mē, yat, nē, o), all appear to me clearly to define the language. The main peculiarities of the dialect seem to be the use of final l instead of n in some words (as in mīla for mīna, axal for axan, &c.), and the short o answering to the old Persian u and Zend vu. The numerals, which are in several cases written in full, appear to me also to be the same as in Zend. The following words seem also clearly to point in the same direction: Adrodē, “December”; ahataha, “eighteenth”; Depe, “tablet”; Vagsa, “word”; Zazate, “is decreed”; Zerēma, “destruction”; Kūcema, “proclamation”; Laga, “law”; Masa, “death”; Methrapatz, "protected by Mithra"; Neké, "corpse"; Parza, "Persian"; Pasbo, "it follows"; Azalo, "days"; Razahé, "ruling" (pl.); sé, "and"; Stála, "stone"; Stattemou, "we place"; Tove, "these"; Tóma, "family"; Oune, "mother"; Outre, "other"; Aoure, "Lord"; Gina, "wife"; Gona, "offspring"; Goro, "tomb"; and Gsadrapahe, "satraps." Of these some are rendered certain by the Greek bilinguals, such as gina, "wife"; goro, "tomb"; sé, "and"; and a few others. These bilinguals also give the meaning of Lada, "lady"; Tedéme, "son"; Zemaze, "daughter"; Aravazeta, "monument"; Atle, "self"; Éhbe, "his"; Ékatamla, "hecatomb"; Ébe, "this"; Prínavatu, "has made" (verb substantive understood); and the syntax is determined by the same bilinguals.

The great Xanthus monument gives us the best means of further study, since the same word occurs in various cases for the nouns and in various tenses for the verbs. It appears that there were three genders, seven cases, and verbs resembling those of the Persian of Behistun. What is mainly wanted is a good comparison with the Zend; but unfortunately a Zend vocabulary well up to date seems to be still unattainable in print, while Haug's Grammar is also presumably too old to be safely relied on. The Lycian appears, in short, to present no insoluble difficulty, but to require only special study. The copies of Fellows and Schmidt will be found to agree substantially; though their differences are no doubt important, and only to be settled by fresh study of the monuments, by the light of comparison with Iranian languages of the same historic period.

In calling attention to this subject I venture to point to various passages on the Xanthus stele, which seem already capable of translation. Its general subject seems to be the same as that of the Lycian tombs of a later age which bear Greek texts: that is to say, it forbids the burial of any strangers in the tomb of the family of Harpagus, condemning them to be cursed by the gods, and to pay a fine to the state. It also seems to give the names of those who erected the monument, and the date, and perhaps to prescribe certain rites to be observed. The upper part is much defaced, but the lower lines, on all four sides, are in a fairly complete condition.

On the north side of the stele are twelve lines of Greek much defaced, which have been in some passages variously read. Above the Greek twenty lines of Lycian occur recording the erection in honour of Harpagus (or of his son). It is here that we find the passage Stattemou stála oute walahe beíhe se maleiahe se mértémhe and again Stattemou orobléo méte. This would seem clearly to mean "We place this stone [acc. neut.] to him the better people and the [inhabitants?] and the soldiers"; and again "we place [it] widely visible here," answering to the Greek ΕΥΡΩΠΗΝ applied to the ΣΤΗΛΗΝ. I do not know if this has been previously pointed out. The word orobléo seems to consist of oro, the Zend vouru "wide," and the Aryan root BHAN "to shine" (in Lycian Bla).

Under the Greek there are thirty-four lines of Lycian, which seem to be concerned with a warning to those who destroy the tomb or bury bodies in it. Here we find the important passage ending Vagesade Vezlasapasi: Wak ébe gostet: which seems to me to mean "In the name of Hystaspes hear ye his voice."

On the west side the lines are recorded, payable to the tékere or "temple"; and a passage is written twice over, either by mistake or for sake of emphasis. This passage runs thus: Kebé Mérede Nelaouremes Hovetóns ordésez fagesade. This, perhaps, represents the curse with the verb in the subjunctive. There are seventy-one lines on this side of the monument.

On the south side the words seem to suggest that certain rites of purification, the sprinkling of libations, and the burning of incense are noticed; but the number of peculiar words is here large, and requires a better vocabulary for comparison than I have been able to obtain. On this side the word Madoneme might mean "of the Medes," and the Lycians (Trameles) are mentioned as well as the "son of Harpagus." The word arose, as well here as on the north, seems to answer to the ΑΡΙΣΤΕΤΕΙΑΣ of the Greek and to mean "excellent." There are fifty lines on this side of the monument.

On the east side there are sixty-four lines of Lycian. The top is much injured, but the very Persian name Methrapata appears to occur (compare the Methradates of Xenophon) with the town names Arina (Xanthus) and Tlava (Tlos). Stôte would mean "proclaims," and Aravazeia is known to signify "monument" or "tomb." In line 47 we have a valuable passage, as follows: Adrodé mahée sé ddé ahataha—"In the December month and eighteenth day," the month name being the same as in the Cappadocian and Old Persian Calendars. In line 26 we find: Gsadrapahe Trameles . . . Etonei Sppartaze atóna—"The satraps of Lycia . . . of Ionia of Sparda" (a Lycian district, according to Oppert, mentioned on the great Behistun inscription). Atóna, compared with Atonas and Otona on the north side, seems to mean "for honour," the Sanskrit van. Finally, near the end, in lines 59-60, we find: Azaloé i Taretóséhé sé Értageze razahé thredé archa Tramelesé éte, which seems to me to read grammatically: "In the days of Darius and of Artaxerxes [abbreviated] ruling throughout the lands of the Lycian country." This would give a date about 400 B.C. for the monument, the same date which, on quite other grounds, has been formerly supposed correct.

I venture to hope these notes may induce Iranian scholars to take up in earnest the recovery of this interesting dialect.

C. R. CONDER.

SCIENCE NOTES.

A COMMITTEE, appointed by the council of the Royal Society to promote a memorial to the late James Prescott Joule, has resolved to raise a fund for establishing a memorial of an international character which shall have for its object the encouragement of research in physical science, and which shall also have in view the erection of a tablet or bust to his memory in London, the Manchester Memorial Committee having already taken steps to ensure a suitable monument being erected in his native city. Many eminent foreign men of science have already joined the committee, of which Sir G. G. Stokes is chairman, Mr. John Evans treasurer, and Sir Henry Roscoe hon. secretary. Donations may be addressed to the treasurer of the fund, at the Royal Society, Burlington House.

THE annual general meeting of the Anthropological Institute will be held on Tuesday next, January 28, at 8.30 p.m., when Dr. John Beddoe will deliver his presidential address, and the council for the current year will be elected.

THE two bodies hitherto known as the Metropolitan Scientific Association (founded in 1867) and the Society of Amateur Geologists (founded in 1884) have agreed to amalgamate under the style of the London Amateur Scientific Society. The first joint meeting was to be held on Friday, January 24, for the adoption of new rules and the election of officers. The president proposed is Prof. J. F. Blake, and one of the vice-presidents Prof. G. S. Boulenger.

PROF. P. MANTEGAZZA has written a special chapter for the English translation of his work on Physiognomy and Expression, which will form the March volume of the "Contemporary Science" series, published by Mr. Walter Scott.

THE elaborate "Fauna of British India," which Dr. W. T. Blandford has undertaken to edit for the Indian Government, is making fair progress. The first issue, consisting of part I. of Mammalia, written by the editor himself, appeared in the early autumn of 1888. The two volumes of Fishes by the late Dr. Francis Day, were both published in the course of last year. And now Messrs. Taylor & Francis have sent us the first volume of Birds, which was entrusted to the competent hands of Mr. Eugene W. Oates, of the Public Works Department in Burma. Birds will occupy two more volumes; and then will come a volume on Reptilia and Batrachia, by Mr. G. A. Boulenger, completing the series. In no department of natural history is there such abundant material, both of fact and speculation, as in the case of Birds. Since the publication of Jerdon's Birds of India (3 vols., 1862-64), the total number of species found in that country has been augmented by more than one-half, largely by the exertions of Mr. A. O. Hume, who recently presented his unrivalled collection of 60,000 skins to the British Museum. But the advance of modern ornithology is characterised not so much by increase in the number of species, as by a fundamental revision of the principles of classification, to which Messrs. Huxley, Garod, and Forbes have mainly contributed, and which has been carried to its furthest point by Mr. Seebohm. Mr. Oates has here adopted, in the main, the principles of Mr. Seebohm, and has even advanced beyond him in regard to the importance he attaches to the characteristic plumage of the nestling as a means of distinguishing species. A discussion, however, of classification in general is reserved for the third volume. The present volume comprises about one-half of the order Passeres, beginning with the Corvidae. Woodcuts, chiefly of heads, are numerous; but it has been impossible to find space for anatomical details, or for any but the briefest notes on habits, migration, folklore, &c.

COL. GARRICK MALLERY, of the Bureau of Ethnology, has reprinted (New York: Appleton) his address to the American Association at its Toronto meeting last August. The title is "Israelite and Indian: a Parallel in Planes of Culture"; and its object is to show that the Indians of North America had reached a stage of both civilisation and religion closely resembling that of the children of Israel before the time of David. To most of his audience his bold treatment of the Books of Moses must have seemed the most novel feature of the address; but we have ourselves been more interested in his statements about the Indians. He adheres strongly to the opinion he had expressed twelve years ago that "no tribe or body of Indians, before missionary influence, entertained any formulated or distinct belief in a single over-ruling 'Great Spirit,' or any being corresponding to the later Israelite or the Christian conception of God."

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

DR. A. W. VERRALL has undertaken to edit for Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. a translation of the section in Dr. Munk's Geschichte der Griechischen Literatur, devoted to the Greek tragedians. The volume will be uniform with Mr. W. Y. Fausset's "Students' Cicero."

THE Revue Critique for January 20 contains a long review, by M. Emile Thomas, of Mr. S. G. Owen's edition of the Tristia, recently published by the Clarendon Press. Concerning the recension of the text, the reviewer says: "Je ne crois pas qu'un apparat critique puisse être plus riche que ce que nous donne M. Owen."

UNDER the title of Le Livre d'Amour (Paris: Lemerre), M. G. de Barriquer de Fontainien has translated into prose stanzas the concluding portion of the Kural of Tiruvalluva, the national poet of Southern India, to which he has appended a fragment of another similar Tamil poem, the Naladyâr. In an interesting preface, Prof. Julien Vinson, of the Ecole des Langues Orientales Vivantes, discusses the authorship of the poem and erotic poetry in general. On the latter question his opinion does not materially differ from that of Dr. G. U. Pope in his elaborate edition of the Kural, with translation, &c. (1886). They both agree that the moral and allegorical element predominates over the sensual, as in the Song of Solomon.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF CYMBROBORION.—Wednesday, January 8.

PROF. REYS in the chair.—Mr. Joseph Jacobs read a paper on "James Howell and his Familiar Letters." When Wales conquered England in 1485, one consequence of the conquest was that Welshmen found a career in the civil and military services of England. It soon came about that Wales contributed her share to the spiritual as well as the practical life of England. In the Jacobean period especially a circle of remarkable men made a distinct Welsh group in the band of English writers. The brothers Herbert, the poet and the autobiographer, the brothers Vaughan, and James Howell, have something special about them—a mystic grace in the poets, an overweening vanity in the autobiographer, a vivacity in the letter-writer, which may fairly be set down to their Welsh origin. In Mr. Jacobs's opinion the Epistolæ Ho-Eliaŋæ is the greatest contribution that Wales has made to English literature. He defended at length, with prima facie evidence, and strong inferential arguments, the authenticity of the Letters against the aspersions cast on their validity by garrulous Anthony Wood. The defective dates on which Wood founded his suspicions were shown to be absent altogether from the first edition of the Letters, and were affixed after the lapse of years, no doubt carelessly and at haphazard, to the second edition, affixed moreover in such a way as to bear on their face many traces of honest intention. The first edition of the Epistolæ Ho-Eliaŋæ appeared in 1645. Since then many editions have been published, and the reader of the present paper is now engaged on a revised edition, which will shortly be published by Mr. Nutt. Howell died in the parish of St. Andrew's, Holborn, in 1666, but was buried in the Temple Church, where his monument still exists and may be seen, although it has been removed from its place in the body of the church and hidden away in the trefoil above. It would be a pious work, Mr. Jacobs added, to restore it to its proper position "at the foot of the next great Pillar this side the little Quier." Replying to a question by Mr. Henry Owen, the lecturer stated that Howell was committed to the Fleet not for non-payment of his debts, as suggested by Wood, but under an order of the House of Commons, for reasons which, although not given, one may fairly surmise to have been political.

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, January 8).

SIDNEY LEE, Esq., president, in the chair.—A paper on "Shaksperian Tragedy" was read by the Rev. H. C. Beeching. In the course of his remarks Mr. Beeching said the best definition of tragedy is that of Aristotle, "that it must not represent men without reproach falling from happiness to misery, nor must it represent wicked men falling from happiness to misery; but a hero illustrious and happy falling into misery through some one defect of his own." In other words tragedy must be distinguished from martyrdom—such as "The [so-called] Tragedie of Sir Thomas Moore, or the Virgin Martyr"—and from melodrama, which turns on the misfortunes of a hero arising from accident or villainous plot, and ends with the triumph of virtue and punishment of vice. The peculiar note of tragic pathos, according to Aristotle, is a mixture of awe and pity: pity for the fate we are witnessing, awe that such greatness should suffer defeat, and wrapt up in this, a terror lest we, being human, should fall in like manner; and this effect can be produced only if the subject of the tragedy be of heroic stature and falls through his own fault. Shakspeare is the only one among the Elizabethans who takes this view of tragedy. Tragedy as he writes it, rests upon two postulates: (1) a moral order, implying a world where the agents are free and have been moralised, and where each action is a fruit with its seeds of consequence in itself; and (2) the postulate of all art—the privilege of selection and arrangement, and choice of place and time. The tragic poet selects from all possible times and circumstances just those which will put upon his hero the greatest pressure. He arranges for him a world—real in the sense that it consists only of human relations, subjects of desire; but ideal in the sense that in no chance world into which he might have been born could the hero, being what he is, have found himself so tried. [This was illustrated from the Tragedies.] The pleasure derived from a tragedy rests upon the double possibility of identifying ourselves both with the hero in his struggle and defeat, and with the moral order which crushes him, and, further, on the recognition that the hero himself accepts the catastrophe as the issue of an action or inaction which he himself deliberately adopted.—Mr. Sidney Lee, Mr. A. H. Bullen, and Mr. Frederick Rogers took part in the discussion which followed.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, January 20.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—The president read a paper on "Universals in Logic." The scholastic theory was first stated, and passages quoted from the Logic in the Stonyhurst Series of Manuals. The theory appeared open to the objection of confusing laws of thinking with methods of acquiring knowledge—a distinction established at the time of the Renaissance, when positive methods of knowledge were placed upon an independent basis, chiefly by being set free from the assumption that the perception of immaterial entities was necessary to constitute the act of thinking. Secondly, the origin of concepts or universals was traced to acts of attending to perceptual data for the purpose of harmonising them with their perceptual context, without, however, involving the necessity that this purpose should be recognised as a purpose at the time of entertaining it. Thirdly, the psychology of the subject was more fully entered on. Conception was held to belong to voluntary, as opposed to spontaneous, reintegration, or association of ideas, both divisions depending upon physiological processes as their proximate condition. In conclusion, a brief statement was given of Mr. Romanes's doctrine of Recepts, as set forth in his Mental Evolution in Man, and the doctrine welcomed as a valuable contribution to psychological knowledge in its historical or evolutionary department.—Discussion followed.

FINE ART.

THE OLD MASTERS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE.

II.

FAR more open to discussion, and indeed to doubt, than the Spanish pictures is the series of portraits which appear here under the name of Rembrandt, and most of which have, up to the present time, been accepted as genuine examples of the master himself, even by those most recent authorities on Dutch art, and on Rembrandt in particular, who are least unwilling to rap the knuckles of their predecessors in the same fields of inquiry. The whole question is one of the widest and most difficult in the critical history of art, seeing that even Rubens himself hardly boasted such a following of able pupils, imitators, and copyists, as did the great master of Leyden and Amsterdam, almost from the time of his arrival in the latter city to the latest years of his poverty and comparative solitude, and especially in the brilliant period when, still in the flush of youth, he acquired an early maturity of talent. A Karel Fabritius, a Backer, a Bol, a Flinck, and again an Beekhout, a Bernard Fabritius, a Nicholas Maes, a Salomon de Koninck, an Aart de Gelder, have each, at a certain stage of their practice, imitated one or more special phases of their great master's style and mode of conception, with the result that their best paintings are not always easily distinguishable from the less genial among the performances of the chef d'école; while to classify the school productions of the Rembrandt atelier and entourage, even when recognised as such, is often a still more difficult task.

Among the undoubted works of the master here shown, the two finest are portraits of himself at different stages of his career—the one showing him in the exuberance of early manhood, the other in the melancholy abandonment of premature old age. Mr. Heywood-Lonsdale's powerful and brilliant "Portrait of the Painter," although it is not signed or dated, must, judging from considerations of style, and from the fresh and jocund mien of the self-portrayed artist, have been painted between 1635 and 1640. It is, if my memory serves me rightly, the example formerly in the Hamilton Palace collection; or, at any rate, bears a close resemblance to it. In fine preservation, it is singularly remarkable for breadth and precision of handling and powerful relief, and no less for the brilliancy of the flesh-painting and the subdued splendour of the sombre colours furnished by the dress. Still more remarkable is Lord Ashburton's "Portrait of the Painter," a full-face study, showing Rembrandt in the neglected costume of his later years, with tangled mane of grey hair, and that general aspect of ill-health and premature age with which we are familiar. This portrait lacks the element of inexpressible pathos which the great master has so often found the way to infuse into the simple self-presentments of his later time; but it is incomparably fine in execution, and so perfectly preserved in every touch that even among Rembrandt's own works it has, in this respect, but few rivals. The "Old Man," contributed by Mr. G. C. W. Fitzwilliam, is one of those studies of Jewish type and costume which are so familiar to the student of the Amsterdam school in its Rembrandtesque phase. It is, however, unquestionably not by the master himself. The name of Beekhout first presents itself in connexion with it, but a certain dryness and hardness of texture and precision of outline point rather to the in England little known Salomon de Koninck. Lord Ashburton's "Lieven Willemz Van Coppenol" agrees in size (14 in. by 12) and in design with the famous etched portrait of the calligraphist, executed in 1661. The present piece cannot well have been executed, as Dr. Bode appears to think, as late as the date of etching; the technique being by no means that of the master's latest years. The conjecture that it must have been painted about 1650 is much nearer the truth. The execution of the little piece is singularly firm and brilliant, and its preservation perfect; but the physiognomy of the sitter is not very decisively presented. From the Bath House collection come also the two pendants, "Portrait of a Man" and "Portrait of a Lady," both signed and dated 1641, showing respectively the three-quarter figures of a young gentleman in a blacksteple-crowned hat, black dress, and wide lace-trimmed collar, and of his spouse, in the usual sober wearing which distinguishes the Dutch lady of Amsterdam when she is not in gala attire. The male portrait is, in its present state, singularly disappointing as a whole, notwithstanding the skilful execution of the sombre costume—the head being unusually empty in modelling, vacuous and inexpressive. A much better impression is made by the portrait of the lady, though even this is not so searching or so masterly in its breadth of execution as some other works of the same period. The true golden glow of Rembrandt is concentrated on the face and upper part of the figure, which has an aspect of self-concentrated inner life and thought such as none of the master's following succeeded in simulating in the same degree. A problem of unusual difficulty is provided by the "Portrait of an Old Lady," lent by the Earl of Yarborough—a work belonging apparently to the period of about 1636. The head is so skilfully and delicately modelled—though it is far from equalling in mastery the so-called "Rembrandt's Mother" of 1634 in the National Gallery—it reveals a conception of so much pathos and sincerity that it would be difficult to deny the correctness of the ascription to the master himself. On the other hand, the black fur-trimmed dress is so superficially and lightly painted in, with so little indication of the form beneath, that the surmise inevitably presents itself that the piece was terminated by a pupil. It is necessary again to strike off the list of Rembrandt's works—and that without any hesitation—Lord Ashburton's oval panel entitled "Portrait of a Gentleman," in which is depicted a personage of some station, in a rich black satin dress, wide-falling ruff, and overhanging black hat. This, with its over-smoothness of execution and its absence of true characterisation, suggests rather a mere outside imitator than a painter of the school or the immediate circle of Rembrandt. Yet, again, even though the reproach of iconoclasm be incurred, it must be pointed out that the large "Portrait of a Man" (which also comes from the Bath House collection)—an elderly burgher of vigorous aspect, with square head and close-cropped grey hair, seated in an arm-chair—cannot well be from the brush of the master himself; though, even in its injured state, it is very remarkable for vitality and true characterisation as well as for well-controlled energy of execution. It suggests somewhat the admirable "Old Woman" (bearing date 1654), which was three years ago acquired for the Brussels Gallery at a very high price as a Rembrandt, but which specialists have recently taken from him in order to give it, with the companion portrait—contributed by its owner, Baron Oppenheim of Cologne, to the Brussels Loan Exhibition of 1887—to a Rembrandtist of unusual strength and individuality, who at present remains anonymous. To Rembrandt must be left the splendid, though by no means uninjured, portrait from the same rich collection, which has been called "Cornelius Jansenius." The fitful lighting of the face is more than usually impressive, while the black tones of the dress and hat, relieved on a ground of comparative lightness, are of extraordinary strength. The individuality of the personage remains, on the other hand, somewhat obscured. It is difficult to recognise in the technical style of the picture the manner which would be indicated by the date—"Rembrandt f. 1661"—which, according to the catalogue, it bears. It is this particular phase of Rembrandt's practice, with its colouring rather blafard and achromatic than golden, to which some of the works of Bernard Fabritius most nearly approach; while in others that painter affects harmonies of a much more pronounced and vivid character.

The Second Gallery contains two unusually fine examples of the art of Nicholas Maes—on the whole, the most gifted of Rembrandt's imitators, because his strong artistic individuality enabled him to assimilate what he took from his master, and to reproduce it stamped with the impress of his own creative power. The more striking—but, unfortunately, the less well-preserved—of the two pictures in question is an "Interior," contributed by Mr. S. S. Joseph, showing a bare room, the Rembrandtesque illumination of which is concentrated on the group in the foreground, consisting of a woman nursing a child. This, with its brilliant reds, and the lurid splendour of the general effect, is extremely characteristic of the painter, who here succeeds, without any sacrifice of naturalism, in lending a real dignity and significance to a motive in itself commonplace and of slight import. More sober in harmony, and, if anything, still broader in execution, is Lord Ashburton's "Woman Sewing," by the same master—a work in perfect preservation, which, in its subtle treatment of indoor light, almost bears comparison with the masterpieces of Pieter de Hooch and Vermeer of Delft. There are few finer Teniers to be seen than "The Seven Acts of Mercy," from Bath House. It has all the crispness of touch and silveriness of tone peculiar to the finer examples, while the seven "Acts" are fused into a single ensemble with an apparent absence of effort which conceals the real difficulty of the task. Moreover, there is here a shade less of that aggravating perfunctoriness with which the consummately skilful Fleming usually works, limiting his observation of men and things within the narrowest bounds, and confining himself to the almost mechanical repetition of a few well-worn types. Very rarely have there been seen together so many exquisite specimens of that subtlest and truest of chiaroscurists, Adrian van Ostade, as are assembled in the Second Gallery. Among the very finest of these is Lord Ashburton's "Woman and Child," dated 1667, showing the half-figure of a woman who stands in the doorway of a house holding a child, the face of the former being astonishingly well-modelled in transparent shadow. Hardly less fine is the "Interior" (111) from the same collection—a piece which in silveriness of tone and naturalness of chiaroscuro approaches the famous "Alchemist of the Salon Carré," while it exceeds in beauty the larger "Interior" by the same painter, lent to this exhibition by her Majesty the Queen from Buckingham Palace. On the other hand, the "Dutch Tavern," contributed by the Rev. W. C. Randolph, although it bears a signature and the date 1652, has all the appearance of being a pastiche executed by Ostade's pupil and imitator, Cornelius Dusart. The master's greatest pupil, the genial but unequal Jan Steen, appears at his very best in Lord Ashburton's small canvas, "The Carouse," a scene of the usual type, but painted with a skill and care altogether exceptional, and lighted with consummate art. At least one of the Terborchs here—"The Music Lesson"—is of exquisite quality, and worthy to rank with the typical "Conversations" of the Louvre, the National Gallery, and Cassel; although it serves up once more those three or four human properties which the painter loved to combine in so many different variations. Especially do we greet once again—not without pleasure—the blonde musical lady whose white satin dress and lemon-coloured jacket are one of the most familiar objects in Terborch's pictures. Very inferior to this in all respects, and greatly wanting in that finesse of colour and execution which is the artist's chief charm, is Mr. Arthur James's "Officer writing a Despatch." A far less exquisite colourist than Terborch, but perhaps in some respects more of an artist, and certainly a keener student of human nature, was Gabriel Metsu, different phases of whose art are represented here by three examples. Of these the most characteristic is perhaps Lord Ashburton's "A Lady drawing"—in which the model appears clothed in a dress and jacket, furnishing two shades of the painter's favourite red—a colour which his overmastering love of hot tints, here shown in the woodwork and surroundings of his interior, prevents him from duly harmonising or relieving. Among all these Dutch works, the limited subjects of which are all too familiar to us, the little "Portrait of a Lady," by the Flemish painter Gonzales Coques, with its unaffected seriousness and its penetrating perception of character, comes as a decided relief. It would be unfair not to record the presence of two very perfect specimens of a not very sympathetic, though, in his way, a consummate painter, Adrian van de Velde. Both are from the Bath House collection, the one called "Cattle" being an admirably finished and delicate landscape with cattle and sheep, signed and dated 1661; while the "Haymakers" shows, together with the usual skill and finish, an amiable animation unusual in the master's work, combined with a close observation of rustic manners such as we find more generally in Karel Dujardin and in the roadside scenes of Philip Wouwerman. There can be few, if any, more beautiful Cuyps in existence than the Earl of Yarborough's perfectly preserved "Scene on the Ice," in which the crystal purity of a frosty atmosphere envelops and yet reveals with extraordinary clearness a frozen river with figures skating and walking, and in the nearer distance a huge ruined tower reflected, as in a slightly blurred mirror, in the ice of the foreground. A true Cuyp-like sunlit sky, whose tones betoken already that evening is not far off, adds its magic to the scene. A contrast to this in all respects is Jan van de Capelle's hardly less exquisite "Seapiece," whose pearly greyneess of general tone and moisture of atmosphere cause it to stand out in strong contrast to its surroundings. Its sky, overcharged with threatening rain-clouds, soon to dissolve into rain, is a fine specimen of the type in which this greatest of Dutch marine painters specially delights. The landscapes of Jan Both and even of Nicholas Berchem, with all their charm of skilful laying-out and harmonious silhouette, appear by contrast with the thoroughly national masterpieces which we have just described thin, poor, and a little wanting in conviction. It is not always that the nostalgie du Sud, which has so constantly been a malady of Northern artists, has had such happy results as in the case of the thoroughly Romanised Frankforter, Adam Elzheimer, or in that of the greatest of all Italian landscape painters, the Lorrainer, Claude Gellée.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

With reference to Lord Ashburton's magnificent portrait of "John, Count of Nassau Dillenbourg," the ascription of which to Vandyck I strongly called into question in my first notice of the Old Masters (ACADEMY, January 11), it has been stated elsewhere that a grisaille, reduced from this very portrait by Vandyck himself for Paul Pontius, is in the Munich Pinakothek; that Pontius engraved the picture from this reduction for the famous Iconographie; and that there are further derived from the same original, now at Burlington House, the large print (in an oval) by Suiderhoef, after a drawing by Soutman, and another print (in an oval) by L. Vosterman, all of these being from an original or originals expressly ascribed to Vandyck by engravers who were his contemporaries.

The fact is, that the grisaille and prints above mentioned unquestionably have reference to an original by Vandyck; but that this original must differ absolutely, and in almost every particular, from Lord Ashburton's picture. In the engraving by Paul Pontius—upon which are more or less based the subsequent reproductions—the personage represented is bolder, and carries his head in altogether different fashion. He wears a broad lace collar in lieu of the simple linen one of the Bath House picture, and a full suit of plain armour, over which hangs the collar of the Golden Fleece; whereas in the work now exhibited the half-armour is elaborately engraved, and worn over a gaily adorned buff jerkin, the Golden Fleece being absent. Finally, the marshal's baton is held in different fashion in the two portraits, the attitude, and indeed the general conception, of the personage in each being easily distinguishable. A cursory examination of the engravings above cited—which are to be found in the Print Room of the British Museum—will clearly establish the facts now brought forward.

Lord Ashburton's picture is of such commanding merit that it can only gain by a full and open discussion of its origin and technical qualities.

C. P.

CORRESPONDENCE.

RUNIC STONES IN THE ISLE OF MAN.

Scarborough: Jan. 20, 1890.

The Gentleman's Magazine for 1798, p. 749, contains a plate showing a Runic stone from the Isle of Man. If Runic students have overlooked the reference it may be useful.

H.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. ERNEST ALBERT WATERLOW has been elected an Associate of the Royal Academy.

THE exhibitions to open next week include a collection of drawings of Cambridge and the Riviera, by Mr. John Fulleylove, at the Fine Art Society's in New Bond-street; and a series of "Cathedral Towns and Picturesque Places in Germany and Italy," painted by Mr. Edward H. Bearn during 1888 and 1889, at Mr. McLean's gallery in the Haymarket.

MR. G. AITCHISON, as professor of architecture at the Royal Academy, will begin next week a course of six lectures on "Roman Architecture," with special reference to private houses and palaces.

A COLLECTION of vases, jewellery, and other objects, selected from those which were found at Poli tis Chrysochou in the course of the excavations carried out last winter by Mr. Munro and Mr. Tubbs, on behalf of the Cyprus Exploration Fund, is now on exhibition in the Etruscan Saloon at the British Museum.

WE have received The Year's Art for 1890 (Virtue), which now, after a life of eleven years, more than ever deserves its sub-title of "a concise epitome of all matters relating to the arts of painting, sculpture, and architecture." The energetic editor, Mr. Marcus B. Huish, adds some new features with every issue. On this occasion we have portraits of the members of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours; and a list of birthdays of more than three hundred artists and notable people connected with art. We would especially praise the pains that have been taken to make the volume useful for consultation, by means of a full index and also cross-references in the text. And, further, it is not unworthy of notice that the editor cordially acknowledges the assistance he has received from others in the compilation of the work.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE performance of "The Taming of the Shrew," which Mr. Benson appointed for Thursday night, is not likely under any circumstances to be repeated many times; and four representations a week will still be given of the engaging and thoughtfully contrived spectacle of "The Midsummer Night's Dream."

MR. WYNDHAM having decided that the late Mr. Albery's "Forgiven" is not to be revived at present, "Caste" will give place immediately to "Cyril's Success"—perhaps the most smartly written and, what is more, the most ingeniously considered, of the late Mr. Byron's comedies. Mr. David James, Mr. Leonard Boyne, and Miss Olga Brandon—the young actress whose performance in "Caste" has been considered so noticeable—will be the chief exponents of the drama in this revival.

PREPARATIONS are fairly advanced, we hear, for the St. James's Theatre performances of "As You Like It," Mr. Lewis Wingfield directing the scenic effects, and a promising cast having been got together in support of Mrs. Langtry. Mr. Charles Sugden is to play Touchstone; Mr. Lawrence Cantley, Orlando; Miss Beatrice Lamb, Phoebe; and Miss Marion Lee, Audrey—the part in which, by-the-by, she made, under the Kendal management, her first appearance in London.

MARK TWAIN'S Prince and Pauper is to be dramatised by Mrs. Oscar Beringer, by arrangement with the publishers of the story—Messrs. Chatto & Windus. It is, of course, intended that the dual rôle shall fall to the lot of Miss Vera Beringer, whose admirable performances of the little Lord Fauntleroy have now come to an end.

WITHOUT going quite so far as to say that there could not be any question as to the capacity of Mrs. Bancroft for taking command of the Channel Fleet, we may certainly express our conviction that her attainment of the modest aims which the English playwright now generally sets himself to realise is by no means a matter of doubt. We do not, of course, mean that anybody has any particular right to expect that Mrs. Bancroft's performances in an art not her own—the art of writing—shall result in the bestowal upon the stage of a work of literary individuality; but neatness of construction and brightness are without doubt to be looked for in that "Riverside Story" which Mrs. Bancroft—seeking for fresh worlds to conquer—elects to present at St. George's Hall one day next month. This energetic and very popular lady will have a good company to do justice to her effort on the occasion. Mr. Leonard Boyne, Mr. Sidney Brough, Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Kate Philips, and Miss Annie Hughes are among the artists of mark who will take part in the proceedings.

M. MEILHAC, who, since the days when he collaborated with M. Halévy in "Frou-frou," has had a varied career, has now brought out at the Théâtre Français a play of which the donnée is very remarkable and the treatment seemingly as interesting as the conception. Fiction, and especially narrative fiction, has often before now dealt with the problem that presents itself when a given character is placed under conditions of life not only repugnant but wholly inappropriate to it. Mr. William Black's early success, the Daughter of Ethel, is probably the example that is most familiar to the ordinary English reader. M. Meilhac's heroine, Margot, is a charming young orphan, who owes everything in life—her education in the past, her prosperity in the present, her probable corruption in the future—to a woman of no principles and of more or less evil life. In very dangerous company, which she frequents perforce, she conceives only a disinclination for the kind of existence that would be readily offered her. But an aged roué is sincerely in love with her; and she falls in love with his head-gamekeeper—"a rude, robust, honest man"; and the curtain falls on the aged lover's acquiescence in this state of affairs, and on Margot's acceptance of "the home, with its family joys and the esteem of her own conscience." What morbid twist would have been given to this matter had Ibsen or one of his friends treated it, instead of the clear-sighted Frenchman!

MUSIC.

MUSIC NOTES.

A SOCIETY was founded last year in Bonn to purchase the house in which Beethoven was born, and to establish a museum there, similar to the one in honour of Mozart at Salzburg. Sir G. Grove, one of the honorary members of this society, presided over a meeting held at the German Athenaeum, Mortimer Street, last Saturday afternoon; and he announced that the house had been purchased, and was undergoing restoration. He also gave a list of the Beethoven treasures already acquired by the society, including, among other relics, letters, music, and portraits. The Philharmonic Society of London have presented Schaller's bust of Beethoven. The special object of the meeting, as explained by Herr von Ernsthause, the German Consul, was to make known the objects and aims of the Beethoven House Society as widely as possible. In connexion with the movement, a Beethoven exhibition has been planned for this year in Bonn, to which the Royal Library in Berlin will send MSS. and instruments formerly belonging to the master. Many contributions have also been promised by private collectors. Mr. Ludwig, in a short speech—in which he proposed that a concert, under the directorship of Dr. Joachim, should be given in London during the present season for the benefit of the society—pointed out that the cause was not specially a German one, since Beethoven belonged to the whole musical world.

HERR STAVENHAGEN made his début at the Popular Concerts last Saturday afternoon. His solos were Chopin's Prelude in D flat and Liszt's Rhapsodie in C sharp minor. Transcriptions of Bach's organ Fugues in A minor and G minor by Liszt have been heard at these concerts; but this is the first time that one of his pieces has found its way into a programme. The Rhapsodies are characteristic compositions, but scarcely in keeping with the class of music associated with this institution. Herr Stavenhagen's rendering of the Prelude was effective, though slightly affected. His playing of the Rhapsodie was brilliant in the extreme. He was encored, and gave Liszt's transcription of Paganini's Caprice in E. Mr. Norman Salmond, a baritone vocalist, sang, with much success, songs by Handel and Mr. Hamish MacCunn. M^{me}. Néruda played with exquisite charm and expression Spohr's Adagio in F. The programme opened with a Quartet by Mozart, and closed with Beethoven's pianoforte Trio in C minor (op. 1, no. 3). On the following Monday evening Miss Fanny Davies played Chopin's Ballade in F minor (op. 52) admirably bringing out the now plaintive, the now passionate, character of the music. The last performance of this piece at these concerts dates as far back as 1875. Miss Davies also joined in the Tema con Variazioni in D of Mendelssohn for pianoforte and cello (op. 17) with Signor Piatti, and took the pianoforte part in Beethoven's grand Trio in E flat (op. 70, no. 2) assisted by Mdme. Néruda and Signor Piatti.

MR. DANNREUTHER gave his first musical evening at Orme Square on Thursday, January 16. The programme commenced with Dr. O. V. Stanford's new pianoforte Trio in E flat (op. 37). The opening Allegro is a skilfully constructed movement. It is followed by a short but effective Allegretto. The third movement is headed Tempo di Menuetto. It is graceful and pleasing; but an Andante or Adagio would have afforded better contrast. The Finale appears at first hearing the least satisfactory section of the work. Miss Anna Williams sang songs by Liszt and Brahms in her best manner. Mr. Dannreuther played some Chopin solos. The programme concluded with Bach's Suite in B minor for flute, strings, and piano, with figured bass written out by Robert Franz.

"ELIJAH" was given at the Albert Hall on Wednesday evening. Miss Monteith sang the soprano music in an exceedingly clear and intelligent manner. Mdme. Belle Cole was in good voice, and her rendering of "O rest in the Lord" was excellent. Miss Sarah Berry, a pupil of the Royal College, made a favourable debut in "Woe unto them." Mr. Piercy gave satisfaction; but in his first air the tune was somewhat unsteady. Mr. Henschel sang well, but his voice was not in the best order. Mr. Barnby conducted as usual, and the choir sang splendidly.

By the death of Franz Lachner, a link connecting the far past with the present has been broken. Lachner, born in the year 1804, was an intimate friend of Franz Schubert. In 1828 the two friends passed several hours together only a few weeks before the death of the great composer. Lachner was himself a prolific composer. He produced eight symphonies. Of the sixth, in D, Schumann wrote in high terms. Lachner settled at Munich in 1836, and by his energy helped to raise the theatre orchestra there to the high position which it now occupies in Germany.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

System of Harmony. For Teacher and Pupil. By J. A. Broekhoven. (Novello.) The author is teacher of harmony and composition at the College of Music in Cincinnati. The arrangement of subjects has been made in conformity with Richter's well-known Manual of Harmony. There are copious examples and practical exercises. The examples are of the kind usual in text-books; yet all such, after the excellent illustrations drawn from the works of the great masters given by Mr. Prout in his recently published Theory and Practice of Harmony, appear dry. Mr. Broekhoven may find his book useful as a guide, but it contains no novel theory requiring detailed notice. He has adopted a few new terms; however, with the explanations given, they are easily understood.

Ye Mariners of England: a Naval Ode for Chorus and Orchestra. By Edmondstone Duncan. Op. 5. (Stanley Lucas.) This work, which is announced for performance at one of the concerts of the Glasgow Choral Union, appears to us one of considerable merit. The stirring lines of Campbell's famous lyric, naturally suggested the tune of "Rule Britannia"; and accordingly the composer has taken the opening notes as a leading theme of which much use is made. The music is vigorous, characteristic, and original. Mr. Duncan has good knowledge of harmony, and some of his progressions are unusually bold.

Of his orchestration we cannot as yet say anything, but from the vocal score it is evident that the orchestra plays an important part.

Album of Twelve Songs. By Fred. H. Cowen. (Joseph Williams.) In this new collection the composer gives fresh proof of his skill in inventing pleasing melodies, and in writing accompaniments which, after the manner of the great song-writers of Germany, reflect and intensify the meaning of the words. Mr. Cowen has selected poems by modern authors. We find, among others, the names of Mrs. Browning, Christina Rossetti, and Barry Cornwall. Of the twelve numbers, "Song for Twilight," "An Idle Poet," and "I think on thee in the night," appear to us most refined and expressive.

Seven Pieces. For Pianoforte. By Gustave Ernest. (Woolhouse.) This collection of short tone-poems deserves special praise. One can trace the influence of Schumann and Dvorák, but the pieces may fairly be called original. The harmonic colouring is clever and effective. No. 4, "The Gipsy's Song," and No. 7, "Evening Song," are, to our thinking, the most striking.

Sweet Marjorie, by Aigrette (Woolhouse), is a bright valse with a portrait title-page.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

Price One Penny; post-free, Twopence.

"FIFTY YEARS' PROGRESS" of the BRITISH EMPIRE, comprising the Term of the Reign of HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA.

Containing:—The "Howard Vincent" Map of the British Empire. Four Full-page Coloured Diagram, in Reference to Population, Trade, Shipping, Revenue, &c.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free

LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treasure and Loyalty.—The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

REMINGTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE BLACK BOX MURDER. A

Story. By the Man who Discovered the Murderer. Crown 8vo, 6s. "May be recommended to those who like detective stories as a good specimen of the class."—Athenæum. "Interesting and readable; will carry the reader lightly over the weary miles between London and Peterborough."—Saturday Review. "Equal in interest and novelty to the most popular sensational stories."—Liverpool Courier. "May be safely recommended to all who delight in a tale of horror."—Literary World. "The Box is distinctly good."—Pall Mall Gazette. "One of the best books of the kind recently published."—Scottish Leader. "A very good example of the detective story."—Sunday Times. "A capital story."—Glasgow Herald. "Constructed with great skill and power."—Newcastle Daily Chronicle. "Well-knit and exciting."—Road and Gun. "An exciting story; the mystery is well maintained to the close."—S. Andrews Citizen. "The tale is skilfully worked out, and will prove attractive to all who are fond of stories of the detective order."—Star.

SIN of JOOST AVELINGH. A Novel.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS. 3 vols. crown 8vo, 12s. "If any great number of Dutch writers are producing work equal to Maartens' novel, our insular ignorance is a thing to be deplored at once and remedied as soon as may be. It is a book by a man who, in addition to mere talent, has in him a vein of genuine genius.... In his method of presentation, Maartens shows himself to be a true artist. Like the painters of the most memorable age of his country's art-history, he has a loving eye for homely detail and great skill in the handling of it; but unlike some of them, he never allows it to overpower him.... never allows minute veracities of delineation to interfere with dignity or to mar general truth of effect. The reader will feel that he is making the acquaintance of a book of singular freshness and power."—Academy.

REMINGTON & Co., Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.

Now ready. 48 pp. Price 3d. Monthly.

THE SOCIAL PIONEER.

Edited by DAVID BALSILLIE, M.A.

Contains Papers on

LITERATURE, SCIENCE and ART by the following writers:—

Professor BALDWIN BROWN; JOHN BURNETT, B.A., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A., F.R.S.E., Joint Author of "Evolution of Sex"; HUGH ROBERT MILL, D.Sc., F.R.S.E., &c., and SUMMARIES of the MAGAZINES, by M. E. SADLER, M.A. (Secretary to the Oxford University Delegates); Professor KIRKPATRICK, Edin. Univ.; the EDITOR and others. Also Reviews of the Month.

PRESS OPINIONS.

"Largely on the lines of the excellent 'Guide' for School Children launched so successfully a month ago, but is designed to meet the requirements of more advanced readers. It is well written and well printed matter."—Scotsman.

"The first number covers a very wide field. All the papers are contributed by Writers of Eminence in their respective domains of thought. It is likely to take a very high place on the list of monthlies, and one moreover which is not occupied by any other Magazine."—Glasgow Herald. Published by the Proprietor, DAVID BALSILLIE, 8, North Bridge, Edinburgh. To be had of all Newsagents.

The Trade supplied by Messrs. JOHN MENZIES & Co., Edinburgh, &c.

This Day is published, in 1 vol., price 4s.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY CALENDAR for 1890.

Also, price 4s.

DUBLIN EXAMINATION PAPERS:

being a Supplement to the University Calendar for 1890.

HODGES, FIGGIS, & Co., Dublin. LONGMANS & Co., London.

Second Edition, price 2s. 6d.

THE FUNCTIONS of the BRAIN. A

Popular Essay. Four Plates. By JULIUS ALTHAUS, M.D.

"Admirably illustrated. The subject is treated in a masterly manner and the book will be welcome alike to the surgeon and the general reader."—Academy.

Also, by the Same Author.

ON FAILURE of BRAIN POWER. Third Edition, with Engravings. price 1s. 6d.

London: LONGMANS & Co., Paternoster-row.

NOW READY.

THE FAUNA of BRITISH INDIA,

Including Ceylon and Burmah. Published under the authority of the Secretary of State for India in Council. Edited by W. T. BLAIR.

MAMMALIA. By W. T. BLAIR, F.R.S. Part I.

med. 8vo, paper covers, pp. i.-xii., 1-250, and 71 woodcuts. Price 10s.

FISHES. By F. DAY, O.I.E., LL.D. Vol. I., med. 8vo, cloth, lettered, &c., pp. i.-xviii., 1-548, and 164 woodcuts. Price £1.

Ditto. Vol. II., pp. i.-xiv., 1-510, and 177 woodcuts. Price £1.

BIRDS. By EUGENE W. OATES, F.Z.S. Vol. I., med. 8vo, cloth, lettered, &c., pp. i.-xx., 1-556, and 153 woodcuts. Price £1.

London: TAYLOR & FRANCIS, Red Lion Court, Fleet Street. Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK, & Co. Bombay: THACKER & Co., Limited. Berlin: K. Friedländer and Sohn, Carlstrasse 11.

Ready immediately. Price 2s. 6d., crown 8vo, cloth gilt.

By E. P. SCOTT.

STANLEY: and HIS HEROIC RELIEF of EMIN PACHA.

With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations.

London: DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet-street, E.C.

Now ready, price 21s.

CHARLES I. ELTON'S ORIGINS of ENGLISH HISTORY. Second Edition, Revised. 8vo, xxiv and 450 pp., with Ten Historical Maps, cloth.

"This fascinating and scholarly book."—Saturday Review, Dec. 23, 1889. HERBERT QUARTON, 15, Piccadilly, London.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATZ, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
Every Evening, at 8,
LONDON DAY BY DAY.

Mr. Geo. Alexander: Messrs. Marins, Beveridge, Shine, Rignold, Abingdon, Balfour, Wilfred, Russell, East, &c.; Mesdames A. Murray, M. Rorke, E. James, C. Elliot, and Clara Jocka.
Preceded, at 7.15, by POLLY'S VENTURE.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8,
THE FIELD OF THE CLOTH OF GOLD.
Messrs. Chevalier, Tapley, Sinclair, Capel, Gratton, Warde, Shone, and Cross; Mesdames Lindon, Byron, Evelyn, Polak, Grubb, Davies, Ellisson, &c.
At 8.15, LA ROSE D'AUVERGNE.
At 7.30, IN THE EXPRESS.
At 2.30, BELLES OF THE VILLAGE.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, PINK DOMINOES.
Messrs. Herbert Standing, Alfred Maltby, A. Boucicault, E. Dagnall, Williams, Borneo, and C. H. Hawtry; Mesdames Rose Baker, Goldney, Robertson, Lydia Cowell, and Alina Stanley.
Preceded, at 8, by ONE SUMMER NIGHT.
Messrs. Day, Legg, Boucicault, &c.; Miss Rickards, &c.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, AUNT JACK.
Preceded, at 8.15, by TO THE RESCUE.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
THIS DAY, at 1.30 and 7.15,
JACK AND THE BEANSTALKER.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Every evening, at 8, RUY BLAS AND THE BLAZE ROUE.
Messrs. Fred Leslie, Fred Storey, and Dalton Somers; Mesdames Ellen Farrer, Marion Hood, Sylvia Gray, Linda Verner, Blanche Massey, and Lotty Lind.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARR.
Every Evening, at 8, LA TOUCA.
A play in five acts, by VICTORIAN SANDOZ, adapted into English by F. C. GROVE and HENRY HAMILTON.
FLORIAN TOUCA - Mrs. BERNARD-BREER.
THE BARON SCARPIA - Mr. J. FORBES ROBERTSON.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. F. R. BENSON.
F. R. BENSON'S SHAKESPEARIAN COMPANY every Evening, at 8, Thursdays and Fridays excepted, in Shakespeare's Fairy Comedy, with the Mendelssohn incidental music.
A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.
Doors open 7.30; Overture, 7.45. Box office open 10.0 to 5.0. Acting Manager, Mr. H. JALLAND. No fees. MATINEES of A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, every Saturday and Wednesday, until further notice. Doors open at 2, commence 2.30. Overture, 2.15. Children half-price to Stalls and Dress Circle to Matinee.

GLOBE THEATRE.—Every THURSDAY and FRIDAY EVENING, at 8, until further notice, will be presented, SHAKESPEARE'S COMEDY,

"THE TAMING OF THE SHREW."

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BENEDICT-TREE.
Every evening, at 8.30, A MAN'S SHADOW.
Messrs. Tree, Fernandez, Kemble, C. Collette, E. M. Robson, Allan, Harcourt, Tapping, Gurney, and Harwood; Mesdames Tree, Minnie Terry, Morrey, and Julia Neilson.
Preceded, at 7.45, by GOOD FOR NOTHING.
Miss No-ways.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, HENRY J. LESLIE.
This evening, at 8.30, THE RED HUSBAND.
At 7.40, WARRANTED BURGLAR-PROOF.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE

Every Evening, at 7.45, MASTER AND MAN.
Messrs. Henry Neville, J. H. Barnes, Robert Pateman, Bassett Roe, C. Dalton, E. W. Gardiner, Sidney Howard, F. Shepherd, Geo. Daisell, E. Mayeur, E. W. Lawson, Morton Baker, &c.; Mesdames Bella Pateman, Fanny Brough, — Huntly, &c.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LARF, Lessees and Managers.
Every Evening, at 8, THE MIDDLEMAN.
Messrs. Willard, Mackintosh, E. W. Garden, H. Cane, E. V. Esmond, Ivan Watson, C. Crofton, W. E. Blatchley, R. Keith; Mesdames M. Mullett, A. Hughes, E. H. Brooke, A. Verity, St. Ange, E. Moore, &c.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical comedy in London,
OUR FLAT.
Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORPE.
Every Evening, at 8, THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL.
Messrs. Fred Storey, Cyril Maude, Frank Gillmore, J. S. Bythe, F. Grove, Oswald Yorke, C. Herjurry, Wheatman, J. Horton, Leigh, and John Maclean; Mesdames Mary Collette, Coralie Owen, L. Byer, Hanbury, and Winifred Emery.

NIAGARA IN LONDON.

Colossal PICTURE of the GREAT FALLS. Original effects by Philip-Johnson. Pleasant lounge, music, American sweetmeat store. Refreshments by Equinox. Electric light. Building cooled throughout. Admission 1s. 10 to 10.—York-street, Westminster (St James's-park station). Second year. Nearly one million visitors.

THERE IS
No Nourishment in Tea or Coffee
but
PLENTY IN COCOA especially in VAN HOUTEN'S
which
UTILISES IN THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE DEGREE
All the Flesh-forming Elements
while Developing the Flavour and Aroma.
ORIGINAL PATENTORS.

GOLD PEN,
WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete - - - 1s.

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete - - - - - 5s. 6d.

Engine-turned Pattern, complete - - - - - 6s. 6d.

Fluted Pattern, Telescopic - - - - - 10s. 6d.

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

THROAT
IRRITATION
(AND COUGH.

Soreness and Dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough, and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. In boxes, 7d.; tins, 1s. 1d.; labelled "JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists."

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT

ON MORDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1866.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MORDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (188 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,
19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 67, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.
Established 1783.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and
POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.
Also
ESSENCE of BEEF, BREF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

CATALOGUES POST-FREE.

S. FISHER, 188, 8 STRAND.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

I.—ENGLAND.

- † The Students' Hume: a History of England from the Earliest Times to 1878. Thoroughly Revised. By the late Prof. J. S. BREWER. 7s. 6d. Or in Three Parts, 2s. 6d. each. I. B.C. 55-A.D. 1485. II. A.D. 1485-1688. III. 1688-1878.
- † Dr. Smith's Smaller History of England, down to 1887. 3s. 6d.
- † Primary History of Britain for Junior Classes. A New and thoroughly Revised Edition. 2s. 6d.
- § Mrs. Markham's History of England, down to 1880. 3s. 6d.
- § Little Arthur's History of England, down to 1878. 1s. 6d.
- Student's Constitutional History of England. Henry VII.-George II. By HENRY HAL-LAM. 7s. 6d.
- Students' English Church History. 3 vols. 7s. 6d. each. I. 596-1500. II. 1500-1717. III. 1717-1884. By Canon PERRY.
- Students' English Language: its Origin and Growth. By GEORGE MARSH. 7s. 6d.
- Students' English Literature. With Biographies. By T. B. SHAW. 7s. 6d.
- Students' Specimens of English Literature. By T. B. SHAW. 7s. 6d.
- Smaller Manual of English Literature. With Lives of our Chief Writers. 3s. 6d.
- Smaller Specimens of English Literature. 3s. 6d.
- DR. WM. SMITH'S ENGLISH COURSE.
- * English Grammar. With Exercises. 3s. 6d.
- * Primary English Grammar. With Exercises and Questions. 1s.
- Modern Geography. 5s.
- Smaller Modern Geography. 2s. 6d.
- English Composition. With Illustrations and Exercises. 8s. 6d.
- A Readable English Dictionary. Etymologically arranged. By DAVID MILNE, M.A. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Just out.]

II.—FRANCE.

- † Student's History of France, to 1873. 7s. 6d.
- * See also "Students' History of Modern History," below.
- § Mrs. Markham's History of France, down to 1878. 3s. 6d.
- § Little Arthur's History of France to the Fall of the Second Empire. 2s. 6d.

DR. WM. SMITH'S FRENCH COURSE.

FRENCH PRINCIPIA.

- * Part I. Grammar, Exercises, Vocabulary, Materials for Conversation, &c. 3s. 6d.
- * Part II. A French Reading Book; with Etymological Dictionary. 4s. 6d.
- * Part III. Prose Composition. 4s. 6d.
- Students' French Grammar. With an Introduction by M. LITTRE. 6s.
- Smaller French Grammar. 3s. 6d.

III.—GERMANY AND ITALY.

- Students' Modern Europe. From the Fall of Constantinople to the Treaty of Berlin. By R. LODGE, M.A. 7s. 6d.
- Students' History of Europe during the Middle Ages. By HENRY HALLAM. 7s. 6d.
- § Mrs. Markham's History of Germany, to 1880. 3s. 6d.

DR. WM. SMITH'S GERMAN COURSE.

GERMAN PRINCIPIA.

- * Part I. Grammar, Exercises, Vocabulary, Materials for Conversation, &c. 3s. 6d.
- * Part II. A German Reading Book; with a Dictionary. 3s. 6d.
- Practical German Grammar. For Advanced Students. 3s. 6d.

IV.—ITALY.

DR. WM. SMITH'S ITALIAN COURSE.

ITALIAN PRINCIPIA.

- * Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabulary. 3s. 6d.
- * Part II. An Italian Reading Book. 3s. 6d.

V.—ROME.

- † Students' History of Rome, to the Establishment of the Empire. By Dean LIDDELL. 7s. 6d.
- § Students' Gibbon: THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE. 7s. 6d.
- † Smaller History of Rome, to the Establishment of the Empire. 3s. 6d.

DR. WM. SMITH'S LATIN COURSE.

- Young Beginners' First and Second Latin Books. Introduction to Principia Latina. 2s. each.

PRINCIPIA LATINA.

- * Part I. Containing Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabulary. 2s. 6d.
- * Part II. A First Reading Book. 3s. 6d.
- * Part III. A First Verse Book. 3s. 6d.
- * Part IV. Latin Prose Composition. 3s. 6d.
- * Part V. Short Tales and Anecdotes for Translation into Prose. 3s.

- A Child's First Latin Book. Comprising a Full Practice of Nouns, Pronouns, and Adjectives, with the Verbs. By T. D. HALL. New Edition. 2s.

- Students' Latin Grammar. For the Higher Forms. 6s.

- Smaller Latin Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.

- Latin-English Vocabulary to Phædrus, Cornelius Nepos, and Cæsar's Gallic War. 3s. 6d.

- Tacitus. Selections. With Notes. 3s. 6d.

- Oxenham's Latin Elegiacs. With Rules of Composition. 3s. 6d.

VI.—ETON COLLEGE LATIN SERIES.

- The Eton Latin Grammar. An entirely New Work. Just out. By F. H. RAWLINS, M.A., and W. R. INGE, M.A. 6s.

- The Eton Elementary Latin Grammar. By A. C. AINGER, M.A., and H. G. WINTLE, M.A. 3s. 6d.

- The Preparatory Eton Grammar. Abridged from the above Work. 2s.

- * A First Latin Exercise Book. Adapted to the above Grammar. 2s. 6d.

- The Eton Fourth Form Ovid. Selections from Ovid and Tibullus. With Notes by H. G. WINTLE. 2s. 6d.

- † The Eton Horace. THE ODES, EPODES, AND CARMEN SECLARE. With Notes by F. W. CORNISH. Maps. 6s.

VII.—LATIN DICTIONARIES.

- A Smaller Latin-English Dictionary. With Proper Names. A New and thoroughly Revised Edition. By Dr. WM. SMITH and Prof. T. D. HALL, M.A. 7s. 6d. The Etymological portion by Dr. INGRAM.
- A Smaller English-Latin Dictionary. 7s. 6d.
- A Complete Latin-English Dictionary. With Tables of the Calendar, Measures, Weights, and Moneys, Proper Names, &c. Cheaper Edition. 16s.
- A Copious and Critical English-Latin Dictionary. From Original Sources. Cheaper Edition. 16s.

VIII.—ANCIENT HISTORY AND MYTHOLOGY.

- § Students' Ancient History, to the Conquests of Alexander the Great. By PHILIP SMITH. 7s. 6d.
- § Smaller Ancient History, to the Conquests of Alexander the Great. 3s. 6d.
- § Classical Mythology. For Ladies' Schools and Young Persons. 3s. 6d.

IX.—GREECE.

- † Students' History of Greece. 7s. 6d.
- † Smaller History of Greece, to the Roman Conquest. 3s. 6d.

DR. WM. SMITH'S GREEK COURSE.

INITIA GRÆCA.

- * Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabulary. 2s. 6d.

- * Part II. A Reading Book. 3s. 6d.

- * Part III. Prose Composition. 3s. 6d.

- Students' Greek Grammar. For the Higher Forms. 6s.

- Smaller Greek Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.

- Greek Accidence. 2s. 6d.

- Plato. Selections. With Notes. 3s. 6d.

- Hutton's Principia Græca. Comprehending Grammar, Delectus, Exercise Book, with Vocabulary, &c. 3s. 6d.

X.—BIBLE AND CHURCH HISTORY.

- § Concise Dictionary of the Bible: its Antiquities, Biography, Geography, Natural History, &c. 21s.

- Smaller Bible Dictionary. 7s. 6d.

- § Students' Old Testament History. By PHILIP SMITH. 7s. 6d.

- § Students' New Testament History. By PHILIP SMITH. 7s. 6d.

- § Dr. Smith's Smaller Scripture History. Continued down to A.D. 70. 3s. 6d.

- Students' Moral Philosophy. By Dr. FLEMING. 7s. 6d.

- § Students' Ecclesiastical History. 2 vols. 7s. 6d. each. I. A.D. 30-1003. II. 1003-1614. By PHILIP SMITH.

- A Short Practical Hebrew Grammar. With Analysis and Vocabulary. By Prof. STANLEY LEATHES. 7s. 6d.

XI.—SCIENCE AND GEOGRAPHY.

- The Invisible Powers of Nature: Some Elementary Lessons in Physical Science for Young Beginners. By E. M. CAILLARD. 6s.

- § Kirkes's Handbook of Physiology. Edited by W. MORRANT BAKER and V. D. HARRIS. New Edition. 14s.

- A Dictionary of Place-Names. Giving their Derivations. By C. BLACKIE. With an Introduction by JOHN STUART BLACKIE. 7s.

- Newth's First Book of Natural Philosophy. 3s. 6d.

- § Lyell's Students' Elements of Geology. Revised by Prof. P. MARTIN DUNCAN. 9s.

- * Eton Exercises in Algebra. By E. P. ROUSE and A. COCKSHOTT. 3s.

- * Eton Exercises in Arithmetic. By the Rev. T. DALTON, M.A. 3s.

- § Students' Ancient Geography. By Canon BEVAN. 7s. 6d.

- § Students' Modern Geography. By Canon BEVAN. 7s. 6d.

- † Students' Geography of British India. By Dr. GEORGE SMITH. 7s. 6d.

- § Dr. Wm. Smith's Smaller Ancient Geography. 3s. 6d.

- Dr. Wm. Smith's Smaller Modern Geography. Physical and Political. 2s. 6d.

XII.—CLASSICAL DICTIONARIES.

- § Classical Dictionary. 18s.
- § Smaller Classical Dictionary. 7s. 6d.
- § Smaller Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. 7s. 6d.

* KEYS TO THESE WORKS MAY BE OBTAINED BY AUTHENTICATED TEACHERS ON APPLICATION TO THE PUBLISHER.
† WITH MAPS. † WITH COLOURED MAPS AND WOODCUTS. † WITH ILLUSTRATIONS.

MR. MURRAY'S ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, containing full particulars of the above Works, as well as of many other Books suitable for SCHOLARS, STUDENTS, and SCHOOL PRIZES, sent by post on application.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 926
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS. By William Black, Author of

"A Princess of Thule," "In Far Lochaber," "A Daughter of Heth," &c. 8 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

KIT and KITTY : a Story of West Middlesex. By R. D. Blackmore,

Author of "Lorna Doone," "Olara Vaughan," "Springhaven," "Cripps the Carrier," &c. Third Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"Kit and Kitty" is a manly book, with a sort of fine, open delicacy of sentiment, thoroughly wholesome and pleasing. The book is rather long for the taste of the moment; but it is well supplied with varied and exciting incidents, and few recent novels have maintained so high a standard of excellence throughout."—Athenaeum.

DUCHESS FRANCES: a Novel. By Sarah Tytler, Author of "Citoyenne Jacqueline,"

"LADY BELL," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s.

IN SATAN'S BONDS: a Story of Love and Crime. By Frederick Eastwood, Author of "The Chronicle of Sir Harry Earlsleigh, Bart.," "Calumny," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 31s.

IMPORTANT WORKS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

OUR RECENT ACTORS: being Recollections, Critical, and in many cases Personal, of late

Distinguished Performers of both Sexes. With some incidental Notices of Living Actors. By Dr. WESTLAND MARSTON. New and Cheaper Edition. [Next week.]
Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

THE LANCASHIRE LIFE of BISHOP FRASER. By John W. Diggle, M.A., Vicar of Mossley

Hill, Liverpool, Hon. Canon of Liverpool, Author of "Godliness and Manliness," "True Religion," &c.; also Editor of Bishop Fraser's Sermons. 1 vol., demy 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 12s. 6d. [Fourth Edition in the press.]

"Many important and hitherto unpublished letters enrich a volume which casts a flood of light on every phase of Dr. Fraser's career in Lancashire.....This fascinating biography."—Standard.

MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE'S LIFE. By her Son, Charles Edward Stowe. Demy

8vo, pp. 840, cloth extra, top gilt, with Portraits, Facsimiles, and other Illustrations, 15s.

"It is an extremely interesting and instructive book.....But little or nothing that is here given could be dispensed with, and the trivial, no less than the important matters set forth, help to make a striking and what looks like a singularly truthful picture of the life of a brave woman and a successful author."—Athenaeum.

THE COLONIAL YEAR-BOOK. By A. J. R. Trendell, C.M.G., of the Inner Temple. With

Introduction by Professor SEELEY. Crown 8vo, 750 pages, cloth, 6s.

"A valuable work of reference.....Contents derived from official sources."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW WORKS OF TRAVEL AND EXPLORATION.

JOURNAL of H.M.S. ENTERPRISE on the Expedition in Search of Sir John Franklin's Ships by BEHRING STRAIL, 1850-51. By Captain RICHARD COLLINSON, O.B., R.N., Commander of the Expedition. With a Memoir of his other Services. Edited by his Brother, Major-General T. B. COLLINSON, R.E. Demy 8vo, with 6 Maps, Portraits, &c., cloth, 14s.

AUSTRALIA TWICE TRAVERSED: a Romance of Exploration. By Ernest Giles, Fellow and Gold Medalist of the Royal Geographical Society, London. With 6 Maps and numerous Illustrations. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 30s.

"Both an interesting book of travel, and a monument to courage and perseverance.....We can heartily recommend Mr. Giles's honest narrative of defeat and victory to all lovers of Greater Britain."—Daily Telegraph.

NEW ZEALAND for the EMIGRANT, INVALID, and TOURIST: the Result of Nine Years'

Experience. By JOHN MURRAY MOORE, M.D., F.R.G.S. Illustrated by 4 Maps, &c. Crown 8vo, 260 pages, cloth, 5s.

WORKS BY HENRY M. STANLEY, THE AFRICAN EXPLORER.

NEW EDITIONS NOW READY, PRICE 3s. 6d. EACH.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE; including Travels, Adventures, and Discoveries in Central Africa, and Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone. With numerous Maps and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d., and 3s. 6d.

THROUGH the DARK CONTINENT; or, Sources of the Nile around the Great Lakes Victoria and Tanganyika, and down the Congo to the Atlantic Ocean. With numerous Maps and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d., and 3s. 6d.

THE STORY of EMIN'S RESCUE, as told in STANLEY'S LETTERS. Published by Mr.

Stanley's permission. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. With a Map of the Route from the Congo to the Coast. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

General Viscount WOLSELEY, K.P., &c., writes on The STANDING ARMY of GREAT BRITAIN

(with Illustrations by R. Oates Woodville) in the FEBRUARY NUMBER of HARPER'S MAGAZINE, to be obtained of all Booksellers and Newsagents, price ONE SHILLING.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
SYMONDS'S MEMOIRS OF CARLO GOZZI, by H. F. BROWN	73
LUMHOLTZ'S AMONG CANNIBALS, by Prof. KRANE	73
NICOLL'S LIFE OF JAMES MACDONELL, by W. WALLACE	74
CABLE'S STRANGE TRUE STORIES OF LOUISIANA, by OLIVER ELTON	75
SHUCKBURGH'S TRANSLATION OF POLYBIUS, by F. T. RICHARDS	76
AMY LEVY'S LONDON PLANE TREES, AND OTHER VERSES, by WILLIAM SHARP	76
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINTSBURY	77
RECENT THEOLOGY	78
NOTES AND NEWS	79
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	80
TRANSLATION: "PLATO TO ASTER," by S. H. H.	80
OBITUARY: EMILY PREIFFER; THE REV. H. S. FAGAN; CAROLUS AUGUSTUS HASE, by Dr. S. M. SCHILLER-SZINNESSY	80
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	81
THE FOLKLORE SOCIETY	81
STATISTICS OF CHRISTIAN NAMES IN EARLY TIMES	82
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	82
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A Lost MS. of Chaucer's "Troilus," by Prof. Skeat; "Bubonae" in the "Defence of Poetry," by Prof. Albert S. Cook; The Derivation of "Yes Tor," by Walter J. Purton; "Bucacaris" in Godefroy's Old-French Dictionary, by Paget Toynbee	82
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	83
WEISMANN'S ESSAYS UPON HEREDITY, by GRANT ALLEN	83
JUDGE'S "HISTORY OF ALEXANDER THE GREAT"	84
SCIENCE NOTES	85
PHILOLOGY NOTES	85
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	85
MR. FULLYLOVE'S NEW DRAWINGS, by F. WEDMORE	86
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	86
PEMBERTON'S MEMOIR OF SOTHERN, by F. HAWKINS	87
STAGE NOTES	88
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHERLOCK	88
MUSIC NOTES	89

CHEMISTRY.—An Analytical Chemist, Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry, &c., can RECEIVE a PUPIL into his Laboratory, where he would be thoroughly trained for the profession—No. 571, ACADEMY OFFICE, 27, CHANCERY-LANE, W.C.

NEW ATHENAEUM CLUB (Founded 1878).—A limited number of additional MEMBERS can at present be ADMITTED without Entrance Fee.—Particulars of the SECRETARY, No. 28, Suffolk-street, Pall Mall, S.W.

TO AUTHORS.—MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS, 18, Boulevard-street, Fleet-street, London, E.C., are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS., and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. Digby & Long have also every convenience and ample facilities for the publication of MAGAZINES. Editorial officers if required.

EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.—Extra Volume issued by order of the Committee.—TWO HIEROGLYPHIC PAPYRI. I. THE SIGM PAPYRUS (a syllabary). By F. LL. GRIFFITHS. II. THE GEOGRAPHICAL PAPYRUS (an Almanack). By W. M. F. FINDER. PASTIR. With Remarks by Professor HEINRICH BRUNSON. Price 6s.—Published by Messrs. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & CO.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER-COLOURS.

THE WINTER EXHIBITION OF SKETCHES and STUDIES will CLOSE on SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22ND, at 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 6. Admission 1s.; Catalogue 6d.

ELECTION OF ASSOCIATES.—The day appointed for receiving works by Candidates is MONDAY, FEBRUARY 12TH, and the day of Election THURSDAY, 20TH.

ALFRED D. FRIFT, Secretary R.W.S.

BRITISH MUSEUM, BLOOMSBURY.

ON and AFTER the 1st FEBRUARY, the EXHIBITION GALLERIES of the BRITISH MUSEUM will be OPEN on WEEK-DAY EVENINGS from 8 to 10 p.m.—viz.:

MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, and FRIDAYS.—The Galleries of the Library and of Ethnography, Glass and Porcelain, Prints and Drawings, and Asiatic and Mediaeval Collections.

TUESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS.—The Galleries of Sculpture and other Antiquities.

E. MAUNDER THOMPSON, Principal Librarian.

British Museum, 27th January, 1890.

THE COLONIAL COLLEGE and TRAINING FARMS, Limited, HOLLESLEY BAY, SUFFOLK.

For the TRAINING of YOUTHS for COLONIAL LIFE, &c. Under the auspices of Agents-General for the Colonies, Head-Masters of Public Schools, leading Members of the Royal Colonial Institute, &c. THE COLLEGE ESTATE dominates HOLLESLEY BAY.

Invigorating climate, dry soil, pure water.

Mixed FARMS, 1,800 acres in extent.

Horse, Cattle, and Sheep Breeding.

LARGE DAIRY, with modern appliances.

Smiths', Carpenters', Wheelwrights', and Saddlers' Workshops.

Geology, Botany, Forestry, and Gardening.

Building Construction, Surveying, and Levelling.

Veterinary Surgery, Ambulance Work, Riding, Swimming, &c.

Prospectus on application to the RESIDENT DIRECTOR.

NOW READY AT THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS,

A TRIP THROUGH THE EASTERN CAUCASUS,

With a Chapter on the Languages of the Country.

By the Hon. JOHN ABERCROMBY.

Demy 8vo, cloth, with Maps and Illustrations, 14s.

The account of a six weeks' excursion in the little-known valleys of Daghestan, and including an exploration of the Great Wall of Derbend, and a visit to the "Art Village" of Kubachi.

THE QUESTION OF THE DAY IN AFRICA.

NYASSALAND: Great Britain's Case against Portugal.

["Brag is a good dog, but Hold-fast is a better."]

By Rev. HORACE WALLER, F.R.G.S.

63 pp. demy 8vo, with 2 Maps, in Wrapper, 1s.; per post 1s. 2d.

"Particularly well-timed.....Ought to be read by all desirous of understanding the situation."—Times.
"A most opportune and telling pamphlet."—Sunday Times.

THE SCIENCE OF METROLOGY;

Or, NATURAL WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

A Challenge to the Metric System.

By the Hon. E. NOEL, Capt. Rifle Brigade.

Demy 8vo, cloth, with Folding Plate, price 2s. 6d.

"A vigorous criticism of the metric system. It puts the issue plainly and in a popular style. The advantages of Capt. Noel's system are urged with good sense and force, and the argument deserves the attention of all concerned in the question."—Scotsman.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 AND 27, CUCKSPUR STREET, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

FOR THE CIRCULATION AND SALE OF ALL THE BEST AND NEWEST BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per Annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per Annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per Annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

TOWN AND VILLAGE CLUBS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the Leading Books of Past Seasons are on Sale, Second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.

LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
241, Brompton-road, S.W., and 2, King-street, Cheapside, E.C.

ROBERT BROWNING.

THREE PORTRAITS OF ROBERT and MRS. BROWNING are GIVEN in the "ART JOURNAL" for FEBRUARY. 43 Illustrations and one Etching. Price 1s. 6d.

London: J. S. VINTAGE & CO, Ltd., 26, Ivy-lane, E.C.

This Day is published, in 1 vol., price 4s.

THE DUBLIN UNIVERSITY CALENDAR for 1890.

Also, price 4s.

DUBLIN EXAMINATION PAPERS: being a Supplement to the University Calendar for 1890.

HODGES, FRODIP, & Co., Dublin. LONGMANS & Co., London.

Second Edition, price 2s. 6d.

THE FUNCTIONS OF THE BRAIN. A Popular Essay. Four Plates. By JULIUS ALTHAUS, M.D.

"Admirably illustrated. The subject is treated in a masterly manner and the book will be welcome alike to the surgeon and the general reader."—Academy.

Also, by the Same Author.

ON FAILURE OF BRAIN POWER. Third Edition, with Engravings. price 1s. 6d.

London: LONGMANS & Co, Paternoster-row.

TO BE LET.—A COMPLETE WING of a BUILDING with a distinct annex in the rear, suitable for the purposes of a Collegiate, Academic, or Students' Residence, containing 35 Rooms exclusive of Kitchens and Offices.

The Building is pleasantly situated in a Square, and is in close proximity to some of the most important Educational Institutions of the Metropolis.

Particulars and orders to view may be obtained from Mr. THOMAS CHATFIELD CLARKE, Architect and Surveyor, 68, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C.

And offers for the same are to be sent to him not later than WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22ND, 1890.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY.

ADMISSION FREE.

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(About 20 doors West of Mudie's Library.)

THE GREAT MASTERS.—Botticelli, Lorenzo

di Credi, Francia, Michael Angelo, Raffaello, Titian, De Vinci, Correggio, Rembrandt, Van Dyke, Murillo, &c., REPRODUCED in AUTOTYPE, Permanent Photography, from the grand Works in the Louvre, Hermitage, Uffizi, Madrid, St. Peter's, the National Gallery, London; the Royal Collections at Windsor and Buckingham Palace.

The various Galleries have separate Albums, easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of art. Visitors are welcome to come and study them, and will not be solicited to make purchases.

For further particulars, send for the new Pamphlet, 40 pages and Four Illustrations, entitled "AUTOTYPE, a Decorative and Educational Art." Free per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE, 180 pp., free per post for 6d.

AUTOTYPE BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY offer their services to AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS to produce by the Autotype Process Book Illustrations of the highest excellence of any subject capable of being photographed.

Amongst the WORKS RECENTLY DONE may be cited Wyon's "Great Seal of England"; Dr. Crookshank's "Micro-Photographs of Bacteria"; "Famous Monuments of Central India," for Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.B.; "Facsimiles of Early Italian Engravings," for the Trustees of the British Museum; "The Palaeographical Society's Facsimiles for 1888"; Illustrations for the "Journal of the Hellenic Society," &c.

For specimens, prices, and full particulars, apply to the MANAGER.

AUTOTYPE GRAVURE.

The AUTOTYPE PROCESS applied to Photographic Engraving on copper.

Portraits from Paintings by Pettie, R.A., Oulless, R.A., Holl, R.A.; Specimens of Copies of Drawings, Etchings, &c.; and Examples of Auto-gravure Reproduction of Photographs from Art Objects, from Life, and from Nature, can be seen at the AUTOTYPE GALLERY.

Estimates and particulars on application.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, W.C.

DAVID NUTT, 270, STRAND.

NOW READY.

SHAKESPEARE'S SON-

NETS, Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by TH. TYLER, M.A. With Portraits of William Herbert, Earl of Southampton; of his Mother, Mary, Countess of Pembroke; and of Mrs. Mary Fitton. Square demy 8vo, xx., 304 pp. cloth, 12s.

BIBLIOTHEQUE DE CARABAS.

THE FABLES of ÆSOP,

as first printed by WILLIAM OXTON, in 1484 with those of Avian, Alfonso, and Poggio, now again edited and induced by JOSEPH JACOBS.

Vol. I. (304 pages): Frontispiece. Introductory Verses by Mr. Andrew Lang. Preface, a History of the Æsopic Fable, a Pedigree Chart of the Æsopic Fable, an Index of the Fables, and a Synopsis of Parables.

Vol. II. (328 pages): Frontispiece by Mr. H. Ryland, and the Fables faithfully reprinted from Oaxton's original.

"This remarkable book."—Academy.

"Enough has been said to show the value and interest of the work before us. To the specialist it will need no recommendation, while the general reader will be surprised to find how varied and copious are the treasures of ancient wit and wisdom which lie hidden beneath the trite surface of Æsop's Fables."

Mr. S. A. STRONG in the Jewish Quarterly Review.

Price of the first 350 Small-Paper Copies, 14s. net. When the few remaining copies of these are sold, the price will be raised to 18s. or 22s.

A HISTORICAL SKETCH of the CONFLICTS BETWEEN JESUITS and SECLARIS in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, with a Reprint of Christopher Bagshaw's "True Relation of the Faction begun at Wisbich," and Illustrative Documents. By THOMAS GRAVES LAW, Librarian, Signet Library. Demy 8vo, 34 pages, cloth, 15s.

THE NEW REVIEW.

FEBRUARY.—Price Sixpence.

IS THE GAME WORTH THE CANDLE? By GEORGE WYNDHAM, M.P.
THE DETERIORATION IN ENGLISH SOCIETY. By HAMILTON AIDIE.
A PLEASANT PRELATE. By Miss HARRIET W. PRESTON.
THOUGHTS ON REPUBLICS. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.
A HERMIT OF OUR OWN DAY. By EDWARD COPPING.
OUR NAVAL COALING-STATIONS in the EASTERN SEAS. By Sir RICHARD TEMPLE, Bart., M.P.
THE SOLUTION.—Part III. By HENRY JAMES.
STUDIES in CHARACTER.—II. Mr. CHARLES STEWART PARNELL, M.P.
FOLIOS and FOOTLIGHTS. By L. F. AUSTIN.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

Covers for Binding Vol. I. can be had from the Publishers.

Now ready, price 12s.

CHARLES I. ELTON'S ORIGINS of ENGLISH HISTORY. Second Edition, Revised. 8vo, xxiv and 480 pp., with Ten Historical Maps, cloth.

"This fascinating and scholarly book."—Saturday Review, Dec. 28, 1889.
BERNARD QUANTON, 15, Fleet-street, London.

Only a limited number printed. In 3 vols., fcap. 4to, half-calf, parchment sides, price £3 5s. the set. Prospects on application.

Vol. I. now ready.

SLANG and its ANALOGUES. Past and Present.

By JOHN S. FARMER.

A Dictionary, Historical and Comparative (on the lines of Dr. Murray's New English Dictionary), of the Heterodox Speech of all Classes of Society, for more than 300 years; with Synonyms in English, French, German, Italian, &c.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

In 1 vol., fcap. 4to, bound in vellum, £2 2s.

AMERICANISMS—OLD and NEW.

A book for the desk, library, or general reading.
"Certainly the best and completest Dictionary of Americanisms at present existing."—Athenæum.

ALEXANDER P. WATT, 2, Paternoster-square, E.C.

Now ready, at all Libraries and Booksellers.

Cloth, handsomely bound, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

By MADAME CARENTE,

Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

THE EVE of an EMPIRE'S FALL.

Being Intimate Recollections of the Court of the Tuilleries.

Third Edition. By Same Author. Price 6s.

MY MISTRESS, the EMPRESS EUGÉNIE.

London: DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet-street,

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW EDITION OF MACAULAY'S ESSAYS.

LORD MACAULAY'S CRITICAL

and HISTORICAL ESSAYS. TREVELYAN EDITION. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 9s.

* * * This edition is issued in response to the demand for a Cheap Edition of the Essays in large type.

THE SKIPPER in ARCTIC

SEAS. By WALTER J. CLUTTERBUCK, joint Author of "Three in Norway," and "B.C. 1887." With Map and 39 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW BOOK BY MRS. DE SALIS.

WRINKLES and NOTIONS for every HOUSEHOLD. By MRS. DE SALIS, Author of "Entrées à la Mode," &c. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

HISTORIC TOWNS. (New Volume.)

Edited by E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L., and the REV. WILLIAM HUNT, M.A.

WINCHESTER. By G. W. KIT-

CHIN, D.D., Dean of Winchester. With 3 Maps. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

WORKS BY JOHN CONINGTON, M.A.

THE ÆNEID of VIRGIL. Translated into English Verse. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE POEMS of VIRGIL. Translated into English Prose. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WORKS BY PROFESSOR BECKER.

GALLUS; or, Roman Scenes in the Time of Augustus. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

CHARICLES; or, Illustrations of the Private Life of the Ancient Greeks. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

GOBI or SHAMO: a Story of Three Songs. By G. G. A. MURRAY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Recites the moving adventures by flood and field of three Europeans, and the multifarious perils by which the travellers are beset from sulphur lakes, torrents, explosions, robbers, starvation, and the frosts and snows of the dread journey to Lhasa."—The Times.

MRS. FENTON. By W. E.

NORRIS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A piece of polished workmanship, which will be enjoyed by all lovers of artistic fiction."—Observer.

A STORY OF MONMOUTH'S REBELLION.

MICAH CLARKE: his Statement

as made to his three Grandchildren, Joseph, Gervas, and Reuben, during the hard winter of 1734. By A. CONAN DOYLE. New and Cheaper Edition. With Frontispiece and Vignette. Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

"This is, from every point of view, one of the most admirable and interesting historical tales written in our generation. The action never drags and is never hurried; the local colour is excellent, without being obtrusive; and the great laws of artistic proportion are never lost sight of."—Academy.

A DANGEROUS CATSPAW: a

Story. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY and HENRY MURRAY. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

LADY CAR: the Sequel of a Life.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

FEBRUARY.

VIRGINIE: a Tale of One Hundred Years Ago. By VAL PRINSEP, A.R.A. Chaps. VII.—XI.

A BALLAD OF BRAVERY. I. M. DANIEL PERITON. By E. NESBIT.

THE HISTORY OF AN INFANCY. II. By JUAN INGELW.

EPICURUS WYNN. In Seven Chapters. By A. D. HALL.

HOSTS AND GUESTS. By CHRISTINE G. J. RENYE.

SNAILS. By ARTHUR SOMERSET.

ON SOME CHURCH SERVICES FIFTY YEARS AGO. By ELLEN DUDLEY.

AT THE SIGN OF THE SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

THE NEW BOOKS OF THE SEASON.

SIR MONIER WILLIAMS on BUDDHISM. Second Edition. With Index and Illustrations. 8vo, 21s.

BISHOP of DERRY'S WITNESS of the PSALMS to CHRIST and CHRISTIANITY. Third Edition. 8vo, 9s.

AN ILLUSTRATED EDITION of DARWIN'S VOYAGE of a NATURALIST. With 100 Views of Places Visited and Described. Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s.

COMEDY of a COUNTRY HOUSE. A Novel. By JULIAN STURGIS. Popular Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LADY DUFFERIN'S JOURNAL of VIOEREGAL LIFE in INDIA, 1884-88. Fourth Edition. Portrait and Map. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

A SOUTHERN PLANTER. By Susan DABNEY SWEDES. With Prefatory Note by Mr. GLADSTONE. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE RAILWAYS of AMERICA.

Their Construction, Development, Management, and Appliances. With 200 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, 31s. 6d.

PROFESSOR PRITCHARD'S THOUGHTS of an ASTRONOMER on NATURE and REVELATION. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE BISHOP of CARLISLE on the FOUNDATIONS of the CREED. 8vo, 14s.

MR. DU CHAILLU.—The VIKING

AGE; the Early History of the Ancestors of the English-speaking Nations. With 1,300 Illustrations. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 42s.

MR. COURTHOPE'S LIFE of ALEXANDER POPE. Portrait. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

DR. LUMHOLTZ'S TRAVELS in AUSTRALIA among the ABORIGINES of QUEENSLAND. With Maps and 120 Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 24s.

LUX MUNDI; A Series of Studies in the Religion of the Incarnation. By Various Writers. Edited by Rev. CHARLES GORE, M.A. Second Edition. 8vo, 14s.

A NATURALIST in NORTH CELEBES,

MINAHASSA, the SANGIR and TALAUT ISLANDS. By Dr. SYDNEY HICKSON. Illustrations. 8vo, 16s.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of JOHN

LOTHROP MOTLEY, formerly United States Minister in England. Second Edition. Portrait. 2 vols., 8vo, 80s.

NOTES of CONVERSATIONS of the DUKE of WELLINGTON with the late EARL STANHOPE, 1831-1851. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

DANIEL O'CONNELL'S POLITICAL and PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE, 1792-1847. Portrait. 2 vols., 8vo, 86s.

THE RAILWAYS of ENGLAND. By

W. M. ACWORTH. Third Edition. With 50 Illustrations. 8vo, 14s.

DR. GUILLEMERD'S CRUISE of the

MARCHESSA to KAMBOCHATKA NEW GUINEA, and the MALAY ARCHIPELAGO. Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, Price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR FEBRUARY, 1890:

- I. ALAS! By RHODA BROUGHTON. Author of "Nancy," &c. Part I. (Chaps. V.-VIII.)
- II. "DONESPIRE" DIE, ET IN OLIVETUR UMBRAE.
- III. HORACE WALPOLE'S LETTERS.
- IV. A VIRGINIA POOR HOUSE.
- V. "CAMELOT NOON."
- VI. "MOTHERS"—ACCORDING to ENGLISH NOVELISTS.
- VII. VALM PLACE, PONT STREET.
- VIII. MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF.
- IX. STAGE FRIGHT.
- X. PEARL-POWDER. By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDS, Author of "Ought We to Visit her?" &c. Chaps. VI.-XI.

NEW WORKS.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of the PRINCES: LIEVEN and EARL GREY. Translated and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GUY LE STRANGE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with portraits, 80s.

"These letters possess a powerful fascination, which increases as we read, and which seems to be mainly owing to the fact that they enable us to watch closely, and almost day by day, the thoughts and feelings of one of the great leaders and one of the principal feminine participants in a series of deeply interesting political transactions, and thus impart the very throbb of life to the history of the period."—Scottish Leader.

THE FIRST of the BOURBONS. By CATHERINE CHARLOTTE LADY JACKSON. Author of "Old Paris," &c. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with portraits, 24s.

SARDINIA and the SARDES. By CHARLES EDWARDS, Author of "Letters from Urete." In demy 8vo, 14s.

"As Mr. Edwards is master of a fluent and graceful literary style, and has the knack, so rare among Britons, of putting himself on easy terms with his surroundings, whatever they may be, it follows that his books are both instructive and amusing. This may certainly be affirmed of his present volume."—Scottish Leader.

NEW NOVELS.

By the Author of "THE PHANTOM FUTURE."
SUSPENSE. By H. S. Merriman, Author of "Young Mistley," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

STRANGE GODS. By Constance COITERELL. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Undenbly charming. Few authors would venture on an idyll in three volumes. Fewer still possess the grace of fancy, delicacy of touch, and also the worldly wisdom to render such a venture successful. The writer comes with flying colours out of this difficult ordeal, and only at the end of the story does the idea suggest itself that its chief merit consists in the skill exercised by an original and picturesque manner."—Morning Post.

BY THE AUTHOR OF

"MASTERS OF THE WORLD," &c.

THE LOCKET. A Tale of Old Guernsey. By MARY A. M. HOPPUS (Mrs. MARKS). In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"The descriptions of Guernsey scenery are excellent. The tale has, among other merits, that of being quite unlike the majority of love stories. It has a grace and pathos that set it apart from the ordinary novel."—Morning Post.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENETIA'S LOVERS."

A HURRICANE in PETTICOATS. By LESLIE KEITH, Author of "The Chilcotes," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"It is brightly written, often with considerable verve, and is one of the very few three-volume novels that are not much too long. It is in a word, a delightful story and one of exceptional promise."—Academy.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A MODERN BRIGAND."
MAYGROVE. By W. Fraser Rae, Author of "Miss Bayle's Romance," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Cassell & Company's Announcements.

NOW READY.

Complete in 3 vols., price 12s. each.

A HISTORY of MODERN EUROPE.

By C. A. FYFFE, M.A.,

Fellow of University College, Oxford.

Vol. I. from 1792 to 1814; Vol. II. from 1814 to 1848; Vol. III. from 1848 to 1878.

"Mr. Charles A. Fyffe has at last completed his 'History of Modern Europe,' and Messrs. Cassell have just issued the third and final volume. Mr. Fyffe is a keen politician on somewhat advanced lines, but he is a conscientious historian for all that, and keeps his pages singularly free from party bias. His book is the best treatment of the section of history that bears most directly upon our modern circumstances."—Daily Chronicle.

WILL BE READY SHORTLY, PRICE 6s.

THE POPE and the NEW ERA.

By W. T. STEAD.

TWO WOMEN or ONE?
from the Manuscripts of Doctor BENARY, by HENRY HARLAND, will be published on THURSDAY NEXT,
February 6th, price One Shilling.

ENLARGED and GREATLY IMPROVED.

JUST READY, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE METROPOLITAN YEAR-BOOK For 1890.

A Guide to Municipal and Local, Commercial, Imperial, Ecclesiastical, Educational, and Social London.

NOW READY.

Complete in 3 vols., price 9s. each.

OUR EARTH and ITS STORY.

EDITED BY

DR. ROBERT BROWN, M.A., F.L.S., F.R.G.S.

With Thirty-six Coloured Plates and numerous
Wood Engravings.

"Our Earth and its Story," edited by Dr. Brown, is of very high merit; it is lucidly written, abreast of the most recent results of scientific research, and most beautifully illustrated. No school library should be without it, and in the hands of learners of all ages it is sure to convey a vast amount of information."—Athenaeum.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate-hill, London.

Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, & Co.'s LIST.

With Portrait, demy 8vo, 14s.

LIFE of WILLIAM ELLIS,

Founder of the Birkbeck Schools.

With some Account of his Writings and of his Labours for the Improvement and Extension of Education. By E. KELL BLYTH.

"The career of an ardent educational reformer, whose labours in the cause of popular education date from the very commencement of the movement."—Saturday Review.

NEW EDITION, demy 8vo, 71s.

MATABELE LAND and

the VICTORIA FALLS:

a Naturalist's Wanderings in the Interior of South Africa. From the Letters and Journals of FRANK OATES, F.R.G.S. Edited by C. G. OATES. With numerous Illustrations and Portrait.

"As a book of travels it remains, as it is likely to remain for some years, a standard work.... The pictures of strange African birds, beasts, and flora are a most attractive addition to an important and interesting volume."—St. James's Gazette.

Large post 8vo, with Map, 15s.

ENGLISH INTERCOURSE with SIAM in the

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

By J. ANDERSON, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.
[New Volume of "Trübner's Oriental Series."]

8vo, 21s.

INDIA, PAST and PRESENT:

Historical, Social, and Political
By JAMES SAMUELSON, Author of "Roumania, Past and Present," "Bulgaria, Past and Present," &c. Illustrated with a Map, Woodcuts, and Oculotype Views, Portraits, &c.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE WING of AZRAEL.

By MONA CAIRD. Crown 8vo, 6s.

8vo, with 16 Plates, 5s.

IN TENNYSON LAND:

Being a Brief Account of the Home and Early surroundings of the Poet Laureate, and an Attempt to identify the Scenes and Trace the Influences of Lincolnshire in his Works. By JOHN CUMING WALTERS.

THE PAROCHIAL LIBRARY.

MATTHEW PRIOR:

A Selection from his Poems.
With Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON. Parchment or cloth, 6s.; vellum, 7s. 6d.

Small crown 8vo, 5s.

WESTMINSTER CHIMES,

And other Poems. By MAXWELL GRAY, Author of "The Silence of Dean Maitland," &c.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

ONEIROS; Or, Some Questions of the Day.

By CHRISTOPHER YELVERTON.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

INTRODUCTION to the SCIENCE of LANGUAGE.

By A. H. SAYOE, M.A., Deputy Professor of Philology at the Oxford University. Third Edition. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 9s.

2 vols., post 8vo, 86s.

AN ARABIC-ENGLISH

DICTIONARY

On a New and Unique System. Comprising about 125,000 Arabic Words, with an English Index to the same. By H. A. SALMONE, Arabic Lecturer at University College, London. Dedicated, by special Permission, to HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE INDIAN RELIGIONS;

Or, Results of the Mysterious Buddhism. Concerning that also which is to be understood in the Divinity of Fire. By HARGRAVE JENNINGS, Author of "The Rosicrucians, their Rites and Mysteries," &c.

12mo, 2s.

A BUDDHIST CATECHISM;

Or, Outline of the Doctrine of the Buddha Gotama, in the form of Question and Answer. Compiled from the Sacred Writings of the Southern Buddhists for the use of Europeans, with Explanatory Notes. By SUBHAURA BHAIKSHU.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1890.

No. 926, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscripts.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Memoirs of Carlo Gozzi. Translated into English by John Addington Symonds. In 2 vols. (Nimmo.)

It is needless to assure our readers that this translation of Carlo Gozzi's Memorie inutili is excellent. Mr. Symonds has repeatedly proved his mastery as a translator, notably in his recent volumes of Cellini's autobiography. His great knowledge of the Italian language, and his extraordinary power of throwing himself into sympathy with his subject and his period, adapt him in a peculiar manner for this kind of work.

In Gozzi's Memorie the translator has found a subject very different from La Vita di Benvenuto Cellini. The two men and the two periods are as dissimilar as they well could be. Yet in both cases Mr. Symonds has succeeded in conveying to the reader a strong sense of the authors' varied personalities by a masterly handling of style. In the case of Gozzi, Mr. Symonds confesses that he began his task with "a little aversion"; but this has not proved any hindrance to the portrayal of the dry, sardonic, narrow, but honourable man with whom he has to deal.

The labour of transferring the Memorie inutili into readable English must have been very great. Gozzi is often involved, redundant, and prolix; and the translator has exercised a wise licence in curtailing and rearranging certain passages, though all such cases are indicated in the notes.

Apart from the interesting personality of Gozzi himself, the most attractive and instructive portions of the Memorie are, first of all, the vivid picture of a Venetian gentleman's garrison life as displayed in Gozzi's record of his service under the Provveditore Generale in Dalmatia. The picture is powerfully drawn, and Gozzi's humour is delightful. Few episodes could be more comic than the account of the Provveditore's reception at Zara, and the fate of Gozzi's sonnet, as told in the chapter written to prove "that poetry is not as useless as people commonly imagine." Besides the life in a garrison town, we are introduced to the domestic interior of a Venetian family, with all its squabbles, jealousies, and financial difficulties; its changes from country life in Friuli to town life in Venice. Lastly, we have that portion of the Memorie which is best known in the history of literature, though to us it seems the least diverting—the long quarrel between Gozzi and Goldoni, and the battle waged by the Granelleschi against Chiari. There is, of course, much else which throws light on Venetian society towards the close of the Republic, notably in the account of that powerful but repellent personage, M^{me}.

Dolfin Tron; and the history of Gratarol, whose attack on Gozzi was the direct cause which led to the creation, and also to the publication, of the Memorie. All this is described by Gozzi with great frankness and apparent truth, though with a caustic and sarcastic pen—"with a smile upon his lips and venom in his heart," as Goldoni says of him; but with more smile and less venom, we imagine, than Goldoni believed.

Mr. Symonds has prefaced his translation by three admirable essays, which place the reader in the proper position to understand the Memorie. The first describes the quarrel between Gozzi and Gratarol, introducing M^{me}. Tron, and closing with an estimate of Gozzi's character. "The memoirs lie now before English readers, and Carlo Gozzi will be known to them for the first time—certainly for the first time as he really was." The estimate is honourable, though by no means enthusiastically favourable to Gozzi.

The second essay gives us a full and admirable account of the Commedia dell'Arte, and of the various masks, many of which are represented in Maurice Sand's excellent drawings scattered throughout the book. The Commedia dell'Arte is still alive in Italy, as is proved by the fact that new masks, or at least new stereotyped figures, are still created. Witness the creation of the most popular Venetian character, Facanappa, by the actor de Col, who died little more than thirty years ago. Facanappa is intimately known to the Venetian popolo, and is in constant service among the Marionettes of the Teatro Minerva. It is probable that Facanappa, like so many of the masks, is not an entirely new creation. He is not a parent mask. He probably has affinity to some older mask from whom he is descended. But, as usual, his pedigree is hard to trace, though he is plausibly connected with Peppenappa of Sicilian birth. At the present day, during carnival, the masks are still out about the streets, or hired to make sport for a supper party. One harlequin, known to the writer, assured him that to act a part well a man must give himself up to that character alone: once harlequin always harlequin; once Brighella always Brighella. This harlequin constantly carried in his pocket a book containing the jokes and sayings proper to his part; and in this book he would read whenever he had a moment to spare from his ordinary business of photographer's assistant. He had lived himself into harlequin, and looked ready at a moment's notice to strike an attitude and to begin his fun. Among other stock in trade was this letter from Harlequin to Columbine:

"Cara Colombina.—I write to you, because I have nothing to do. I leave off now, for I have nothing to say. Love me as I love you. If you want anything, buy it. Your loving Harlequin."

"P.S. If you don't get this, let me know."

Our readers will recognise the postscript as a very ancient Irish bull.

Mr. Symonds's third essay gives an account of the Fiabe and of Gozzi's quarrel with Goldoni. The estimate of Goldoni is not a high one. It is no doubt true that he was not a great genius; but his geniality is most refreshing and delightful. To be fully appreciated he must be seen, not read. Seen as acted by a Venetian company, rattled through with all the fire and sparkle of Zago, Borisi, and Privato; then it seems to us that his mirth-provoking qualities cannot be surpassed.

These two handsome volumes are produced with all the sumptuousness for which Mr. Nimmo is so justly famed, and they form a delightful addition to a library.

HORATIO F. BROWN.

Among Cannibals: an Account of Four Years' Travels in Australia and of Camp Life with the Aborigines of Queensland. By Carl Lumholtz. (John Murray.)

In this work are embodied the chief fruits of a sort of roving commission undertaken in the year 1880 by Mr. Lumholtz, a young Norwegian naturalist of considerable attainments, on behalf of his Alma Mater, the University of Christiania. His general instructions to make zoological and other collections for the university museums, and to study the anthropology of the lesser known native tribes, naturally attracted him to the colony of Queensland, where about a twelvemonth was spent in the central and western parts with somewhat disappointing results. He then moved northwards, and devoted more than a year (1882-83) to a thoroughly scientific exploration of the basin of the Herbert River, which flows south-eastwards to the Pacific Ocean, just above Halifax Bay, and opposite the southern extremity of Hinchinbrook Island. Here a great portion of the time was actually spent among the surrounding aborigines; and the bulk of the volume before us is, in fact, occupied with descriptions of his daily life in their camping-grounds. The work is thus mainly ethnological, and will be accepted as a valuable contribution to our knowledge of the north-eastern, that is, the least known, section of the native populations. In return for the almost intolerable miseries of such a prolonged residence among some of the most degraded members of the human family, the author may at all events have the satisfaction of feeling that he has fully realised his purpose of presenting a faithful picture, based on his own experiences,

"of the life, manners, and customs, of the Australian aborigines from their birth and infancy to their old age and death; and thus rescuing for the science of ethnography facts concerning tribes that have never before come into contact with white men, and that within a generation or two will have disappeared from the face of the earth."

Perhaps exception should be taken to the statement, also repeated elsewhere, that these Herbert River tribes had never before come in contact with the whites. The country has been occupied, and partly settled, as at Cashmere, Glendhu, and Valley of Lagoons, partly overrun by miners even farther inland, since 1865. More or less summary accounts of several of the local tribes have even been furnished to Mr. E. M. Carr, and published by him in his great work on the Australian Races, as, for instance, the Halifax Bay and Lower Herbert peoples by Mr. James Cassady and Mr. R. Johnstone, and those of Hinchinbrook Island and the opposite mainland (Herbert Basin) by Mr. M. Armstrong and Mr. John Murray. We have also a short vocabulary of a "Herbert River tribe," not further identified, but evidently closely akin both to the people visited by Mr. Lumholtz and to those of Hinchinbrook Island and Halifax Bay, all speaking but slightly divergent dialects of the same language.

Nevertheless, from his headquarters at the abandoned station of Herbert Vale, Mr. Lumholtz made continual excursions to the western hills and in other directions, camping for days and weeks together among nomad groups, which he believed had never before been visited by any Europeans. About Herbert Vale, forty miles inland, he had only met "civilised" blacks, whose claims to be regarded as such consisted in an acquired taste for tobacco and cast-off European clothes, combined with the knowledge borne in upon them by repeated lessons that the murder of a white meant the murder of half a dozen or so of "black fellows." From this the reader may form some idea of what was involved by daily association with myall,* that is the true wild tribes unaffected by any civilising influences, whose homes were the bush, and whose menu ranged from snake and lizard down to pediculus capitis spec. nov. Austral! These animals, says our plain-spoken author, "are also found upon the body, and their possessor may be constantly seen hunting them, an occupation which is at the same time a veritable enjoyment to him, for to speak plainly—he eats them. The blacks also practice this sport on each other for mutual gratification, and the operation is evidence of friendship and politeness."

Is it surprising that Mr. Lumholtz would appear to be the only European who has voluntarily qualified himself to speak of the Australian aborigines by making himself for the time being one of them? But all the more authoritative is his voice, when he pronounces confidently on any moot questions connected with the usages or the "Weltanschauungen" of these interesting savages. A careful study of his pages should prove the best antidote to the sickly sentimentality which is now so rampant, and which has quite recently ventured to revive Rousseau's maudlin nonsense about the nobility of the natural state of man, and his innate "moral" equality. Let those who pretend to bewail the approaching extinction of the lower races in Australia and elsewhere ponder over such statements as these:

"There is not much to be said of the morals of the blacks, for I am sorry to say they have none. . . . These civilised blacks soon try to acquire the white man's manners. . . . Though the Australian native is thus able to acquire some of the fruits of civilisation, it still remains a characteristic fact that he never gets so far as to occupy an independent position. . . . Their keen sense of observation enables them to discover quickly the bad qualities in the white man's character, and these they are not slow to imitate, but they have no eye for the good qualities. . . . The same fate as that which overtook their brothers in Tasmania is in store for the natives of Australia. They have proved themselves almost incapable of receiving either culture or Christianity, and they have not the power to resist the onward march of civilisation. They are, therefore, without a future, without a home, without a hope—a doomed race."

To regret this seems like regretting the disappearance of vermin, of vice, of bloodshed, of cannibalism, and other nameless horrors, from the face of the earth. On the much-discussed subject of cannibalism Mr. Lumholtz is able to throw a very strong and a very lurid light. His belief—no! his knowledge—of its existence under some of its most revolting forms, and to a far greater extent than is usually supposed, is emphasised by the title of his book, and by its motto—a familiar passage from Herodotus about Ἀνδροφάγοι, who ἀγριώτατα πάντων ἀνθρώπων ἐχούσιν ἡβέα κτλ. Raiding parties are described, which are systematically organised, like the head-hunting expeditions of the Bornean Dyaks, not to acquire territory or to avenge some tribal wrong, but solely for the purpose of satisfying an insatiable hunger for human flesh. Women, we are told, are "splendid booty," not, however, the young, who are spared for other purposes, but the old, who are "first ravished and then killed and eaten" by these guileless children of nature.

This is horrible enough; but it is still more horrible to learn that mothers eat their own children, whether they die a natural death or are knocked on the head by order of the father, because they are a burden to the community. Our explorer's people made no secret of their fondness for this their "greatest delicacy," which in the evenings formed the leading topic of their conversation round the hut fires. Some are omnivorous in this respect, some draw the line at their own kindred; but all show a preference for black and yellow (Chinese) over white meat, which is pronounced komorboru kawan, "terrible nausea," the civilised blacks explaining that for these gourmets "the white man's flesh has a salt taste, which the natives do not like."

Curiously enough, the Herbert River tribes are more advanced arithmetically than most of the aborigines. Like the neighbouring coastlanders they have a radical for "three," karbo, which is the same word as the kurrbu of Hinchinbrook Island and kabo of Halifax Bay. But in their religious views they have not got beyond the negative state, common perhaps to all the Australian tribes without exception before the arrival of the missionaries. Their "cult" seems limited to a vague dread of some baneful being, whose power of working mischief is uncontrolled by any more potent beneficent spirit—in fact, incipient demonology, the starting-point of all natural religions. Not trusting to his own enquiries on this point, Mr. Lumholtz consulted an intelligent Kanaka (Polynesian) long resident among these tribes, and perfectly familiar with their language. This Kanaka, who, though not a Christian had received some instruction from the missionaries in the South Sea Islands, was positive that the "blacks do not believe there is anybody above us up there." They probably believe in a continued material or natural existence after death; but Mr. Lumholtz concludes from all the evidence before him that they had no idea of any supreme good being, but only of a demon, about whom he found it difficult to get any definite account. Of prayer, sacrifice, or any other outward evidence of inward belief in the supernatural, there is no semblance; and it may be safely inferred that the savage mind is a blank as regards any beyond the natural order of things.

After lavishing much pains on their education, Mr. Lumholtz was able to utilise his black friends more or less successfully in enlarging his natural history collections. These include specimens of four new marsupials, a tree kangaroo, and three opossums, which have been described by Prof. Collett, and are here reproduced in beautiful coloured engravings. The book is also enriched with a large number of illustrations of Australian types, plant and animal life, from original sketches and photographs, as well as with maps of Australia and the explorer's routes.

A. H. KEANE.

James Macdonell, Journalist. By W. Robertson Nicoll. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

ALL who knew the late James Macdonell personally, or by reputation—and he was one of the few men in whose case, and in virtue of the transparent sincerity of whose nature, knowledge by reputation was almost as accurate as knowledge acquired through intimacy—will admit that Mr. Nicoll has discharged his duty as biographer with tact and judgment, as well as with enthusiasm. In his "prefatory note" he claims to have done his best to "violate no confidence, to insert nothing that would give pain"; and by the suppression of various names he justifies his claim. In the report, indeed, given by Mr. Macdonell of an interview which he had with Carlyle, and which Mr. Nicoll reproduces, the names are given of two men, the one dead and the other living, whom, as clergymen of the Church of Scotland, Carlyle seems to have believed guilty of insincerity, and to have cuffed conversationally in passing. It is not easy to see what object has been served by the giving of these names. Otherwise, Mr. Nicoll has skated with remarkable success over the very thin ice of journalistic etiquette. He has revealed no newspaper secrets; and yet he has managed to produce an admirable portrait of his essentially anonymous hero, and in addition to give the uninitiated public a very fair idea of the conditions under which the heroes—and martyrs—of anonymity perform their work. Looked at from this standpoint, Mr. Nicoll's book is unique of its kind. It is also so carefully and so judiciously written that the example it sets is likely to be followed. More's the pity, perhaps.

Born in an Aberdeenshire village in 1842, James Macdonell died in London at the poet's age of thirty-seven. He died also of the poet's complaint—over-devotion to his work. Finally, he had the short-lived poet's compensations of absorption in his art and of rapid success. I cannot claim to have enjoyed the privilege of his intimacy either in Scotland or in London; but I remember that when I met him first he was one of a small set of ardent young Aberdonians, now scattered all over the world, who were in the habit of discussing fate and free-will—in which most of them believed, in spite of the fact that the author of The Emotions and the Will was then the leading intellectual force in the university—in each other's rooms, and of reading with eagerness and delight Tennyson's latest poem, or Matthew Arnold's latest article in the National Review of these days. James Macdonell was then what he was at the end of his too brief chapter, a journalistic artist—rather than a journalist in the telegram-and-scissors sense of the phrase—to his finger-tips. He must have lisped in leading articles, for all unconsciously he talked in them then. This fact accounts for his unprecedented promotion in his profession. Without either a regular academic or a regular newspaper training, he was engaged in editing a daily newspaper in Newcastle at an age when most lads are wondering what they will turn their hands and heads to. He was still young at the time of his death; but not only was he then a highly honoured writer for the leading London newspaper, but his contemporaries will ungrudgingly allow that he had, and deserved to have, the reputation of being the most brilliant—in the true and French sense—journalistic artist of his day.

* This is, philologically, an interesting word. Originally, it meant a species of acacia (A. pendula) which grows in large thickets; but it was soon applied by the whites to the wild natives who kept aloof in such inaccessible myall scrub. Then the blacks adopted the word in the same sense, the "civilised" natives using it as a term of contempt for their uncultured neighbours, who could not even smoke tobacco. Cf. the present and original meanings of the words "pagan" and "heathen."

Looking at the story of his life as told by Mr. Nicoll, one is tempted to say that he worked too hard, especially during the period which immediately preceded his migration from the Telegraph to the Times, and that he would have lived longer had he been more reposeful and had he not intellectually burned the candle at both ends. It may be so; but happiness is more important than longevity. It is beyond doubt that Macdonell's was a singularly happy life. Domesticated yet sociable, industrious almost to a fault yet fitted to take the most out of everything in the shape of pleasure, he does not appear to have found the burden of anonymous writing more than he could bear. No doubt he appreciated the advantages, as well as the disadvantages, attaching to work of this kind. There is a sense of satisfaction in labouring silently without being embarrassed by votes of thanks for doing nothing more than one's duty, as is the case with public men, artist, and men of letters who are in the unhappy condition of being "spotted" by the world. No doubt this satisfaction was James Macdonell's. But there are also disadvantages attaching to the life of a journalist, and these Mr. Nicoll has obviously felt. The Russels, Delanes, Chenerys, and other princes of the powers of anonymity who figure in his book are not so much living men as official simulacra. James Macdonell is, therefore, seen at his best—perhaps even at his most brilliant—in his letters to his wife, most of them written when he was travelling on the Continent. They reveal not only a union of hearts, but a community of sympathies which is of the rarest. James Macdonell died at his post, a gallant "soldier in the war of the liberation of humanity." He had all the qualities which fitted him for playing such a part; and Mr. Nicoll's biography proves how, thanks largely to his own generous nature, he secured that environment of love and sympathy which is absolutely necessary for the playing of it smoothly, if not also triumphantly.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

Strange True Stories of Louisiana. By George W. Cable. (Kegan Paul & Co)

ALL men, except a few belated partisans of slavery, will be sure to welcome this charming book from the chronicler of Old Creole Days. The work is doubly valuable, because Mr. Cable the romancer has suppressed himself so much in order to make room for Mr. Cable the faithful and capable editor. The tales in this volume are in one way superior even to that delight of boyhood, Walter Thornbury's Old Stories Retold; for, wherever the editor has been able, the very words of the actors or spectators of forgotten and unearthed romance have been faithfully translated or preserved. Where this first-hand evidence is unattainable, the romancer, in deposing the editor, has nevertheless chosen some true tradition for the groundwork of his tale.

The histories which Mr. Cable has saved from the wreck—and his account of their discovery and verification is not the least interesting chapter—thus fall into two classes. First and foremost, those in which he reproduces an authentic MS.; and, secondly, those in which, in default of such a treasure, he has served up an orally transmitted legend with his own sauce and garnish. Mr. Cable is himself the first to admit the greater value of the first-hand papers—priceless jewels, all rough and uncut, such as are not found thrice in a century, and, unlike stones of mere shining dust, would only lose in value if tampered with by the lapidary.

But before these are noticed, the three tales from Mr. Cable's own pen deserve honourable mention. Of "Salome Müller," "The Haunted House in Royal Street," and "Attalie Brouillard," the last is the best, and the first as decidedly the weakest. "Salome Müller" is loosely and lengthily spun out, and is hardly worthy of so skilled a practitioner as Mr. Cable. It also makes too heavy a call upon our interest in the extinct legal luminaries of New Orleans fifty years ago. Too much is said about these phantoms, and they are not convincingly reanimated; though the advocate, Christian Roselius, deserves his niche for his long duel in behalf of a most injured woman. Frankly, what attracts us most in this and the succeeding stories is less the story itself than Mr. Cable's own combination of sympathies: artistic sympathy with all the figures upon his canvas (be they spirits black, white, or grey), and personal sympathy—never warping his artistic presentation, but constantly shining through it—with the millions of the victimised colour. This note is sounded yet more clearly in the horrible story of "The Haunted House." No one could soon forget the picture of the negro child flying over roof and stairway from the cowhide lash of its charming and accomplished mistress, Madame Lalaurie, till "there came a dull, jarring thud in the paved court beneath." As a specimen of Mr. Cable's pencil at its best, it must suffice to extract from "Attalie Brouillard" a description of the rascal quadroom, Camille Ducour:

"Fancy a small figure, thin let us say, narrow-chested, round-shouldered, his complexion a dull clay colour spattered with large red freckles, his eyes small, grey, and close together, his hair not long or bushy, but hesitating between a dull yellow and a hot red, his clothes his own and his linen last week's."

It does not appear whether Mr. Cable has any authority for these traits; but somebody must surely have sat for such a portrait, which we treasure as a bright scrap of reality—a living face, though it be but a sorry scoundrel's, saved from oblivion.

How great is the contrast between this trained portraiture of nature and the remaining four papers, where Nature herself meets us, in all her leisurely process, her repetitions, her thrilling surprises produced by simple expedients! These papers are all written by women; they are translated in three cases and abridged in one, but otherwise are published intact and, says the editor, "without restorations." The first, bearing the somewhat Stevensonian title of "The Young Aunt with White Hair," is a translation, only seven pages long, of a letter written in 1782 by a French émigrée. She was seized by Indians near the mouth of the Mississippi, saw her husband and child dashed down before her eyes, was herself half-flayed at the stake, and was only saved from the chief's dinner-table by a rescuing party at the eleventh hour. The language of the letter is naïf and desperate, and is in strong contrast to Mr. Cable's own ornamental and sometimes laboured style. It is only a pity that so little could be printed of the French originals for the sake of their ill-spelt, eager utterance. The translations in most cases read well; save that Mr. Cable, either in order to flavour his diction, or from a mistaken idea of translator's fidelity, sometimes renders French too literally. For instance, "Abner did not spare of beautiful presents"; and, again, the sentence, "These frightful tidings failed to kill me," looks like, though it may not be, a mistranslation of faillirent me tuer—"almost killed me."

On "The Adventures of Françoise and Suzanne," and on the story of "Alix de Morainville"—half-tragedy and half-idyl—it is impossible to linger, delightful as they are in their flow and sparkling communicativeness. There remains the pearl of the book, the "War Diary of a Union Woman in the South." The writer is of a different stamp from the happy butterfly Françoise. She is a woman of singular nobleness, firmness, and penetration, who, though only a young girl, thought out her anti-slavery convictions independently, while everybody round her was discharging infinite and furious rant against the slave and his liberators. She suffered much from her friends; but she kept the faith, not without self-contempt and anger at the few concessions she brought herself to make. On one occasion she lets her name be put down as a subscriber to some hospital stores. "If I hadn't, my spirit would have been wounded with sharp spears before night" (p. 269). Once she confesses losing nerve in the terrible siege of Vicksburg, but the confession only brings out the quality of the heroism with which she meets discomfort and danger in the detested cause. Few diaries exhibit such boundless pluck, and few such unconsciousness of being at all exceptional. It is not till the last page that we learn incidentally how all through the dangerous journey and the siege this brave woman had been nearing her confinement, and that the child, as might be expected, died when it came. A reading of this journal might be recommended to those, who are for ever preaching the ennobling and awakening effects of war. Such may be the effect upon the side that is in the right, but how of the wrong side? Is that ennobled? The truth appears to be that people who in private life are just and humane often simply have the sleeping brute and maniac in their composition awakened at the sound of cannon. All the more deserving of reverent record is a woman like the writer of this diary, who endures with the nerve of a soldier, but keeps her spirit high and clear above the tumultuous scream of fratricidal war.

OLIVER ELTON.

The Histories of Polybius. Translated by E. S. Shuckburgh. (Macmillan.)

MR. SHUCKBURGH must be congratulated upon the successful accomplishment of a task of no common magnitude. He has given us the first English translation of the complete works of Polybius so far as they are now known. The bulk of the work is very considerable, and the trouble of rendering satisfactorily even a small portion of another language is almost endless. The careful weighing of English words, that we may choose the best and find what will answer as nearly as possible to what Locke would call the "mixed modes" of the Greek; the anxiety to be sure that we have made emphatic the word which in the Greek really bears the emphasis; the wish to preserve and transmit the secondary suggestions which the original makes by the side of its direct meaning; all these things are complicated by the necessity of making the English version readable. But wherever we have tested Mr. Shuckburgh's translation upon any of these points, we have risen from the test with the feeling that he has done a painstaking and excellent piece of work, and has embodied his version in good and agreeable English. Indeed, there can be no doubt that Mr. Shuckburgh's English is far better than Polybius's Greek. The latter is neither good as Greek—i.e., when viewed by the narrow standard of technical scholarship; nor successful in point of style. It is not effective. It does not bring things clearly before our eyes. Not only is Polybius often obscure in descriptions of sites, of objects, and of processes, as Greek writers and Latin writers too generally are; but even when he is plain, he is not vivid. A little of the literary skill with which Dr. Arnold used the evidence which he affords for the Punic war, or with which Flaubert works his material up into the ghastly romance of Salammô, would have given a place in the very first rank of historical writers to an author who had such opportunities as Polybius had and such brains to use them.

Mr. Shuckburgh has done wonders in making the reader's task easy. His introduction is interesting and to the point, with its accounts of (1) Polybius and (2) various Greek attempts at equal union or at "hegemony" (? hegemony). We do not, however, quite understand him when he speaks of the "manner of Plutarch, with its huge compound words built up of intricate sentences." They may perhaps be built up of sentences, but of intricate sentences surely not. At p. xlvii. Mr. Shuckburgh writes as if he had forgotten that the Messenians of the Peloponnesian war were settled not at all in Messenia, but at Naupactus. The well-known passage in bk. xxxv. 6 cannot mean both "a request for a restitution of their property in Achaia" (vol. i., p. xxviii.) and for "the same honours in Achaia as they had before." Sometimes, but only sometimes, Mr. Shuckburgh has omitted to give the force of little words, e.g., the second kai in ii. 44, 1. In ii. 45, 1 we doubt whether καταδιέλσθαι means "to break up the union of Achaean states." Is it not rather "to divide among themselves," and so destroy the league? In x. 22, 10 κακογλωσσία is perhaps "wretched rivalry" rather than "intemperate zeal." So Liddell and Scott take it, and that seems to be the sense required by the earlier part of the chapter. There is a curious oversight in vol. i., p. xlvii.; Herodotus (viii. 73) says, not that the Aetolians came from Elis, but that the Eleians came from Aetolia.

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

A London Plane Tree: and Other Verse. By Amy Levy. (Fisher Unwin.)

PERHAPS the saddest thing about this slim little volume of verse, which for the most part is so pathetic and often so hopeless in tone, is the evidence it affords that the author could never, in all probability, have achieved fame as a poet. Miss Amy Levy has so recently, and in so tragic a manner, passed away from that fever of life which she at once courted and dreaded that no critic can fail to regard her posthumous volume with all tenderness. All the more so, because the book contains many prophetic notes; signs seen ominously now, in the light of what has happened since the poet revised the sheets but a week before her death.

But as the second book of verse by one who was very ambitious of renown where few achieve even moderate success, A London Plane Tree is, it must in honesty be admitted, disappointing. There is in it little or nothing of that strenuous realism which characterises the author's prose studies, Reuben Sachs and The Romance of a Shop. Its intellectual range is limited, and its expression, within its scope, is often inadequate and sometimes too derivative to be individual. Nor, with one or two exceptions, is there any greater promise shown here than in the author's first production, A Minor Poet. That some consciousness of the futility of her yearnings and strivings weighed upon Miss Levy is evident again and again in the present volume. The note of the vanity of all effort, of despair, is struck insistently:

"There is no more to be done,
Nothing beneath the sun,
All the long ages through,
Nothing—by me for you.

This dreary day, things seem
Vain shadows in a dream,
Or some strange, pictured show;
And mine own tears that flow,
My hidden tears that fall,
The vainest of them all."

This, as I have said, is what is sadder than any poem in the book. The greater part of its contents are, however, pathetic enough. It would seem as though the author had premonitions of her imminent "end of weary days," as, for example, in "The Two Terrors" (Life and Death); "Felo de Se" (which, however, as a whole, is clearly the outcome of merely vicarious emotion, as it certainly is a morbid and inferior production); one or two other "Moods and Thoughts," as, for instance, the poem closing with the bitter cry, "This pain of living is too keen"; and the last lines in the book, "On you the sun is shining free . . . on me, The cloud descends."

The contents are in four sections—"A London Plane-Tree," &c., "Love, Dreams, and Death," "Moods and Thoughts," and "Odds and Ends"; and it is in the second and third that the truest poetry is to be found. In the first section are a few ballades and roundels. But for the writing of these measures Miss Levy was not properly equipped; for her faculty of rhythmic energy was not keenly developed, nor was her ear invariably acute to rhyme-music. In the first page there occur such false rhymes as "scorn" and "borne"—a matter possibly of little importance in a lengthy poem, but prominent amid a few otherwise highly finished lines. In the earlier of the two ballades is a line that defies metrical harmony:

"Neither to rate lower nor higher."

In the intermediate sections, however, there is much to charm. In most of the poems therein the reader will discern the longing for the peace that belongs to "summers foreseen that yet may come"; most, too, are charged with that burden, the burden of individual life, which, as the author says in "The Village Garden," ever weighed her down. Again and again she cries out if it is love or fame, this desire which consumes her; or if it be something vaguely apprehended by but unnamed of men, "this passion straining at my heart-strings like a tiger in a leash." Again and again also the same craving for rest:

"O sweeter far than strain and stress
Is the slow, creeping weariness,
And better far than thought, I find
The drowsy blankness of the mind.
More than all joys of soul or sense
Is this divine indifference,
Where grief a shadow seems to be,
And peace a possibility."

With the exception of the fine lyric, "The Birch Tree at Loschwitz," with its free lilt and passionate cry, the most notable pieces are poems so brief that they would be fragmentary were they not rounded and complete in their concision. "In the Nower" is one of these; but I must be content with citation of two, the quatrain

"IN SEPTEMBER.

The sky is silver-grey; the long
Slow waves caress the shore.
On such a day as this I have been glad,
Who shall be glad no more";

and the fleeting strain of

"YOUTH AND LOVE.

What does youth know of love?
Little enough, I trow!
He plucks the myrtle for his brow,
For his forehead the rose.
Nay, but of love
It is not youth who knows."

With their few technical shortcomings and their special virtues of sincerity, pathos, grace, and not infrequent delicate beauty, these last utterances of Miss Levy will be welcome to her many friends and admirers.

WILLIAM SHARP.

NEW NOVELS.

Kit and Kitty. By R. D. Blackmore. In 3 vols. (Sampson Low.)

The Romance of a Station. By Mrs. Campbell Praed. In 2 vols. (Trischler.)

Her Heart's Desire. By H. Prothero Lewis. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Louis Draycott. By Mrs. Laffan. In 2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

Sforza: a Story of Milan. By W. W. Astor. (Ward & Downey.)

Jupiter Lights. By C. F. Woolson. (Sampson Low.)

Dr. Hermione. By the Author of "Lady Bluebeard." (Blackwood.)

Three People's Secrets. By G. M. Fenn. (Simpkin Marshall & Co.)

It is nearly always agreeable to be in Mr. Blackmore's company; and, indeed, the "nearly" might be omitted if he did not sometimes think it proper to delight in that company himself so much that he occasionally forgets the presence of anybody else. "The weak smile of autumnal sunshine over the wrongs of its own neglect" (we quote from Kit and Kitty) is a good self-parody of a humorous kind for soliloquising purposes; but it is not good enough for public use. There is very little of this kind, however, in Kit and Kitty, and there is much of a better. Kitty is one of the most charming damsels that even Mr. Blackmore has ever drawn; and if that often-applicable sentence of Steerforth's, "Rather a chuckle-headed fellow for the girl," does sometimes present itself as to Kit, let it be rebuffed as unjust. For Kit, though a little sententious and not over gifted with the wisdom of the serpent, is a good fellow. He begins well by smiting one enemy off a bridge and ends better by taking, without blench or ill-feeling, a revolver-shot à bout portant from another. Kit's Uncle Corny, one of those "growers" in whom Mr. Blackmore's soul for good and due reasons delights, is better still. He, too, begins and ends well—indeed, incomparably, though, as becometh the old, with words not deeds. When his nephew, at quite the beginning of the story, is heaping epithets on Kitty, he interrupts—"Angelic, angelic is the word, Kit. Don't begrudge it: it saves such a lot of the others." It does; and besides (which Uncle Corny doubtless knew but was too kindly to say) it leaves in a blissful uncertainty the further division of black-angelic and white-angelic, the which time shall too surely show. Uncle Corny's concluding wise word is even wiser. "What is England coming to? Lord bless my heart! the stuff they talk about the 'sanctity of human life'! A good man's life belongs to God and a bad one's to the devil." Whereto we beg humbly to say "Amen!" As for the story of Kit and Kitty, it is passably intricate; and, as is the custom with Mr. Blackmore, it does not let itself be "argued" with any great ease. Suffice it to say that the course of true love, running at first with rather unusual and surprising smoothness for Mr. Christopher Orehardson, breaks into frightful rapids some short time after his marriage by the disappearance of his wife. That this was the act of villains no one will doubt; but we do not think that Mr. Blackmore or anyone else will quarrel with us for letting out that no harm came of it. The fact is that if any harm had come of it, it would have been impossible to read the book, Kitty being altogether too nice. The villains of the book are rather agreeable, and there is a leper who is tragic in a high degree.

It is believed by some that critics never wonder; but this is a mistake. We never take up—or at least, never lay down—a book of Mrs. Campbell Praed's without wondering. She can write quite admirably well in some ways and quite unadmirably ill in others; and there seems to be some malediction upon her which ordains that she shall never be content with performing the first function (which is to describe Australian life and scenery) without straying off to the performance of the second (which is to complain directly or indirectly of the failure of marriage). She has, we are bound to say, produced exercises in this latter function which were much more disagreeable than those to be found in The Romance of a Station; but she has never produced any which were more entirely gratuitous. Indeed, so loosely is The Romance of a Station put together that it reads like three different stories which some not over intelligent "literary executor" had found among posthumous papers and shovelled out anyhow as one novel. Number Three (we have an object in reversing the order) is a story of four-handed love-making, the players being (1) Mr. Humphreys—Australian, unattractive, honest, rich, shadowy; (2) Archie Thurston—English, aristocrat, handsome, weak, and rather worthlessly amiable; (3) Weeta Wilson—an Australian minx; (4) Isabel Cave—a very nice English girl. The chief action is occupied with the wiles of the minx to get Archie away from Isabel; but the end of things is not so, and yet we are much more sorry for Isabel than if it had been. Earlier there is Number Two, the equally independent story of Lina Sabine, a maumaiside who interests us remarkably little. And both these stories are grafted, or, rather, stuck on the main theme—the adventures of a newly married couple on an island station off the Queensland coast—which part is so brightly and vividly written, and so full of unpretentious but excellent fun and life, that we really do not know whether anything better has appeared since Geoffrey Hamlyn itself on any similar subject.

Her Heart's Desire tells how a certain Eira Monckton had a stroke of good luck, "sinned her mercies," and was punished. Fatherless, penniless, and one of a large family, she is practically adopted by a kind but dowdy old maid, who takes her abroad. She meets a certain Mr. Dallas, who is very beautiful, and melancholy, and like Child Harold. At Rome he escorts her alone to the Forum by moonlight. They dance together five times running—a course of conduct sad and bad and mad, but also, as those who have been guilty of it know, sweet. They (not to put too fine a point upon it) kiss each other—a course of conduct sadder, badder, madder, and sweeter still. Then there appears, uninvited and abominable, a Mrs. Dallas; and the kisses and the dancing together five times running cease, and there is wailing and gnashing of teeth. The book shows certain signs of inexperience here and there, and wants compressing and trimming up; but it has really comic and really pathetic touches. The second heroine, Geraldine Harris, though she might have been a little more ladylike, is pleasant; while Eira and Dallas, though rather given to the "delire and dolore" business, are pleasant likewise. But we think (as the admiral of the Toulon fleet said about putting the vice-consul in petticoats) that it might have been managed without killing the old maid.

Mrs. Laffan, better known perhaps as Mrs. Leith Adams, has also written a pleasant book in Louis Draycott, marred in the same way by a rather too lavish use of obvious means of infusing pathos. But it is very hard indeed to get lady novelists out of this appeal to the pocket handkerchief; and when they leave it off they frequently take to worse things. The chief objection to Louis Draycott is that the hero, by the author's showing, ran his neck into the noose of a bad marriage without any excuse of passion whatever. Therefore he was a fool; and it is very hard to pity a fool. But the book is full of lively touches, and the sketches of prison life seem to argue knowledge.

Mr. Astor's Sforza is one of those books which are not easy to write about. "Peace! poor fool," answered Barbarigo. "Think you I could not in the next hour have your life taken?" . . . "My uncle," answered the young man, "you would not jest thus if you had ever felt." . . . "Par la foi de mon âme," answered le Bayard, with a Gallic shrug." These three sentences will probably do more than our utmost skill or pains could in the way of description or argument. Those who like the style will not find Sforza an ill example of it.

We generally find something to like in Miss Woolson's books, and the worst thing we know about them is that their beginning is too often better than their latter end. For this inconvenience, however, the corrupt nature of man will but too promptly suggest a remedy. At any rate, the earlier scenes of Jupiter Lights, with their picture of the old planter Judge Abercrombie and his half-ruined household abiding on the island home that Abolition has left unto them desolate, are very striking; and Miss Woolson has hit upon an excellent study of character in Cicely Bruce, or rather Morrison, who apparently cares for no soul alive and for nothing on earth, while she is really a devoted wife and mother. The heroine, Eve, Cicely's sister-in-law, pleases us much less, and her lover, Paul Tennent, is not much better than the heroes of most American novels; that is to say, he is a victorious prig.

Let no one, if he should open Dr. Hermione at p. 7 and read how a young man and a young woman "embodied between them the careless easy grace of the nineteenth century," be content with muttering softly "Send us a gude conceit o' oursel," and putting the book down. It has weak points, this among them; but it is a very amusing book, rather suggestive of those which the author of Thalatta used to write many and many years ago. Dr. Hermione Huntley and Miss Edith Falconer flirt a great deal in an unconventional manner, tempered by the chaperonage of Dr. Jones, with Mr. Thomas Thornton and Major Dundas. First Edith flirts with Thornton, and, in a way, Dr. Hermione with Dundas; then, in scuffling, they change lovers, and Dr. Hermione (we regret to say that Edith calls her "You sneak!" therefor) falls captive to Thornton. And there is running and riding and picnics in the Lakes and visits to London (where they meet a dreadful creature called Vaughan whom the author seems to admire), and war in Egypt, and nursing, and marriage. And it is all very pleasant except that there are slips in taste here and there, and that the subordinate loves of Corporal Seton and Mrs. Price, the housekeeper, are not very amusing. Dr. Jones, a Peacockian character, is perhaps the best of the whole.

Mr. George Manville Fenn is an old hand at a story with an alarming title, and he seldom fails to live up to it. The only thing we can say against his last "dreadful" is that it is a little deficient in "body." Not in one sense, though. For the whole story tells how a private teacher of anatomy sold his business to others and how they wanted bodies and got them (or one) and lost it again. This is enough to say.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

RECENT THEOLOGY.

Geschichte des Neutestamentlichen Kanons. Von Theodor Zahn. Erster Band: Das Neue Testament vor Origines. Erste Hälfte. (Erlangen: Deichert.) This first volume, or first half of a volume, of what promises to be perhaps the most thorough and complete history of the Canon of the New Testament that has yet appeared, has remained too long unnoticed. That such a work, coming from the pen of Prof. Zahn, should be abundantly learned, and furnished with all the apparatus necessary for enabling the student to form his own opinions, will be as readily understood as that it is written with a strong bias in favour of more orthodox or conservative views. On the question of the Canon, indeed, at least as regards the human side of it, there is not much room for difference of opinion, seeing that the facts are indisputable; and whatever disagreement exists will no doubt be found to lie mainly in the way in which the facts are stated. There was certainly a New Testament consisting of the "holy quaternion of the gospels," and of certain apostolic writings, but not yet completed, as early as the last decades of the second century; and when Prof. Zahn states that the Christians of that time had a Bible complete from Genesis to the Pastoral epistles, it is impossible to contradict him. On the other hand, there is no positive proof of the general recognition of an inspired New Testament Canon on a par with the Old Testament Scriptures, earlier than this period; and in any case, not only in regard to the materials of which it was composed, but in regard to the opinion that was entertained of its sanctity, the formation of the Canon must have been a matter of time. Whether, again, that formation was a purely natural process, or divinely ordered, is not a question that can be decided by any appeal to mere external facts. But the spirit and aim of Prof. Zahn's work may perhaps be better indicated by a quotation from Reuss's History of the Canon, to which, indeed, it may almost be taken as a reply, than in any other way:

"In the lack of positive proof," says Prof. Reuss, "that there existed an official collection of apostolic books from the end of the first century, resort has been made in France (for I do not know that in Germany such an argument has been brought forward or held valid) to a process believed to be beyond dispute. There existed, it is said, a Canon of the Old Testament; the books which composed it were held in the deepest respect, because they were unhesitatingly regarded as the result of direct inspiration, as the word of God. A fortiori, all this must have been true of the writings of the apostles, since the revelation of the New Covenant was more excellent than that of the Old."

Now this reasoning, which Prof. Reuss here says had not previously been considered valid in Germany, is precisely that which is adopted and forcibly urged by Prof. Zahn. And surely there is something in it, if only it is not pushed too far. Books which were read every Sunday along with the Old Testament, and which were constantly appealed to as authorities on points of faith and morals, must inevitably have come in time to be looked upon as equally inspired. But to say that this took place at any particular moment would be absurd; while there must in any case have been a period, longer or shorter, during which the books now composing our New Testament existed apart, and were, in all probability, regarded as merely human compositions. In the present volume, besides a general introduction, and an interesting chapter on the relations of the Old and New Testament, Prof. Zahn has special discussions on the several classes of New Testament writings, including those which were ultimately rejected from the Canon. Quite apart from any theory, there is a great deal of interesting matter in the book, which is made doubly valuable by its copious citations from the patristic writings. The work is to be completed in three volumes, of which we have here the first half of the first. Assuming that the other volumes are to be of similar compass to the present, it seems that Prof. Zahn has undertaken to write the history of the New Testament Canon in something less than 3000 closely-printed pages.

"BIBLIOTHÈQUE DE L'ÉCOLE DES HAUTES ÉTUDES."—Sciences Religieuses. Vol. I. (Paris: Leroux.) The present government of France are endeavouring not only to restore their country to its former military position, and to secure it in the enjoyment of free institutions, but also to give it that high place in criticism and erudition which it nearly attained in the seventeenth century, and only lost through the bigotry of Bossuet and Lewis XIV. As one step in this direction a professorship of religious history was founded in the Collège de France in 1880, under the auspices of M. Jules Ferry; and as a further step a special department has recently been added to the École pratique des Hautes Études—an institution founded so long ago as 1868—under the title of Section des Sciences Religieuses. Its object is to train up a school of special enquirers in each of the numerous branches which collectively constitute the science of the religious history of mankind. For this purpose not only is each division of the subject—such as the religions of the Far East, of the Semites, or of ancient Egypt—entrusted to a specialist in the language of its sacred books, but his pupils are expected to bring with them some knowledge of the language concerned, and to serve an apprenticeship in the art of original enquiry by co-operating in the labours of their teacher; while a free interchange of ideas between the different classes obviates that habit of shutting themselves up in their own study and ignoring what is being done in other fields, which is the besetting sin of specialists. The present volume is made up of contributions from several of the new teachers, prefaced by a graceful introduction from the pen of their president, M. Albert Réville, who also fills the chair of religious history in the Collège de France. Most of the papers relate to questions connected with Judaism and Christianity, and are written in a clear and interesting style; but the results are, so far, of a somewhat negative character. M. Massebieau tries to show, at considerable length and with much learning, that Philo's writings have come down to us in a more or less incomplete form. Those who have been obliged to read through the extant treatises of the Alexandrian Jew will not, perhaps, consider the loss a matter for unmixt regret. It may be noticed that this critic, in opposition to most German scholars, upholds the genuineness of the De Vita Contemplativa. Two contributions of more general interest—one from M. Maurice Vernes, and the other from M. Ernest Havet—deal respectively with the ancient inhabitants of Palestine and the conversion of St. Paul. Unfortunately, M. Vernes—by his article on the Bible in the Grande Encyclopédie—and M. Havet—by his recent studies on the Hebrew prophets in the Revue des Deux Mondes—have almost deprived themselves of any claim to rank as serious critics. The Book of Acts—to which M. Havet would deny all historical value—fares much better under the hands of his colleague, M. Sabatier, who argues from the numerous discrepancies between St. Paul's Epistles and Acts that the latter must be based on some independent source of information; while the comparative trustworthiness of this source is guaranteed by its general agreement with the Apostle's own statements. Of course, the alleged authentication applies only to what is known in Germany as the "Wirquelle," not to Acts as a whole. A rather tedious essay on the question of the Investitures, by M. Esmein, incidentally recalls the striking fact that Gregory VII., like some more modern High Churchmen, would willingly have purchased disestablishment at the expense of disendowment; that is to say, he would have surrendered all estates held in feudal tenure by the Church had the State renounced its claim to interfere with ecclesiastical appointments. The remaining papers, including those concerned with the oriental religions, are of too minute or too technical a character to be here described or even enumerated. They can only be studied with profit by experts, for whom it will suffice that we have drawn attention to the volume in which they are contained.

Islam as a Missionary Religion. By C. R. Haines. (S.P.C.K.) This book professes to be a reply to Canon Taylor's address on Islam at the Church Congress at Wolverhampton—the fons et origo mali, as Mr. Haines calls it. But Mr. Haines is insufficiently equipped for his task. The formidable list of "authorities consulted," which fills no less than four pages, contains the title of no German or Arabic work, except those which happen to have been translated. Weil, Sprenger, Nöldeke, Krehl, Oelsner, and even Barthelemy St. Hilaire, as well as Ibn-Hishām, Ibn-al-Athir, and Syed Amir Ali, are conspicuous by their absence. Hence he has not read any of those writers who have best comprehended the inner genius of Islam, and who have, therefore, best understood the real causes of its marvellous success. Mr. Haines's solution of the problem is, of course, the usual one, which we have so often heard before. The spread of Islam is due to its having "forced itself at the point of the sword upon half the nations of the old world" (p. 15). This solution is charmingly simple, but Carlyle's objection has to be met:

"The sword indeed; but where will you get your sword! Every new opinion, at its starting, is precisely in a minority of one. One man alone, of the whole world believes it, there is one man against all men. That he take a sword, and try to propagate with that, will do little for him. You must first get your sword!"

Mr. Haines gives the usual shallow answer to Carlyle's question. Islam got the sword owing chiefly to its own demerits. He thinks it is fundamentally an immoral religion. It connives at slavery, it legitimatises sensuality, it requires no great sacrifices of a man's inclinations or even of his vices, and it promises a paradise with black-eyed houris. He thinks that millions of Christians in northern Africa and Syria become Moslems because their "material interests overpowered their religious convictions." He allows that some Pagan tribes might have been converted because monotheism is superior to polytheism; but the Christian nations became converts because Islam is in every respect so greatly inferior to Christianity. It is true, he admits, that the jealousies of the Christian sects may have had something to do with it; but the depravity of human nature, material interests, and the advantages of admission into a great social caste had more, and explain satisfactorily why Islam was able in a few years to subdue half the civilised world. Mr. Haines apparently has never read any of the Mohammedan apologists, or even conversed with a Mohammedan. If he had done so, he would have discovered a simpler solution of the problem he vainly tries to solve. He would have found that the Moslems are so passionately attached to their religion because they believe it to be not only the best religion, but the only true religion. They appeal to the lofty morality which the Koran inculcates as the chief evidence of the divine mission of its founder. They attribute the marvellous spread of Islam, and the hold it has on its disciples, to its own intrinsic excellence; and they are unable to understand how any heathen tribe, if offered the choice between Islam and Christianity, could possibly fail to choose the former. If Islam presents itself in this light to the Oriental mind—and that it does so there can be no doubt in the minds of those who have mixed on terms of intimacy with Orientals, or have even read the Mahdi's letter to Emin Pasha recently published—the success of Islam as a missionary religion is explained without any necessity of resorting to the explanation of Mr. Haines that it succeeds because it appeals to the worst passions of mankind.

Christianity and Islam in Spain, A.D. 756-1031. By C. R. Haines. (Kegan Paul, Trench, & Co.) It is difficult fairly to appraise such a work as this, the Kaye Prize at Cambridge for 1888. Considered as an academical essay, it is quite equal to what may be expected under the conditions. If the authorities will demand essays on subjects which absolutely require a knowledge of two foreign languages, neither of which is possessed by the ordinary undergraduate or graduate, this work is as good a result as is likely to be obtained. It is written by one who does not appear for the first time in print—three previous works are named on the title-page—who has, therefore, some experience in the art of composition, and knows how to manage and arrange his materials. These are the original works of the Spanish Fathers of the period in Latin, and generally much that has been written on it in the same language. Such of the works of Arabic and Spanish historians as have been translated into English or French have also been consulted. Many works of English and French writers are also made use of; but of these last Prof. Dozy is the only one who is at all entitled to rank as an authority. Not a single Spanish, Arabic, or German author is cited, except from translations. The inevitable consequence is that, with all the writer's care, the book is valueless as a contribution to history. It is useless to point out particular errors. Perhaps the finest historical work that has appeared in Spain in the present decade is the Historia de los Heterodoxos Españoles of Menéndez y Pelayo, the first volume of which treats almost wholly of this theme and of this period. Another side of the question is touched upon in tomo i. of the same author's Historia de las Ideas Estéticas en España. Mr. Haines has apparently never heard of these works. Masdeu's notable essay, Religion Española, and Gamm's work in German are equally unnoticed. Even in English the latest publications are not made use of: Lockhart and Southey are quoted instead of Gibson. The excellent articles by Mrs. Humphry Ward and others on the Gothic kings and Spanish fathers in Smith's Dictionary of Christian Biography have not been consulted. On the Koran, Sale's work alone is used. Imagine a foreigner writing a work on the English constitution to whom Bishop Stubbs's works are utterly unknown—or on the period of Charles I. with no reference to Mr. Gardiner—but with implicit reliance on earlier foreign works, and on translations of Hume and De Lolme; and the result might be some such work as the one before us.

The Life and Work of Charles Henry von Bogatzky. By the Rev. John Kelly. (Religious Tract Society.) Von Bogatzky, by far the most popular in England of all the German pietists of the last century, has been peculiarly unfortunate in his English editors. Mr. Kelly freely exposes the shortcomings of his predecessors. He shows how the English versions of the Goldenes Schüzkaestlein der Kinder Gottes were almost travesties of the original; yet he is himself as careless and negligent as any of those with whom he finds fault. Not only is the Life utterly without chronological order; but the two appendices giving the list of Bogatzky's works, and of the English editions of the Golden Treasury, are in still greater confusion. It will hardly be believed that, while on p. 53 stands an extract from the preface of the first English edition of this work in 1754 stating that the translator had "recourse to the excellent hymns and psalms of the late reverend and worthy Dr. Watts," in the Appendix (p. 269) we read of this same edition of 1754: "Portions of Cowper's hymns are substituted for Bogatzky's verses." Cowper did not begin to write hymns until about 1765, and the first edition of the Olney Hymns was published in 1779. One of Bogatzky's most extensive works was The Daily House Companion for the Children of God, in two vols. quarto, of over 1000 pages each—a description of which, and extracts from it, fill pp. 165-209 of the present volume; yet neither is the German title given in the German catalogue of the works in the Appendix, nor is the English one inserted in the list of the works in English. So with the rest. There is not the slightest attempt at an intelligent appreciation of Bogatzky's life and work. Printers and publishers have done their part well, but a worse specimen of slovenly and careless editing we have seldom met with.

Current Discussions in Theology. By the Professors of Chicago Theological Seminary. Vol. vi. (Boston and Chicago.) This useful survey of theological literature shows what a vigorous theological movement exists in the United States. There is a "pluck" even in American conservatism which is hardly perhaps equalled as yet in England. The interest of this volume may be temporary: the German Jahresbericht is of altogether another calibre. But as a record, however imperfect, of work done during about the last three years in Great Britain, France, Germany, and America, the work has its value for English-reading students.

NOTES AND NEWS.

GENERAL GORDON'S Journals in China are to see the light at last. Mr. Egmont Hake, his biographer, has been preparing them for the press for some time past. They will contain a great deal of new matter, and will be accompanied by notes based on letters hitherto unpublished. The volumes will be illustrated with a reproduction of Mr. Val Prinsep's portrait of "Chinese Gordon" in his mandarin dress, which was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1865.

THE following are some of the principal articles that will appear in the forthcoming fifth volume of Chambers's Encyclopædia: "Homer," by Mr. Gladstone; "The Highlands," by the Duke of Argyll; "Hydrophobia," by M. Pasteur; "Goethe," by Prof. E. Dowden; "Grammar," by Dr. John Peile; "Hebrew," by Prof. A. B. Davidson; "Greece," by Mr. F. B. Jevons; "Hieroglyphics," by Mr. E. A. Wallis Budge; "Geology," by Prof. James Geikie; "Geography," by Mr. J. S. Keltie; "Heat," by Prof. Tait; "Government," by Mr. Charles Elton; "Glass-Staining," by Mr. William Morris; "Gypsies," by Mr. F. Hindes Groome; "Gunpowder Plot," by Mr. T. Graves Law; "Gay," "Goldsmith," and "Hogarth," by Mr. Austin Dobson; "Hegel," by Prof. Edward Caird; "Victor Hugo," by Mr. W. E. Henley; "Horace," by Mr. J. W. Mackail; "Hawthorne," by Mr. G. P. Lathrop; "Gladstone," by Mr. Justin McCarthy; "Gardening," by Mr. R. D. Blackmore; "Hospitals," by Miss Florence Nightingale; "Goths," by Mr. Henry Bradley.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN will begin next month the publication of a new edition of the novels of Mrs. Craik, author of John Halifax, Gentleman, to be issued in monthly volumes uniform with their edition of Charles Kingsley's works. The first to appear will be Olive, with illustrations by G. Bowers.

THE next volume in the series of "Great Writers will be Jane Austen, written by Mr. Goldwin Smith.

MR. JOHN S. FARMER, the author of Americanisms, has now ready for issue to subscribers (through Mr. A. P. Watt) the first volume of his new work—Slang and its Analogues. In form it follows the lines of Dr. Murray's New English Dictionary; and it comprises the heterodox speech of all classes of society for more than three centuries, with synonyms in French, German, Italian, &c. The remaining two volumes of the work will follow at short intervals.

MR. HARLAND's story, Two Women or One? will be published on February 6 by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

Atalanta for February will contain the opening chapters of a new serial by Mrs. Parr; also an article on "Famous Pictures of the Paris Exhibition," illustrated with reproductions from the works of Millet, Jules Breton, Duprô, Meissonier, and other French artists.

A BOOK, entitled The Apocalypse looked at as the final Crisis of the Age, by "a Teacher," is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for immediate publication.

THE Church of England Temperance Society is about to issue a novel series of picture books, consisting of nursery rhymes and tales adapted to temperance requirements, and illustrated in an artistic style. No. 1, "The Land where Jack dwelt," with ten full-page cartoons and other illustrations—many of them from sketches taken in the East End of London—will be published early in February in coloured picture wrapper.

MRS. ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING lived during the years of her girlhood near Ledbury.

in Herefordshire; and many of her early poems describe the neighbouring scenery. The inhabitants of the town met together last Monday, and resolved to erect a memorial to her in the form of a clock-tower.

MR EDMUND GOSSE will read a paper on the "Masques of Ben Jonson" before the Elizabethan Society at Toynbee Hall on Wednesday next, February 5, at 8 p.m., when Mr. A. H. Bullen will take the chair.

THE Friday evening discourse at the Royal Institution next week will be delivered by Mr. H. B. Wheatley, upon "The London Stage in Elizabeth's Reign."

PROF. HENRY JONES, of Bangor, will lecture on "The Ethical Teaching of Robert Browning," at Essex Hall, Essex Street, Strand, for the Ethical Society, on Sunday, February 2, at 7.30 p.m.

The third series of lectures given by the Sunday Lecture Society begins on Sunday next, February 2, in St. George's Hall, Langham Place, at 4 p.m., when Dr. B. W. Richardson will lecture on "The Health of the Mind, and Mental Contagions." Lectures will subsequently be given by Sir Henry E. Roscoe, Mr. Justin H. McCarthy, Mr. G. Wotherspoon, Mr. H. L. Brackstad, Mr. Louis Fagan, and Dr. James Edmunds.

THE report of the Public Library Committee of the Burgh of Aberdeen for 1888-89 contains a table, which we do not recollect to have seen in other similar reports, of the number of issues of periodicals in the reading room. As very little evidence exists as to the relative popularity of magazines, we print (without comment) the names of all those that were asked for more than one thousand times during the year:—Boy's Own Paper (7460), Cassell's Saturday Journal (7375), Chambers's Journal (4086), People's Friend (3900), A.I. (2146), Cassell's Family Magazine (2020), St. Nicholas (1587), Harper's (1551), Leisure Hour (1303), Century (1291), Outing (1202), Art Journal (1194), Scribner's (1098).

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have published a new edition, revised and enlarged, of Mr. H. C. Maxwell Lyte's History of Eton College, which originally appeared in 1876. The chapter relating to the buildings has been re-written, so as to embody the result of Mr. J. W. Clark's researches into the architectural history of Cambridge; and the author has incorporated throughout subsequent information derived not only from printed books, but from MS. records and private correspondence. It is also not unworthy of notice that the lithographed plates have been re-drawn for the new edition, and that the index has been almost trebled in size. A book that was originally so thorough in workmanship and so handsome in form deserved the additional pains which have been expended upon it to keep it up to date. We may add that Mr. Gladstone repudiates any remembrance of the story told of himself in the first edition, according to which he once saved himself from the birch of Keate by his capacity distinguendi.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

AT a meeting at Cambridge held on Wednesday, it was resolved that a portrait of the late Bishop Lightfoot, to be painted by Mr. W. B. Richmond, should be placed in the hall of Trinity College, as a personal memorial "to commemorate his noble character and his signal services to the Church and to learning." Any surplus of subscriptions will be added to the endowment of the university scholarships founded by Dr. Lightfoot himself for the encouragement of the study of ecclesiastical history.

THE Chichele professor of modern history at Oxford, Mr. Montagu Burrows, will deliver a public lecture on Thursday next, February 6, upon "The Life of William Grocyon."

MR. A. A. BEVAN, of Trinity College, has been nominated by the general board of studies as deputy-professor of Arabic at Cambridge, during the necessary absence of Dr. W. Robertson Smith—which is caused, we regret to learn, by illness.

PROF. MARGOLIOUTH, the newly appointed Laudian professor of Arabic at Oxford, is lecturing this term upon "The Peshitto Version of the Psalms."

THE committee formed at Cambridge to procure a bust of the late Prof. W. Wright, to be placed in the University Library, invite subscriptions (limited to half a guinea) from other seats of learning throughout the world. Dr. Rödiger, of Marburg, will receive German subscriptions; and Prof. Gottheil, of Columbia College, American subscriptions. Among the names already on the list are those of Th. Aufrecht, Barbier de Meynard, G. Bühler, M. J. de Goeje, Paul de Lagarde, T. H. Nöldeke, Ernest Renan, Sachau, Socin, and H. Zotenberg.

AT the annual meeting of the Cambridge Philological Society, held on Thursday in this week, the retiring president, Dr. John Peile, was to read a paper on "The Nature of Phonetic Change, (1) with special reference to the Views of Paul and Brugmann, and (2) regarded from a different standpoint." The new president-elect is Dr. J. E. Sandys, of St. John's, the public orator.

IN connexion with the Oxford Association for the Higher Education of Women, Prof. Henry Sidgwick, of Cambridge, will deliver a lecture, on March 1, upon "The Shaksperian Drama."

THE trustees of Manchester New College have adopted plans prepared by Mr. Worthington for their buildings at Oxford. The total estimated cost is $49,000, towards which £32,694 has already been subscribed. Some scholarships of £75 a year, tenable by "Oxford collegiate students," have also been instituted.

THE Oxford Magazine for January 29 records the death of James Purves, one of the senior fellows of Balliol, who had been in infirm health for many years past. He was a very accurate and painstaking classical scholar, and is understood to have given great assistance to Prof. Jowett in his works upon Plato and Thucydides. The only book published under his own name is Selections from the Dialogues of Plato, in the Clarendon Press Series; but he is stated to have left in MS. a prose translation of the Odyssæy.

GURU DAS BANERJI, one of the judges of the High Court, has been nominated vice-chancellor of the University of Calcutta. We believe that this is the first time a native has held the office.

THE classical teachers of Harvard University have started a publication of their own, entitled Harvard Studies in Classical Philology, which it is proposed to continue in yearly volumes. The first volume—which is issued in this country by Mr. Edward Arnold, as agent for Messrs. Ginn & Co., of Boston—includes two papers by Prof. W. W. Goodwin on debated points of Greek construction; an article on the faucæ, or front entrance to the atrium, of a Roman house, and also some Latin etymologies, by Prof. J. B. Greenough; a dissertation in Latin upon the methods of obtaining fire among the ancients, by Mr. Morris H. Morgan; and a long article on the social and domestic position of women in Aristophanes, by Mr. Herman W. Haley.

TRANSLATION.

PLATO TO ASTER.

'Αστέρης εἰσαθρεῖς, ἀστέρα ἔμεις. Εἶθε γενόμεν
Οὐρανός, ὥς πολλοῖς ὅμμασιν εἰς σέ βλέπω.

THY gaze is on the starry skies,
Thou star to me.

Would I were they, to bend unnumber'd eyes
In gaze on thee.

S. H. H.

OBITUARY.

EMILY PFEIFFER.

NOT only a wide circle of friends, but all careful readers of contemporary literature, will have felt a pang of sorrow at hearing of the death of Mrs. Pfeiffer. She and her husband were bound together by no common tie. He died in January of last year; and now she has followed him to the grave within a twelve-month, and the once cheerful house on the slopes of Putney Hill is left desolate.

Prominent attention has recently been drawn to the fact that, among the poets of the Victorian era, women hold a conspicuous place. Foremost of all, of course, stands Mrs. Barrett Browning; and the popular suffrage, in America as well as in England, has put Miss Christina Rossetti and Miss Jean Ingelow in a second class by themselves. All three of these are emphatically feminine poets, who attained their highest inspiration when writing as women and about women. To compare their work with that of men otherwise their equals would be absurd. But when we pass to the next class of those who are ungraciously styled "minor poets," it is impossible not to be struck by the reflexion that the women hold their own—and more than their own—against the men. This is not the place to mention other names, which will readily occur to the mind. Suffice it to say that Mrs. Pfeiffer's poetry, whether we consider its quantity or its quality, will contrast favourably with the poetry of any living men, except the first half-dozen. As with the poetesses already mentioned, her Muse was frequently inspired by sympathy for the sufferings of her sisters. But she is probably best known as a sonneteer. For this artificial form of verse—of which the present generation has had a surfeit—she possessed the qualifications of a refined imagination and considerable metrical faculty. Her sensitive and cultured mind was also open to receive the impulses of thought and feeling which are most characteristic of our self-conscious age. Above all, the modern conception of Nature, not as a kind nurse but as a relentless task-master, influenced her somewhat in the same manner that it influenced George Eliot. It was this aspect of her poetry that specially attracted the admiration of such a keen critic as the late Rector of Lincoln.

Considering that Mrs. Pfeiffer never enjoyed good health, and also that she took an active part in all movements for the social and economical regeneration of her sex, the total amount of her published work is remarkable. Her earliest book, we believe, was Katmera: a Midsummer Night's Dream, published nearly thirty years ago; but this we have not seen. Her first volume of poems took its name from Gerard's Monument (1873). This was followed by another, called simply Poems (1876), which included several sonnets. Then came Glan-Alarch (1877); Quarterman's Grave (1879); Under the Aspens (1882); and The Rhyme of the Lady of the Rock (1884). Most of these passed through more than one edition, though they were never issued in a uniform series, such as she and her husband had contemplated. The sonnets alone were collected into a pretty volume bearing that title (1887), which comprises most of her work that will live. Only last year, after her husband's death, she published another volume of verse, Flowers of the Night, which hardly maintained her reputation; and at the very last she was actively engaged in preparing a drama for stage representation. To complete this record of her books, it should be mentioned that she wrote a pleasant account of her journeys in Greece and North America, under the title of Flying Leaves from East and West (1886); and also an essay on a subject that was very dear to her—Woman and Work (1888).

THE REV. H. S. FAGAN.

THE regret with which we record the death of the Rev. H. S. Fagan will be shared even by those readers of the ACADEMY who were sometimes irritated by his political opinions on Ireland. The truth is that he had no bitterness about him, being one of the kindest and most liberal of men. But, like others of his warm-hearted countrymen, he failed to estimate rightly the value of words, using them as weapons in controversy without due regard to the feelings of others. He had an independent mind and wrote with great readiness, so that the views he expressed were always stamped with his own individuality. It would likewise be a mistake to suppose that his interest in Ireland was primarily political. He knew its history well, and he had travelled in all parts of the country. Like another deceased writer on Ireland, the Rev. W. A. O'Connor, of Manchester, he was a patriot first, and a partisan only in the second place. His ideal was that of an island where Catholic and Protestant should dwell side by side, rivals only in developing the material resources of their country, and especially in turning to good use their innate artistic faculties. The cottage industries of Donegal, the pottery of Bleek, and the frieze of many a little market town stirred his enthusiasm far more than any political association. He never wearied of imploring his friends to use Irish manufactures, and he took as much pride in the prosperity of Belfast as in that of Michael Davitt's Woollen Company. It should be added that his sympathies extended to the mining and fisher folk of Cornwall, and to the peasantry of East Anglia, with both of which classes he had a far more intimate acquaintance than most country clergymen.

Henry Stuart Fagan was born at Stroud, in Gloucestershire, in 1827, being the only son of Mitchel Henry Fagan. His name, of course, is a good old Irish one; and he used to complain that Dickens had no justification for the form of it which he gave to his Jew in Oliver Twist. He matriculated as a commoner at Pembroke College, Oxford, in 1845, and took his degree in 1850, being placed in the first class in mathematics, along with Dean Kitchin and Sir William Markby, and in the second class in classics with Canon Liddon. He was immediately elected to a fellowship at his own college; but this he held for only two years, being succeeded by the late Prof. Chandler. On leaving Oxford, he adopted the profession of teaching, first as assistant-master at King Edward's School, Birmingham, and afterwards as headmaster successively of the grammar schools at Burton-on-Trent and at Bath. From 1859 to 1870, he was rector of Charlcombe, near Bath; from 1870 to 1882, vicar of St. Just-in-Penwith, within the district of the Land's End; and from 1882 till his death rector of Great Cressingham—a small living in south-west Norfolk, about eight miles from Thetford, in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor. He leaves a widow to lament his loss, and several sons and daughters. Many who were at Oxford ten years ago will remember a brilliant scholar of Queen's, named Charles Gregory Fagan, whose "Chaucer in Oxenforde" has just been reprinted in Echoes from the Oxford Magazine. His early death in India was a heavy blow to his father, who never cared to visit Oxford again.

Mr. Fagan seemed active and hearty for a man of his age when in London last autumn. But in December he was attacked with bronchitis and disease of the lungs, from which he was unable to rally. His death, which took place in the evening of Friday, January 24, was sudden at the last. He was buried on Wednesday, in the churchyard of Bodney, the joint-parish with Great Cressingham.

CAROLUS AUGUSTUS HASE.

THE historic University of Jena, the first founded by Protestants in Germany, has sustained a severe loss, not easily to be repaired, by the death of Karl August Hase.

Privy Councillor von Hase was a Doctor of Philosophy and Theology. He taught ecclesiastical history, &c., for more than half a century; and a splendid teacher he was. Taking one of the paragraphs of his printed books (each of which went through several editions), he would expound it till his hearers, receiving a large amount of information of every sort, could conveniently connect all that they had heard with the few words that lay before them in print. And so powerful was his method and the charm of his delivery that a lapse of fifty years has not been able to obliterate the living information his hearers then received. A sincere and earnest Christian, he taught in a spirit of great tolerance. A truth, whether propounded by a Calvinist, or by a Roman Catholic, or by a Jew, was as eagerly welcomed and inculcated by him as if it had come from a Lutheran. Moreover, like his colleagues, who voluntarily followed the lead of the Superintendent and Court Preacher, Dr. von Röhr, he was an enlightened and true Liberal. It is well known that the theology of the clergy in the Grand Duchy of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, as also in the other Saxon Duchies, is the most rational and the most liberal, and at the same time the most solid, in all Germany. Von Hase in his younger years (it is almost forty-five years since I saw him last) looked like an Englishman; and I may add that, although he was distinguished for his French politesse, his character exhibited the solidity and honesty of an Englishman. He had a very engaging exterior, and in his lectures a most impressive delivery.

Dr. K. von Hase died on January 3, and was buried on January 6. His obsequies were performed in the Town Church of Jena. For him mourn not merely his children, but also a vast company of much-attached pupils. Peace be upon him!

S. M. SCHILLER-SZINESSY.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE most noteworthy article in the current number of Mind is one on "The Genesis of the Cognition of Physical Reality," by Mr. G. F. Stout. The essayist, after criticising the associational theory of our perception of the external world, proceeds to show that our representation of it involves a somewhat complicated process of "constructive interpretation." He is particularly successful in showing (in disagreement with Dr. Bain) the precise part played by muscular activity in the development of this cognition. He seems in this connexion to render more prominent than has been done before the experience of touching or exploring one part of the body with another, e.g., one hand with the other. The formation of the belief in external objects is moulded on the pattern of the intuitions of our own body thus gained. Another important point here emphasised is the relation of the perception of persistence to that of resistance and of the co-existence of parts in space. Altogether this paper is intelligent and well-reasoned, and forms a valuable addition to the current psychological doctrine of external perception. A second paper, by M. A. Binet, on "Double Consciousness in Health," is a very readable account of some experimental inquiries into the range of automatic action (similar to that known to be provokable in hysterical subjects) in the case of healthy persons. The article hardly, however, justifies its title, for it makes no attempt to show that this automatic action involves a second "consciousness." The remaining articles are two rather heavy philosophical papers, and an ingenious attempt, by Miss (?) O. L. Franklin, to at once extend and simplify the processes of common logic in the light of modern symbolic logic.

In the American Journal of Psychology, Dr. W. H. Burnham brings to a close his series of papers on "Memory historically and experimentally considered." They contain an excellent résumé of the several theories of memory, ancient and modern, and also a fairly complete account of recent experimental inquiries into the subject. Among other points dealt with in this last paper are the rival physiological hypotheses put forward in explanation of the processes of memory. These are grouped under three heads: (1) that memory depends on a movement persisting in the brain; (2) that it depends upon a persisting trace or residuum in the brain; and (3) that it depends on a disposition persisting in the brain. It is not easy to see how these can be kept distinct one from another, and indeed the writer almost confesses that they are not radically different. The other articles in the number are an account of the "Folklore of the Bahama Negroes," by Mr. O. L. Edwards; and an essay on "Some Characteristics of Symbolic Logic," by Miss (?) O. L. Franklin. The first is very entertaining, reminding us of our favourite Uncle Remus; and, being placed at the beginning of the journal, it may possibly leave the less serious reader indisposed to go on to the second. So it may be as well to say that this (to us) new writer shows in the Transatlantic, no less clearly than in the British journal, that she (?) is quite abreast of the modern complexities of logic, and knows how to make shrewd and serviceable suggestions in the way of amending the current modes of presenting the subject. The chief point made in this paper is that more systems of symbolic logic are possible than seem to have been dreamt of by some Cambridge logicians. The American journal is still distinguished by the fulness and excellence of its account of contemporary research. It were to be wished that the Cis-Atlantic journal, too, which gives us such able critical no ices of important books, could find space also for a précis of the articles (in German and other serials) which embody the greater part of that psycho-physical research which is now being carried out so persistently and so systematically.

THE FOLKLORE SOCIETY.

THE works issued by the Folklore Society will in future be published by Mr. David Nutt, instead of, as heretofore, by Mr. Elliot Stock. This change of publisher is consequent upon the re-organisation of the society's journal, which will appear henceforth under the title Folklore; a Quarterly Review of Myth, Tradition, Institutions, and Customs, and will continue and incorporate the Archaeological Review. It will be directed by an editorial committee of the council of the society, consisting of the Hon. John Abercromby, Mr. G. L. Gomme, Mr. Joseph Jacobs, and Mr. Alfred Nutt—Mr. Jacobs acting as general editor.

The first number, to be issued early in March, will comprise the following articles: Mr. Lang's Presidential Address for 1889; "The Mythic Charms of the Finns," translated and edited by the Hon. John Abercromby; "Native Tales and Legends collected from the Torres Straits Islanders," by Prof. Haddon, of Durham; "Early Trade Routes to Ireland," by Prof. Ridgway, of Cork; Review of the Recent Literature concerning Scandinavian Mythology, by Mr. F. York Powell; Review of Recent Literature concerning Celtic Myth and Saga, by Mr. Alfred Nutt; Notes and Queries on Superstition; full Bibliography of English and Foreign Books during the past six months; Summaries of Periodicals, &c.

The society will issue immediately to its members for 1889 the Rev. D. MacInnes's Gaelic Folk- and Hero-Tales from Argyllshire, with Notes by Mr. Alfred Nutt; and to its members for 1890 Prof. Crane's annotated translation of The Example of Jacques de Villy. The society hopes to bring out in 1891 Mr. Oliver Elton's translation of the mythical portions of Saxo Grammaticus, with Notes and Introduction by Mr. York Powell.

STATISTICS OF CHRISTIAN NAMES IN EARLY TIMES.

THE elaborate indexes to the Register of the University of Oxford, 1571 to 1622, compiled by Mr. Andrew Clark (Oxford Historical Society, 1889), include a table of Christian names, in which is set out the number of times that each occurs. The total of names given in this portion of the Register amounts to about 30,000, and must undoubtedly be—as Mr. Clark calls it—"more representative of English names, for the years over which it extends, than any list yet published."

In consideration of the historical importance attaching to the subject, Mr. Clark will pardon us for transferring to the pages of the ACADEMY the chief results of his table, arranged in a somewhat different form.

The following are the twelve most common Christian names, each occurring (approximately) more than once in every hundred out of the total of 30,000:

John,	3826	times, or about	12·8	per cent.
Thomas,	2777	"	"	9·3
William,	2546	"	"	8·5
Richard,	1691	"	"	5·6
Robert,	1222	"	"	4·1
Edward,	957	"	"	3·2
Henry,	908	"	"	3·0
George,	647	"	"	2·2
Francis,	447	"	"	1·5
James,	424	"	"	1·4
Nicholas,	326	"	"	1·1
Edmund,	298	"	"	1·0

The following thirty-one Christian names each occur more than fifty times: Anthony (262), Hugh (257), Christopher (243), Samuel (227), Walter (207), Roger (195), Ralph (182), Peter (175), Humphrey (168), Charles (139), Philip (137), David (129), Matthew (116), Michael (103), Alexander (98), Arthur (98), Laurence (90), Giles (88), Stephen (86), Simon (83), Daniel (79), Lewis (78), Joseph (78), Andrew (69), Roland (65), Evan (55), Abraham (54), Leonard (54), Owen (53), Gilbert (52), Morris (51).

In comparison with this list, the following passage from the Preface to Mr. T. F. Kirby's Winchester Scholars (Henry Frowde, 1888) seems worthy of quotation, premising that the Winchester list not only comprises a much earlier period, but is also drawn almost exclusively from the South of England. For the two centuries referred to the total number of entries would be about 3700.

"Of the Christian names occurring in the first two hundred years (1393-1592) John is by far the most common. It occurs more than 1060 times, and was borne by nearly one out of every three boys admitted during that period. William, the next in point of frequency, occurs more than 560 times, Thomas more than 500 times, Richard about 390 times, Robert about 250 times, and then the following names arranged in order of frequency: Henry, Edward, Nicholas, George (chiefly in the latter part of the period), Edmund, Walter, Roger, Christopher, Antony, Simon, James, Francis, Peter, Philip, Matthew, Michael, Alexander, Geoffrey, Giles, Arthur, Humphrey, Charles (chiefly in the latter part of the period)."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BOHM, P. Die musikalischen Handschriften d. XVI. u. XVII. Jahrh. in der Stadtbibliothek zu Breslau. Breslau: Hainauer. 15 M.
 DUBOIS, F. Essai bibliographique sur la destruction volontaire des livres ou bibliolyse. Paris: Quantin. 18 fr.
 DUTREUIL DE RHINS, J. L. L'Asie centrale (Tibet et régions limitrophes). Paris: Leroux. 60 fr.
 FISCHER, C. W. Mnemones u. Oaisa. Die Kunst, das Merken im Schauspiel zu erleichtern. Leipzig: Grackauer. 5 M.
 GLÜCKMANN, O. Das Heerwesen der österreichisch-ungarischen Monarchie. Wien: Seidel. 5 M.
 GUÉZENNE, Wladimir. Souvenirs d'un prêtre romain devenu prêtre orthodoxe. Paris: Fischbacher. 10 fr.
 JUNDT, A. Rudman Merwin, et l'ami de Dieu de l'Oberland. Paris: Fischbacher. 7 fr. 50 c.
 PARIS, C. Voyage d'exploration de Hué en Cochinchine par la route mandarine. Paris: Leroux. 7 fr. 50 c.
 PIRAN, G. Carosità popolari tradizionali. Vol. VII. Credenze, usi e costumi abruzzesi, raccolti da Gennaro Piranese. Torino: Loescher. 5 fr.
 REICH, E. Grillparzers Kunstphilosophie. Wien: Manz. 2 M. 40 Pf.
 SHAKESPEARE, W. I Sonetti di tradotti per la prima volta in italiano da Angelo Olivieri. Torino: Olcese. 4 fr.
 VILLIERS DE L'ISLE-ADAM, Le Comte de. Azél. Paris: Quantin. 7 fr. 50 c.
 YACOBUS ABIN PACHA. L'instruction publique en Egypte. Paris: Leroux. 5 fr.

HISTORY, ETC.

- AUBRIOL, Ch. Documents militaires du Lieutenant-général de Compedon: La défense du Var et le passage des Alpes. Paris: Plon. 4 fr.
 CHOTARD, L. Louis XIV. Louvois, Vauban, et les fortifications du nord de la France, d'après des lettres inédites de Louvois. Paris: Plon. 3 fr.
 DE MORGAN, J. Mission scientifique au Caucase: études archéologiques et historiques. Paris: Leroux. 35 fr.
 DIENCKMAYER, A. Die Stadt Cambray. Verfassungsgeschichtliche Untersuchn. aus dem 10. bis gegen Ende d. 11. Jahrh. Jena: Dabls. 80 Pf.
 FONTES rerum bernensium. 5. Bd. 1833-1837. 3. Lfg. Bern: Schmid. 8 M.
 HAGEMEYER, H. Anonymi Gesta Francorum et aliorum Hierosolymitanorum. Mit Erläuterungen. hrsg. v. H. H. Heideberg. Winter. 7 M.
 HOCHART, P. De l'authenticité des annales et des histoires de Tacite. Paris: Thorin. 8 fr.
 JIRASEK, H. Codex juris bohemici. Tomi II. pars 2, continens scripta ad rempublicam administrandam spectantia saec. XIV. Leipzig: Freytag. 5 M. 60 Pf.
 JURIEN DE LA GRAVIERE, L'Amiral. Les ouvriers de la onzième heure: histoire des premières navigations des Anglais et des Hollandais dans les mers polaires et dans la mer des Indes. Paris: Plon. 7 fr.
 KORZENIOWSKI, J. Catalogus actorum et documentorum res gestas Poloniae illustrantium. Krakau: Friedlein. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 KREBS, F. H. v. Gründlich u. seine Besitzer. Nach archival. Quellen bearb. Nürnberg: Schrag. 4 M.
 MAULDE-LA-CLAYE, M. de. Histoire de Louis XII. 1^{re} Partie. Louis d'Orléans. Paris: Leroux. 8 fr.
 ROBERT, Bertrand. Histoire du clergé pendant la révolution française. T. II. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
 SCHERER, Ch. Le Voyage de la Terre Sainte, composé par Maître Denis Possot et achevé par Messire Charles Philippe. Paris: Leroux. 30 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- FRANK, A. B. Lehrbuch der Pflanzenphysiologie m. besond. Berücksicht. der Kulturpflanzen. Berlin: Parey. 6 M.

- LASSWITZ, K. Geschichte der Atomistik vom Mittelalter bis Newton. 1. Bd. Die Erneuerung der Korpuskulartheorie. Hamburg: Voss. 30 M.
 ORDER, M. Die erste Landesvermessung d. Kurstaates Sachsen, auf Befehl d. Kurfürsten Christian I. ausgeführt. Bearb. v. S. Ruge. Dresden: Stengel. 60 M.
 REULHAUX, O. Katalog f. die Felicesen-Genera Euperypha Hartm. u. Xerophila Held, aufgestellt nach C. A. Westerlund. München: Kellner. 1 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- CORPUS Inscriptionum Semiticarum. Pars II. Inscriptiones Aramaicae (ed. M. de Vogüé). Tom. I. Fasc. I. Paris: Klincksieck. 50 fr.
 LANGLOIS, E. Notices des manuscrits français et provençaux de Rome antérieurs au XVI^e siècle. Paris: Klincksieck. 15 fr.
 LEJAY, P. Inscriptions antiques de la Côte-d'Or. Paris: Bouillon. 9 fr.
 NIX, L. M. L. Das 5. Buch der Comica d. Apollonius v. Perga in der arabischen Uebersetzung d. Thabit ibn Corrah, hrsg. ins Deutsche übertr. u. m. e. Einl. v. versch. Leipzig: Neumann. 3 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A LOST MS. OF CHAUCER'S "TROILUS."

Cambridge: Jan. 26, 1890.

We are indebted to Prof. George Stephens, of Copenhagen, for an interesting Chaucer discovery. In the binding of an old book he found, some years ago, two strips of vellum, evidently forming part of a leaf of an English MS. of the early part of the fifteenth century, which he kindly transmitted to me, to afford me the opportunity of reading a short paper on it before the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, who have printed it in a volume of Transactions now in the press.

As I believe the general public will be interested in it, I send a transcript of the few words that are contained on the strips, one of which is almost blank on the first page. There is a gap between the strips, so that we have merely the beginnings and the ends of lines. No letters are visible except those printed below free from square brackets. The letters within brackets are supplied by guess by way of help. My own share in the discovery is that the strips contain portions of eight stanzas of Chaucer's Troilus, bk. v., st. 207-214 (Chaucer Society). The MS. has the thorn-letter for th in the words "this," "thought," "that," "the," "thou," "hath," "brother," "throwe," "with," "ther"; and the Middle-English g for gh in "thought," "slough" (slew), and for y in "yif." I print th, gh, y (in italics) where these symbols occur.

"TROILUS," v. 1143, st. 207.

This dreme . . . h]us eke byforn
 May neuer ou[t . . . remembra]nce
 He thought ay . . . l]ady lorne
 And that that . . . purp]e]yance
 Hym schew[ed . . . signifi]caunce
 Of hyr vn[t]routh . . . au]enture
 And that this . . . hym in figure.

For whyche . . . suster sent (1450)
 That Called . . . aboute
 And al hy[s . . . b]yr er he stente
 And hyr by[soughte . . . the doute
 Of the stro[n]ge . . . stoute
 And fynaly . . . sto]unde
 Cassandre . . . hys dreme expound[ed].

Sohe gan fy[rat . . . o brother dere
 Yif thou a s]othe . . . knowe
 Thou most a . . . story]es here
 To purpos ho[w . . . ouer]throwe (1460)
 Hath lordes . . . within a throwe
 Thou wele th[is . . . kno]w & of what k. n. e
 He comen is . . . f]ynde

Diane why[oh . . . w]as & in Ire
 For Grekes . . . a]sacrifice
 Ne encens . . . sette afyre
 Sche for th[at . . . h]yr so despieve
 Wroke hyr . . . crue]l wyse
 For with a b]ore . . . ox in stalle
 Sche made . . . & vynes alle (1470).

T]o also this bore was . . .
 A]monges whyche ther com . . .
 A]mayde on of this w[or]lde . . . ypre]ised
 A]nd Meleagre lord of . . .
 He]loured so this fresch[de] . . .
 Tha]t with hys manho[de] . . . styn]te
 The] bore he slough & hy[r] . . .

Of] whyche as olde bo[kes] . . .
 A]rose a conteke & a g[ret]
 A]nd of this lord desce[n]ded . . . (1480)
 By] ligne or elles olde . . .
 Bu]t how this Meleag[re] . . .
 Tha]ru hys moder wyl . . .
 Fo]r al to long it were . . .

Sc]he tolde eke how T[ydeus] . . .
 Vn]to the strong Oitee . . .
 To] Claymen kyngdom . . . wen]te
 Fo]r hys fellow dan p[olimites]
 Of] which the brother dan . . .
 Fu]l wrongfully of the[be]s . . . strength]
 Thi]s tolde sche by proces . . . (1491)

Sc]he tolde eke how he[monides] astert]e
 Wh]an Tydeus slough . . . sto]ute
 Sch]e tolde ek al the prop[hecies] . . .
 An]d how that .vij. kyn]ges . . .
 Bee]legeden the Oitee a[ll] . . .
 An]d of the holy serpe[n]t . . .
 And] of the furies al [che] . . .

Observe that this text is as good as any. It should be compared with MS. Harl. 2280. It is superior to that MS. in the following instances: 1443, "byform"; 1446, It repeats "that"; 1449, "this"; 1457, "o"; 1461, "within"; 1478, "olde"; 1480, "lord"; 1481, "olde"; 1482, "But"; 1491, "tolde."

WALTER W. SKRAT.

"BUBONAX" IN THE "DEFENCE OF POESY."

Yale University: Jan. 16, 1890.

Just at the end of Sidney's Defence of Poesy occur these words:

"Then, though I will not wish unto you the ass's ears of Mides, nor to be driven by a poet's verses, as Bubonax was, to hang himself."

The name "Bubonax" I find nowhere else. Both, however, of the two earliest editions—Ponsonby's and Olney's—have it, so it is not a printer's error, but must have been so written by the author or his amanuensis. After puzzling over the matter for some time, it at length occurred to me that the story referred to is the one told of Hipponax. The fullest account is given by Pliny (N.H. xxxvi. 12):

"Bupalus et Athenis clarissimi in ea scientia fuere. Hipponactis poetæ ætate, quem certum est L.X. Olympiade fuisse. . . . Hipponacti notabilis foeditas vultus erat, quamobrem imaginem ejus lascivia jocorum ii proposuere ridiculum circulis. Quod Hipponax indignatus, amaritudinem carminum distinxit in tantum, ut credatur aliquibus ad laqueum eos compulisse: quod falsum est."

Accordingly, we have here a remarkable instance of "contamination." "Bubonax," through a slip of the poet's memory, being evidently compounded of "Bupalus" and "Hipponax."

Lovers of Horace will recall the allusion in Epod. vi. 14: "acer hostis Bupalus"; and it is perhaps from this source that Sidney derived his illustration, since he does not otherwise appear to have been especially familiar with Pliny or with the Greek authors in whom a reference to the story occurs.

ALBERT S. COOK.

THE DERIVATION OF "YES TOR."

Bristol: Jan. 26, 1890.

In Mr. J. Ll. Page's recent book on Dartmoor and its Antiquities he remarks (App. A., p. 287) that the derivation of Yes Tor most favourably entertained is East Tor. Again, on p. 66, he says:

"Yes Tor has baffled both learned etymologist and ignorant peasant. East Tor is the probable interpretation (Anglo-Saxon æst); but as it happens to be the westernmost of the three heights, this can scarcely carry absolute conviction."

In view of this difficulty I would suggest another derivation, which appears to me from all points of view to be more tenable.

In an old number of the Sporting Magazine (October, 1824, p. 47), in an article on "Stag Hunting on Exmoor," I find the following:

"He [Sir Thomas Acland] had two seats, one called Holnicote, near Porlock in Somersetshire; and the other called Higher Combe, but more commonly known by the name of Yercombe—each situated on opposite sides of the moor."

If, then, in west country parlance, Higher Combe became Yercombe, as this passage seems to convey, Highest Tor certainly ought to become Yest Tor, and so Yes Tor. Now this presents no difficulty from the point of view of meaning; for, as Mr. Page remarks, until quite recently Yes Tor was looked on as the highest point on Dartmoor.

Perhaps, too, from the point of view of phonetics, the latter derivation deserves preference; for all the instances given by Mr. Page of prothetic y in Devon folk-speech (Yeastfield = Heathfield, yeffer = heifer, and yafful = hand-ful) begin with an h; but perhaps this is only an accident.

I do not know whether any derivation has been suggested for Yelland, common as a place and personal name in Devon; but, supposing the place-name to have existed first, it may, perhaps, have been simply Higher Land.

WALTER J. PURTON.

"BUCECARLE" IN GODEFROY'S OLD FRENCH DICTIONARY.

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: Jan. 27, 1890.

This term Bucecarle is interpreted by Godefroy as "sorte de valet"—a vague rendering, which he gathered apparently from the context of the quotation from Gaimar's Estorie des Engles, in which the word occurs.

Its actual meaning is "boatman," "mariner," bucecarle or buzecarle being merely the French form of Old English butsecarl, Old Norse buzukarl, Modern English buscarl, i.e. buss-carl, "boat-man." (See Du Cange s.v. "Buscarla," and New English Dictionary s.v.v. "Buscarl" and "Buss.")

PAGET TOYNBEE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Feb. 2, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "National Life and Thought in Poland," by Mr. Adam Fieldgud.

4 p.m. Sunday Lecture Society: "The Health of the Mind and Mental Contagions," by Dr. B. W. Richardson.

7.30 p.m. Ethical Society: "The Ethical Teaching of Browning," by Prof. Henry Jones.

MONDAY, Feb. 3, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.

5 p.m. London Institution: "A Visit to Mount Athos," by Prof. Mahaffy.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Private Houses and Palaces of the Romans, I," by Mr. G. Aitchison.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Electromagnet," III., by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Conception of Sovereignty," by Mr. D. G. Ritchie.

8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "The Dispersal of Plants, as illustrated by the Flora of the Keeling or Cocos Islands," by Dr. H. B. Guppy.

TUESDAY, Feb. 4, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Post-Darwinian Period," III., by Prof. G. J. Romanes.

8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "The Pharaohs of Moes according to Hebrew and Egyptian Chronology," by Mr. Ernest de Bunsen; "Some Suggestions respecting the Exodus," by Mr. A. L. Lewis.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "Bars at the Mouths of Tidal Estuaries," by Mr. W. H. Wheeler.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Morphology of a Reptilian Bird (Ophiostomus cristatus)," by Mr. W. K. Parker; "Observations on Wolves, Jackals, Dogs, and Foxes," by Mr. A. D. Bartlett; "A Synopsis of the Genera of the Family Soricidae," by Mr. G. E. Dobson.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 5, 8 p.m. Elizabethan: "The Masques of Ben Jonson," by Mr. Edmund Gosse.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "High-speed Knitting and Weaving without Weft," by Mr. Arthur Paget.

8 p.m. Geological: "The Variscitic Rocks of Mont Genève," by Mr. Grenville A. J. Cole and Mr. J. W. Gregory; "The Propylites of the Western Isles of Scotland, and their Relation to the Andesites and Diorites of the same District," by Prof. J. W. Judd.

THURSDAY, Feb. 6, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Sculpture in Relation to the Age," III., by Mr. E. Roscoe Mullins.

8 p.m. London Institution: "Travers Lecture, I., The Law of Buying and Selling," by Mr. Aubrey J. Spencer.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Private Houses and Palaces of the Romans," II., by Mr. G. Aitchison.

8 p.m. Linnean: "The Stamens and Setae of Solanaceae," by Mr. O. B. Clarke; "The Flora of Patagonia," by Mr. John Ball; "Certain Seaweed Covered Urns," by Prof. Stewart; "Pitchers of Nepenthes Masteriana," by Prof. Stewart.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Oxides of Nitrogen," by Prof. Ramsay; "The Constitution of Tri-derivatives of Naphthalene," by Dr. Armstrong and Mr. W. P. Wynne; "The Action of Chromium Oxide on Nitrobenzene," by Mr. G. G. Henderson and Mr. J. Morrow Campbell.

FRIDAY, Feb. 7, 5 p.m. Physical: Annual General Meeting; "Galvanometers," by Prof. W. E. Ayrton, Mr. T. Mather, and Mr. W. E. Sumner; "A Carbon Deposit in a Blake Telephone Transmitter," by Mr. F. B. Hawes.

5 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Utility of Forests and the Study of Forestry," by Dr. Schlich.

7.30 p.m. Geological Association: Annual General Meeting; "The Nature of the Geological Record," by the President.

7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting, "Reclamation of Land on the River Tees," by Mr. Colin P. Fowler.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The London Stage in Elizabeth's Reign," by Mr. H. B. Wheatley.

SATURDAY, Feb. 8, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Natural History of the Horse and of its Extinct and Existing Allies," III., by Prof. Flower.

8.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

Essays upon Heredity and Kindred Biological Problems. By Dr. August Weismann. Authorised Translation. Edited by E. B. Poulton, Selmar Schönland, and Arthur E. Shipley. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

PROF. WEISMANN'S essays, of which a good and vigorous English version is now presented to us, have already obtained for themselves a place as of almost classical authority. Of their great value, therefore, it is unnecessary to speak. In one word, it would not be too much to say that no biological memoirs of equal importance have been submitted to the judgment of the scientific world since the first great outburst of evolutionary thought—the outburst which gave us the principal works of Darwin, Spencer, Huxley, Wallace, Haeckel, and the two Müllers. Every biologist nowadays must read Weismann. We may agree with him or we may differ from him, but we have got to reckon with him. To ignore him is merely the ostrich trick of hiding one's head feebly in the sand, and pretending not to see the victorious enemy.

In saying this, I do not mean to say that Weismann's conclusions, like Darwin's and Spencer's, are bound to make an epoch in the study of the subject with which they deal. On the contrary, in their central contention, they seem to me essentially reactionary. They throw us back into problems we thought we had solved. They raise again the ghosts of difficulties and dangers we imagined in our simplicity we had long ago laid for ever. It is rather because they compel one to think and to face real questions that these essays are so important. Whether in the end their answer to the main problem they raise be accepted or not, at least the problem itself is set in a new light, and an answer of some sort is rigorously demanded.

I am not going, therefore, to attempt here a criticism or even a résumé of the contents of this profound and spirit-searching volume. To epitomise Weismann's broadest results would take at the very least a dozen pages or so; to foreshadow even in the vaguest outline any supposed answer to his ingenious conclusions would require a biologist as accomplished and as well-equipped in every direction as himself. It must suffice if I point out at present the momentous nature of the issues he raises—issues which strike at the very root of much that seemed most fruitful in contemporary thinking—and thereby induce readers to pause for a moment before they accept implicitly and without due examination the clever and seemingly simple explanations so admirably set before them by a most able, logical, and encyclopædic thinker.

To object to any philosophical or scientific argument on the ground of its tendencies is of course a confession of utter weakness. It is to abandon the field oneself, and then take refuge in abuse of the enemy. Still, it is allowable to point out that a certain doctrine, if once proved, will entail such and such important consequences; and therefore to urge that, before we accept it as proved, we should be quite certain of every link and step in the process of reasoning which is supposed to make its acceptance necessary. Now Prof. Weismann's theory of the Continuity of the Germ-plasm, to the elucidation and enforcement of which the greater part (and indirectly the whole) of this volume is devoted, would undoubtedly, if accepted, compel us fundamentally to modify many of our most cherished biological convictions, would change the whole face of evolutionary thinking, and especially would reduce the entire science of psychology, as understood by the new evolutionary school, to a slough of pre-Darwinian and pre-Spencerian chaos. It will be allowed that a theory so revolutionary in its effects, however well fathered and however ably advocated, should at least be subjected to the most searching and scrutinising criticism—not by casual journalism, but by scientific experiment and logical analysis—before it is admitted to rank as accepted truth.

Put in its briefest form (to which I hesitate to reduce it) this central idea of Prof. Weismann's book amounts in its kernel to something like this. The germ-plasm is the essential part of the germ-cell, and determines the nature of the individual that arises from it. This germ-plasm is itself continuous (Weismann believes) and, so to speak, immortal in all the individuals which ultimately derive their being from a single original germ-cell. A minute quantity of the germ-plasm that goes to produce each individual organism remains, over and above, unchanged during the development of that individual, and subsequently grows and sub-divides into other germ-cells. The germ-plasm is thus continuous from generation to generation, and on its continuity depend the facts of heredity, while variation is due to its "spontaneous" modifiability. Parent and offspring resemble one another, not because the parent produces the offspring (as in Darwinian pangenesis or the Spencerian doctrine of physiological units), but because both arise from the self-same substance, which merely develops earlier in the parent and later in the offspring. To use a transparent metaphor, the father is thus reduced to the position of an elder brother to his own son.

This is simplicity itself, if it is only true. But here comes the important and serious implication. If this be so, then heredity must be solely of those characters which were transmitted in the original and continuous germ-plasm. Characters acquired by the individual during its own lifetime are not and cannot be transmitted to descendants. The common inheritance of the original germ-plasm is all that descends. Functionally acquired germs die with their possessor. Only what is predetermined in the germ-cell is passed on to offspring. In other words, the inherited elements of the individual are all that he can hand on to his successors. To use Prof. Weismann's own somewhat crabbed terminology, blastogenic characters alone are transmitted; somatogenic characters are not. Or rather—and this is an important difference—"those who assert that somatogenic characters can be transmitted must furnish the requisite proofs."

Now, to grant what Weismann thus maintains (with an array of evidence which, though far from conclusive, one cannot but admit to be supremely formidable) is to give up at once the whole remaining Lamarckian element in evolutionary biology, and to hand over everything to the arbitrament of natural selection, as the sole deus ex machina of specific distinctions. It is to throw overboard that doctrine of use and disuse to which Darwin attributed increased importance in his later work, and to confine variation and the origin of useful organs to "spontaneous" or "accidental" modifications of the germ-plasm itself. In Mr. Samuel Butler's happily chosen phraseology, it is to make luck supreme, and put cunning nowhere. Above all, it is to give up the vast influence supposed to be exerted in psychological evolution by transmitted habit, function, and deliberate exercise of intelligence. It is to abandon all such apparently fruitful speculations as those contained in the Physical Synthesis part of the Principles of Psychology. It is to fall back for the development of mind, as well as of body, upon natural selection alone—a basis which evolutionary psychologists at least have never hitherto considered capable of sustaining by itself the burden of so vast a superstructure. Functional gain has there been almost universally held to constitute the main origin of nervous system. If Weismann is right, we shall have to begin all over again; we shall have to reconstruct from its very basis the entire fabric of evolutionary psychology.

These, of course, are not reasons for rejecting the new gospel; but they are reasons at any rate for suspending judgment till the question of the transmission of acquired faculties or characters has received an exhaustive experimental investigation by the light of the fresh objections now suggested by Weismann. Along that line, it is clear, the next great campaign of the evolutionary contest will have to be fought out, inch by inch, and assumption by assumption. For a single undeniable case of the transmission of an acquired or somatogenic character would clearly be fatal to Weismann's contention. If it can be proved beyond a doubt that in any one instance a character acquired from outside (so to speak) during the lifetime of the individual has been transmitted to offspring, then the continuity of the germ-plasm is shown to be untenable, or at least it is shown that the germ-plasm itself, like Mr. Herbert Spencer's physiological units, is (or may be) modified in accordance with every modification of somatogenic character. This is the task that lies now before those who still incline the more to the older school of interpretation in heredity. It is curious, however, to note how thoroughly our new teacher has altered the venue in all this matter. To Darwin and Spencer the question was, "How can we frame a theory of heredity which will account for the offspring reproducing the parent in all its features, original and acquired?" To Weismann, on the other hand, the question is more fundamental still, and traverses the supposed facts: "Does the offspring really resemble the parent at all in any except the blastogenic characteristics?"

At the present moment, it must be frankly admitted, the honours of the campaign lie rather with Prof. Weismann and his English allies. They have made a vigorous attack upon an ill-guarded position; and they have certainly shown its defenders the absolute untenability of their existing outworks. The book (to abandon metaphor) is beyond doubt staggering even to those whose predilections lead them towards provisional acceptance of something like the Darwinian or Spencerian heredity theories. It would be foolish to deny that Prof. Weismann has rudely awakened us from a dogmatic slumber, and has compelled us to reconsider both facts and hypotheses we had taken too much for granted. From the first page to the last the gradual development of his central idea is most masterly and most suggestive. His line of argument is clear, logical, and consistent; his battery of facts is beyond all praise; his criticism of the supposed proofs of transmission of acquired characters is acute and subtle. Altogether, he is a worthy champion of his own cause. If the other side can procure a David fit to encounter this well-equipped Goliath they will indeed be fortunate. And yet, if I might venture on a hint, I would be inclined to say that psychology in the end will supply the smooth stones which may pierce the forehead of our German giant. Inheritance of acquired faculties, if true, is so simple an explanation of many facts of evolution that we must not lightly abandon it to-day without at least a fair and determined struggle.

GRANT ALLEN.

MR. BUDGE'S "HISTORY OF ALEXANDER THE GREAT."

THE editor of the Coptic work on The Martyrdom and Miracles of Saint George of Cappadocia,

* The History of Alexander the Great, being the Syriac version of the Pseudo-Callisthenes, edited from five manuscripts, with an English translation and Notes, by Ernest A. Wallis Budge. (Cambridge: University Press.)

and of the Syriac The Bee, has here furnished Oriental scholars—as well as students of the Byzantine historians and of legends in the early Christian period—with a most valuable book, which long ago attracted the attention of scholars.

The Syriac text is printed from an excellent fount of Nestorian type, used for the first time in England, according to five MSS., two of which are in Mr. Budge's private possession, and one in the British Museum, while the other two belong to the American Oriental Society and to the German Oriental Society respectively. Only a very short extract from the last mentioned of these MSS. (corresponding to pp. 168 ff. of the Syriac text of the present work) had hitherto been printed, in Roediger's Chrestomathia Syriaca. Mr. Budge gives an excellent literal translation; an exhaustive description of the MSS. and their mutual relations; English and Syriac indexes of proper names; and a glossary of unusual or rare Syriac words occurring in the book. Translations of a Christian legend concerning Alexander the Great, which appears to be based upon chapters xxxvii. f. of the second book of the history of Pseudo-Callisthenes, of a brief sketch of his life in Syriac, and of a metrical discourse upon him by Jacob of Serugh (A.D. 451-521), for which the variant readings of a MS. in the British Museum have been used, are also appended. Moreover, the author has been enabled by the wide compass of his studies to give, in his Introduction, an interesting treatise on the Egyptian origin of the Alexander legend, including a long extract from an unpublished papyrus in the British Museum (No. 10188), in the hieroglyphic text, accompanied by a transliteration and a literal translation, and a discussion on the various versions of the fabulous history of Alexander—viz., the Greek, Latin, Armenian, Syriac, Hebrew, Arabic, Persian, Turkish, Ethiopic, Coptic, and miscellaneous European versions, such as French, German, Italian, Spanish, Norwegian, Swedish, Dutch, Slavonic, and English.

The work upon which all these legendary compositions are based is that of Pseudo-Callisthenes, which is thought to have been written in Greek about A.D. 200. The Syriac version, as printed in the present book, agrees tolerably closely with one of the three redactions (Cod A) of this Greek text, and with its Latin translation by Julius Valerius (A.D. 300-400); but it cannot be considered a translation of either of these sources. Mr. Budge is of opinion that the Syriac version was made from an Arabic translation of a Greek original by a Christian priest, whose native language was Arabic, some time between the seventh and the ninth centuries.

The contents of this remarkable book may, by those who do not wish to enter into the study of the Syriac text or the entire translation, best be seen from the summary on pp. lxiii. ff., in which, for the sake of a comparison of the various versions, their corresponding portions are indicated by cross-references. Of special importance are those incidents which are either wanting in the Greek and Latin versions, or which considerably differ from those there given—e.g., Aristotle's letter to Alexander concerning the building of the city of Alexandria, and the text of Alexander's testament (pp. 42 f. and 139 ff. of the English translation).

The Ethiopic translations of the work, which were probably made from Arabic versions, are particularly interesting, because "the translators seem to have allowed their fancy to run wild, when they filled in the details of the historical events" described in the sources before them (p. lxxxix). Mr. Budge has therefore thought it worth while to give a free rendering of the first few chapters and a summary of the rest of one such Ethiopic version, extant in a MS. in the British Museum; and we may add that it would be of value for the history of the Alexander Legend to have the whole text made available to scholars.

In conclusion, we must be allowed to draw attention to the warm and sympathetic words of the Preface, in praise of the late Prof. William Wright, by which the author of the book is not less honoured than the great Semitic scholar, his master and friend.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE annual general meeting of the Geologists' Association will be held at University College, Gower-street, on Friday next, February 7, at 7.30 p.m., when the president, Mr. T. V. Holmes, will deliver an address, entitled "Notes on the Nature of the Geological Record." Dr. Johnston Lavis is preparing a report of the excursion of the association last autumn to the volcanic regions of Southern Italy. It will contain contributions from the eminent Italian geologists who guided the party, and will be illustrated with maps and plates. Subscribers (at 10s. each) should send their names to Mr. T. V. Holmes, 28, Crooms Hill, Greenwich.

DR. BEDDOE'S presidential address to the Anthropological Institute, delivered at the anniversary meeting on Tuesday, dealt mainly with the remarkable manner in which anthropology and ethnography were represented at the Paris Exhibition. The president had also something to say on various questions of physical anthropology and on the origin of the Aryans. He pointed out that, although the Lithuanian language has been regarded as the most primitive of the Aryan family, we possess little accurate information regarding the physical characteristics of the true Lithuanians. He therefore suggested that any partisan of the theory which derives the Aryans from European sources would do well to go to Kovno or Vilna, and make a careful study of the Lithuanian type.

THE Zoological and Anthropological Section of Trewandt's Encyklopaedie der Naturwissenschaften is slowly progressing. The twenty-sixth part, just received, carries the work on to the article "Pietroassa." This is the name of a locality in Roumania where a large number of prehistoric gold objects were discovered in 1837. Perhaps the most interesting articles in the present part are those on Pfahlbauten and Pfahlbautenbewohner, which give within the compass of ten pages a clear account of the ancient pile-dwellings and their inhabitants. Among the zoological articles of general interest may be mentioned a group of short articles on pearl—Perlen, Perlenmuscheln, and Perlmutter.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. will publish almost immediately a translation (from the second French edition) of M. Victor Henry's Short Comparative Grammar of Greek and Latin for Schools and Colleges, by Mr. R. T. Elliott, who has just been appointed lecturer in classics in Melbourne University. The book will bear the imprimatur of Profs. Henry Nettleship and A. H. Sayce, the former of whom contributes an introductory preface.

THE forthcoming number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record will contain the following articles: "A Babylonian Duplicate of Tablets 1 and 2 of the Creation Series," by Mr. T. G.

Pinches; "Assyriological Notes," by Mr. V. Scheil; "Babylonian and Jewish Festivals," by Mr. W. St. Chad Boeckewen; "Fragment of a Chinese Life of the Buddha," by the late Prof. S. Beal.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ENTOMOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Anniversary Meeting, Wednesday, January 15.)

LORD WALSHINGHAM, president, delivered an address, in which he called attention to the claims of entomology on the general public, dwelling upon the vast extent of the subject, the difficulties which it presents, and the necessity for greater exertions to overcome them. Several instances of the economic importance of entomology were mentioned, among which, perhaps, the most remarkable was the successful introduction of an Australian species of lady-bird into California, in order to destroy the scale insect Icerya purchasi, which infests orange plantations. Great results, too, might be expected in the elucidation of philosophical questions from the study of insects, as, for instance, in organic chemistry, from a careful investigation of the changes of colour of various insects, as affected by their food or surroundings. The good effects of such a study as entomology on the minds of the young, especially in the case of those dwelling in cities, was next pointed out. Some feared that the increase of collectors might lead to the extermination of rare species; but he thought that this danger, except in the case of large or conspicuous species, had been somewhat overrated, as large tracts of land were always closed to the public, which would serve as insect-preserves; while in the case of obscure species some specimens would be almost certain to escape observation. Nor was the subject of British entomology by any means exhausted, for, to take the order Diptera as an instance, Mr. Verrall, who recorded 100 new species of British Diptera in the Entomologist's Monthly Magazine for January, 1886, could now describe at least 100 additional new British species belonging to a single family. Naturalists who study other branches of zoology and botany are apt to judge of entomology from their own point of view, and to find fault with entomologists because they do not describe important collections received from Government expeditions, or similar sources, immediately. But according to a calculation of Dr. Sharp's, the number of existing species of insects is probably not much less than 2,000,000. [Other estimates give the existing number of species of insects already described as fully a quarter of a million]. Taking the volume of the Zoological Record for 1881 as a fair sample, Lord Walsingham finds 5600 species of insects described, as against 1650 species in all other branches of zoology put together. Of late years the bulk of the Record has increased, and the proportionate number of pages for general zoology is now somewhat greater. This Lord Walsingham attributes to the working out of the Challenger collections, which, for obvious reasons, were exceptionally rich in marine zoology, and deficient in insects. [His lordship might have added that the disproportion in these years would have been greater, but for the publication of the Biologia Centrali-Americana, which greatly and permanently increased the number of new species of insects described since its commencement.] At the rate of 5600 species a year, it would take 349 years to describe all the existing species, if we accept Dr. Sharp's estimate. [And it must be remembered that the mere description of a species is only preliminary to the actual study of the insect.] After pointing out how easily insects may be overlooked—as in the case of the Hessian Fly, which there is good reason to believe had been an inhabitant of the British Islands for many years, though only recently recognised by entomologists—Lord Walsingham turned to the consideration of Messrs. Godman and Salvin's great work, the Biologia Centrali-Americana. The area included is about 900,000 square miles, or one-fifty-seventh part of the whole surface of land on the globe. Omitting two large and important orders of insects, it is estimated that no less than 30,114 species are now known from this district, of which nearly half are new; while the Mammalia, Aves, and Reptilia together only amount to 1937 species, and of these less than five per cent. are new. In order to carry on the work of arranging and describing these collections, ten specialists have already been employed on Coleoptera, three on Lepidoptera, and three on Diptera (besides others on other orders), making a total of twenty-two entomologists; while only seven have been employed on all other branches of terrestrial zoology, and two on botany. On the other hand, the British Museum employs only six entomologists, as against seven other zoologists, although mammals number barely 3600 species, birds about 12,000, mollusca about 50,000 species; and so on. The annual average of insects received in the museum is about 20,000 specimens, as against mammals, 451; mollusca, 3276; reptiles and fishes together, 1385; vermes and radiata together, 2419. Botany, it is true, corresponds nearly to entomology in the number of known species; but plants are much better known and much more easily classified than insects. In the area treated of in the Biologia Centrali-Americana, about 14,800 species are known, of which only about 440 are new, as against over 30,000 species of insects, of which probably 14,000 are new. The literature of entomology is increased by 20,000 pages annually, according to Dr. Sharp; and in order to avoid error and keep abreast of his subject, an entomologist must read not only separate works, but innumerable periodicals and transactions of learned societies, published in seven or more different languages. [Here we think that Lord Walsingham has somewhat under-estimated the linguistic difficulties of the subject, for entomological books and papers are published in the following sixteen European languages at least, all of which, except perhaps the last, in which we are only aware of some papers on Phyllozera, contain matter of real scientific importance:—English, German, Dutch, Swedish, Danish (Norwegian), Latin, French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Russian, Polish, Czech, Slavonic (Croatian), Magyar, and Neo-Hellenic (Modern Greek). The late Mr. H. Prye has published a work on Japanese butterflies in English and Japanese; but scientific work in Japan is usually published in some European language. Naturalists who speak the lesser-known European languages also frequently prefer to publish in more familiar tongues. Thus, the Dutch sometimes publish in German or English, the Swedes in Latin or English, the Finns in Latin or Swedish, the Danes in French, the Russians in French or German, the Hungarians in Latin or German. All these peoples, however, as we have said, frequently employ their own language in their entomological publications, with the possible exception of the Finns; for, although we have seen several works on botany in Finnish, we have not yet heard of any on entomology.] Even as regards works written in English, it is by no means easy to keep abreast of all that is published. Thus, within the last few years, Mr. Meyrick has added 78 new genera and 655 new species of the lepidopterous family Oecophoridae to the Australian Fauna, whereas only 3 genera and 100 species were previously described. The smaller Coleoptera and Lepidoptera of tropical countries are hardly known; and the greater part of them prove, when received, to be undescribed, involving great difficulties in their satisfactory description and classification. [His Lordship might have extended his remarks to even the largest species of the less known orders; and as regards the smaller species of insects, it may be said that comparatively little is known, even as regards the British species, beyond the two best studied orders, the Coleoptera and Lepidoptera.] Lord Walsingham concluded the scientific part of his address with a plea for the enlargement of the entomological department of the British Museum, and suggested the annual publication of a series of small systematic monographs of families, sub-families, or even genera, with full structural details to explain their classification. He finally referred to the recent publication of the Revisio Insectorum Familiae Mantidarum by the venerable honorary life-president of the society, Prof. Westwood. The address concluded with a brief notice of the losses which the society had sustained through the deaths of several eminent entomologists both at home and abroad during the past year.

FINE ART.

MR. FULLEYLOVE'S NEW DRAWINGS.

THE exhibition, at the Fine Art Society's, of nearly a hundred water-colours by Mr. John Fulleylove—dealing for the most part with the town and colleges of Cambridge, but likewise with places of the South, like Genoa and Marseilles—though it does not give occasion for the display of what are considered very important "finished" drawings, will certainly confirm Mr. Fulleylove's position as a brilliant and decisive sketcher—a great "journalist" in art.

The Cambridge sketches—which have the charm of directness, supported by the power of an undisputed knowledge of the material with which they are chiefly concerned—have perhaps a more obvious variety than has hitherto characterised any single collection of Mr. Fulleylove's work. That is to say, he has ventured, here and there, to find interest not in ancient building or stately garden, but in the ordinary roadside, in the crowd on "Market Hill," and even in such a boating subject as Mr. E. J. Gregory is accustomed to treat with luminousness, delicacy, and precision. But in thus wandering beyond the limits in which he is facile princeps, or into regions where his sovereignty will be disputed—nay, in which it can hardly be allowed—Mr. Fulleylove, I think, has shown little beyond the ambition for range, the enterprise towards the unfamiliar and the unattained, which is creditable to every artist in every art. He shows himself an intelligent and even sympathetic student of landscape; but it is of architecture that he remains a master—not of dry architectural detail, or of detail dryly treated, but of the spirit of a building, its particular characteristics, the influence of time upon it, the influence of travelling light, the way in which building and background somehow become one—somehow together make a picture. An energetic conception and a delicate method—that power of selection which knowledge gives, when it is properly assimilated, and that flexibility of treatment which comes alike of fortunate gift and of experience—these things ensure for Mr. Fulleylove's best drawings the interest of vitality and a very various charm.

A representation of a building by Mr. Fulleylove suggests always solidity and weight, where too many people—not bad colourists or insensitive observers either—only suggest flimsiness. Now "Clare Bridge," very sketchy though it is, is a case in point; and as it is numbered 2 in the catalogue, you could hardly have an earlier instance. This little drawing displays exceeding dexterity. "Trinity Library" (No. 4)—an admirable work of Sir Christopher Wren's—is treated in a fashion seemingly not less free, yet far more subtle. The perspective—of bookcase beyond bookcase, and square beyond square of marble on the floor—is thoroughly admirable: hardly equalled anywhere else, by the very nature of the case, unless it be by "Cloisters, Trinity" (No. 40). And the quiet sober scheme of colour is as acceptable as the draughtsmanship—the plain plaster ceiling, greyish in shadow, the blackish-grey and white of the pavement, the happy suggestion of the tones and hues of a congregation of bound volumes, golden-brown and red, and then the bookcases which are of oak, stained to imitate cedar-wood—an operation to which time has been kind, nay, merciful. Of the famous interior of King's—the culminating work, it has often been considered, of the period of the Perpendicular—Mr. Fulleylove vouchsafes nothing as yet but a "note." But the note is very characteristic. It speaks, at all events, to the informed, and to those who understand that in no work of art can the imagination of the on-looker, any more than the imagination of the artist, be dispensed with. Two drawings of "Wren's Bridge"—of which it is difficult to say whether one prefers the drawing of the bridge foreshortened, or that in which its entire length is exposed, as the arches lie gracefully, low upon the water—attest Mr. Fulleylove's particular sympathy with the buildings of the Renaissance. While "Trinity Bridge," in reality chiefly a landscape, and "Midsummer Common" (No. 53), witness to the truth of that which I indicated at the beginning—that Mr. Fulleylove's "range" is wont "to exceed his grasp"; and we have Browning's great authority for saying that a man's range should do so, always.

I do not know that any useful purpose would be served by my dwelling longer on the details of an exhibition which is sure, in any case—notwithstanding the occasional shortcomings—to appeal not merely to an academic public, but to the real student of art, to the lover of distinction and of style. About Cambridge, and that in it which Mr. Fulleylove has elected to deal with, Mr. J. Willis Clark—than whom there could be no better authority—gossips pleasantly and out of the resources of full knowledge. No one has been invited to add to the catalogue any words about the Riviera subjects, nor, indeed, are such words necessary. The Riviera drawings—powerful and direct as they are, and endowed with style, like the Cambridge ones, partly by reason of their theme, and partly by reason of their authorship—are but a supplemental portion of the present show. But it is at least an extraordinary instance of the enterprise of the Messrs. Cassell that these should be but a small part, not of the present exhibition, with which, of course, the Messrs. Cassell have nothing to do, but of the work commissioned from various artists of celebrity for a big book on the Mediterranean shores. These brilliant and direct sketches of Mr. Fulleylove's have been put into monochrome already for the purposes of the engraver, so that even the book-buyer may become familiar with their subjects, if hardly with the whole of their charm.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. LOUIS FAGAN, of the Department of Prints and Drawings, has arranged to deliver three lectures on "The Treasures of the British Museum," at the Steinway Hall, Lower Seymour Street, on the evenings of February 13, 20, and 25. The lectures will be illustrated, in a popular manner, by the agency of the oxy-hydrogen light; and as regards Mr. Fagan's acquaintance with his subject, that, we are sure, is exceptionally complete.

THE exhibitions to open in London next week include a series of "Pictures from a Home County," by Mr. Frank W. W. Topham, at Mr. Dunthorne's gallery in Vigo Street; and a large number of drawings submitted in competition for prizes offered by Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Sons, which will be on view at the institute in Piccadilly. The twenty-ninth annual exhibition of the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts will also open on Monday.

AT the meeting of the Art Congress in Edinburgh last October, the following resolution, proposed by Mr. W. M. Conway and seconded by Mr. E. Onslow Ford, was passed:

"That the mayor and corporation of Liverpool be approached with an expression of the hope that they will reconsider their decision to discontinue the decoration of St. George's Hall by Mr. Stirling Lee, and in accordance with his designs."

This resolution has since received the support of a large number of names, representative of the arts of sculpture, architecture, and painting.

THE Maharaja of Jaipur is at present defraying the first cost of publishing a fine collection of architectural and decorative drawings from Indian buildings in Rajputana, prepared by Col. S. S. Jacob, the State engineer. Col. Jacob had at first undertaken the collection of the materials at his own expense, and partly to enable him the better to finish the Albert Hall and Museum in Jaipur city. Four years ago Dr. Burgess saw the drawings; and, struck with their value, he called the attention of the Government of India to the desirability of completing and publishing the collection. This opinion having been communicated by Lord Dufferin to the Jaipur Darbar, the Maharaja and his minister, Babu Kantichandra Mukharji, Rao Bahadur, at once supplied the needful support to the undertaking. Mr. W. Griggs, of Peckham, is now bringing out the work, which is to be issued in ten portfolios of plates, each plate measuring 15 inches by 22. The first contains copings or cornice mouldings; the second, pillars—capitals and bases; and the third, carved doors, chiefly from Ambër, in 66 plates. These will be followed by seven containing brackets, arches, balustrades, wall-decorations, &c. The drawings are drawn to conveniently large scales—many of the details to half the original size, thus forming working drawings suitable for the practical architect and artisan. The inlaid ivory doors have been produced by Mr. Griggs in colours. We understand that, when the first three portfolios are quite ready, copies will be offered for sale. Such an undertaking reflects much credit on the Raja's munificence; and the examples of Indian art published in these portfolios are so beautiful that they only need to be examined to be highly appreciated.

MR. JOHN M. GRAY, the energetic curator of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery—who has amassed by this time the widest knowledge of Scottish art—has just printed, for private circulation, something which is much more than a pamphlet, though it is scarcely a book—his Notes on the Art Treasures at Penicuik House, Midlothian. Penicuik House, we may allow ourselves to say, is very notable, not alone for its art treasures. It is the seat of a family associated for generations—and by no means disassociated to-day—with Scottish culture and progress. It was built, in the middle of the eighteenth century, by Sir James Clerk, the third baronet, who—doubtless under the influence of the great architect, Adam—had himself the knowledge and the taste to design it. The house stands on an upland, overlooking the wooded valley of the Esk, with views of the Pentland Hills as a changeful and impressive background; and Mr. Gray is not unwilling to recognise its ordered and classical beauty, albeit regretting, somewhat tenderly, the disappearance of the older house which it superseded, and keeping, not unnaturally, much of his enthusiasm for the gardens, especially the "American Garden," with "its wealth of many-coloured azaleas." As for the art treasures themselves—the treasures in books and MSS. and pictures—they are both ample, and exceedingly miscellaneous. One of the early Clerks had his portrait painted at Leyden by one of the Mierises. Boerhave, the world-known old physician, left to a Clerk the greater portion of his library; and it is still in the house. Of family portraiture, of the better kind, there is no small store; and among three Raeburns one asserts itself as a wholly exceptional example of one of the most sterling of British masters—it is a work in which, though reality has been by no means forgotten, imagination has had the opportunity of finding a place. This is the group of Sir John Clerk, the fifth baronet, and his wife, Rosemary Dacre, who, it is clearly established, was a remarkable, an admirable, and a peculiarly fascinating young woman—a "magnetic nature," in fine. Mr. Gray has written several very pretty pages upon this lady's history and character—pages in which the charming fancy of the writer finds itself supported by innumerable facts. Of the several "booklets" which Mr. Gray has thus far put forth upon the story and the treasures of Scottish houses, this one, upon Penicuik, interests us, we are bound to say, by far the most. And this is not wholly on account of the subject. It is in part because the writer has, at Penicuik, given himself freest rein, not alone as an antiquary, but as a student of humanity and of artistic effect.

THE STAGE.

A Memoir of Edward Askew Sothorn. By T. Edgar Pemberton. (Bentley.)

It is rather strange, especially at a time when biographies are written by the score, that eight or nine years should have elapsed between the death of Edward Askew Sothorn and the appearance of anything like a full and trustworthy record of his career. His claims to such an honour are as valid as those of Mathews, Compton, and other players to whom monuments have been raised in print. He was the creator of Lord Dundreary, and for about two decades was exceptionally popular both on and off the stage. Besides this, an account of the practical jokes in which he found so much amusement and recreation would hardly fail to make agreeable reading, even if most of them should be held to show a good deal more ingenuity and humour than consideration for the feelings of others. Mr. Pemberton's memoir, though not marked by the critical power needed to do entire justice to the subject, goes far to meet the want here indicated. No fact of real importance is passed over; the author's hero-worship seldom leads him into extravagance; and several portraits of Sothorn in the characters associated with his name are bound up in the volume.

The incidents of the actor's early life may be dealt with very briefly. He was born at Liverpool on April 1, 1826, his father being a successful merchant, colliery proprietor, and shipowner. At the age of twenty-three, in obedience to an instinct long previously aroused in him, he suddenly adopted the stage as his profession. Before long, while playing at Weymouth, he attracted the notice of Charles Kean, who, in the course of a letter quoted by Mr. Pemberton, told him that he had talents which, rightly cultivated, "might one day work their way in London." Probably this tribute tempted him to remain in England; but after fulfilling an engagement at the old Birmingham theatre, then under the control of Mercer Simpson, he resolved to try his fortune in the United States. He is described at this time as "tall, willowy, and lithe, with a clear red-and-white English complexion, bright blue eyes, wavy brown hair, graceful manners, and a singularly sweet voice." For some years he remained in comparative obscurity, but a buoyant confidence in himself and in his future enabled him to withstand all reverses. He once wrote to a friend in England:

"The remembrances brought up by your few lines on the old place took me many, many years back. I saw myself, as you so well described, standing gazing on the river, and a long struggling tear forced its way down a cheek that fate has done naught but cuff for years. But, God be praised! there are brighter days in store, and I am as much the old Ned Sothorn in heart and feeling as ever, though grey hairs have been forced through the hot-bed of my weary skull. If I have no genius, I at least have indisputable perseverance. . . . My time is as sure to come, if I live, as there is a sun in the heavens."

His time came a little sooner than he might have expected. By 1858 he had secured a footing at Miss Laura Keane's theatre in New York as a representative of such different parts as Charles Surface, Dr. Pangloss, Raphael in "The Marble Heart," and Armand in a version of "La Dame aux Camélias." One of the pieces selected by his manageress was "Our American Cousin," by Tom Taylor. Much to his chagrin, the ambitious young actor was asked to play Lord Dundreary, then an old man with only forty-seven lines to utter. He at first refused, but shortly afterwards accepted the character on the condition that he might expand it in his own way. In the interim, as by a lightning-flash, he had seen the chances it afforded him. What he did with it is known to all. He imported into it "everything that had struck him as wildly absurd" in the sayings and doings of persons he had met, no detail being of his own invention. Misunderstood at the outset, this caricature of a half-idiotic fop, embodied on the stage with the finest humour and tact, almost immediately caught the fancy of the public, and in the course of three years was played upwards of eight hundred times. Sothorn then undertook to appear in it at the Haymarket Theatre, London. His success with it in America did not make him over-sanguine as to the result. "Everyone," he wrote before his departure, "foretells a hit; but I am doubtful." For the piece was a bad one, and he may have feared that an English audience would resent the ridicule he poured upon an English nobleman. Misgivings on this score were felt by a good many wiseacres in London. Buckstone, in common with the principal members of his company, even predicted that Dundreary would be a failure. The experiment was first tried on November 11, 1861. For a time it seemed that the prophets of ill were in the right, although the merits of Sothorn's acting were pointedly recognised by the critics. Night after night "Our American Cousin" failed to draw a remunerative audience. The manager wished to set it aside for "She Stoops to Conquer." "Do nothing of the kind," Mathews said to him; "keep playing it; it has only to become known." Buckstone took his advice; Dundreary gradually acquired an astonishing popularity, and the piece had what in those days was thought the long run of four hundred performances.

From this point Sothorn's course was one of almost uninterrupted prosperity. Whether in England or America, he usually seemed to be marked by fame and fortune for their own. It is certain, however, that none of the plays in which he appeared proved so attractive as "Our American Cousin." Earnestly as he might seek it, a "second Dundreary success" did not fall to his lot. The nearest approach he made to it was as David Garrick in Robertson's neat adaptation of the French "Sullivan." Nothing in its way could have been more perfect in conception and execution than his acting in the scene of assumed drunkenness. Excellent, too, were his Brother Sam in Oxenford's play, his Jocelyn in "The Woman in Mauve," his Frank Annesly in "The Favourite of Fortune," his Victor de Tourville in "A Hero of Romance," and his Colonel John White in "Home." The effect with which he treated some impressive scenes showed that his powers were not confined to eccentric comedy, but he unquestionably overrated his versatility in believing that nature had fitted him to be a perfect Claude Melnotte. He could not be induced to drop this part until an Edinburgh critic, intending to be complimentary, spoke of the impersonation as impressed with a humour of its own. Sothorn groaned as he read the words: "This," he said, "is indeed a crusher." French playgoers, on the other hand, could be blind to his humour where it was least likely to escape recognition. In 1867, during the Exhibition, he appeared in Paris as Dundreary, though only to meet with a decided rebuff. The general verdict concerning the inimitable peer seems to have been that he was un sort de mob. It is worthy of note that among the company engaged for this expedition was Mr. Henry Irving, who had just secured a footing in London by his performance of Rawdon Scudamore in "Hunted Down," and who, as Abel Murcott, the drunken lawyer's clerk, found a means, small as the part was, of adding to an already enviable reputation. Sothorn's last important undertaking was to play the disappointed country actor, Fitzaltamont, in "The Prompter's Box," one of the best of Henry Byron's pieces. Here, to use his own words, he "boiled down all the old-school tragedians as he boiled down all the fops he had met before Dundreary came upon the scene." Keenly relished in America, the satire produced little or no effect in London; and the mortification thus inflicted upon Sothorn would seem to have hastened his premature death.

Of his private life we have many clear glimpses in this biography. His friends could not but regard him with something like affection. He is rightly described as a "prince of good fellows"—buoyant, frank, modest, hospitable, humorous in speech, equally ready to talk or to listen, rich in reminiscence, staunch in his attachments, and generous to self-denial. It is pleasing to remember that he once interrupted an American engagement to play in London for the benefit of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, recrossing the Atlantic by the next steamer. His real kindness of heart, however, did not prevent him from indulging his mania for practical jokes to the point of causing serious annoyance and even pain to his victims. Unless I am misinformed, Mr. Pemberton presents an inaccurate version of one incident on this head. One of the guests at a large dinner given by Sothorn did not arrive until after the fish. "Hush!" said the host, when the knock was heard, "here he comes. A thought has struck me; all of you get under the table." Expecting that he had some good fun in store for them, the whole company promptly did as they were bidden. The late-comer entered, made his apologies, and then, glancing round the room, asked where the others were. "Extraordinary thing," replied Sothorn; "on hearing your voice they all bolted under the table—why, Heaven and themselves only know!" Intended in his youth for the pulpit, Sothorn had contracted an abiding taste for theological reading, little as it may have influenced him in his choice of a profession. For hunting he long had an overmastering passion; and Buckstone was often in an agony of apprehension lest the popular comedian, losing his train, should be unable to reach the Haymarket in time for the performance. Such a catastrophe never occurred; but on one occasion, after a run with the Surrey stag-hounds, it was averted only by the hiring of a special engine. Ever hardworking, fond of excitement, and neglectful of his health, Sothorn put too severe a strain upon an originally splendid constitution, and his death at the early age of fifty-five was not a surprise to those who had known him well.

It is chiefly by his Dundreary, as I have already intimated, that he will be remembered in the history of the stage. Mr. Pemberton gives us acceptable information as to the genesis and development of the character, but does not aim at anything like criticism or analysis. He leaves that to be supplied by an extract from the writings of "Nym Crikle." More to the purpose than this would have been two little essays on the subject, one by Oxenford and the other by Mr. Sala. In the former we read:

"Everybody goes to see Lord Dundreary. But ask people the simple question under what category they would place Lord Dundreary, whether he is to be regarded as a fool or an out-of-the-way manifestation of shrewdness, and opinions are divided. According to the Mahomedan belief, fools and madmen are inspired. Is there not something Mahomedan in the manner in which Dundreary is regarded? We know that he is not quite cannie; but we hold that there is something oracular about his utterances. . . . He is a nature without ballast. His sense of the ludicrous is most keen, his perceptive faculties are even over-developed. He grasps blindly at most original notions, and these slip away from him for want of tenacity of brain and continuity of thought. Power of concentration he has none. He thinks of too many things at a time, and cannot even finish an anecdote, some image totally foreign to the subject arising in his mind and chasing from his consciousness all that has gone before. The merest trifle puts him out. He has, as it were, no back to his head, and consequently no backbone to his character. Those who regard Dundreary as a mere stuttering fop are utterly mistaken. He is, as we have said, a man without ballast—an incomplete man. He might have been as logical as the best of us; shone forth as a mathematician, a politician, an orator, what you will, had he not been subjected to a perpetual counteraction. He has impediments of all kinds—in speech, in gait, in eyesight, and, worst of all, in judgment. Moral respect he always commands, and none of the many laughs that are raised at his expense involve contempt. Whatever his deficiencies, he is a gentleman, a thoroughly kind-hearted gentleman too, and one utterly incapable of intentional rudeness or ill-nature."

No truer description of the whimsical figure which Sothorn conceived, elaborated, and so perfectly represented has yet been penned.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. HENRY J. BYRON does not seem to be exactly dead as a dramatist. Not only has "Cyril's Success" been revived, as we said it would be, at the Criterion, with some credit—the humanity of its conception and the pungency of its dialogue counting for much in explanation of the welcome again accorded to it; "Dearer than Life" has also been revived by Mr. Toole, who returns, with good effect, to his impersonation of Michael Garner.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER begins his management of the Avenue to-night with a French-founded farcical comedy adapted by Mr. Aidé, and a one-act piece by Mr. F. W. Broughton. But Mr. Alexander will not for the present be able to appear at the theatre which he controls. The continued success of the piece at the Adelphi—in which Miss Alma Murray and Miss Mary Rorke support him so loyally—necessitates his continued presence at the Messrs. Gatti's playhouse.

YESTERDAY afternoon there was doubtless produced, according to previous arrangements—but, it is to be feared, for this one time only—at the Chelsea Town Hall, a piece by Miss Rosina Filippi, of a kind quite unfamiliar in England, something of the nature of a revue in fine. It is called "An Idyll of New Year's Eve."

MISS CISSY GRAHAME will commence her season at Terry's Theatre on Saturday, February 8, with a new three-act play by Mr. Jerome K. Jerome, entitled "New Lamps for Old," in which Messrs. W. S. Penley, W. Les- tock, F. Kerr, and Bernard Gould, and Mesdames Gertrude Kingston, Houston, and Cissy Grahame will appear. On the same evening will be produced a new one-act rustic comedy, by Fred. Bowyer and W. Edwards Sprange, which will be played by Mesdames M. A. Giffard and Helen Leyton, and Messrs. Yorke Stephens and Oscar Adye.

ON the afternoon of February 14, at the Comedy, Mr. Walter Frith's "Home Feud" will be presented for the first time, with a cast including Messrs. Gardiner, Frank Rodney, Nutcombe Gould, Miss May Whitty, Miss Eva Moore, and Miss Gertrude Kingston. We understand that Mr. Rutland Barrington and Miss Jessie Bond—both of them true artists in comedy—will be seen, on the same occasion, in "Looked In."

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MR. HENSCHEL gave his fourth concert on Thursday evening, January 23. The first part of the programme included Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" Overture, Schubert's unfinished Symphony in B minor, and Grieg's "Peer Gynt" suite; and to these works, so different in character, no small measure of justice was done by the conductor and band. Afterwards came a novelty—a Symphonic poem in F by Mr. F. Praeger. The key to the work is a poetical superscription penned by the composer, in which life is considered from a pessimistic point of view. Whether such a conception is altogether suitable for musical expression may admit of doubt. Mr. Praeger has produced a tone-poem full of earnestness and rich colour. The theme of the Adagio has character, and the whole of the short Notturmo is delicate and expressive; but the first and last movements seem to us, on the whole, patchy. The four sections of the work follow one another continuously, after the manner of Schumann's "Symphony in one Movement."

At the close of the performance the composer was called twice to the platform. The programme concluded with the Introduction to the third act of "Die Meistersinger" and the "Tannhäuser" Overture. Throughout the evening Mr. Henschel kept his forces under excellent control. In fact, he conducted at his best, and the loud applause from a large audience was fully deserved. Mr. Henschel may also be congratulated specially on the arrangement and also the moderate length of his programmes.

On the following evening Sir Charles Hallé gave his third orchestral concert at St. James's Hall. After Weber's "Euryanthe" Overture and Grieg's "Melody" in G, "Spring"—the one rendered with great spirit, and the other with great refinement—came the novelty of the evening, an "Intermezzo" from Svendsen's Symphony in B flat. The music is bright, effective, and well-scored. It seemed a pity not to produce the whole work. M^{me}. Néruda gave a finished interpretation of Spohr's Concerto in A minor, no. 8. The second part of the programme was devoted to the instrumental music of Berlioz's Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet." The earlier portions seem to lose by being detached from the work; but the lovely Adagio (love scene) and the Queen Mab Scherzo appear complete in themselves. The former, with its plaintive and passionate themes, with its exquisitely varied rhythms, and the latter, with its characteristic orchestration, were admirably played. We were only sorry not to see a larger audience to enjoy the musical treat provided.

Herr Stavenhagen was pianist at the last Monday Popular Concert. He first played the Minuet and Trio from Schubert's Sonata in G, and in this displayed the charm and delicacy of his touch. He afterwards gave the "Papillons" of Schumann (op. 2). Despite one or two licences, [the general reading was good, and the pianist has evidently carefully thought out the music. He failed, however, in spite of his added note, to bring out the pedal point in the finale. He also omitted nos. 2 and 10 altogether. He was encored, and played something of Liszt's. It really seemed a pity that so excellent a pianist should not have been heard in some solid work. A movement from a Sonata and a mutilated "Papillons" is what one might expect to find at some ordinary miscellaneous concert. Mr. Chapell would never think of giving one movement from a Beethoven Quartet, followed by a portion of a Mozart Quintet. The programme included Schumann's Quartet in A minor splendidly performed, Beethoven's Septet with the usual cast, and some songs by Schubert, Henschel, and Brahms, well sung by Miss M. Hall. The room was crowded.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE Crystal Palace Concerts will be resumed next Saturday afternoon, on which occasion Herr Stavenhagen will be pianist. At the following concert Miss F. Davies will introduce a Pianoforte Concerto by Rosenhain. Mr. Hamish MacCunn's Cantata, "Bonny Kilmeny," will be given on March 8. Dr. Joachim will appear on March 15, and take part, with M. R. Gillet, in Brahms' Concerto for violin, 'cello, and orchestra.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

WILKIE COLLINS'S LAST NOVEL.—8 vols., at every Library.

BLIND LOVE. By Wilkie Collins. With a Preface

by WALTER BESANT, and 36 Illustrations by A. Forester.

"The incidents of 'Blind Love' are as startling, its situations as dramatic, as those of 'The Woman in White'; while the greater maturity of Mr. Collins's talent is perceptible in its more complete character-sketches and the genuine vein of pathos that runs throughout."—Morning Post.

CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW NOVEL.—8 vols., crown 8vo, at all Libraries.

AN OCEAN TRAGEDY. By W. Clark Russell,

Author of "The Romance of Jenny Harlowe," &c.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CARVED CARTOON."—2 vols., square 8vo, 12s., and at all Libraries.

FOR the LOVE of a LASS: a Tale of Tynedale. By

AUSTIN CLARE, Author of "A Child of the Menhir," &c.

"Excellent work and artistic perception go hand-in-hand in this 'Tale of Tynedale.' Full of deep human interest."—Morning Post.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE IRONMASTER."—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s., and at all Libraries.

A LAST LOVE: a Romance. By Georges Ohnet,

Author of "Dr. Rameau," &c. Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM.

ONE OF HENRY GREVILLE'S BEST NOVELS.—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s., and at all Libraries.

A NOBLE WOMAN. By Henry Greville. Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM.

"A story of high artistic finish and fresh dramatic power The author has achieved a great success."—Scotsman.

A NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "STORIES WEIRD AND WONDERFUL."

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s., and at all Libraries.

THE DEAD MAN'S SECRET; or, The Valley of

Gold; being a Narrative of Strange and Wild Adventure. By J. E. MUDDOCK, Author of "A Wingless Angel," &c. With a Frontispiece by F. Barnard.

"This narrative can fearlessly challenge comparison with any of the stirring tales of adventure that abound in our day."—Morning Post.

BRET HARTE'S NEW STORY.—Immediately, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 8s. 6d.

A WAIF OF THE PLAINS.

By BRET HARTE, Author of "The Luck of Roaring Camp."

With 60 Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood.

HENRY MURRAY'S NEW NOVEL.—Post 8vo, picture cover, 2s.; cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

A GAME OF BLUFF. By Henry Murray, joint-Author

with CHRISTIE MURRAY of "A Dangerous Catpaw."

"The story is full of go and incident, and is highly interesting from start to finish."—Whitehall Review.

MARK TWAIN'S NEW BOOK.—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

A YANKEE at the COURT of KING ARTHUR. By

MARK TWAIN. With 220 Illustrations by Dan. Beard.

"Undoubtedly one of the funniest books, if not absolutely the funniest, that Mark Twain has ever written, and it will be laughed at heartily by thousands of readers in both hemispheres."—Scotsman.

"A bizarre book, full of all kinds of laughable and delightful incongruities."—Truth.

"Some of the pages are excruciatingly funny, and there is not one in which a laugh does not lurk somewhere."—Manchester Examiner.

MR. EDWARD WALFORD'S NEW BOOK.

WILLIAM PITT: a Biography. By Edward Walford,

M.A., Editor of "The County Families," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

NEW VOLUME OF MCCARTHY'S "GEORGES."—Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 12s.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF

A HISTORY of the FOUR GEORGES. By Justin

MCCARTHY, M.P., Author of "A History of Our Own Times," &c.

"The book as a whole may be heartily recommended to readers of history, as a most interesting account of one of the most interesting reigns in the annals of England."—Scotsman.

A NEW PEEPAGE BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE COUNTY FAMILIES."

Immediately, Crown 8vo, handsomely bound, price 12s. 6d.

THE WINDSOR PEEPAGE, BARONETAGE, and

KNIGHTAGE (1890.) By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A., Author of "Tales of our Great Families," &c.

ONE SHILLING MONTHLY.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.—Contents for

FEBRUARY:—Mr. Ruskin, Artist and Publisher. By Percy Fitzgerald. On some Old Bee Masters. By R. C. Day. Some Johnson Characteristics. By H. W. Massingham. More about Models. By R. Graham. Sub Rosa. By George Holmes. Flodden's Fatal Field. By George Eyre-Todd. Robert Browning as a Teacher. By Mrs. Alex. Ireland. Crochet and Quaver Wit. By Frederick J. Crowest. How I found the Bunyan Warrant. By W. G. Thorpe. The Case against Compulsory Vaccination. By a Physician. Octogenarian Verses, A Chaucer Bibliography, Black-letter Chaucers. By Sylvanus Urban.

Handsomely half-bound, post 8vo, 2s. each.

THE ESSAYS OF ELIA. By Charles Lamb.

ROBINSON CRUSOE. (Major's Edition.) With

87 Illustrations By George Cruikshank.

ANECDOTES of the CLERGY. By Jacob Larwood.

GASTRONOMY as a FINE ART. By Brillat-

SAVAREN.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

Now ready, at all Bookstalls, price 1s., in paper cover.

MAD LOVE; or, an Artist's Dream.

Translated from the Russian of VSEVOLD GARCHIN.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 13, ST. BRIDE STREET.

CHEAP EDITION OF M. BETHAM-EDWARD'S NOVEL.

Now ready, at all Booksellers', picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

FORESTALLED.

By M. BETHAM EDWARDS, Author of "Kitty," "Felicia," &c.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET.

THE NEWBURY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

A Monthly Review and Family Magazine for Churchmen and Churchwomen.

ILLUSTRATED, Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS OF No. 2, Vol. II., FOR FEBRUARY, 1890.

- THE COURT at LAMBETH. By the Rev. MORRIS FULLER, M.A.
LAY and CLERICAL CONFERENCES.—Conference III. "The Position of the Church of England in regard to Marriage." By A. FRIVILKORD REPORTER.
BAPTISM for the DEAD.—Part II. By the Rev. J. W. HORSLEY, M.A.
JOSEPH BARBER LIGHTFOOT, D.D., IN MEMORIAM. By ALFRA.
ANTHONY VANDYCK. (Illustrated.) By G. S. MACQUOID.
SKETCHES IN CEYLON.—I. The Tomasha at Ratna-pura. By the Rev. W. WOOD, D.D.
THE PARISH and the MANOR: Six Centuries Ago. By the Rev. FREDERICK RANDOLPH.
A PETRIFIED TOWN. By the Rev. H. WILMOT-BUXTON, M.A.
PERE LACORDAIRE. By F. HITCHMAN.
"THE BISHOP'S BIBLE." Chapters XIX., XX., XXI. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY and H. HERMAN.
"SWEET CONTENT." Chapters VI., VII. (Illustrated.) By Mrs. MOLLERWORTH.
"BROWNIE'S LAST GALLOP": a Short Story. By the Rev. T. HUDSON, M.A.
POPULAR ASTRONOMY.—I. The Earth as a Planet. By H. CLEMENTS.
Sermon Outlines—Instruction on "the Creed"—Poetry—Sunday Evening Chats at the Yearage. II.—Biblical Questions—Correspondence—Reviews—"Useful Book" List, &c., &c.
GRIFFITH PARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, London.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW

For FEBRUARY.

- THE PORTUGUESE IN EAST AFRICA. By DANIEL J. RANKIN.
ONE VIEW OF THE QUESTION. By RUDYARD KIPLING.
LAND PURCHASE IN IRELAND. By T. W. RUSSELL, M.P.
MR. LABOUCHERE: the Democrat. By W. H. MALLOCK.
WAS IT A CRIME? By AMELIA RIVES CHARLES.
THE CITY OF THE CREED. By J. THEODORE BENT.
ART TEACHING AND TECHNICAL SCHOOLS. By LADY DILKE.
ENGLISH AND AMERICANS. By WM. MORTON FULLERTON.
RUSSIAN CHARACTERISTICS.—V. By E. B. LAMIN.
MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF. By MARION HEFORTH DIXON.
THE SWAZILAND QUESTION. (With Map.) By Sir HERCULES ROBINSON, O.C.M.G.
MR. GLADSTONE ON GERMAN LITERATURE. By KARL BLIND.
OXFORD TUTORIALS and their PROFESSORIAL CRITIC. By W. L. COURTNEY.
CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited.

"Growing bigger annually. It is also growing better....For those who have to do with Art and Artists it is simply indispensable. We do not know what we should do without it."—The Athenaeum.
"For compactness and comprehensiveness, this excellent manual might be described as the 'Whitaker' of the Art world."—St. James's Gazette.
"For all who are interested in Art and Artists it is invaluable."—Daily Telegraph.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

THE YEAR'S ART, 1890.

By MARCUS B. HUISE.

Containing a concise Epitome of all matters relating to the Arts of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture, which have occurred during the year 1889, together with information respecting the events of the year 1890. With Portraits of the Members of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours; and including the names and addresses of about 5,000 Artists.
London: J. S. VIRTUE & Co., Limited, 26, Ivy-lane, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.
FRANCIS BAYNEBROOK, Manager.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

No. 592.—FEBRUARY, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

- IN THE DAYS OF THE DANDIES.—II.
HIS UNCLE AND HER GRANDMOTHER.
LORD CHESTERFIELD.
THE EXPERIENCES OF A MULTAZIM. By A MEMBER OF LAWRENCE OLIPHANT'S COLONY.
LADY BABY.—CONCLUSION.
OLD BOSTON. By JOHN E. LOCKING.
CHARLES MACKAY'S LAST POEM.
MODERN MANNISH MAIDENS.
UNDER THE OAK, AND THE TRUE LOVER.
By COSMO MORFHOUSE.
WHAT I LEARNED IN IRELAND. By LEX PHILIP.
CURRENT INFLUENCES ON FOREIGN POLITICS.—II.
By KYPIOS.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS FOR FEBRUARY.

- THE POET'S HOME-GOING. By Rev. H. D. RAWNSLEY.
MARCIA. Chaps. 5-8. By W. E. MORRIS, Author of "Thirlby Hall," &c.
TWELVE HOURS OF NEW YORK. By COURT GLEICHEN.
UNION or ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL? By MONTAGUE SHEARMAN.
ERNEST FRANK. By Professor C. VILLIERS STANFORD.
AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS. Part II. By SAMUEL SMILES, Author of "Self Help," &c.
'BUSES and 'BUS-MEN. By MORLEY ROBERTS.
UP THE OBI to TOBOLSK. By VICTOR A. L. MORIER.
MISS BLAKE of MONKSALTON. Chaps. 5-7. (To be Continued.)
CORRESPONDENCE.—ST. ALBAN'S AGAIN. By LORD GRIMTHORPE.
NOTES OF THE MONTH, from LONDON, EDINBURGH, and PARIS.
OUR LIBRARY LIST.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

FEBRUARY. 2s. 6d.

- POLITICAL ECONOMY and STRIKES. By Sir GUILFORD MOLESWORTH, K.C.I.E.
THE FAIRY MYTHOLOGY OF IRELAND. By C. S. BOSWELL.
THE SECOND-CLASS CLERGY. By Rev. A. M. WILCOX.
A DIALOGUE with a MUMMY. By GIACOMO LEOPARDI.
LOCAL GOVERNMENT for IRELAND. By EARL FORTESCUE.
TEMPERANCE and the PUBLIC HOUSES. By R. E. MACNAUGHTEN.
FIRDAUSI'S LYRICAL POETRY. By CHARLES J. PICKERING.
RANDOM RECOLLECTIONS OF CORSICA. By CREIL F. PARR.
THE SIEGE OF HELICON. By WILLIAM WATSON.
OUT OF THE DEPTHS. By Hon. A. E. GATHORNE HARDY, M.P.
POLITICS at HOME and ABROAD.
CORRESPONDENCE.

London: W. H. ALLEN & Co., 13 Waterloo-place.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR FEBRUARY.

- THE ROAD to AUSTRALIAN FEDERATION. By Sir C. GAVAN DUFFY.
BISHOP LIGHTFOOT. By Archbishop FARREAR, D.D.
OXFORD PROFESSORS and OXFORD TUTORIALS: The Examiners' Reply. By Professor S. R. GARDINER and others.
THE FUTURE OF ENGLISH MONARCHY. By FRANK H. HILL.
MR. BARING-GOULD'S NOVELS. By J. M. BARRIE.
THE CRITICAL STUDY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By Canon S. R. DRIVER, D.D.
DEFOE'S WIFE. By G. A. AITKEN.
THE EIGHT HOURS QUESTION. By R. B. HALDANE, Q.C., M.P.
PHILOSOPHICAL BUDDHISM in TIBET. By GRAHAM SANDBERG.
RECOLLECTIONS OF A VOYAGE with GENERAL GORDON. By W. H. SPENCE.
THE TAXATION OF GROUND VALUES. By C. H. SARGANT.
UNIONIST FUSION. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD.
LONDON & Co., Limited, 15 & 16, Tavistock-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

THIS PART BEGINS A NEW VOLUME.

Price Sevenpence.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL

FOR FEBRUARY.

Contents:

- MY SHIPMATE LOUISE: The Romance of a Wreck. By W. CLARK RUSSELL.
THE LABOUR COLONIES OF HOLLAND.
JULIUS VERNON: A Story of Hyde Park.
CURIOSITIES IN OUR ANCIENT CHURCHES.
JIM THE TRAMP. COMPLIMENTS.
LEPERS IN CANADA. THE VACUERO.
HOW OUR DRUGS ARE IMPORTED.
A MEMORABLE GAME OF CHESS.
THE STORY OF A WOMAN-HATER.
THE BELLS OF LONDON. THE GIANT SUN.
IN A REGIMENTAL ORDERLY-ROOM.
FUGITIVE FACTS FROM NORMANDY.
SOME PREDICTIONS AND COINCIDENCES.
ABOUT COMMON COLDS AND THE INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC.
By a London Physician.
WITH ROD AND GUN IN THE HIMALAYAS.
THE MONTH: SCIENCE AND ARTS.
TABLET TRAIN-SIGNALLING.
PORTCULL PIERCE.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL for February.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

FEBRUARY. Price 2s. 6d.

- NATURAL RIGHTS and POLITICAL RIGHTS. By Professor HUXLEY.
THE FUTURE OF RUSSIA in ASIA. By ARMINIUS VAMBEY.
THE ILLUSTRATION OF BOOKS and NEWSPAPERS. By HENRY BLACKBURN.
A CHINESE VIEW OF RAILWAYS IN CHINA. (With a Map.) By FUNG YEE.
PLAY and PLAYERS on the RIVIERA. By W. FRASER RAE.
THE CLUT OF JUNIOR OFFICERS in the ARMY. By General Sir JOHN ADYE.
THE NATURALIST on the PAMPAS. By W. H. HUDSON.
THE LAND and its OWNERS in PAST TIMES (AD POPULUM). By the Rev. Dr. JESSOP.
CRETE and the SPHAKIOTS. By CHARLES EDWARDS.
PARTY PROSPECTS. By T. E. KESSEL.
DANTE and the "NEW REFORMATION." By J. W. CROSS.
THE WORKING OF "THE PEOPLE'S PALACE." By Sir EDMUND HAY CURRIE.
London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, & Co., Limited.

NOW READY FOR FEBRUARY.

THE EXPOSITOR,

Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS.

- The late BISHOP of DURHAM—INTERNAL EVIDENCE for the AUTHENTICITY and GENUINENESS OF ST. JOHN'S GOSPEL.
Rev. Prof. W. SANDAY, D.D.—IN MEMORIAM Dr. EDWIN HATCH.
Rev. J. R. GILLIES, M.A.—JEHOVAH RESTING: ISAIAH'S CONCEPTION OF HISTORY.
Rev. Principal J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.—THE WATERS OF LIFE.
Rev. Prof. J. AGAR LEEB.—THE UNIVERSAL PURPOSE OF SALVATION.
Rev. Prof. J. RAWSON LUMBY, D.D.—I PETER III. 17.
Rev. Prof. A. B. BRUCE, D.D.—THE MORE EXCELLENT MINISTRY.
London: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 47, PATERNOSTER-ROW.

KNOWLEDGE.—AN ILLUSTRATED

MAGAZINE OF SCIENCE, simply worded and exactly described, Edited by A. COWPER RAYNARD. The FEBRUARY NUMBER contains Articles on—THE DISTANCES OF THE FIXED STARS. By A. C. RAYNARD.—COMPLETE LIST OF STELLAR PARALLAXES. By HERBERT SADLER.—THE COMMON FLEA. By C. A. BUTLER.—THE NEW COMET IDENTIFIED. By E. E. BARNARD.—ARCHAEOLOGICAL NOTES. By S. PAGE.—THE COLLOTYPE PROCESS and PHOTO-ENGRAVING.—ON SOME PROPERTIES OF NUMBERS. By R. W. D. CHRISTIE.—WALKS in the SYDNEY BOTANIC GARDEN. By C. PARKINSON.—PHOTOGRAPHS of the SUN'S SURFACE. By A. C. RAYNARD.—THE FACE of the SKY for FEBRUARY.—LETTERS.—CHESS and WHIST, &c.

Price SIXPENCE MONTHLY.

London: W. H. ALLEN & Co., 13, Waterloo-place; and at all Booksellers and Halfway Bookstalls.

Fifth Edition, 8vo, cloth, 18s.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK, Bt., M.P., &c.—
PREHISTORIC TIMES as illustrated by ANCIENT REMAINS and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. Fifth Edition, xviii. and 587 pp. Many Plates and Woodcuts.
WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week 5 lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
Every Evening, at 8, LONDON DAY BY DAY.
Mr. Geo. Alexander; Messrs. Marius, Beveridge, Shine, Rignold, Abingdon, Balfour, Wilfred, Russell, East, &c.; Mesdames A. Murray, M. Rorker, K. James, C. Elliot, and Clara Jacks.
Preceded, at 7.15, by POLLY'S VENTURE.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, PINK DOMINOES.
Messrs. Herbert Standing, Alfred Maltby, A. Boncloult, E. Dagnall, Williams, Beards, and C. H. Hawtry; Mesdames Rose Baker, Goldney, Robertson, Lydia Cowell, and Alma Stanley.
Preceded, at 8, by ONE SUMMER NIGHT.
Messrs. Day, Lugg, Boncloult, &c.; Miss Richards, &c.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
THIS DAY, at 1.30 and 7.15, JACK AND THE BEANSTALK.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. F. R. BENSON.
Every Evening, at 8, Thursdays and Fridays excepted, Shakespeare's Fairy Comedy, with the Mendelssohn incidental Music.
A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.
MATINEES of A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, every Saturday and Wednesday, at 3.30. Overture, 2.15. Every Thursday and Friday Evening, at 8, until further notice, Shakespeare's Comedy, THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.—GLOBE THEATRE.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BRECKEN-THORN.
Every evening, at 8.30, A MAN'S SHADOW.
Messrs. Tree, Fernandes, Kemble, C. Collette, E. M. Robson, Allan, Harcourt, Tapping, Gurney, and Harwood; Mesdames Tree, Minnie Terry, Norriss, and Julia Nelson.
Preceded, at 7.45, by GOOD FOR NOTHING, Miss Norriss.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE

Every Evening, at 7.45, MASTER AND MAN.
Messrs. Henry Neville, J. H. Barnes, Robert Pateman, Bassett Roe, C. Dalton, E. W. Gardiner, Sidney Howard, F. Shepherd, Geo. Daisell, E. Meyer, E. W. Lawson, Morton Baker, &c.; Mesdames Bella Pateman, Fanny Brough, — Huntly, &c.

SHAFESBURY THEATRE.

Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LART, Lessees and Managers.
Every Evening, at 8, THE MIDDLEMAN.
Messrs. Willard, Mackintosh, E. W. Garden, H. Cane, H. V. Esmond, Ivan Watson, C. Crofton, W. E. Blatchley, E. Keith, Mesdames M. Millett, A. Hughes, E. H. Brooke, A. Verity, St. Ange, E. Moore, &c.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical comedy in London, OUR FLAT.
Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.
Every Evening, at 8, THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL.
Messrs. Fred Thorne, Thalberg, Cyril Maude, Frank Gillmore, J. S. Blythe, F. Grove, Oswald York, C. Herjary, Wheatman, J. Horton, Leigh, and John Maclean; Mesdames Mary Collette, Coralie Owen, L. Beyer, Hanbury, and Winifred Emery.

NIAGARA IN LONDON.

Colossal PICTURE of the GREAT FALLS. Original effects by Philip-potauz. Pleasant lounge, music, American sweetmeat store. Refreshments by Beguinot. Electric light. Building cooled throughout. Admission 1s. 10 to 10.—York-street, Westminster (St James's-park Station). Second year. Nearly one million visitors.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

THERE IS
No Nourishment in Tea or Coffee
but
PLENTY IN COCOA especially in
VAN HOUTEN'S
which
UTILISES IN THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE DEGREE
All the Flesh-forming Elements
while Developing the Flavour and Aroma.
ORIGINAL PATENTORS.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,
19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

EPPS'S

(BREAKFAST)

COCOA.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING

MADE SIMPLY WITH BOILING WATER OR MILK.

GOLD PEN,
WITH DIAMOND POINT.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

MEMORY. A. LOISETTE'S
SYSTEM.—"I was impressed with the possibilities of improvement to Memory which your Lectures in Cambridge opened up."—R. N. Ingle, M.A., M.D., University Lecturer
(Jan., '90), "Physiological, scientific."—Dr. Andrew
Wilson (April, '83). "We again recommend the system."—Dr. Wilson (Jan., '89). "Great advantage to strong memory, incalculable aid to weak one."—
Dr. Buckley. "Excellent travelling companion."—
Capt. J. B. Hays, R.N.—Apply 87, New-Oxford
Street, London.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT

OF MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

CATALOGUES POST-FREE.

S. FISHER, 188, STRAND.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW BOOK BY SIR CHARLES DILKE, BART.

PROBLEMS OF GREATER BRITAIN.

BY THE RIGHT HON. SIR CHARLES DILKE, BART.

With Maps. 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

* * This is in no sense a new edition of the well-known "Greater Britain." That was a record of travel, which, though still in demand, is necessarily in some points antiquated. Not seeing his way to incorporate new facts or correct old statements in such a way as to produce a satisfactory result, Sir Charles Dilke thought it best to produce an entirely new book upon the same subjects as those treated in the original work, but dealt with from the point of view of political and social observation and comparison, rather than from that of descriptive sight-seeing. The new book, therefore, is not a book of travel, but a treatise on the present position of Greater Britain, in which special attention has been given to the relation of the English-speaking countries with one another, and to comparative politics of the countries under British Government.

LEAVES of a LIFE. Being the Reminiscences of Montagu Williams, Q.C. 2 vols., 8vo.

[Ready February 11th.]

WILLIAM GEORGE WARD and the OXFORD MOVEMENT. By Wilfrid Ward. New Edition, Revised, with additions, 8vo, 14s.

The Quarterly Review says:—"This is a charming example of the biographer's art. . . . Not every son can be trusted to produce a fair delineation of a parent's life, or is able to inspire his readers with confidence in the discrimination or judgment brought by him to the execution of so delicate an undertaking. . . . But in regard to the volumes before us, if it is at first approached with the distrust which experience has taught, we are sure that it will gradually fade away as the reader advances, and before the end is reached will be replaced by its opposite. The result is a portraiture of the man in his sparkling and combative prime, which, for brightness and charm, must be allowed to rank high amongst the most successful specimens of psychological delineation."

ENGLISH MEN OF ACTION—New Volume.

PETERBOROUGH. By Mr. W. Stebbing. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The Volumes already issued in this Series, 2s. 6d. each, are:—GENERAL GORDON. By Colonel Sir WILLIAM BUTLER.—HENRY the FIFTH. By the Rev. A. J. CHURCH.—LIVINGSTONE. By Mr. THOMAS HUGHES.—LORD LAWRENCE. By Sir RICHARD TEMPLE.—WELLINGTON. By Mr. GEORGE HOOPER.—DAMPIER. By Mr. W. CLARK RUSSELL.—MONK. By Mr. JULIAN CORBETT.—STRAFFORD. By Mr. H. D. TRAILL.—WARREN HASTINGS. By Sir ALFRED LYALL.

* * Other Volumes are in the press and in preparation.

A NEW NOVEL.

THE NEW CONTINENT. By Mrs. Worthey. In

2 Vols. Globe 8vo, 12s.

St. James's Gazette says:—"Perhaps the best part in the book is the description of life at Queen's College, Harley-street; but there is plenty of clever writing in it." Athenaeum says:—"The New Continent" is an honest effort at autobiography, and as such cannot fail to have an interest for many readers."

MR. F. MARION CRAWFORD'S NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, Uniform Edition, price 3s. 6d. each. Vols. I.—V. ready.

MR. ISAACS.
DR. CLAUDIUS
A ROMAN SINGER.

ZOROASTER
MARZIO'S CRUCIFIX
A TALE OF A LONELY PARISH.

Now Publishing Monthly, 3s. 6d. each. Vols. I. to XVII. ready.

THE WORKS OF CHARLES KINGSLEY.

A New and Cheaper Edition.

WESTWARD HO!
HYFATIA.
YEAST.
ALTON LOCKE.
TWO YEARS AGO.
REVEREND.
FOMEL.
THE HEROES.

THE WATER BABIES.
MADAM HOW AND LADY
WAT.
AT LAST.
PEOPLE IDYLLS.
PLAYS AND PURITANS, &c.
THE ROMAN AND THE TEUTON.

SANITARY AND SOCIAL
LECTURES AND ESSAYS.
HISTORICAL LECTURES
AND ESSAYS.
SCIENTIFIC LECTURES
AND ESSAYS.
LITERARY AND GENERAL
LECTURES. [March.]

* * Other Volumes to follow.

A NEW BOOK BY MR. LEWIS CARROLL.

SYLVIE and BRUNO. By Lewis Carroll, Author of

"Alice in Wonderland," "Through the Looking Glass," &c. With 40 Illustrations by Harry Furniss. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

* * The volume contains 395 pages, nearly as many as in the two "Alice" books together.

A HISTORY of the LATER ROMAN EMPIRE from

ARCADIUS to IRENE, A.D. 395—800. By JOHN B. BURY, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Dublin. 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

The Saturday Review says:—"Mr. Bury's merits are his grasp of the structural methods of history and the copious erudition which a right knowledge of method is sure to call to its equipment. . . . We recognise in Mr. Bury a well-equipped student, with a firm grasp upon the essential points of his subject. . . . His volumes are the fruit of diligent and independent work amongst a mass of difficult materials, and will have to be reckoned with by all who follow in his steps. . . . Still more, he has done his best to reproduce the life, the art, and the learning of Byzantium. Perhaps his chapters on the literature of the times and his estimates of the authorities whom he follows will have the most enduring influence on English scholars."

THE LIBRARY REFERENCE ATLAS of the WORLD.

A complete Series of 84 Modern Maps. By JOHN BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. With Geographical Index to 100,000 places. Half-morocco, gilt edges, folio, £2 12s 6d. net. * * This work has been designed with the object of supplying the public with a thoroughly complete and accurate Atlas of Modern Geography, in a convenient reference form, and at a moderate price.

THE GOSPEL according to ST. MATTHEW. Being the Greek Text as Revised by Drs. Westcott and Hort. With Introduction and Notes by Rev. A. SLOMAN, M.A., Head Master of Birkenhead School. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

The English Illustrated Magazine

For FEBRUARY, profusely Illustrated, price 6d., by post 8d., contains:—

- 1.—THE CHATEAU DE PAILLE. After ROBERTS. Frontispiece
- 2.—THE HALL and the WOOD. WILLIAM MORRIS
- 3.—A WHITECHAPEL STREET. E. DIXON. Illustrated by HUGH THOMSON.
- 4.—HOW to SPEND SUNDAY. Rev. FREDERICK EYTON.
- 5.—WINCHELSKA. Mrs. COMPTON CARR. Illustrated.
- 6.—"O' FISCO. Sir JULIAN GOLDMID, Bart., M.P.
- 7.—BELLS and BELFRIES. Rev. H. K. HAWES, M.A. Illustrated.
- 8.—THE PROFESSOR'S PIANO. Miss CLEMENTINA BLACK.
- 9.—TWO AFRICAN CITIES. HAROLD CRICHTON-BROWNE. With Illustrations.
- 10.—CYCLE of SIX LOVE-LYRICS.—III. "HE PASSIONATELY BEWAILS HER ABSENCE." Words by JOSEPH BERNETT. Music by HAMISH MACCORM.
- 11.—FEBRUARY. A Decorated Page. HAYWOOD SUMNER.
- 12.—THE KING of AMASIS. Chaps. VI. and VII. The EARL of LYTTON.

Now ready. NEW and CHEAPER EDITION, in 2 vols. extra crown 8vo, 25s.

THE AMERICAN COMMONWEALTH. By James

BRYCE, M.P., D.C.L., Regius Professor of Civil Law in the University of Oxford. Author of "The Holy Roman Empire."

Part I. THE NATIONAL GOVERNMENT. Part II. THE STATE GOVERNMENTS. Part III. THE PARTY SYSTEM. Part IV. PUBLIC OPINION. Part V. ILLUSTRATIONS AND REFLECTIONS. Part VI. SOCIAL INSTITUTIONS.

ANNALS of SCOTTISH PRINTING, from the Intro-

DUCTION of the ART in 1507 to the BEGINNING of the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. By ROBERT DICKSON, L.R.C.S.E., and JOHN PHILIP EDMOND. Demy 4to, limited to 500 copies, £2 2s. net; Royal 4to, in 2 vols., limited to 100 copies, £4 4s. net.

* * The lives of all the Scottish printers to the beginning of the seventeenth century are given, together with an exact biographical account of each of their books, and occasional short notices of the writers.

THUCYDIDES.—Book IV. A Revision of the Text, illustrating the Principal Causes of Corruption in the Manuscript of this Author. By WILLIAM GUNION RUTHERFORD, M.A., LL.D., Head Master of Westminster. Author of "The New Phrynichus," and Editor of "Fabrius." 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HERODOTUS.—THE HISTORY. Translated into

English, with Notes and Indices. By G. C. MACAULAY, M.A., formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. 2 vols. Crown 8vo, 18s.

XENOPHON, The WORKS of. Translated into English, with Introduction and Notes, by H. G. DAKYNS, M.A., Assistant Master in Clifton College. In 4 vols. Vol. I., containing "The Anabasis"; and Books I. and II. of "The Hellenica." Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SYNTAX of the MOODS and TENSES of the GREEK

VERB. By W. W. GOODWIN, Professor of Greek Literature in Harvard University. New Edition, Rewritten and Enlarged. 8vo, 14s.

MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.—New Volume.

LIVY.—LEGENDS of ANCIENT ROME, from LIVY.

Adapted and Edited, with Notes, Exercises, and Vocabularies, by HERBERT WILKINSON, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

MILTON.—COMUS. Edited, with Introduction and

Notes, by WILLIAM BELL, M.A., Professor of Logic and Philosophy, Government College, Lahore. Globe 8vo, 1s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED.

APPLIED MECHANICS: an Elementary General Introduction to the Theory of Structures and Machines. By JAMES H. COTTERILL, F.R.S., Professor of Applied Mechanics in the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, &c. Second Edition, Revised. Medium 8vo, 18s.

ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS of PARTICLES and

SOLIDS. By W. M. HICKS, M.A., F.R.S., Principal, Firth College, Sheffield; late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo.

[Next week.]

Macmillan's Magazine,

Price 1s. No. 364, for FEBRUARY, contains:—

- 1.—KINSTEEN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Chapters XXI.—XXIV.
- 2.—TO ROBERT BROWNING. By AUGUST DE VERR.
- 3.—THE AMERICAN BORDERERS. By A. G. BRADLEY.
- 4.—LORD CHESTERFIELD. By AUGUSTINE HERBERT, M.P.
- 5.—THE DIARY of a SUCCESSFUL MAN.
- 6.—OXFORD, DEMOCRATIC and POPULAR.
- 7.—THE BALLAD of the KING'S JEST. By YOUNG.
- 8.—MADAME D'AMBLAY. By K. S. SMOCKBURN.
- 9.—LOCHGOIL.
- 10.—MIRIO DIABLO. By W. H. HUDSON.
- 11.—CANDOUR in ENGLISH FICTION. By AN EDITOR.

MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 927.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW NOVEL.—Now ready, 3 vols., crown 8vo, at all Libraries.
AN OCEAN TRAGEDY. By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Romance of Jenny Harlowe," &c.

"The reader is held breathless with the intense and growing interest of the narrative.....The dialogue is peculiarly brisk, vivid, and individual.....No more stirring tale of the sea could be wished."—Scottish Leader.

WILKIE COLLINS'S LAST NOVEL.—3 vols., at every Library.
BLIND LOVE. By WILKIE COLLINS, Author of "The Woman in White." Second Edition. With a Preface by WALTER BESANT, and 38 Illustrations by A. Forester.

"The incidents of 'Blind Love' are as startling, its situations as dramatic, as those of 'The Woman in White'; while the greater maturity of Mr. Collins's talent is perceptible in its more complex character-sketches and the genuine vein of pathos that runs throughout."—Morning Post.
"He must be more than commonly fastidious whom the story will not please.....The plot is intricate, yet conducted with such skill as awakes a keen interest soon, and keeps it always alive."—Scotsman.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CARVED CARTOON."—2 vols., square 8vo, 12s., and at all Libraries.
FOR the LOVE of a LASS: a Tale of Tynedale. By AUSTIN CLARE, Author of "A Child of the Meuhir," &c.

"Excellent work and artistic perception go hand-in-hand in this 'Tale of Tynedale.'.....Full of deep human interest."—Morning Post.

HAWLEY SMART'S NEW NOVEL.—Immediately, 8 vols., at every Library.
WITHOUT LOVE or LICENCE. By HAWLEY SMART, Author of "Breezie Langton," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE IRONMASTER."—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s., and at all Libraries.
A LAST LOVE. By GEORGES OHNET, Author of "Dr. Rameau," &c. Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM.

ONE OF HENRY GREVILLE'S BEST NOVELS.—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s., and at all Libraries.
A NOBLE WOMAN. By HENRY GREVILLE. Translated by ALBERT D. VANDAM.

"A story of high artistic finish and fresh dramatic power.....The author has achieved a great success."—Scotsman.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "STORIES WEIRD AND WONDERFUL."—With a Frontispiece by F. Barnard, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.
THE DEAD MAN'S SECRET; or, The Valley of Gold. By J. E. MUDDOCK, Author of "A Wingless Angel."

"This narrative can fearlessly challenge comparison with any of the stirring tales of adventure that abound in our day.....Introduces the reader to the still unfamiliar region of the Republic of Ecuador, of whose magnificent natural features, inhabitants, and local customs he gives many and graphic descriptions."—Morning Post.

BRET HARTE'S NEW STORY.—Immediately, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.
A WAIF of the PLAINS. By BRET HARTE, Author of "The Luck of Roaring Camp." With 60 Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood.

HENRY MURRAY'S NEW NOVEL.—Post 8vo, picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.
A GAME of BLUFF. By HENRY MURRAY, joint-Author with CHRISTIE MURRAY, of "A Dangerous Catpaw."

"The story is full of go and incident, and is highly interesting from start to finish."—Whitehall Review.

MARK TWAIN'S NEW BOOK.—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.
A YANKEE at the COURT of KING ARTHUR. By MARK TWAIN. With 220 Illustrations by Dan. Beard.

"The delicious satire, the marvellous wit, the wild, free, fantastic humour, are the colours of the tapestry, while the texture is a humanity that lives in every fibre. At every moment the scene amuses."—Harper's Magazine.

NEW VOLUME OF MCCARTHY'S "GEORGES."—Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 12s.
THE SECOND VOLUME OF
A HISTORY of the FOUR GEORGES. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P., Author of "A History of Our Own Times," &c.

"The book as a whole may be heartily recommended to readers of history, as a most interesting account of one of the most interesting reigns in the annals of England."—Scotsman.

Handsomely half-bound, post 8vo, 2s. each.
ROBINSON CRUSOE. (Major's Edition.) With 37 Illustrations by George Cruikshank.

THE ESSAYS of ELIA. By CHARLES LAMB.

GASTRONOMY as a FINE ART. (A Translation of BRILLAT-SAVARIN'S "Physiologie du Gout," by R. E. ANDERSON.

ANECDOTES of the CLERGY. By JACOB LARWOOD.

WORKS BY EDWARD WALFORD, M.A., NOW IN THE PRESS.
WALFORD'S NEW WINDSOR PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, and KNIGHT-
AGE (1890). Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. 6d.

WALFORD'S COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM (1890).
Twenty-ninth Annual Edition. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 50s.

WALFORD'S SHILLING PEERAGE (1890). | WALFORD'S SHILLING KNIGHTAGE (1890).
WALFORD'S SHILLING BARONETAGE (1890). | WALFORD'S SHILLING HOUSE of COMMONS (1890).
WALFORD'S COMPLETE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE, and HOUSE of COMMONS (1890). Royal 32mo, cloth extra, gilt edges, 6s.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THREE HISTORICAL BOOKS, by O. ELTON	91
VERNON'S READINGS OF THE PURGATORIO, by PAGET TOTTER	92
EMERSON'S ENGLISH IDYLS, by the late Rev. H. S. FAGAN	93
BAIN'S QUEEN CHRISTINA OF SWEDEN, by O. E. DAWKINS	94
PROF. PRITCHARD'S THOUGHTS OF AN ASTRONOMER ON RELIGION, by the Rev. J. OWEN	94
BAKER'S MONOPOLIES AND THE PEOPLE, by Prof. EDGEWORTH	95
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	96
BOOKS OF TRAVEL	97
NOTES AND NEWS	98
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	99
TRANSLATION: "THE SHAFERER," by G. R. MERRY	99
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	100
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	100
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"Kempas" in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, by the Rev. O. Plummer; An Attempt to reform the Procedure of the Privy Council under Elizabeth, by Prof. B. Alexandrenko; The Daybook of John Dorne, by J. G. Milne; Yes Tor, by Prof. J. Westlake	100
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	101
POSTGATE'S EDITION OF CATULLUS, by ROBINSON ELLIS	101
TWO RECENT WORKS ON PHYSICAL SCIENCE	102
THE NEXT ORIENTAL CONGRESS	103
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Yenisei Inscriptions, by Robert Brown, Jun.; The Lycian Language, by W. Arkwright	103
SCIENCE NOTES	104
PHILOLOGY NOTES	104
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	105
THE OLD MASTERS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE, III., by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	105
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Mutilation of Monuments in Egypt, by Lieut.-Col. J. C. Ross	107
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	107
THE NEW START AT THE AVENUE, by F. WEDMORE	108
STAGE NOTES	108
MUSIC NOTES	108

CHEMISTRY.—An Analytical Chemist, Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry, &c., can RECEIVE a PUPIL into his Laboratory, where he would be thoroughly trained for the profession.—No. 671, ACADEMY OFFICE, 27, CHANCERY-LANE, W.C.

TO AUTHORS.—MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS, 18, Bouverie-street, Fleet-street, London, E.C., are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS., and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. Digby & Long have also every convenience and ample facilities for the publication of MAGAZINES. Editorial offices if required.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—Mrs. TIRARD (Miss HELEN BELOR) will give, during Lent, TWO COURSES OF LECTURES TO LADIES, in the BRITISH MUSEUM, on "THE LIFE AND THE RELIGION OF ANCIENT EGYPT."—Syllabus, &c., by letter only, from Miss C. GOLDSMID, 3, Observatory Avenue, Kensington, W.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHOR'S MSS., PLAYS, and all kinds of COPYING executed quickly and accurately. Terms, 1s. per 1,000 words. Satisfaction guaranteed. Shorthand taught (Script System). Schools attended. Terms moderate.—Address F. BAILEY, 19, Albert-square, Stratford, E.

ART UNION of LONDON.—Subscription, One Guinea. Every Subscriber receives a set of Eight choice Engravings by Burgess, Holloway, Morris, Ridley, Robertson, and Bloombome, besides a choice of one of the numerous valuable prizes.—The LIST will CLOSE MARCH 31. The work is now ready. FRAS. BEEBECH, Hon. Sec. 119, Strand, February, 1890.

FRENCH, GERMAN, SPANISH, ITALIAN, DANISH.—Advertiser undertakes to TEACH these Five Languages thoroughly by correspondence. Terms, 30s. a month, including postage for correspondence every day (except Sunday), or 2s. 6d. per lesson.—For particulars, "LINGUIST," Stansby's Library, 179, Sloane-street, S.W.

RUSKIN'S "MODERN PAINTERS."—Hand-made paper (1890, £11 11s. Edition), 5 vols., and Index Volume complete, New Copy, uncut edges. The market price of this work is now £18. OFFERS requested.—RUSKIN'S STONES OF VENICE, hand-made paper, last edition, New Copy, uncut edges, complete in 3 vols., for £18 10s. (published price)—Address "OMEGA," care of Messrs. Deacons, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

MISS GEISLER SCHUBERT and Miss FILLINGER'S TWO CHAMBER CONCERTS at PRINCE'S HALL, on WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 12, and WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20, at 3 o'clock, assisted by Herr Straus (violin), Mr. Whitehouse (violinello), Stanley Lucas, Weber, & Co., 64, New Bond-street; Chappell & Co., 50, New Bond-street; Prince's Hall; and of Miss Geisler Schubert, 61, Addison-road, Kensington, and Miss Fillingier, 80, Queensberry-place, Queen's-gate.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM, 13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.

ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, AND SCULPTURE. OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS and THURSDAYS in FEBRUARY and MARCH, and on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS in APRIL, MAY, JUNE, JULY, and AUGUST. Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained of the CURATOR at the Museum.

Mr. WILLIAM HEINEMANN has pleasure in announcing that the First Edition of

Mr. HALL CAINE'S NEW SAGA, "THE BONDMAN" (3 vols.), has been disposed of within a week of publication, and that a Second Edition (now in active preparation) will be at all Libraries early next week.

The Scotsman (first review) proclaims "The Bondman" the best novel of modern times, and fit to rank with the most powerful fictional writing of the past century; while the Scottish Leader (second review) is convinced that "the new Saga will be heard of, not over the blazing logs as of old, but over the counters of the Libraries, which are the modern Sagaman's delight."

READY EARLY NEXT WEEK.

HAUNTINGS: Fantastic Stories. IDLE MUSINGS: Studies in Social

By VERNON LEE, Author of "Euphorion,"
"The Prince of the Hundred Soups," &c., &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Mosaic.
By CONDER GRAY, Author of "Wise Words and Loving Deeds," &c., &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

BRITISH INSTITUTION SCHOLARSHIP FUND.—THE TRUSTEES OF THE FUND HEREBY GIVE NOTICE that in the month of JULY, 1890, they will proceed to the ELECTION OF FIVE SCHOLARS, two in PAINTING, one in SCULPTURE, one in ARCHITECTURE, and one in ENGRAVING. The Scholarships are of the value of £50, and tenable for two years. Candidates must be not less than seventeen nor more than twenty-three years of age on July 1st, 1890. Subject to this limitation of age:—The Scholarships in Painting, Sculpture, and Engraving are open to all Art Students who have obtained Gold Medals, Silver Medals for work done from the Life (&c.), a Painting, a Drawing, or a Model from the Nude, or Scholarships, or Money Prizes of the minimum value of £15, in any Art School in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in which the study of the Nude Living Figure forms part of the ordinary course of study; and the Scholarship in Architecture to all Art Students who have obtained Gold Medals, or Scholarships, or Money Prizes of the minimum value of £10 in any Art School in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. A list of the works to be submitted in examination for the respective Scholarships, together with the Regulations to be observed by Competitors, can be obtained on application (by letter only) to the Trustees, British Institution Scholarship Fund, 19, York Buildings, Adelphi, London, W.C. No application can be attended to unless it contains a stamped and directed envelope for the reply.

January, 1890.

By Order of the Trustees.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the President and Council will proceed to ELECT on TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 25TH, a TURNER ANNUITY. Applicants for the Turner Annuity, which is of the value of £20, must be Artists of repute and of aid through the unavoidable failure of professional Employment or other causes. Forms of application can be obtained, by letter addressed to the SECRETARY, Royal Academy of Arts, Piccadilly. They must be filled in and returned on or before Monday, 24th February.

By order,

FRED. A. EATON, Secretary.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY.

ADMISSION FREE.

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.
(About 30 doors West of Mudge's Library.)

THE GREAT MASTERS.—Botticelli, Lorenzo di Credi, Fra Bartolomeo, Raphael, Titian, Da Vinci, Correggio, Rembrandt, Van Dyke, Murillo, &c., REPRODUCED in AUTOTYPE, Permanent Photography, from the grand Works in the Louvre, Hermitage, Uffizi, Madrid, Sistine Chapel, the National Gallery, London; the Royal Collections at Windsor and Buckingham Palace.

The various Galleries have separate Albums, easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of art. Visitors are welcome to come and study them, and will not be solicited to make purchases.

For further particulars, send for the new Pamphlet, 40 pages and Four Illustrations, entitled "AUTOTYPE, a Decorative and Educational Art." Free per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE, 188 pp., free per post for 6d

AUTOTYPE BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY offer their services to AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS to produce by the Autotype Process Book Illustrations of the highest excellence of any subject capable of being photographed.

Amongst the WORK RECENTLY DONE may be cited Wyon's "Great Seals of England"; Dr. Crookshank's "Micro-Photographs of Bacteria"; "Famous Monuments of Central India," for Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.B.; "Facsimiles of Early Italian Engravings," for the Trustees of the British Museum; "The Palaeographical Society's Fasciculus for 1888"; Illustrations for the "Journal of the Hellenic Society," &c.

For specimens, prices, and full particulars, apply to the MANAGER.

AUTOTYPE PROCESS applied to Photographic Engraving on copper.

Portraits from Paintings by Pettie, R.A., Unwin, R.A., Holl, R.A.; Specimens of Copies of Drawings, Etchings, &c.; and Examples of Auto-gravure Reproduction of Photographs from Art Objects, from Life, and from Nature, can be seen at the AUTOTYPE GALLERY.

Estimates and particulars on application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, W.C.

MISS BRAHAM, late of INGLENOOK, DORKING, has just removed to PIXHOLME, DORKING, and has now space for an additional number of BOYS to train for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Miss Braham is assisted by a Graduate of Oxford University, and by other responsible Teachers, and pays special attention to Physical Education. Her gymnasium is fitted with the latest apparatus by Herr Stempel, who will give weekly lessons. Inclusive terms 60 or 100 guineas a year according to age.

References remitted to
Miss Buss, North London Collegiate School, N.W.
Rev. J. F. E. Fanning, M.A., King's College, Cambridge.
TERM commenced MONDAY, JANUARY 20TH.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS.—CASES OF THE WEEK.—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS.—SOLICITORS' CASES.—REVIEWS.—NEW ORDERS.—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.—COURTS.—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION.—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, FOR THE CIRCULATION AND SALE OF ALL THE BEST AND NEWEST BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from One Guinea per Annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of books at the Houses of Subscribers) from Two Guineas per Annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from Two Guineas per Annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage

LIBRARY BOXES GRATIS.

TOWN AND VILLAGE CLUBS SUPPLIED ON LIBERAL TERMS.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SALE DEPARTMENT.

All the Leading Books of Past Seasons are on Sale, Second-hand, at greatly Reduced Prices.
LISTS GRATIS AND POST FREE.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.
241, Brompton-road, S.W., and 2, King-street, Cheapside, E.C.

THE NEWBERRY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

A Monthly Review and Family Magazine for Churchmen and Churchwomen.

ILLUSTRATED. Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS OF No. 2, VOL. II., FOR FEBRUARY, 1890.

THE COURT at LAMBETH. By the Rev. MORRIS FULLER, M.A.
LAY and CLERICAL CONFERENCES.—Conference III. "The Position of the Church of England in regard to Marriages." By A PRIVILEGED REPORTER.
BAPTISM for the DEAD.—Part II. By the Rev. J. W. HORSLEY, M.A.
JOSEPH BARBER LIGHTFOOT, D.D., IN MEMORIAM. By ALPH. A.
ANTHONY VANDYCK. (Illustrated.) By G. S. MACQUOID.
SKETCHES IN CEYLON.—I. The Tomasha at Ratna-pura. (By the Rev.
W. WOOD, D.D.)
THE PARISH and the MANOR: Six Centuries Ago. By the Rev.
Frederick RANDOLPH.
A PETRIFIED TOWN. By the Rev. H. WILMOT-SUTTON, M.A.
PERE LACORDAIRE. By F. HITCHMAN.
"THE BISHOP'S BIBLE." Chapters XIX., XX., XXI. By D. CHRISTIE
MURRAY and H. HERMAN.
"SWEET CONTENT." Chapters VI., VII. (Illustrated.) By Mrs.
MOLESWORTH.
"BROWNIE'S LAST GALLOP": a Short Story. By the Rev. T. HUD-SON, M.A.
POPULAR ASTRONOMY.—I. The Earth as a Planet. By H. CLEMENTS.
Sermon Outlines.—Instruction on the Creed—Poetry—Sunday Evening
Chats at the Violette. II.—Biblical Questions—Correspondence—
Reviews—"Useful Book" List, &c., &c.
GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, London.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. IV. Nos. 1 and 2. FEBRUARY. 3s.

Yearly Subscription (10 Numbers), 13s. 6d., post free.

CONTENTS.

SIEGE of PLATAEA. BY ARBOTT.
TABLE of AFFINITY in PLATO'S REPUBLIC. H. RICHARDS.
EMENDATIONS in the MEDEA. A. E. HOUSMAN.
NOTES on the PHARSALIA of LUCAN. W. R. HARDIS.
LEAP'S ILLIAD. W. RIDGEWAY.
SHUCKBURN'S HERODOTUS. R. W. MACAN.
HOLDEN'S EDITION of PLUTARCH'S TIMOLEON. JOSEPH B. MAYOR.
ELLIS'S COMMENTARY on CATULLUS. W. T. LEDRUM.
PLOIX, LA NATURE des DIEUX. L. R. FARWELL.
SOPHOCLES, LEXICON of LATER GREEK. A. C. ZENOS.
SHORTER NOTICES.
NOTES.
CLASSICAL EDUCATION in UNITED STATES. J. H. WRIGHT.
OBITUARY—
DR A. W. POTTS.
ROBERT BROWNING as a SCHOLAR. T. C. SNOW.
LINES addressed to E. B. By LEWIS CAMPBELL.
BISHOP LIGHTFOOT. H. E. SAYAGH and others.
ARCHAEOLOGY—
ROMAN INSCRIPTIONS from SARDINIA. T. TAMPONI and
F. HAVESFIELD.
SHORTER NOTICES.
NOTES.
SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.
LIST of PROGRAMMES ISSUED in GERMANY in 1889.
BIBLIOGRAPHY.
INDEX to Vol. III. is issued with this Number.
DAVID NUTT, 270, Strand.

Second Edition, price 2s. 6d.

THE FUNCTIONS of the BRAIN. A

Popular Essay. Four Plates. By JULIUS ALTHAUS, M.D.
"Admirably illustrated. The subject is treated in a masterly manner and the book will be welcome alike to the surgeon and the general reader."
Academy.

Also, by the Same Author.

ON FAILURE of BRAIN POWER. Third Edition, with Engravings.
price 1s. 6d.

London LONGMANS & Co., Paternoster-row.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

No. 892.—FEBRUARY, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

IN THE DAYS OF THE DANDIES.—II.
HIS UNCLE AND HER GRANDMOTHER.
LORD CHESTERFIELD.
THE EXPERIENCES OF A MULTAZIM. BY A MEMBER OF LAURENCE OLIPHANT'S COLONY.
LADY BABY.—CONCLUSION.
OLD BOSTON. BY JOHN E. LOCKING.
CHARLES MACKAY'S LAST POEM.
MODERN MANNISH MAIDENS.
UNDER THE OAK, AND THE TRUE LOVER.
BY COSMO MONKHOUSE.
WHAT I LEARNED IN IRELAND. BY LEXOPHILUS.
CURRENT INFLUENCES ON FOREIGN POLITICS.—II.
BY KTIPOX.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

NEW VOLUME ARROWSMITH'S 2s. SERIES.

LAL. By Lorin Lathrop and Annie

WAKEMAN.

"It is a bright and original tale, having its scene in San Francisco and elsewhere in America."—Scotsman.

Demy 8vo, 328 pp., cloth, 6s.; hand-made paper, 12s. 6d.

A RESOLUTE PURPOSE. By

KATHARINE ASHBURNER.

"Some of the characters are, indeed, charmingly sketched."—Scotsman.

Fcap. 4to, 368 pp., cloth, 15s.

EVENINGS with SHAKSPERE. A

Handbook to the Study of his Works. By L. M. GRIFFITHS.

"This exhaustive and painstaking work will be heartily welcome as one of the most satisfactory Shakespearean compendiums of recent times."
Publishers' Circular.
"The work is for the most part a laborious and highly creditable compilation of ascertained facts."—Daily Graphic.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: 5th PRIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, ADAMS, KENT & Co., Ltd.

Now ready, at all Libraries and Booksellers.
Cloth, handsomely bound, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

By MADAME OARETTE,

Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."
THE EVE of an EMPIRE'S FALL.

Being Intimate Recollections of the Court of the Tulleries.

Third Edition. By Same Author. Price 6s.

MY MISTRESS, the EMPRESS EUGÉNIE.

London DEAN & SON, 180A, Fleet-street.

Will be published on FEBRUARY 15TH, price SIXPENCE.

THE FIRST NUMBER OF

THE PARENTS' REVIEW.

A MAGAZINE of HOME TRAINING and CULTURE.

Edited by CHARLOTTE M. MASON.

Containing Papers by H. R. HAWES, Miss OCTAVIA HILL,
OSCAR BROWNING, Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, &c.

W. H. ALLEN & Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

F. V. WHITE & CO'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

Novels at all Circulating Libraries in Town and Country.

A CRUEL WRONG.

By Mrs. HOUSTOUN, Author of "Recommended to Mercy," "Barbara's Warning" (2s. 6d.), "Sink or Swim" (2s.), &c. 3 vols.

AN UNRULY SPIRIT.

By Mrs. AYLMEER GOWING, Author of "The Jewel Reputation, &c. 3 vols.

ON THE CHILDREN.

By ANNIE THOMAS (Mrs. Pender Cudlip), Author of "Allerton Towers" (2s. 6d.), &c. 3 vols.

SYBIL ROSS'S MARRIAGE;

The Romance of an Inexperienced Girl.

By F. C. PHILLIPS, Author of "As in a Looking Glass," &c.
and C. J. WILLS, Author of "The Pit Town Coronet," &c. 1 vol., 6s. [And at all Booksellers.]

THE M.F.H.'S DAUGHTER.

By Mrs. ROBERT JOCELYN, Author of "£100,000 versus Ghosts" (2 vols.), "A Distracting Guest" (2 vols.), &c.
3 vols.

FOR SOMEBODY'S SAKE.

By EDITH STEWART DREWRY, Author of "Only an Actress," "On Dangerous Ground," &c. 3 vols.

A DAUGHTER'S SACRIFICE.

By F. C. PHILLIPS and PERCY FENDALL, Author of "Spiders and Flies," &c. 2 vols. [Immediately.]

At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

BEAUTIFUL JIM.

(Fifth Edition.)

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER. Picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

LONG ODDS.

By HAWLEY SMART. 1 vol., cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

VIOLET VYVIAN, M.F.H.

By MAY CROMMELIN, Author of "Queenie," "Brown
Eyes," &c., and J. MORAY BROWN, Author of "Shikar
Sketches," &c. 1 vol., cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE HON. MRS. VEREKER.

By the AUTHOR of "MOLLY BAWN," &c. Picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE COST OF A LIE.

By Mrs. H. LOVETT CAMERON. Picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

LANDING A PRIZE.

By Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD. 1 vol., cloth, 2s. 6d.

A YOUNG GIRL'S LIFE.

By B. L. FARJEON. 1 vol., cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE PERIL OF RICHARD PARDON.

By B. L. FARJEON. In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

A FRENCH MARRIAGE.

By F. C. PHILLIPS, Author of "As in a Looking Glass," &c.
In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

AND

MISS MEPHISTOPHELES.

A New and Original Novel.

By FERGUS HUME, Author of "The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," &c. In picture boards, 2s.; cloth (Library Edition),
2s. 6d.

The CATALOGUE of PUBLICATIONS containing works by JOHN STRANGE WINTER, HAWLEY SMART, FERGUS HUME,
B. L. FARJEON, MARIE CORELLI, Mrs. EDWARD KENNARD,
Mrs. H. LOVETT CAMERON, Mrs. ALEXANDER, The AUTHOR of "MOLLY BAWN," Mrs. ALEXANDER FRASER, BRET HARTE, "RITA," SAMUEL LAING, F. C. PHILLIPS, FLORENCE MARRYAT, and other well-known Authors, will be sent on application.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET,
STRAND, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, Price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR FEBRUARY, 1890:

- I. ALAS! By RHODA BROUGHTON. Author of "Nancy," &c. Part I. (Chaps. V.-VIII.)
- II. "DONESPIRETTIE," ET INOLINENTUR UMBRAE.
- III. HORACE WALPOLE'S LETTERS.
- IV. A VIRGINIA POOR HOUSE.
- V. "CAMELOT NOON."
- VI. "MOTHERS"—ACCORDING to ENGLISH NOVELISTS.
- VII. VALE PLACE, PONT STREET.
- VIII. MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF.
- IX. STAGE FRIGHT.
- X. PEARL-POWDER. By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDS. Author of "Ought We to Visit her!" &c. Chaps. VI.-XI.

NEW WORKS.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of the PRINCESS LIEVEN and EARL GREY. Translated and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GUY LE STRANGE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with portraits, 80s.

"These letters possess a powerful fascination, which increases as we read, and which seems to be mainly owing to the fact that they enable us to watch closely, and almost day by day, the thoughts and feelings of one of the great leaders and one of the principal feminine participants in a series of deeply interesting political transactions, and thus impart the very throbb of life to the history of the period."—Scotian.

THE FIRST of the BOURBONS. By OATHERINE CHARLOTTE LADY JACKSON. Author of "Old Paris," &c. In 3 vols., large crown 8vo, with portraits, 34s.

SARDINIA and the SARDES. By CHARLES EDWARDES. Author of "Letters from Oreste," In demy 8vo, 14s.

"As Mr. Edwarde is master of a fluent and graceful literary style, and has the knack, so rare among Britons, of putting himself on easy terms with his surroundings, whatever they may be, it follows that his books are both instructive and amusing. This may certainly be affirmed of his present volume."—Scottish Leader.

NEW NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."
A HEAVY RECKONING.

By E. WERNER,
Author of "No Surrender," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

By the Author of "THE PHANTOM FUTURE."
SUSPENSE. By H. S. MERRIMAN,
Author of "Young Mistley," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

STRANGE GODS. By Constance COTTERELL. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Undeniably charming. Few authors would venture on an idyll in three volumes. Fewer still possess the grace of fancy, delicacy of touch, and also the worldly wisdom to render such a venture successful. The writer comes with flying colours out of this difficult ordeal, and only at the end of the story does the idea suggest itself that its chief merit consists in the spell exercised by an original and picturesque manner."—Morning Post.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "VENETIA'S LOVERS."
A HURRICANE IN PETTICOATS. By LESLIE KEITH. Author of "The Chilcotes," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"It is brightly written, often with noticeable verve, and is one of the very few three-volume novels that are not much too long. It is in a word, a delightful story and one of exceptional promise."—Academy.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHAPMAN AND HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

The FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW

For FEBRUARY.

THE PORTUGUESE in EAST AFRICA. By DANIEL J. RANKIN.
ONE VIEW of the QUESTION. By RUDYARD KIPLING.
LAND PURCHASE in IRELAND. By T. W. RUSSELL, M.P.
MR. LABOUCHERE: the Despotist. By W. H. MALLOCK.
WAS IT A CRIME? By AMELIE RIVES CHANDLER.
THE CITY of the CREED. By J. THEODORE BENT.
ART TEACHING and TECHNICAL SCHOOLS. By LADY DILKE.
ENGLISH and AMERICANS. By WM. MORTON FULLERTON.
RUSSIAN CHARACTERISTICS.—V. By E. B. LAMIN.
MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF. By MARION HEPPWORTH DIXON.
THE SWAZILAND QUESTION. (With Map.) By Sir HERCULES ROBINSON, G.C.M.G.
MR. GLADSTONE on GERMAN LITERATURE. By KARL BLIND.
OXFORD TUTORs and their PROFESSORIAL CRITIC. By W. L. COURTNEY.

The MARRIAGES of the BOURBONS.

By Capt. the Hon. D. A. BINGHAM. With Illustrations. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 32s.

"Capt. Bingham has missed nothing that is picturesque or romantic in the history of France from the accession of Henri Quatre on the extinction of the House of Valois.... We should do Capt. Bingham injustice if we said that his pages are full of lively gossip, for he has not only studied and compared the chronicles and historians, but examined masses of manuscript hidden away in archives. Treating his subjects in the picturesque style of Michelet, he has aimed at making a thoroughly readable book."—Times.

ACROBATS and MOUNTEBANKS.

By H. LE ROUX and J. GARNIER. Translated from the French by A. P. MORTON. With 233 Illustrations. Crown 4to, 16s.

"MM. Roux and Garnier are to be congratulated upon having produced a thoroughly interesting book. Mr. A. P. Morton, who translated the work from the French, has performed his task right well, so that we have here that rarity, a work in which the spirit and style of the authors do not suffer in the translation. Add to these attractions the addition of 233 illustrations, and the good all-round attributes of the book will be conclusively proved."—Vanity Fair.

THE VICTORIES of the BRITISH

ARMY in the PENINSULA and the SOUTH of FRANCE, from 1808 to 1814. An Epitome of Napier's "History of the Peninsular War," and Gurwood's "Collection of the Duke of Wellington's Despatches." By ROBERT O'BYRNE, F.R.G.S. Crown 8vo, 5s.

"Napier's and Gurwood's are both long books, and it is better that lads should read an epitome of the most stirring deeds they commemorate than remain ignorant of them altogether. It must also be said that Mr. Byrne has kept as closely as possible to the very words of his authors—to the stately glowing periods of Napier, and the clear, concise sentences of the Duke, so like the man himself, containing everything that was necessary, nothing that was superfluous."—World.

ON ACTIVE SERVICE. Illustrated in Colours. By W. W. LLOYD, (late 24th Regiment). Oblong 4to, 5s.

"'On Active Service' is a charming representation in excellent coloured illustrations of the life of Tommy Atkins at home and abroad. Army men and their friends will be delighted with this book."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVELS.

THE WORLD and the CLOISTER.

By OSWALD JOHN SIMON. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"This novel has three excellent and somewhat uncommon attributes: it is earnest, sincere, and intellectual. The author has something to say, and says it well.... The book claims and commands careful consideration..... is a thoughtful and clever book."—Life.

DEAD STRIPES. By J. Carmichael.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Here are materials for an interesting and exciting narrative, and the author has turned them to admirable account. The characters are natural, and the narrative moves with commendable briskness."—Manchester Examiner.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

New Novels at all Libraries.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

By WILLIAM BLACK. Author of "A Princess of Thule," "In Far Lochaber," "A Daughter of Heth," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"A remarkably easy book to read.... The author's touch has been light all through this long story; but seldom more bright, amusing, pathetic, humorous, and tender."—Saturday Review.

KIT and KITTY: a Story of West

Middlesex. B. R. D. BLACKMORE. Author of "Lorna Doone," "Clara Vaughan," "Springhaven," "Cripples the Carrier," &c. Third Edition. 8 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"Kit and Kitty" is a manly book, with a sort of fine, open delicacy of sentiment, thoroughly wholesome and pleasant. The book is rather long for the taste of the moment; but it is well supplied with varied and exciting incidents, and few recent novels have maintained so high a standard of excellence throughout."—Athenaeum.

DUCHESS FRANCES: A Novel. By

SARAH TYTLER. Author of "Citoyenne Jacqueline," "Saint Mungo's City," "Lady Bell," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

IN SATAN'S BONDS: a STORY of LOVE and CRIME. By FREDERICK EASTWOOD. Author of "The Chronicle of Sir Harry Earleish, Bart.," "Calumny," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

Important Works at all Libraries.

OUR RECENT ACTORS; being Recollections, Critical, and in many cases Personal, of late Distinguished Performers of both Sexes. With some Incidental Notices of Living Actors. By Dr. WESTLAND MARSTON. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Dr. Marston's memoirs of 'Recent Actors' may be recommended as excellent reading.... Scholarly, but thoroughly interesting, impartial and wholly genial."—World.

THE LANCASHIRE LIFE of BISHOP

FRASER. By JOHN W. DIGGLE, M.A., Vicar of Mossley Hill, Liverpool, Hon. Canon of Liverpool, Author of "Godliness and Manliness," "True Religion," &c.; also Editor of Bishop Fraser's Sermons. Fourth Edition. 1 vol., demy 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Many important and hitherto unpublished letters enrich a volume which casts a flood of light on every phase of Dr. Fraser's career in Lancashire.... This fascinating biography."—Standard.

THE COLONIAL YEAR BOOK. By

A. J. R. TRENDLEN, O.M.G., of the Inner Temple. With Introduction by Professor SEELEY. Crown 8vo, 760 pages, cloth, 6s.

"It is a valuable work of reference that deals fully with our trans-oceanic realm."—Daily Telegraph.

JOURNAL of H.M.S. ENTERPRISE

on the EXPEDITION in SEARCH of SIR JOHN FRANKLIN'S SHIPS by BEHRING STRAIT, 1830-55. By Captain RICHARD COLLINSON, C.B., R.N., Commander of the Expedition. With a Memoir of his other Services. Edited by his Brother, Major-General T. B. COLLINSON, R.E. Demy 8vo, with 6 Maps, Portrait, &c., cloth, 14s.

NEAR and FAR: an Angler's Sketches of Home Sport and Colonial Life. By WILLIAM SENIOR, Author of "Waterside Sketches," &c., Angling Editor of the Field. New and Cheaper Edition. Small post 8vo, boards, 2s.

"The home and colonial sketches of sport are perfect of their kind, infecting even the un sporting reader with the breathless interest and excitement of the rod and rifle."—Truth.

NEW EDITION NOW READY, Price 3s. 6d.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE;

INCLUDING Travels, Adventures and Discoveries in Central Africa AND Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone.

By H. M. STANLEY,

Author of "Through the Dark Continent," &c.

With numerous Maps and Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d., and 3s. 6d.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED),

St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1890.

No. 927, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

THREE HISTORICAL BOOKS.

"THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."—Early Britain. By Alfred J. Church. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Ancient Laws of Wales. By the late Hubert Lewis. Edited by J. E. Lloyd. (Elliot Stock.)

Court Life under the Plantagenets. Reign of Henry the Second. By Hubert Hall. (Sonnenschein.)

THE title of the new volume in the "Story of the Nations" series may perhaps lead to some controversy among those who do not specially "glory in the name of Briton." Prof. Church includes in his history of Early Britain the whole period between the first visits of the foreign travellers and merchants to our shores and the close of the "story of Early England" at the Battle of Hastings. The Norman conqueror, as the author points out, could not prevent England from remaining England still; the only question is as to when that name should be first applied. It is clear that the country could not be so called before the arrival of the three tribes in the middle of the fifth century. It is not so plain that the ancient name ought to be used after that date. The author may be right in his practical solution of the difficulty, but some of the arguments by which the decision is supported appear to be of doubtful weight. This island, we are told, "to the writers and readers of Latin was always Britannia, and it is still formally known as Britain to the rest of the world."

A pleasant modern fashion has been followed in providing a copious supply of illustrations. The culture of the prehistoric ages is indicated by pictures of neolithic knives and axes, and that of the Bronze Age by figures of shields and helmets of "late Celtic work." The history of the Roman province is explained by a great number of illustrations taken from coins, and drawings of buildings, altars, and pavements. The "Anglo-Saxon" and Danish periods supply us with representations of churches, furniture, and jewels, and spirited drawings of ships of war. Other interesting illustrations are taken from a MS. Life of St. Dunstan, the Bayeux Tapestry, and similar early originals.

The work appears to be mainly based on the treatises of Lappenberg and Sharon Turner; but it has been brought up to a more modern standard by reference to the histories of Mr. Freeman and Mr. J. R. Green, and the latest biographical collections. The picturesque and interesting account of Hadrian's Wall rests on the authority of Dr. Collingwood Bruce. Some of the traditions, for which but slight weight is claimed, seem to be taken from Geoffrey of Monmouth; and for one or two of the incidents we are told that there is no other authority than that of the "Pseudo-Ingulphus." It is somewhat disquieting to read that, though the charters given in the "Description of Croyland Abbey" are unquestionably forgeries, yet the "narrative, which embodies genuine records and traditions, need not therefore be wholly discredited." The same kind of argument was at one time used as an excuse for reprinting the absurd fabrications of "Richard of Cirencester," or those, as it was more gently put, "of the scholar who wore the mask of Richard."

The historical portion of the work appears to be accurate in the main, though there are several bad misprints which require correction in any later edition. The name of "Dr. Lappenberg" should be restored to its proper spelling, the "Sagambri" should appear as "Sigambri," and the quatrain attributed to Canute ought to be thoroughly revised. In the passage quoted from Tacitus as to the physical appearance of the Britons, it seems doubtful whether the historian intended to say that the Silures were of a dark rather than a high-coloured complexion, and he certainly appears to connect the red-haired and large-limbed tribes with the Germans, and not with the Gauls. With respect to some of the personal names, it may be observed that Lappenberg is now supposed to have gone too far in accepting the Welsh "Caradoc" and "Caswallon" as equivalents for the more familiar, though still inaccurate, "Caractacus" and "Cassivellaunus."

Some of the more difficult problems of our history are treated with judgment and accuracy. The author is clear that there was no such continuity of Roman institutions in this country as may readily be traced in France or Italy, though it is not uncommon to find assumptions made which would deprive our English ancestors of originality in every department of social life. As to the fate of the conquered Britons, we are referred to the gloomy picture of the fugitives in the Victoria Cave, the credit of which should be given to Prof. Boyd Dawkins; and we are told that over the greater part of the country the language was absolutely changed, and that with the British language the laws and the religion of the conquered people disappeared. Perhaps we may fairly take the battle of Deorham in the year 577 as marking the termination of the wars of massacre, and the beginning of a milder system of enforcing service and tribute. During the earlier period we may credit the English, in the words of a learned historian, with having turned out their enemies "as completely as it has ever been found possible for invaders to do."

Mr. Lewis must have written his book on the old Welsh laws under the influence of a very different theory. He sought to find a Welsh origin for most of our early institutions, the manor both in name and form being a legacy from pre-Saxon times, and some classes of copyhold tenants being the conquered remnants of pre-Celtic tribes; the hundred, instead of being borrowed from the Frankish kings, appearing as a plain Welsh cantred; and the prototypes of all our ancient tenures being found in the townships surveyed in the Record of Carnarvon. Like some of the other systems based on the theory of continuity, his doctrine requires us to see in the Angles and Saxons a set of harmless drudges whose presence hardly disturbed the free play of a single institution. Yet even the bards are against him. "Of all the Lloegrians who did not become Saxon there remain none, except those who inhabit Cornwall and the Cornmote of Carnoban"; and it was the prince of the bards who prophesied of his countrymen that "their land they will lose, except wild Wales."

The progress of the work was unfortunately interrupted by the author's lamented death; and it is fair to suppose that, if he had lived, the work would have been brought up to date, and some of his untenable views, which only a few years ago were widely accepted, would doubtless have been modified or abandoned. The necessary corrections are, however, judiciously supplied in several instances by a careful editor, who indicates some distrust of the philological part of the argument, and hints that the close parallelism of Welsh and English institutions may be explained otherwise than by a theory that it was due to direct borrowing.

Mr. Lewis did not pretend to a scientific grasp of Celtic philology, and he is much too sweeping in his derivation of our eastern place-names from the Old-Welsh. It would, however, be a most useful development of the plan adopted by him if some one were to search out the Celtic place-names in Yorkshire and Northumberland, or, still better, in Devon and Somerset, after the methods used by Sir Herbert Maxwell in his exposition of the place-names of Galloway. The science of Toponomastique is growing, but it is still in its infancy.

It should not be forgotten, although the doctrine of Roman or Welsh survivals in our laws be rejected, that the first part of Mr. Lewis's book contains a learned and useful analysis of the Record of Carnarvon, and of the three local codes which represent the ancient Welsh legislation of the tenth century. This summary will be the more valued because the fine volumes of Ancient Laws and Institutes of Wales, edited by Mr. Aneurin Owen, under the direction of the Record Commissioners, are now very difficult to procure.

Mr. Hubert Hall repeats with much success an experiment which he first applied to the society of the Elizabethan age. Under the form of a short novel, based in every detail upon historical facts, he draws a picture of life at the court of Henry II. for the benefit of readers who are unable or unwilling to study the history of their country unless it be tinged with romance. The author admits that he has depicted no scenes of love or chivalry, and that the jester and the knight-errant are alike excluded from view, though there was a strong temptation to bring in some of the exploits of Earl Hugo, and to touch upon the tragedy of Fair Rosamond. He remarks, however, that the court of Henry would seem to have been "almost Oriental in its complete exclusion of female influences," and that the plan of the work has compelled him to reproduce only such features of court life "as were actually recorded by contemporary chroniclers and essayists."

The reader will not complain when he finds himself introduced into the company of the witty Walter Map and the learned John of Salisbury. The quaint lessons of leechcraft are expounded by Master Necham, and the great Glanville himself condescends to explain the legal difficulties connected with the use of the ordeal. The Dialogue of the Exchequer supplies the material for a minute account of the royal revenues; and the friendly lord of a manor explains to the hero or principal personage the customs of the common fields and the domestic economy of the lordship. A visit to Oxford in the king's train gives an opportunity of describing the great council for the settlement of Ireland, of which Prince John was constituted "king, or rather lord," of the newly conquered territories. The business of the Curia Regis and the practice on appeals to Rome in ecclesiastical matters are fully illustrated by the true story of a long and unfortunate litigation, leading to the conclusion that it would be better to have swift injustice than to lose by long delays more than could be gained by due process of law.

The illustrations are admirable. Among the coloured plates (reproduced in facsimile by Mr. R. Nevill) one should especially call attention to the illuminations of a Plantagenet king hunting, and of the Passion of St. Alban from the Cottonian MSS., and those of the king at mass and at dinner from the Abbreviatio of Domesday. Among the representations of actual documents we should notice the Jewish bond or "starr," being an acknowledgment or acquittance by a creditor on payment of a debt; and a reduced copy of the Bull of Pope Alexander III., given on the occasion of the appeal to Rome already mentioned. Of the minor figures, which cover most of the details of private life, we may mention the portraits of Henry, Bishop of Winchester, and the caricature of "Aaron, son of the Devil," the sketches of the baker at work and on his way to the pillory, the picture of an ecclesiastical council (drawn by Matthew Paris), and the remarkable figures of the foot-soldiers from Scotland, Wales, and Ireland.

CHARLES ELTON.

Readings on the Purgatorio of Dante. Chiefly based on the Commentary of Benvenuto da Imola. By the Hon. William Warren Vernon. With an Introduction by the Dean of St. Paul's. In 2 vols. (Macmillan.)

THE author of these volumes has already established a claim to the gratitude of all Dante students by placing within their reach the important Latin commentary of Benvenuto da Imola, of which a handsome edition, printed at his expense, appeared a couple of years ago under the editorship of Sir James Lacaita. Before the publication of this edition the generality of Dante students had to content themselves, for the most part, with the so-called Italian "translation" of Tamburini. The gross incapacity and absolute untrustworthiness of this "traditore" were pitilessly exposed by Mr. C. E. Norton in a paper printed in the Atlantic Monthly some thirty years ago. A couple of instances will suffice to indicate the nature of Tamburini's "translation," and to show how pressing was the need for a faithful reproduction of the original Latin text. In his commentary upon Purg.

xvi. 80, Benvenuto says: "ad confirmandum propositum occurrit mihi res jocosa." This is rendered by Tamburini: "a maggiore conferma referirò un fatto a me accaduto"! Again, on Purg. xiv. 112, Benvenuto notes:

"Tempore istius Guidonis, quando aliquis vir nobilis et honorabilis applicabat ad terram, magna contentio erat inter multos nobiles de Bretinoro, in cujus domum ille talis forensis deberet declinare" (i.e., when any illustrious stranger arrived in Bretinoro, the nobles of the place used to contend as to who should have the honour of entertaining him).

Out of this remark Tamburini extracts the information that

"al tempo di Guido in Bretinoro anche i nobili aravano le terre; ma insorsero discordie fra essi, e sparve la innocenza di vita," &c.

It is apparent, therefore, that Mr. Vernon has rendered an important service, not only to letters in general, but also to the memory of Benvenuto himself, whose literary reputation was in danger of being seriously compromised by the unblushing falsifications of Tamburini.

In the present volumes, which are addressed not so much to the professed student as to the more or less unlearned reader, Mr. Vernon has drawn largely upon Benvenuto, adopting his division of the several cantos, and giving in English the general purport of a large portion of his commentary. The method adopted in these "Readings" is an excellent one. Mr. Vernon gives a general introduction to each canto; and then, taking a few lines at a time of the Italian text, he translates or paraphrases them, and adds a running commentary, supplementing it by such further notes as may be necessary for the elucidation of difficulties. The complete text of the Purgatorio is in this manner presented to the reader, who is thus enabled (as Dean Church says in his preface), "to keep in mind the thread, the steps, and the connexions of the poem," and to grasp it as a whole, without fear of losing himself in a wilderness of notes and illustrations.

Mr. Vernon has done wisely in choosing the Purgatorio as the first instalment of his work—we gather that similar "Readings" on the Inferno are already in preparation—for to those beginning the study of Dante, to quote Dean Church once more, the Purgatorio is likely to be more attractive than the other two portions of the poem as being more human:

"Here the poet finds companions who are neither below him, nor hopelessly estranged from him, as in the Inferno, nor far above him, as in the Paradiso: they are still almost creatures of flesh and blood, certainly human characters, capable of effort, pain, and self-command."

We may add that in the Purgatorio we are attracted also by the scenery and surroundings. Instead of being confounded by the horrors and gloom of the Inferno, or bewildered by the almost dazzling radiance of the heavenly spheres, we find ourselves here in the presence of the beauties of nature and of art, in a world where music and poetry, painting and sculpture, still charm the ear and eye, and where the heart is gladdened amid flowers, trees, and streams, by the light of the sun and of the stars.

In addition to the commentary of Benvenuto, which forms the groundwork of his book, Mr.

Vernon has made liberal use of other old commentaries as well as of the labours of recent translators and commentators,* especially of those of Scartazzini, whose text he has for the most part adopted.† The notes contain plentiful illustrations drawn from Dante's other writings, from Brunetto Latino (whose name appears throughout under the popular but incorrect form Latini), from St. Thomas Aquinas, Boëthius, &c., and from the classics. Quotations from Latin authors are, as a rule, given in English; it is a pity that an exception has been made, for no apparent reason, in the case of St. Thomas Aquinas. One not very appropriate extract from Benvenuto, which it was hardly worth while transplanting into these pages, appears also in the "obscurity of the original."

The translation (or paraphrase, as it often is) of the Italian text is generally faithful and lucid. Mr. Vernon has a tendency to be needlessly free in his version (as is also frequently the case with his rendering of Benvenuto) with the result that he occasionally misrepresents his author—e.g., "le vive travi" (Purg. xxx. 85) is translated "leafless trees"—a rendering which introduces a wrong conception, and is also peculiarly inappropriate since the trees in question are pines. Again at Purg. iv. 104, Dante speaks of people "che si stavano all'ombra." Mr. Vernon describes them in his translation as "lying down," and in his notes as "sitting," thus losing the point of the contrast between them and Belacqua, who, more lazy than them all, is represented as sitting, while they stand. In one or two instances the English version is inconsistent with the reading printed in the text—e.g., at Purg. xxiii. 56, "non minor doglia" stands in the text, while "minor la doglia" is rendered in the translation. At Purg. xxviii. 68, Mr. Vernon reads traendo, but renders dritta in the previous line "upright," which practically necessitates the reading trattando.

We notice that Mr. Vernon has sometimes failed to catch Benvenuto's meaning. For instance, in a remark on Purg. xvii. 3, Benvenuto says: "Hic nota quod talpam videre videtur ostendi dupliciter" (i.e., note that it seems to be proved in two ways that the mole can see). This is translated: "Take note that the mole appearing to see is shown in a double manner," which turns the rest of Benvenuto's sentence into nonsense. A misreading of Benvenuto seems also to be responsible for the statement (vol. ii., p. 71) that "Midas, king of Lydia, tied the famous Gordian knot." It was Gordius, the father of Midas, who tied the knot, as Benvenuto correctly states.

Mr. Vernon is not always happy in his notes. For instance, we are told that "stelo" (Purg. viii. 87) is used in the sense of "the fellow of a wheel," which would make Dante imply that a wheel revolves more rapidly at its centre than at its circumference, whereas, of course, the exact reverse is intended; the word is rightly rendered "axle" in the translation. "Falcare" (Purg. xviii. 94) represents not "the motion of the outer fore-leg of a horse in going round a circle," but simply the curving (into the shape of a "sickle") of the fore-leg of a high-stepping horse. Again, it is hardly correct to describe Mount Helicon as "a spur of Mount Parnassus," nor is it easy to conceive that Dante "takes Helicon as the fountain of the Muses," as is stated in the note on Purg. xxix. 40. On p. 248 of vol. ii. Mr. Vernon speaks of Gerault de Berneil as "the French poet," by way of distinguishing him from the Provençal Arnaut Daniel. Both were Provençal poets, Gerault being known as the "Master of the Troubadours"—a title which Dante, who considered him inferior to Arnaut, takes the opportunity of contesting (Purg. xxvi. 119).^{*} A more serious blunder occurs on p. 376 of vol. i., where "Ganellone," the "Gueses qui la traisun fist" of the Chanson de Roland, who was responsible for the destruction of Charlemagne's rear-guard at Roncesvalles and for the death of Roland, figures as a thirteenth-century Italian among the nobles of Faenza!

* The admirable little work of Perez, I sette Cerehi del "Purgatorio," appears to be unknown to Mr. Vernon.

† Perhaps the most important exception is at Purg. ix. 1, where Scartazzini's unauthorised reading "Titan," is rightly rejected.

We may remark that Mr. Vernon's information is not quite "up to date" in one instance, for he does not appear to be aware of the late Signor Banchi's discovery with regard to Pia de' Tolomei (see ACADEMY, June 19, 1886), who is proved to have been still alive in 1318, thus rendering impossible the suggestion of the commentators that she is "la Pia" of Purg. v. 133.

The book is unfortunately disfigured by an unusually large number of misprints—a considerable proportion of which occur in the Italian text. The climax in this respect is perhaps reached on p. 293 of vol. i., where the printing, or rather misprinting, of five lines of Greek from the Odyssey may be said to eclipse even the performances of the daily papers on the occasion when a certain enlightened lord mayor delivered himself of a Greek quotation in a Mansion House speech. Nor are misprints the only evidences of carelessness in the book. Mr. Vernon has sinned especially in the matter of inaccurate quotation; in several instances one or more words have been left out, and in one case (in an extract from the Convito on p. 383 of vol. ii.) a whole line is missing. On p. 448 of vol. ii. a well-known line from Milton is misquoted; and we have detected more or less serious errors or omissions in quotations from Vasari (p. 272 of vol. i.), Pietro di Dante (p. 330 of vol. ii.), and Benvenuto himself (p. 215 of vol. ii., where a saying of Themistius is attributed to Themistocles).

Mr. Vernon's English, too, in many places needs revision. We should hardly have expected here to meet with such slipshod expressions as: "each among whom I am," "like a battalion wheels round," and so forth, which are by no means uncommon, nor with such a clumsily constructed sentence as appears on p. 148 of vol. ii. in the paraphrase of a passage from Benvenuto.

^{*} Benvenuto has a quaint note, apropos of Arnaut Daniel and the difficulty and unattractiveness of the Provençal language, to the effect that Virgil's saying of Ennius: "Lego aurum in stercore Enni," might have been applied by Dante to Arnaut. It certainly might; and, if the words be taken in their most literal sense, much more appropriately, as far as Arnaut is concerned, than Benvenuto probably suspected. It is somewhat difficult to discover the grounds for Dante's preference of Arnaut, for such of his poems as have come down to us are remarkable rather for their obscurity or their "lubricity" than for any other quality.

These numerous blemishes, to which we have felt it worth while to draw attention in some detail, detract seriously from the value of what is in other respects an excellent book; for the plan of the work is well conceived, and for the most part well carried out. If a new edition should be called for, which we hope may soon be the case—since in spite of its shortcomings the book deserves to be popular—Mr. Vernon would do well to subject it to a careful revision. We may suggest that it would be an improvement if in a future edition a sharper line were drawn between the commentary and the notes, the latter being strictly relegated to the foot of the page, instead of, as now, being sometimes incorporated with the commentary and sometimes separated from it.

Dean Church's valuable introduction, from which we have quoted more than once, contains an interesting criticism of Benvenuto's commentary and of the qualifications of the old Bolognese professor for his task. The work, which is perhaps the most important though not the earliest commentary we possess, consists of a complete set of lectures on the Divina Commedia delivered in Latin before the University of Bologna towards the end of the fourteenth century. Benvenuto, who was a friend of Petrarca and Boccaccio and a famous scholar in his day, if he does not enter very deeply into the spirit of his author, is, as Dean Church points out, very instructive, and tells us a great many things we should not otherwise have known.

We ought to mention that Mr. Vernon's volumes are provided with an excellent index, which adds considerably to the usefulness of the work. Nor should we omit to thank Mr. Vernon for perhaps the most satisfactory reproduction yet published of the sketch made by Baron Kirkup from the so-called Giotto portrait of Dante in the Bargello, before it was retouched and spoiled by the painter Marini.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

English Idyls. By P. H. Emerson. (Sampson Low.)

OF Mr. Emerson's former books, the letter-press was a secondary, the photographs, clear and artistic, were the most important part. In his English (why not East Anglian?) Idyls, he photographs wholly with the pen.

For him the change is risky. His photographs were unique, whereas among the ever-growing crowd of word-painters he may, in this hurrying age, get lost sight of. The gain is for readers who have insight, who can discern the pathetic behind the commonplace. Without photographs Mr. Emerson has freer scope, and can tell us more fully all he has learned and seen while living on the Suffolk sea-board. His subjects are what he might meet every day and everywhere—a fisherman and his granddaughter, a gang of water-poachers, a mysterious half wizard, half wherryman; and his art is in artlessly, yet exactly, describing them and their surroundings. No thrilling tales of mystery, no deeds of heroic daring, no fearful catastrophes so told as to make the flesh creep; yet sorrow enough and pathos enough, the pathos of lives a great part of which is lived face to face with death. Take "The Silver Cloud"; it is one of the most wonderful bits ever written of what I may call eerie commonplace. A countryman shipped as a capstan-man to look after his shipwrecked brother. When a gull, drowned in the nets, is thrown on deck,

"he reverently turned the dead bird over, smoothing its draggled feathers. Then, shaking his head, he muttered sadly, 'Noa, noa! taint George; taint owd George.' 'Damn yew, matey, what are yew doing thar? Get on with yer work,' roared the master. 'Av, ay! master, that's all werry well, but I come to look arter my brother as was drowned in the Janewary gale, for he say to me afore he went fishin' on his last woyage—'Jack,' he say, 'when I'll die, I'll be an owd gannet, and if I heave round you'll heave me a herrin', won't you?' 'George,' I say, 'how shall I know yew along with the other gannets?' and he say, 'I'll hev a pair o' black armsleeves, so you'll know me.' But that there aint got no black armsleeves. But I'm bound to see owd George this voyage.'"

Then, when the herrings are safely stowed and the fishermen are noisily breakfasting below, "comes the cry 'man overboard,' and the excited wheelman points to a speck round which the gulls wheel and scream—the countryman had found his brother." This is a perfect bit of work. To do it Mr. Emerson must have lived among his East Anglians, as Mr. Grant Allen has among his Dorset folk. "The Yarn of the January Gale," again, is thoroughly natural—just what young Copperfield may have listened to as he lived in Peggotty's cottage. Sometimes Mr. Emerson is even cruelly realistic. Hard grubby selfishness is sometimes charged against this amphibious population as a whole. What an instance of this is Pintail in "Fatal Water," the most pronouncedly pathetic of the tales! He has seen a boat-load go down before his eyes while he was stalking a curlew on a mud bank, and his comment is

"Sarve 'em right. The warmin don't know nothing about small boat sailin'. Besides they'd only a' given me alf-a-crown if I'd saved the lot on 'em; damn 'em, I know 'em," and he spat contemptuously into the tide-way. Then becoming confidential he rowed up to the coble, and winking, said in a low voice, "We poor men mun get a living, eh matey? See here," showing the pigmy curlew, "I shall get three half-crowns for him."

If Mr. Emerson's subjects are commonplace, his method is (as I said) photographically exact. Every gladden-blade, every brown bent is patiently put in, the result being gained by accumulated touches, by a pre-Raphaelite minuteness. As literary genre-painting, the subject being of little account, the truth to nature (no matter what the nature is) being all in all, his work is perfect. But most readers need occasional rousing. Even the clearest insight sometimes fails to discern the underlying pathos. Take, for instance, the first story. A buxom young woman comes punting in her coble, and then, with a lavishly described display of her charms, begins to fish, and the brilliant colours, the sheeny scales of a "red-eye" make her doubt if her shepherd sweet-heart will ever be able to dress her in lustrous silks fastened with brilliant trinkets. "Bring me no more of thy lambs' tails," she muses; "I must go to town and seek a lover with gold like the scales in my old coble." The picture is very highly, a trifle too highly, wrought; but what pathos for those who can see behind it! The need of counsel, the lack of previous education, the absolute unmorality, the deliberate drifting from all moorings, the probable ruin, and sordid degradation. We cannot always be looking behind our pictures; and therefore even nature needs to be now and again set before us in her grandeur. But for "The Yarn of the January Gale" one might almost forget that the sea's voice is a mighty voice as we read the score on which Mr. Emerson has so faultlessly noted it.

There is, then, in this little book excellent work of its kind. Its claim "to reconcile scientific accuracy with artistic needs" is fully established so far as one branch of art is concerned. It is fine to do even one thing well; and the most fastidious can complain of nothing in these "Idyls" save very rare instances of the grandiloquence which I took leave to criticise in the Pictures (e.g.—"senility," "black liquidity of eyes," &c.) and a few needless inversions which, to my mind, are perversions.

And even the most fastidious will, I think, "ask for more." Mr. Emerson must have much more to tell. His "Kitty Witch," for instance, opens up an inexhaustible topic, to treat which well needs that one should be in touch with the Annie Masons, quite as much as fellowship with such as Darkel is needed for a true and complete picture of a poaching night.

HENRY STUART FAGAN.*

Christina, Queen of Sweden. By F. Bain. (W. H. Allen.)

MR. BAIN has achieved a large measure of success in the task which he set himself of giving a complete and trustworthy account of the famous Queen of Sweden. He has ransacked all there is to be learnt on the subject, and has produced a valuable and interesting historical study.

Christina probably suffers more in this country from sheer neglect than from misrepresentation. But calumny was very busy with her name on the continent in the age in which she lived, and still does grave injustice to her memory. Mr. Bain is very properly concerned in refuting these traducers; and if he departs from an attitude of judicial impartiality, it may be said that historical writing rarely interests unless it glows with the sympathies of the author. He has indeed much to set right. Even Ranke, in dealing with the queen, stands convicted of carelessness. Still, it is unfortunate that Mr. Bain in one or two places does more than justly vindicate Christina's memory. He becomes the special pleader, and indulges in one or two questionable glissades over perilous portions of her career.

We refer especially to his account of

* We have thought that readers of the ACADEMY would not like to be deprived of this last article written by the late Mr. Fagan, who died before correcting the proofs. It will at least show that his interests were by no means confined to Ireland or to politics.

Monaldeschi's execution. There is no doubt that when she left Sweden Christina believed that she retained supreme authority over her own retinue. And though the passing of a capital sentence in a foreign country and upon a foreigner was anomalous, yet as her action was tacitly recognised by the French authorities, there is no practical objection to be raised to it from the legal or from the international point of view. But other questions remain behind. The exact nature of Monaldeschi's crime nowhere appears. What were the interests which he betrayed? How far were they personal and how far political? Did the betrayal, in short, warrant Christina in doing what Mr. Bain, rather handsomely begging the question, describes as "an act of justice" in the Château of Fontainebleau? The whole affair is somewhat mysterious. Mr. Bain scarcely attempts to clear the mystery up. He gives a full account of the tragedy, but he rather avoids the reasons which led up to it.

A slighter instance of the hastiness into which Mr. Bain's zeal has led him may be noticed in his round assertion that the celebrated sally attributed to the queen on the occasion of her public profession of Catholicism at Innsprück is "a specimen of the sort of thing invented about Christina." It must be admitted that, in her alleged remark to the company who entertained her with a comedy after the service—"Tis but right, gentlemen, you should treat me to a comedy, since I have just treated you to a farce"—impudence, as Mr. Bain says, "could go no further." But she was capable of great flights of impudence. Her witicism with the cardinal in front of Bernini's statue of Truth, and her sharp answer to the pope when he sent her a rosary that she did not desire to become "Catholica da bacchettonne" are undoubted. They are much on all fours with the "invention" of Innsprück.

Christina, indeed, lost very few opportunities of proclaiming her contemptuous indifference for the rites of the Church she had entered. Her own religion was a sample of that personal and mystical devotion, previously cultivated by Vittoria Colonna at Naples with the assistance of Valdes and Ochino, which the female pietists of the French court afterwards elevated into a fashion. The change of religious profession in her was due to emotional and not to intellectual processes. She found in Catholicism, with its long muster-roll of legendary virgins, an exaltation of the celibacy to which she passionately clung. The uncouthness and narrowness of Swedish Lutheranism were hateful to her, and she was touched by the imposing antiquity of a more majestic system. Christina, moreover, had been predisposed to Catholicism by her reverence for Chanut and by her admiration for Descartes, who satisfied her intellectual side by reconciling Christianity with a large measure of philosophical freedom.

But if Mr. Bain is a little inconsistent in his handling of Christina's irreverence, he amply makes out his case in contending for her political and intellectual ability. What she achieved in her short reign was extraordinary. The world owes her a considerable debt for her great share in contributing to the Peace of Westphalia. In the war with Denmark she again showed a more statesman-like moderation than Oxenstiern. Nor did her political prescience desert her in her old age. She pointed out clearly to Louis XIV. the evil consequences to France of the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and few political prophecies have been more remarkable than her forecast of William III.'s aims and successes.

Mr. Bain has also laboured to do justice to Christina's remarkable literary abilities, and to the genuine appreciation she always maintained for real genius, even when surrounded by the flattery addressed to her as the Pallas of the North. Ranke, indeed, has observed that during her stay at Rome her masculine judgment and taste did much towards invigorating contemporary Italian style. Of her own writings the religious outpourings are of the most peculiar and personal interest. Her aphorisms were in the manner of the time. Two may, perhaps, be quoted here:

"There is a sort of pleasure in suffering from ingratitude known only to great minds."

"At the moment Justice is punishing some rascals, others steal the purses of the spectators."

It is indeed regrettable that the eccentricities of her career have blinded people, and probably will continue to blind them, to the extraordinary capacities of Gustavus Adolphus's daughter. Few more interesting women—perhaps not more than one or two—have ever occupied a European throne. Her vagaries, which astonished her contemporaries and have made serious historians fight shy of her, were mainly due to the fiery and restless energy, not untouched with madness, of the Vasas developing its greatest intensity in a daughter of the house.

C. E. DAWKINS.

Occasional Thoughts of an Astronomer on Nature and Revelation. By the Rev. C. Pritchard. (John Murray.)

IN this beautifully got-up volume, the blue cloth cover of which is appropriately sprinkled with silver stars, the Savilian Professor of Astronomy at Oxford has collected a number of sermons and addresses delivered before the British Association and various Church Congresses.

The general purport of these sermons is to prove that the discoveries of modern astronomy are in harmony not only with the essential teaching of Christ, which they might be, but with the dogmatic evolution of ecclesiasticism, which is a very different matter. In the last century astronomy was not generally esteemed a science that predisposed its students to a passive acquiescence in the creeds of a church. The reply of the celebrated La Place to Napoleon, when asked where the conception of deity entered his system, la Mécanique Céleste, "Sire, I have no need of that hypothesis," represented, at least on the continent, the general frame of mind produced by the contemplation of the changeless order of the heavens. In our own country, on the other hand, the verdict on a non-religious astronomer was contained in the poet's dictum:

"An undevout astronomer is mad."

Certainly all our chief English astronomers, from Newton downwards, have not only been devout men, but have found in their noble profession a never-ceasing aliment and stimulus to religious awe and devotion. At present, and in view of the growth of physical science during the last half-century, the problem for the astronomer who accepts all the details of Christian dogma is how to reconcile those details with the conceptions of time and space, of number and order, which form the elementary axioms of his study. He must be prepared to interpret every truth, no matter how completely terrestrial its ordinary bearings, sub specie aeternitatis to use the expression of Spinoza, assuming, i.e., that there are reasoning beings in the worlds scattered through space, the truth propounded as universal must have a certain sanction of veracity when referred to them. No doubt the elementary teachings of Christ are truths of this kind; but then there are many truths, chiefly pertaining to speculative dogma, of a different kind. The late Dr. Beard has put this matter, as regards one commonly received dogma, in his usually cogent form in the following extract from his Hibbert Lectures (p. 389):

"I say it with the deepest respect for the religious feelings of others, but I cannot but think that the whole system of Atonement, of which Anselm is the author, shrivels into inanity amid the light, the space, the silence of the stellar worlds."

I have dwelt a little on this point because it seems to me to represent the great defect of Prof. Pritchard's Eirenicon. I do not think he has grasped in its magnitude what I take to be the task of the devout astronomer of the future. At the same time, I must admit that he seems awake to the difficulties of limitless space, time, and gradual processes of every kind when considered in their bearing on human existence. The sermon which especially proves this is the third, entitled "The Testimony of Science to the Continuity of the Divine Thought for Man," which I commend to my readers as containing much matter for reflection. As another example, both of his style and method of reasoning, I cull the following extract from his discourse on "Modern Science and Natural Religion" (p. 124):

"As to the evolution of man, not so much from a zoophyte or a monkey as rather through zoophytes from the interaction of the atomic forces in a nebula, if such can be shown to be the order of Nature, that is to say, if such has been, and is, the will of Him who ordered Nature, I bow, and have no objection to make. For, 'an intelligent order of Nature being supposed, it makes no alteration in the matter before us whether he acts in Nature every moment, or at once contrived and executed his own part in the plan of the world.' These are the words of Bishop Butler, and he goes still further, and adds, in words of a burning significance, 'If civil magistrates could make the sanctions of their laws execute themselves, we should be just in the same sense under their government then as we are now, but in a much higher degree and more perfect manner.'"

What I have said will, I think, make it clear that Prof. Pritchard's "Occasional Thoughts" are worthy the serious consideration of those who interest themselves in his important subject. He says, I think, all that can be said for modern astronomy considered in the old-fashioned sense of a Christian evidence. Whether that is to be the future aspect of the matter is another question, as to which my own judgment, valeat quantum, may be gathered from the above remarks.

JOHN OWEN.

"QUESTIONS OF THE DAY."—Monopolies and the People. By Charles Whiting Baker. (Putnam's.)

THE question which Mr. Baker discusses is threefold: is the prevalence of monopoly in the United States a fact? if a fact, is it an evil? and, if an evil, how is it to be remedied? An affirmative answer to the first query is obtained by an extensive survey of American trade and industry. The monopolies which are formed by government and municipal bodies, the combinations of labour, the trusts, syndicates, and corners, which infest manufacturing, mining, and other industries, are examined in detail. The general result of the enquiry may be roughly stated as follows. The number of workers in the United States being nearly seventeen and a half millions, out of these there are about eleven and three quarter millions whose remuneration is determined by free competition. Five and a half millions belong to occupations in which competition is more or less restricted. But only one million derive considerable benefit from monopoly. How considerable that benefit is shown by estimating the amount of wealth operated on by monopolists, and the extent to which their operations raise prices. In illustration of the first point, take the estimate that of the total wealth annually produced in the United States ten per cent is paid for transportation effected by companies which are extensively and necessarily consolidated. Or note the fact that seven great corporations associated by a tacit agreement own more than two-thirds of the area in which the species of coal best suited for domestic uses is found; that they mine and put on the market the greater part of the total production of that coal—some fifteen million pounds' worth. The power of monopolies to raise prices is illustrated by the late copper syndicate, which long maintained the price of this necessary article at a figure about 70 per cent. higher than what may be called the natural price. These are but specimens of the striking facts and figures marshalled in this instructive volume. We have not verified every statement, but we derive a general guarantee for Mr. Baker's accuracy from the moderation of his tone. Far from inveighing against monopolists, he regards their action as the natural result of circumstances, and what most persons similarly situated would have done.

The essential evil of monopoly is the inequality of distribution which it causes. In Mr. Baker's phraseology—

"No one can deny at this day that it is contrary to the principles of justice to give to the men in any one occupation or calling an advantage over those in any other, except in just the degree that one occupation is more beneficial to the world than another."

"The amount of wealth which any man receives should bear some approximate relation to the benefit which he confers upon the world."

"It is not very far from the truth to say of some of our most wealthy men that their wealth was won instead of earned; and many place a much worse term in the place of 'won.'"

Mr. Baker connects with monopolies the additional evil of "over-production," by reasoning which we have not quite followed. The establishment of monopoly also involves the opposite evil of excessive competition. The death struggle of competition is most violent just before the rigor of monopoly sets in. The conditions under which competition becomes fatally intense are ably analysed by Mr. Baker.

The fact that competition between a small number of units usually results, after a wasteful war, in consolidation of interests shows that a panacea is not to be sought in such encouragement of competition as it is in the powers of legislation, like the interstate commerce law, to afford. A more direct action of government is recommended by Mr. Baker. He introduces his scheme with some general reflections on the sovereign rights of the people. Here, and indeed at many other points in the work, the author's position would have been at once clearer and stronger if he had referred more copiously to contemporary literature. He is not the only temperate and well-informed writer who has revolted against what Jevons calls the "metaphysical incubus" of the abstract right of property and the dogma of laissez-faire. Mr. Baker prescribes government interference in different degrees adapted to two distinct cases. For one class of monopolies—those obtaining the benefit of natural agents and public franchises—the remedy is "government ownership of fixed capital and regulation of prices with private operation and general management." For other industries a milder dose of state control is suitable. It will suffice to legalise combination, but prohibit discrimination.

"Make contracts to restrict competition legal and binding, instead of illegal and void as now; but, provide that every such contract should be filed for public inspection; that prices charged by the combination shall be public, stable, and absolutely unvarying to all; that the affairs of the combination shall be managed according to a consistent and stringent co-operative law; and that an annual report of the combination be made to a public commission."

The proposer of this plan does not forget that laws without morals avail little. He makes a manly appeal to the pristine virtue of patriotism. He hopes much, but not in the present state of civilisation everything, from the spirit of Christian brotherhood.

F. Y. EDGEWORTH.

NEW NOVELS.

The New Continent. By Mrs. Worthey. In 2 vols. (Macmillan.)

Dead Stripes. By J. Carmichael. In 3 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

Norman and I. By Kate Cousins. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A Tale of Three Nations. By J. F. Hodgetts. (Ward & Downey.)

The Apothecary's Daughters. By Henrik Pontoppidan. (Trübner.)

Currie, Curtis, & Co, Grammors. By C. J. Hyne. (Remington.)

The Dead Man's Secret. By J. E. Muddock. (Chatto & Windus.)

In Chains of Fate. By John Max. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

The Experiences of Richard Jones. By J. Jones. (Digby & Long.)

It is only consistent with the order of things that the phenomenal success achieved by Mrs. Humphry Ward's famous novel should produce a host of imitations, and there seems every prospect of our being liberally deluged with Robert-Elsmere-and-water for some time to come. Nothing that may be construed as offensive in the expression just used is to be understood as applying to The New Continent, which, in spite of many crudities and weaknesses, is entitled, if only by the momentous nature of its subject-matter, to our heartiest indulgence, and certainly to the foremost place among the novels under review this week. The author, Mrs. Worthey, describes the experiences of a young girl who, in her struggles after truth, lapses from Christianity into the hopelessness of disbelief, finds comfort again in the doctrine of Sanctification by Faith, relinquishing the latter soon afterwards for the negative ground of Agnosticism, and ultimately becomes a convert to Positivism and the worship of Humanity. Artistically considered, Mrs. Worthey's book, it must be confessed, teems with faults. The writer has little or no dramatic instinct, and in point of constructive mechanism her novel might easily be a compilation from the diary of an earnest and thoughtful, but highly impressionable, young woman; her characters, with the exception of Laura Bell, have scarcely any individuality; the language of the religious discussions does not always rise—especially in the first volume—much above the level of a higher class tract, and their matter, though it reminds one of Edna Lyall and Mrs. Ward, can hardly compare with either in grip and analytical subtlety. On the other hand, every page of her work bears witness to the labour of a widely read and intelligent woman; and if her championship of Positivism is not unassailable, it has, at all events, the charm inseparable from outspoken convictions. Above all, if, as may be assumed, this book is a first attempt in fiction, it offers the brightest promise of future excellence. The second volume is, as regards style and continuity of thought, immeasurably superior to the first.

Dead Stripes also appears to be a "maiden effort" on the part of Mr. J. Carmichael. It is, on the whole, a fairly well-constructed tale of a factory girl who, being pestered by the attentions—honourable enough in themselves—of her master, the mill-owner, drives the jealous sweetheart of her own choice to savage recklessness and wild schemes of vengeance. The characters of Liz (the mill-hand), George Lomas (her lover), and James Heathcote (the master), are truthfully drawn; and though the action of the book is sometimes rather tame, it is never dull. Much of the dialogue is written in Lancashire dialect, a little of which goes a long way, and which, given in large doses, is apt to be tedious.

To judge from the extraordinary subjects chosen by novelists for the groundwork of their tales, one would suppose that every-day human life had been "played out" as a theme for description. What are we to say to a serious fairy tale in three volumes? Norman and I is not a polished satire, like The Rose and the Ring, nor a piece of witty and fantastic topsy turveydom, like Alice in Wonderland; it is not even a tale that children as well as grown-up people can delight in, like The Water Babies. No; it is a regulation three-volume library novel, and seemingly appeals to the ordinary adult novel reader only. We are invited to follow the fortunes of Kate Brentwood, spinster, aged thirty-nine, who is escorted from earth to a realm of fairy land by its king in person. Here she meets with her long-lost lover, Norman Egerton, who had been "translated" some twenty years previously. They are happily married according to the local rites—fairy-land marriages, by the way, are eternal—but for some unfortunate misdemeanour are sent down to earth again, where the fairy habits that still cling to them, such as sailing down stairs and from room to room without touching steps or floor, naturally create considerable astonishment. However, at the close of the third volume they are both under recall and preparing for a journey back. As regards mere execution, the book is exceedingly well written, and the author unites to a rich imagination a rare faculty for gorgeous and glowing description.

An opportunity for refreshing our memories of the Franco-German War is afforded by A Tale of Three Nations—the work of an author who has already published some dozen or more books of heroism and adventure, and who, having been formerly professor in the Royal Naval College of Prussia, may be presumed to have had access to trustworthy materials for his work. His narrative is not altogether confined to the stirring events of 1870-1, but covers a period of about twelve years, and includes passing notices of the Danish War of 1863 and the Austrian War of 1866, being in effect a sketch of Prussia's rise under King William to the supremacy of the German Confederation. One gets a little confused here and there with intricacies of family relationship, and with the number of actors introduced on the scene; but, on the whole, young Baron de Taun and his friends are thoroughly worthy of our acquaintance, and the tale is constructed upon the legitimate lines that rule with fiction of this class. There is plenty of romance and mystery; virtue meets with its due reward; the villain, for a while triumphant, is ultimately confounded; and due tribute is paid to all manly and chivalrous attributes. The unbounded antipathy displayed towards everything and everybody French, from the "mushroom Emperor" downwards, is a feature which might with advantage have been avoided.

The Apothecary's Daughter is a short story translated from the Danish by Gordius Nielsen. The apothecary is an old man devoted in a mild way to field sports, natural history, and gardening. Having retired from business, he settles at a quiet country spot, where, to the indignation of the higher-born families of the neighbourhood, his elder daughter marries the local baron, while the younger secures a wealthy landed proprietor, member of the Landsting, or Danish Upper House of Parliament. The book is written in a style of almost childlike naïveté, and delights in dwelling over scenes of Arcadian felicity, details of wedded bliss, and the simple joys of the apothecary in his country home; so that it comes rather as a shock to the reader when he finds both marriages turning out disastrously, the baron going astray with a milk-maid, and the other husband decamping to Italy in the company of a retired actress. It is difficult to understand the point of this dénouement, unless the author intended to illustrate the loose morals of the aristocracy, or the danger of plebeian daughters marrying above their station.

One would scarcely have thought it possible to invest the everyday life of a trio of army tutors with sufficient interest to make a readable book out of the record. Yet Mr. Hyne has not attempted the task without some measure of success, though, in order thoroughly to appreciate the humour of Currie, Curtis, & Co., Crammers, one should be a university undergraduate, or a youthful loungee at the clubs. Two young athletes just taking their degree at Cambridge, and wholly undecided hitherto as to their future career in life, conceive the idea of setting up a cramming establishment, and, being somewhat deficient in scholarship themselves, press into their service a man who has earned considerable distinction in the tripos. The "dauntless three" raise the necessary capital, take and furnish a country house, start from small beginnings, and ultimately prove successful. This is all. There is no element of romance in the book, though two of the partners do take to themselves wives in the course of the narrative. Its claim to the reader's perusal lies in its frothy vein of rollicking humour, witty repartee, and fund of modern slang industriously collected by the writer and embellished, presumably, with original contributions of his own.

A capital book for boys is The Dead Man's Secret, wherein Hans Christian Feldje, a Swede by descent, but naturalised in England, narrates his adventures in search of El Dorado, in the days when the existence of that fabled region was still a cherished belief. In choosing Ecuador and the upper reaches of the Amazon for the scene of his hero's adventures, Mr. Muddock has laid his narrative open to comparison with some of the most picturesque portions of Westward Ho! in which his chance of appearing to advantage will at least be problematical; but, apart from this, his tale is exciting in description and thoroughly manly in tone. It is told in Capt. Mayne Reid's style; the usual struggles occur with beast, bird, and Indian; and the inevitable spoonfuls of useful information in geography or natural history are ladled out at appropriate intervals.

In Chains of Fate is a shillingworth which arouses attention by the sensational incident depicted on its cover, but the letter-press within is of somewhat mixed quality. The chief characters are two medical men, Ronald Byrnelee and Dr. Horace Kemp, together with Helen Desborough, a very charming heroine, beloved by them both. There is a fair amount of action in the novel, and its literary style is quite up to the mark of average merit; but the plot rests upon a poorly conceived device, and the knowledge that Dr. Kemp is tainted with hereditary madness makes him fall rather flat as a villain. The writer appears to be a propagandist of materialistic doctrine; and those who object to the immortality of the soul being treated as no longer even an open question, much less an article of religious belief, will find themselves anything but en rapport with his sentiments.

Even the infinitely little is susceptible of entertaining treatment at the hands of a skilful writer; but it can scarcely be said that the necessary conditions of success have been satisfied in the case of The Experiences of Richard Jones, compiled from his diary by J. Jones, unless, indeed, the book is intended for schoolboys only. The latter may find amusement in following the fortunes of a young Welshman in his struggles to obtain appointments as junior assistant master in private schools, without possessing either a university degree or even a competent knowledge of conversational English; but the incidents, though described with realistic truthfulness and praiseworthy attention to detail, are not of a nature to attract the general reader, while it may be added that both the humour and morality of the book are distinctly of the schoolboy type. Attempts are made to extract fun out of grotesquely made suits of clothes, playground and dormitory practical jokes, &c.; and the author certainly displays an audacious amount of candour in his complacent portraiture of a hero not only brusque of manner, combative towards principals, and revengeful in disposition, but capable of falsehood on any convenient occasion, and not above resorting to the trick of altering £25—the salary offered him in a letter from a principal—to £45, in order to extract a loan of a sovereign or two from a friend, on the strength of his prospective income. It is a "plain, unvarnished tale" with a vengeance, if that is any recommendation.

J. BARROW ALLEN.

BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

India Past and Present. By James Samuelson. (Trübner.) Mr. Samuelson, who has already given us descriptive and historical accounts of Roumania and Bulgaria, here goes further afield, and compiles into one bulky volume the results of his reading about India and his personal experiences of that country. The first half of the book consists of a rapid historical sketch of India, from the time preceding the arrival of the Aryans down to the suppression of the Mutiny. While this does great credit to the author's industry, and fairly represents the relative importance of the subjects treated, we cannot say that it possesses much independent value. The second part, of somewhat greater length, describes a visit paid by Mr. Samuelson to the country during the winter of 1888-89. Here again the method adopted is somewhat discursive, comments and inferences being mixed up with actual observations. But whatever may be thought about Mr. Samuelson's system of book-making, he cannot be denied two great merits. His energy in making inquiries with his own eyes and ears seems to have been inexhaustible; and his conclusions are always inspired by absolute impartiality. Though many books have been written about India by persons of far wider knowledge and of far higher literary talents, yet there are facts and reflexions of value here which will not be found elsewhere. Mr. Samuelson seems to have received the confidence of educated natives, but he is by no means a blind supporter of their claims; and his acquaintance with South-eastern Europe has made him attach almost as much importance to the question of frontier defence as Sir Charles Dilke himself. Finally, he has embellished his volume (like previous ones) with numerous illustrations of architecture and ethnical types, reproduced from photographs by the collotype process; and he has further obtained from Sir William Hunter a bibliography, or rather a hand-list, of trustworthy authorities on the several departments of Indian research. This appendix alone would be enough to give the book a permanent value.

Ad Orientem. By A. D. Frederickson. (W. H. Allen.) This is a book of much less value than that of Mr. Samuelson. The greater part of it represents the results of a tour made by the author so long ago as 1870-71 to India, Ceylon, the Straits, Java, Canton, and Japan, returning home by way of the United States, which was then comparatively a new route. The experience of a second visit paid to Southern India in 1876-78 is also incorporated. Mr. Frederickson does not claim for himself any very high aims in his Preface; and it is our duty to say that he would have done better by avoiding print altogether. Here are two extraordinary statements, taken almost at random from p. 48:

"Lucknow, one of the oldest cities in India . . ."
"The State religion of Oude is Mohammedan, its rulers having extirpated the Brahmans in the beginning of the fourteenth century. . . ."

As a matter of fact, we believe that Brahmans are at the present day proportionately more numerous in Oude than in any other province. Brahmans from Oude formed the backbone of the sepoy regiments which mutinied in 1857—a fact to be born in mind when the Hindus, as opposed to the Mohammedans, are alleged to be not a fighting race. We are glad, however, to be able to give Mr. Frederickson some praise for his illustrations, though we should have greatly preferred a portfolio of plates alone to all his letterpress. No doubt, even these are old-fashioned, both in subject and mode of reproduction, though perhaps they are none the worse on this account. The best are the chromo-lithographs of fruit and flowers from his own drawings. The map showing the flow of pumice-stone released by the eruption (not earthquake) of Krakatau is also worthy of notice.

A Suburb of Yedo. By the late Theobald A. Purcell. With Illustrations. (Chapman & Hall.) Alas, we shall have no more such charming books as this from the hand of the writer! Nay, it is to be feared that we shall have no such books at all—at least on such a subject—from any hand. Like the patches of snow which linger in some corner unnoticed by the sun long after winter has gone, so in this suburb of Yedo old customs, old characters, old ideas, belonging to the spirit of old Japan, still lingered awhile untouched by the innovations which surrounded them on all sides. Do they still linger, or may it even now be said of them "On sont les neiges d'autun?" Who knows? It would be pleasant to think that the tapster with the wonderful left eye still gossips with the sturdy stonemason, and the blind boy still flies his kite in the quiet street; but, at all events, we may be thankful that they, and many another quaint and simple human creature in that old suburb, lived long enough to be drawn by so kind and skilful a hand. They were but "a lot of old dullards," says the author, but they fitted their place and their place fitted them; and both together form the subjects of a series of pictures entertaining, humorous, pathetic, which would have delighted the soul of Charles Lamb. Perhaps we might be disappointed if we saw the originals; but it is impossible not to wish to have been an invisible witness of that delightful colloquy in the sake shop, where the evils of intemperance were the theme of the tapster himself, and the genial effects of strong drink were so poetically set forth by the stonemason.

"Why," urged the former, "should this saki be called by many the chief of the hundred drugs? In my opinion it were much more fitly designated the origin of the ten thousand diseases. Well and truly has Shakko spoken when he says that the man who induces another to partake of saki against his will, his soul shall pass hereafter through five hundred generations of beings without heads."

Excellent is the response of the stonemason, beginning "See how the circling wine cup wakes the 'ten thousand pleasures,' when friends, gathered round the fire on a moonlight night or snowy morning, tell tales with hearts to which care is a stranger"; and ending with a reminder of the proverb, "Drink and sing while you may, for one inch before you reigns black night." How pleasant, too, for once to have been shaved by a barber who, instead of regaling you with his view of the political situation or the latest scandal in high life, would have told you of the man who was bewitched by the fox, and explained to you how the earthworm got his hoarse voice from the carp. If such things delight you not, perhaps the description of the doctor will; and if not that, there is still many another chance, including the blind boy—blind from his birth, and yet once

"to be seen any day of the week flying his kite with great dexterity, and with remarkable reliah for the game. Beliah, is it written? What a feeble noun! Who shall describe the sight—who adequately pourtray our blind boy, as he stands with body bent forward and quivering with delight, as the kite tugs and strains to get away—his poor lustreless eyes widely distended, his cheeks flushed, his lips parted and trembling with excitement, and every involuntary muscle of his hands in action, as his fingers play with the string, along which he has surely projected his whole soul to the toy amongst the clouds? 'Hi! hi! stand aside.' It is no use, my friends with the norimon, you address yourself to a mere outline of a boy; the substance is far away above you at the end of that string."

This delightful book is illustrated with several drawings by a Japanese artist. They are all very clever; but none of them is better than that of the blind boy, which is a masterpiece of expression.

Friesland Meres, and through the Netherlands in a Norfolk Wherry. By Henry Montagu Doughty. (Sampson Low.) This is about as unpretending a book of travel as we ever read. The writer does not give us elaborate descriptions, or chapters of history; he does not pose as a poet or a philosopher, or even as a humourist. He tells us that the book is hardly more than a transcript of his log, and that could not have been a very elaborate affair. But it is "enough." It is terse without being dry, and full of information without being dull. He has just reflected the incidents which he and his party enjoyed, and done so with sufficient clearness to make us enjoy them too. He took a new track also in his trim Norfolk wherry; in which he was able to go over sea, or through river, lakes or canal as fancy prompted him, visiting little-known places in Friesland and South Holland, here and there and in and out, till his track on the map is like a spider's web. He sees and makes us see Ijlet—quaintest of villages, and takes us to a Kermis or two, and a regatta extraordinary; he breaks the rest of the "dead cities," which appear to be much more lively than the readers of M. Havard's book are led to suppose; he comes also in due, or rather undue, course to places well known, as Haarlem and Utrecht, and recalls the glories of Holland and the cruelties of Alva at Zutphen, Alkmaar, Oudewater, and Leiden. There are some incidents which must have been unpleasant at the time, as the mobbing and spitting at "the foreigners" at Dokkum, and the incivility at one or two other places; but, on the whole, the holiday was a thorough success, and the book is one also. It is illustrated with a number of little pictures, which do much credit to the three members of the party who are responsible for them.

Our Journey to the Hebrides. By Joseph and Elizabeth R. Pennell. (Fisher Unwin.) The illustrations in this little book are artistic and beautiful, if somewhat worn, having most of them been previously printed in Harper's Magazine. Having said this much, it must be added that the chronicle of this American survey of Western Scotland is anything but pleasant reading. The authors frankly confess that they started in a state of crass ignorance about Scotland, which they abundantly made up for by scorn and contempt of almost all they saw. Consequently, "we have no hesitation in saying that our trip to Scotland was the most miserable"; of all countries, "it is the most abominable to travel through, and its people are the most down-trodden on God's earth" and "the saddest." The climate is vile. The "entire population of the islands exist in a condition of absolute wretchedness and semi-starvation." Oatmeal, haggis, whisky, the Waverley novels, the heroes of tradition, "Mac This and Mac That," the misty grey skies, and the unfortunate Duke of Argyll, instead of being blessed, are throughout banned and condemned. The pair agreed to walk with knapsacks when they could, and these encumbrances appear to have kept them in chronic bad temper. Before they set out they "hated the very name of Scotland." "Day after day we were dispirited, disheartened, and only happy when we were not walking. We went to bed in the evening, and got up in the morning wearied and exhausted." They did, indeed, come back wiser on some points. They found the country beautiful and full of fine effects; "above all, we learned the burden of Scotland, whose Highlands have been laid waste, their people brought to silence." In truth, Mr. and Mrs. Pennell went to Scotland with jaundiced minds. They never reflected that the grave, reserved Gael requires sympathy, enthusiasm, a kindred taste in the matter of sport and outdoor life, before he shows the warmth of his attachments. With hearts filled with republicanism and political theories utterly opposed to the spirit of Scotland, they were not likely to obtain fair views of the people's condition; and they seem to have returned distempered as they went. "Coelum non animus," &c. The other side of the medal they never tried to see. The care, kindness, attention, and friendliness of the sportsmen and their families who pass the summer in the north, and diffuse the wealth of Pactolus through every glen, pass unregarded. The authors lose no opportunity of a sneer at landlords and riches, whether they know the former or not:

"Near Duntulm Castle was a shooting-lodge: on the water a steam-yacht lay at anchor. The slave-driver is found for at least six weeks in the midst of his slaves."

If a squalid village strikes the travellers' eyes, its misery is only enhanced to them by the sight of a big house near. Even Englishmen in their own land come in for a share of injustice and contempt; "The Englishman who understands true politeness is the exception." It is really of no use to explain to such writers the impossibility of pasturing sheep in deer-forests, the absolute need of emigration for the crofters, or any other of the economical questions which have been so hotly debated of late in Scotland, the home (forsooth!) of "needless idleness and cruel sport." But a long acquaintance with the Highlands enables us to bear witness to the open-handed kindness and friendliness of sportsmen to the poor, and especially the goodness of the lady members of families at the different lodges; to the undisguised delight of the native population when "the gentlemen will be coming soon"; to the many friendships made between gillies and fishermen and sportsmen, no less to the advantage of the latter than the former. The Crofters' Commission has settled, it may be hoped, agrarian troubles. If we wanted to find warm hearts and nature's gentlemen we should seek them in Scotland. Ours, indeed, is the other side of the medal; but we venture to say it is what most people delight to look upon.

The Log of the "Nereid." By Thomas Gibson Bowles. Illustrated by Lockhart Bogle. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) Mr. Bowles has followed a bad example in giving to the public an account of a simple yachting voyage to the Mediterranean, with superabundant details about the little children whom he took with him. The style in which the book is written, and the prominence given to personal reflexions about things in general, do not make the reader's task any easier. We must, however, do the author the justice of testifying that he seems to be well qualified in respect of seamanship. Against the illustrations there is nothing to be said. That facing p. 46—"Keep her away, Bill"—is really excellent.

Taureaux et Mantilles. Souvenirs d'un Voyage en Espagne et en Portugal. By Léon de Rosny. (Paris: Ollendorf.) The well-known professor of Japanese at Paris has given in this work a new proof of his versatility and prodigious fecundity. These two volumes contain the description of a journey made in Spain and Portugal in search of manuscripts and documents from ancient America. Hardly anything is said, however, about the latter question. Disquisitions on all sorts of subjects fill up many pages of this work, which is written throughout in a pleasant style. Philosophy, art, Darwinism, an idealistic administration, Buddhism, architecture, the coloured feathers of birds, and the future status of women in society, are successively the occasion of original and humorous remarks. Some popular tales, "Crête noire," "Suleiman," a love story, and a legend current among the Gitanos about their origin, add to the pleasing character of the book. And the reader who expects some special remarks from the founder of the Société d'Ethnographie de Paris will be satisfied to find interesting pages on the Basques, the Portuguese, and the Institution Ethnographique.

NOTES AND NEWS.

AFTER a delay of nearly five years the committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund have received their firman granting permission to excavate on a site previously approved by the Porte. It is understood that all objects, except duplicates, found in the course of the excavations shall be forwarded to the museum at Constantinople; but that the committee's agents shall have the right of making squeezes, sketches, models, photographs, and copies of all such objects. The committee have been so fortunate as to secure the services of Mr. Flinders Petrie, who will proceed to Syria on the completion of his present work in the Fayum.

AT the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday next, February 10, Mr. Douglas W. Freshfield will give an account of the expedition to the Caucasus, undertaken last summer by Mr. C. Dent and himself, to ascertain the actual circumstances of the death of Mr. Donkin and Mr. Fox in the previous year. The paper will be illustrated, with the help of the lantern, by photographs taken by Signor V. Sella and Mr. H. Wolley.

MR. H. G. KEENE has just sent to press the revised edition of Beale's Oriental Biographical Dictionary, upon which he has been engaged for some time past. While compiled primarily from the point of view of Indian history, the work also contains much information about Persian authors, and about the dynasties of Turkestan and Arabia. It will be issued to subscribers, through Messrs. W. H. Allen, as a companion volume to Hughes's Dictionary of Islam.

GOLF is to have a volume to itself in the "Badminton Library," which will be published in the course of next month. Among the writers are Mr. Horace Hutchinson, Mr. A. J. Balfour, and Sir Walter G. Simpson. The following volume, dealing with tennis, lawn-tennis, racquets, and fives, will appear in May.

MR. STEAD's work, The Pope and the New Era, being letters from the Vatican in 1889, will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Company next week.

A NEW edition of Puckle's Club is in preparation, containing the original wood engravings. It will be printed at the Chiswick Press, in a limited issue. Messrs. Bell are the publishers.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will shortly publish The Garden Story; or, Pleasures and Trials of an Amateur Gardener, by Mr. George H. Ellwanger. The book will be printed and illustrated with the greatest care, so as to be suitable for presentation as well as for practical use.

THE third volume of Book Prices Current, containing a record of the sales for 1889, is announced for immediate publication, by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will shortly publish a new story by Mr. George Manville Fenn, entitled The Mymn's Mystery.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT will publish before the end of the present month a new novel by Beatrice Whitby, in three volumes, entitled Part of the Property.

MESSRS. LONGMANS announce as in the press Snap: a Tale of the Lone Mountain, by Mr. C. Philipps-Wolley, author of "Sport in the Crimea and Caucasus."

THE next volume in the series of "Foreign Classics for English Readers" will be Alfred de Musset.

Under the title of A Popular Story of the Church in Wales, Messrs. Griffith, Farran & Co. will issue in a few days a popular handbook, describing the origin and history of the church in Wales, its present work and progress, and the agitation for its disestablishment. It is written by Mr. G. H. F. Nye, author of "A Popular Story of the Church of England."

MR. JOHN MURRAY will issue immediately a new edition of Sir Monier Williams's Buddhism, containing a copious index, and also a preface in which the author replies to some of his critics.

THE next addition to the "Chandos Classics" will be a handsome edition of Napier's Peninsular War in six volumes.

MR. HALL CAINE's new novel, The Bondman, which was published only at the end of last week, has already reached a second edition.

WE understand that the demand for Hazell's Annual for 1890 has been so great as to have quickly exhausted the large edition originally printed, and that a reprint has accordingly been undertaken.

ONE of Mr. Henry Dunning Macleod's works on economics has just been translated into Japanese.

THE next number of the Leipzig Export Journal, a trilingual book-trade periodical, will devote an article to a sketch of the history of the Clarendon Press.

ON January 31, Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode, the Queen's printers, presented to President Carnot a Bible, handsomely printed and bound, as a souvenir of the Paris Exhibition. M. Carnot announced his intention of depositing the book in the Bibliothèque Nationale.

A MEMORIAL is being signed, addressed to the First Lord of the Treasury, praying that the pension of £100 on the Civil List which was enjoyed by the late Rev. J. G. Wood, the popular writer on natural history, may be continued to his widow.

CANON AINGER will begin a course of three lectures, at the Royal Institution, on "The Three Stages of Shakspeare's Art," on Thursday, February 13; and Lord Rayleigh will begin a course of seven lectures on "Electricity and Magnetism," on Saturday, February 15.

AT the meeting of the New Shakspeare Society, on Friday next, February 14, Mr. Sidney L. Lee will read a paper on "An Elizabethan Bookseller."

WITH reference to a note in the ACADEMY of last week upon the comparative demand for magazines at the Aberdeen Public Library, our attention has been called to the Report on the Mitchell Library at Glasgow for 1886, which gives similar statistics. In this case the numbers were arrived at by examining the magazine tables, and noting the magazines actually in use. This examination was made 200 times during the year, with the following results for those monthlies which were found to be in use more than 100 times: Chambers's Journal, 155; Harper's, 137; Century and Leisure Hour, 136; Nineteenth Century, 135; Cornhill, 134; Temple Bar, 132; Blackwood's, 124; All the Year Round, 118; Good Words, 113; Longman's, 111; Atlantic Monthly, 108; Fortnightly, 105.

THE fourth volume of the new edition of The Collected Writings of De Quincey (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black) contains the first instalment of biographies and biographical sketches. The most notable are "Richard Bentley" and "The Last Days of Immanuel Kant," from which many must have derived their first impressions of these two great men. But the interesting features of this volume are the preface of Prof. Masson, disclosing some details about De Quincey's family never before published; and the two illustrations—a reproduction (by photogravure?) of Mr. W. B. Richmond's portrait of Mrs. F. Baird Smith, which more than suggests a trace of her father's features; and a woodcut from a miniature of "brother Pink." Incidentally, we are told that De Quincey's only surviving son, after serving with distinction through the Mutiny, emigrated to New Zealand, and is now sergeant-at-arms in the colonial Parliament.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have issued a new edition, revised, and with additions, of William George Ward and the Oxford Movement. We may add that some interesting letters on this subject, hitherto unpublished, may be found—where they would hardly be looked for—in a little book entitled On Highgate Hill, by John Pym Yeatman (Bradbury, Agnew & Co.). They occur in connexion with his account of the Order of the Passionists.

THE Public Libraries Acts were adopted in the parish of Stoke Newington, London, by an enormous majority, on Wednesday, January 5.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. W. E. GLADSTONE has been staying at Oxford during the past week in rooms at All Souls, of which college he was elected an honorary fellow in 1858. On Wednesday he delivered an address at the Union upon "The Points of Contact between Homer and Recent Assyrian Discoveries."

THE first performance of Browning's "Stratford" by the Oxford University Dramatic Society has been fixed for Wednesday next, February 12, at 8 p.m. There will be seven performances in all, including two in the afternoons of Saturday and Monday.

MR. REGINALD WALTER MACAN, fellow and tutor of University College, has been appointed by the delegates of the common university fund to the readership in ancient history at Oxford, vacant by the promotion of Prof. Pelham to the Camden chair.

PROF. HOLLAND, the Ohichele professor of international law and diplomacy at Oxford, is unable to lecture this term.

THE report of the delegates of the Common University Fund at Oxford for the past year shows that £3611 was received from taxation on the colleges. The total amount paid to readers and lecturers was £3261, while £773 was granted to various departments and museums, including £350 for the purchase of antiquities for the Ashmolean. The Fund now has a large balance in hand, out of which it is proposed to devote £1000 to the purchase of MSS. for the Bodleian.

THE adjudicators of the Prince Consort Prize at Cambridge have recommended for publication the three following essays: "The Destruction of the Somerset Religious Houses and its Effects," by Mr. W. A. J. Archbold; "The Early History of Frisia with special relation to its Conversion," by Mr. W. E. Collins; and "Election by Lot at Athens," by Mr. J. W. Headlam.

Two inaugural lectures have recently been delivered at Oxford—that of Mr. W. R. Morfill, as reader in Slavonic; and that of Mr. F. Madan, as reader in mediæval palæography. We may also mention that the Rev. Dr. E. Moore, principal of St. Edmund Hall, is giving a course of lectures on "Dante and the Inferno."

MR. G. C. DRUCE, author of The Flora of Oxfordshire (1886)—upon whom the university conferred last year the honorary degree of M.A.—has been appointed curator of the Fielding Herbarium, in succession to Dr. Schönland.

DR. EMIL REICH is delivering a course of three lectures at Oxford upon "Roman Law, its Vera Causa, and its Influence on Modern Civilisation."

WADHAM COLLEGE, Oxford, has recently become possessed of the old communion table at Ilminster Church, at which, in all probability, Sir Nicholas and Dorothy Wadham must have been in the habit of communicating. It is of oak, handsomely carved, and undoubtedly good Elizabethan work. A stone altar having been substituted for it at Ilminster, it will now be placed in the college chapel.

PROF. F. MAX MÜLLER began on Wednesday his second course of Gifford Lectures at Glasgow, dealing with "Physical Religion; or the Belief in Natural, Sub-natural, and Super-natural Powers discovered in some of the Great Phenomena of Nature." Dr. E. B. Tylor is now delivering his second course of Gifford Lectures at Aberdeen, and also Mr. Andrew Lang at St. Andrews.

WE hear that the "Ajax" of Sophocles is to be performed, in an English version, at St. Andrews, on February 20, and the two following days.

THE undergraduates of the four Scotch Universities have formed a joint-committee, with the object of forming and publishing a representative collection of students' songs. For St. Andrews Prof. Lewis Campbell has written a "carmen seculare," which has been set to music by Sir Herbert Oakeley.

THERE is a biographical sketch of the late Dr. Hatch in the February number of the Expositor, which well deserves to be read. Prof. Sanday's name is a guarantee for the accuracy of the facts and the delicacy of the critical setting. The Revue critique for January 13 also contains an analysis of Dr. Hatch's last published work, Essays in Biblical Greek, the fulness of which says more than eulogies, for which the author would have cared little. It is the method which the French critic admires, and of which he finds in this book an excellent specimen.

TRANSLATION.

THE SEAFARER.

Translation from Old English.

THE thought that was pent in my heart
Is roaming the roaring sea;
It hath sped to the home of the whale,
Where my soul ever yearned to be.
It hath flown to the ends of the earth,
It hath traversed the trackless main,
And back with a ravening swoop
It hath rushed on my heart again.
The lone-flier screams: in my soul
A passionate longing raves;
I must go; I must traverse alone
The death-way over the waves;
For I long for the joy of God,
And I scorn a life that is death,
And I know earth's treasures are vain,
And that life is a fleeting breath.
I know the terror of death
Must come to all soon or late,
Be it age or disease, or the edge
Of the sword that is steeled with hate.
The praise of the living is best;
The fame that awaiteth the dead,
Who wrought good ere they went their way,
Who shall live when the soul hath fled;
For on earth they grappled with sin,
And the malice of foes o'ercame;
They shall live on the lips of men,
And heaven shall ring with their name.
And gone is the pride of power,
And gone are the days of old,
And gone are Kaiser and King,
And gone is the giver of gold.
The glorious deeds and the joy,
And the splendour that girt the throne
Are gone, and the weak in woe
Inherit the earth alone.
For bowed is the pride of wealth,
Earth's glory age withers and sears,
And the faces of men are pale,
And are seamed with the furrows of years.
And the hoary-headed bewail
The friends they shall know no more;
They are gone; they are wrapped in the mould
The sons of the mighty of yore,
For quenched is the flicker of life,
And no thought can flash through the brain;
They can taste nought sweet; there's no touch
In the hand; they can feel no pain.
And a brother may strew the grave
Of a brother with gold, or entomb
His corse with treasure untold;
But the dead must abide his doom.

For the gold the miser hoards,
And men struggle through life to win,
Cannot save from the wrath of God
The soul that is steeped in sin.

G. R. MERRY.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

We do not often feel called upon to notice the Argosy. The February number, however, contains an article to which all Browning students will be glad to have their attention drawn. It is written by the daughter of the Rev. W. J. Fox, who will always be remembered as the first to give public recognition to "Pauline" in the Monthly Repository for 1833, and to whom the poet wrote in 1857: "I would, you know I would, always would, choose you out of the whole English world to judge and correct what I write myself." The article contains many interesting details about Browning's early days, and incidentally mentions that he contributed a sonnet—"somewhat Heine-like in character"—to the Monthly Repository for 1834, which has never been reprinted.

THE Expositor for February contains, besides the sketch of Dr. Hatch mentioned elsewhere, the continuation of Bishop Lightfoot on the Fourth Gospel, and of Dr. Bruce on the Epistle to the Hebrews, besides various almost too popular expositions by Mr. Gillies, Principal Dykes, and Profs. Lumby and Beet.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BRECH, A. Das Associationsprincip u. der Anthropomorphismus in der Aesthetik. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
ESSAI de critique militaire. Par G. G. Paris: Nouvelle Revue. 10 fr.
JANET, Paul. La Philosophie de Lamennais. Paris: Alcan. 2 fr. 50 c.
LECAMUS, E. Notre voyage aux pays bibliques. Paris: Letouzey. 10 fr. 50 c.
LOTT, Pierre. Au Maroc. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
NEMOURS GODEN, L. O'Connell. Sa vie, son œuvre. Paris: Savine. 8 fr. 50 c.
PIRANESI, J. B. Œuvres choisies de. Paris: Dujardin. 800 fr.
RHODE, E. Psyche. Seelenwelt u. Unsterblichkeitsglaube der Griechen. I. Hälfte. Freiburg-i.-B.: Mohr. 7 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- NEUMANN, K. J. Der römische Staat u. die allgemeine Kirche bis auf Diocletian. I. Bd. Leipzig: Veit. 7 M.
PROPHETARUM Codex graecus vaticanus 3195, vetustate, varietate lectionum, notationibus unicus aequo et insignis, phototypice editus, curante Jos. Cozza-Luzzi. Rome: Spithöver. 250 fr.
THEODORICI DE NYEM de claustris libri tres. Recensuit et adnotavit G. Erler. Leipzig: Veit. 10 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- AVENEL, Le Vicomte G. d'. Richelieu et la monarchie absolue. T. 4. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
BACHMANN, A. Die deutschen Könige u. die kaiserliche Neutralität (1488—1447). Leipzig: Freytag. 4 M. 40 Pf.
BEAUTEPS-BEAUPRE, C. J. Coutumes et institutions de l'Anjou et du Maine antérieures au XVI^e siècle. 2^e Partie. Recherches sur les juridictions de l'Anjou et du Maine pendant la période féodale. Paris: Durand. 12 fr.
BREITZIG, zur mittelalterlichen Rechtsgeschichte. I. u. 2. Hft. Berlin: Prager. 4 M. 50 Pf.
BORDREAU, A. de la. Essai sur la géographie féodale de la Bretagne. Rennes: Fignon. 8 fr.
CAME, I. I. de modo studiendi in iure libellus. Nach der Editio princeps vom J. 1478 hng. v. G. Pescatore. Berlin: Prager. 2 M.
COVILLE, A. Les Cabochiens et l'ordonnance de 1418. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 10 c.
DELEBRÜCK, H. Die Strategie d. Perikles, erläutert durch die Strategie Friedrichs d. Grossen. Berlin: Rimer. 8 M.
HUBER, A. Die Erwerbung Siebenbürgens durch König Ferdinand I. im J. 1551 u. Bruder George Ende. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 20 Pf.
KREMER, A. Frhr. v. Studien zur vergleichenden Culturgeschichte, vorzüglich nach arab. Quellen. I. u. II. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 20 Pf.
LOEBERT, J. Beiträge zur Geschichte der menschlichen Bewegung. IV. Leipzig: Freytag. 2 M. 40 Pf.
LUCAS, Simon. La France pendant la guerre de cent ans. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.

- LUCHATRE, A. Les communes françaises à l'époque des Capétiens directs. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
NEUBERT, J. Die Wochenrechnungen u. der Betrieb d. Prager Dombaus in den J. 1272—1278. Prag: Calve. 15 M.
PANISSE-PASSIS, Le Comte de. Les Comtes de Tende de la Maison de Savoie. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 60 fr.
PRIEBRAM, A. F. Oesterreichische Vermittlungspolitik im polnisch-russischen Kriege 1854—1860. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 20 Pf.
RICHTER, G. Annalen der deutschen Geschichte im Mittelalter. III. Abthg. I. Bd. Von der Begründg. d. Deutschen Reichs durch Heinrich I. bis zur höchsten Machtentfaltung d. Kaisertums unter Heinrich III. Halle: Waisenhaus. 9 M.
ROCHETTE, Maxime de la. Marie-Antoinette. Paris: Perrin. 15 fr.
SELIGMANN, E. Beiträge zur Lehre vom Staatsgesetz u. Staatsvertrag. 2. Thl. Freiburg-i.-B.: Mohr. 6 M.
SZARZYŃSKI, S. Ritter v. Das Reichsgericht u. die Virilstimmen. Lemberg: Milikowski. 2 M.
WÜBBE, F. X. Die Skiren u. die deutsche Heldensage. Eine genealogische Studie über den Ursprung des Hauses Traun. Wien: Konegen. 6 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BRÄUGER, H. Les insectes vésicants. Paris: Alcan. 35 fr.
BERGSON, H. Essai sur les données immédiates de la conscience. Paris: Alcan. 3 fr. 75 c.
BRAUER, F. u. J. Adler v. BERGENSTAMM. Die Zweiflügler d. kaiserl. Museums zu Wien. IV. Leipzig: Freytag. 10 M.
EUCKEN, R. Die Lebensanschauungen der grossen Denker. Eine Entwicklungsgeschichte d. Lebensproblems der Menschheit von Plato bis zur Gegenwart. Leipzig: Veit. 10 M.
GRABER, V. Vergleichende Studien ab. die Embryologie der Insekten u. insbesondere der Musciden. Leipzig: Freytag. 11 M. 40 Pf.
STAPP, O. Die Arten der Gattung Ephedra. Leipzig: Freytag. 9 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BIBLIOTHEK, keltisch-schriftliche. Sammlung v. assyr. u. babylon. Texten in Umschrift u. Uebersetzung. Hrg. v. E. Schrader. 2. Bd. Berlin: Reuther. 12 M.
EULE, R. Untersuchungen ab. die nordenglische Version d. Octavian. Berlin: Siebert. 1 M.
JENSEN, P. Die Kosmologie der Babylonier. Studien u. Materialien. Strassburg: Trübner. 40 M.
KRAHL, E. Untersuchungen ab. vier Versionen der mittelengl. Margaretenlegende. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M.
MUSAFIA, A. Studien zu den mittelalterlichen Marienlegenden. III. Leipzig: Freytag. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"KENEPAS" IN THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE.

Corpus Christi College, Oxford: Jan. 28, 1890.

In MSS. C and D of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle there occurs at the year 1056 a word which has proved a great stumbling-block to editors and translators. It is there said of Bishop Leofgar, of Hereford:

"Se werede his kenepas on his preosthade oððæt he was biſcop. Se forlet his criſman and his hrode, his gæstlican wæpna, and feng to his spere and to his sworde—i. e., he kept his kenepas during his priesthood until he became bishop; he forsook his chrisman and his rood, his ghostly weapons, and took to his spear and to his sword," &c. (Earle, pp. 190-1; Thorpe i. 236).

Of the editors and translators of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, Wheloc and Gibson did not use MS. C and D in constructing their texts. The editors of the Monumenta Historica Britannica leave the word untranslated; so do Stevenson and Thorpe. Ingram alone has a suggestion, and it is not a very happy one. He translates it "knap-sack." Prof. Earle has nothing to suggest. The word is not even cited in the new Bosworth-Toller Dictionary.

A few days ago the true explanation was suggested to me by a passage in an Icelandic law. In the ancient code known as Grágás, in the section on Law Christian (Kristinna Laga þáttur), chap. vi., Of Priests (Presta þáttur) there occurs the following passage:

"Prestar scolo elgi fara með sundrgerðir, þér er byskop banna. oc láta af haugva kampa, oc skeg, oc láta gera krunu sína um sinn á mánaði—i. e., Priests must not wear showy garments such as the bishop forbids, and they must have their moustaches and beard shaved, and be tonsured once a month" (Grágás, ed. Finsen, p. 21).

In Icelandic, kamp or kanpr is the regular word for "moustache" (v. Cleasby-Vigfússon Dictionary, sub voce). The enormity, therefore, of which Bishop Leofgar was guilty was that he wore his moustaches after he was ordained. Similar prescriptions to that which I have cited are found among the Anglo-Saxon Laws and Canons (cf., e.g., Thorpe, Ancient Laws and Institutes ii. 254, 294), but the word kenepas does not occur in them.

CHARLES PLUMMER.

AN ATTEMPT TO REFORM THE PROCEDURE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL UNDER ELIZABETH.

Warsaw: February 2, 1890.

The original Registers of the Privy Council temp. Elizabeth contain some interesting information about the procedure in the private causes brought before the Council, which had become a very powerful body in those days.* As regards the jurisdiction of the Privy Council, it was not to interfere with matters determinable at the common law (i. e. ordinary courts), unless one party was too powerful to cope with the other, or for some other sufficient reason. The abuse of this principle in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries caused many complaints, and was felt by the Commons as a great grievance.† It is noteworthy that the Council of Queen Elizabeth wished by its own resolution to put an end to the abuse.

"This day [i. e. April 25 (?) 1582] their Lordships and others of Her Majesty's Privie Councell considering what multitude of matters concerning private causes and actions betwene partie and partie were dayly brought unto the Councell Boarde whereas their Lordships were greatly troubled and Her Majesty's special service oftentimes interrupted: for remedy whereof it was agreed among them that from henceforth no private causes arising betwene parties for any action whatsoever which may receive order and redress in any of Her Majesty's ordinary Courts shal be received and preferred to the Boarde unless they shall concerne the preservation of Her Maj^y peace or shal be of some publicke consequence to touche the government of the Realme. And further whereas heretofore many lettres drawn by persons unacquainted with the forme of writing used by the Councell were brought unto their L^{ds}hips to be signed the said lettres only concerning private causes and procured for the particular benefite of such as did tender them unto their Lordships signature: of which lettres no Register hath been kept by the Clerk of the Councell for that they took them not to be matters determined by their Lordships in Councell nor comanded by Mr. Secretarie whereof many inconveniences have grown. It pleased their Lordships thereupon to order that from henceforth there should be no lettres signed by one of them from the Councell Boarde unless the same lettres should be brought unto them by one of the Clerks of the Councell for the tyme attending, or at least drawn by one of the said clerks: and for this cause it was likewise ordered by their L^{ds}ps that all such lettres as shall hereafter passe from the Councell hither for Her Maj^y services or for any other causes whatsoever shal be brought unto them with the name of the Clerke of the Councell written in the very foote of the margin of every such lettre under the names of the persones to whom the lettre shal be directed, drawing a line betwene the said names and the name of the clerk; to the end it may appeare that the said lettres have been written or at least examined by the said clerke and thought fitt for the forme to be offered unto their Lordships."—(Whitehall, Privy Council Office, Registers of the Queen Elizabeth, N. 5, f. 684 A.D. 1582.)

B. ALEXANDRENKO.

* John Macqueen, The App. Jurisd., p. 681.

† Stubbs, Const. History of Eng. v. ii. 633; iii. 251 sq.

THE DAYBOOK OF JOHN DORNE.

Oxford: Jan. 29, 1890.

In 1885 Mr. F. Madan published for the Oxford Historical Society the Daybook of John Dorne, an Oxford bookseller of the early part of the sixteenth century. The accounts are for the whole of the year 1520, and are preserved among the MSS. of Corpus Christi College.

Recently, while examining the bindings of the books in the library of that college, in company with Mr. R. G. C. Proctor, I found two leaves of a similar MS. in Dorne's writing used as fly-leaves in a copy of Hotomann's Quæstiones (Hanoviae, 1601). The binding is an Oxford one, but must be nearly a century later than the date of the MS. As this book seems not to have been bound for the college, but for a former possessor, the possibility that the whole MS. from which these leaves were taken was formerly in the library, and was given by a librarian to the binder—a not unexampled proceeding—is precluded. More probably the binder was a successor of Dorne's, who found these accounts lying about, and so utilised them. This theory gives ground for the hope that some more fragments may yet be found in other books bound in Oxford about the same date.

One of the two leaves contains, like the whole of the published ledger, an account of the sales made by Dorne in his shop. The other is unexampled, as being apparently a record of a stocktaking. Both have, unfortunately, been slightly clipped, about six or eight lines being lost at the head of the leaves, and one edge also cut off, so depriving us in some cases of the prices of the books.

It is difficult to say whether these belong to an earlier or later date than 1520. On the one hand, there are no daily divisions or dates here, such as appear in the accounts for 1520; and, as Mr. Madan suggested to me, it seems improbable that when Dorne had once habituated himself to this method he should have dropped it. On the other hand, there are no private notes, mixing up gulden with English money, which may point to a later date, when Dorne—a Dutchman probably—had got more used to the value of his customers' payments, and did not need to refer to his native currency, as he had done when perhaps newly-settled in England in 1520. There seem, unfortunately, to be no books among those mentioned which can be identified as published after the above date.

As for Dorne's nationality, there was a John Dorn publishing at Brunswick in 1509, who may, perhaps, be identified with our bookseller. Mr. Madan informs me that he is referred to in Oxford records as Thorne; and so on fol. 12a 2 and fol. 20 of the 1520 book are notes by Gyles Thorne of Shirdley, possibly a descendant.

The entries in our fragments show much the same classes of literature as those already published—a fair number of classical works, a constant sale for the grammatical treatises of Stanbridge and Whittington, a good selection of philosophical commentaries, with missals, breviaries, and primers scattered up and down. All these, however, will be worked out in detail by Mr. Madan, who has the leaves, and is preparing to edit them in the second volume of the Oxford Historical Society's Collectanea; and as this will appear almost immediately reference for further information may be made to it.

J. G. MILNE.

YES TOR.

Chelsea: Feb. 3, 1890.

I fear that Mr. Purton's ingenious etymology of Yes Tor—"Highest Tor"—must be rejected on the ground that that point was never locally thought to be the highest on Dartmoor. The really highest, High Wilhays, contains that preeminence in its name—uhel, superlative uhella, being "high" in Cornish (Rev. R. Williams's Lexicon Cornubritanicum, sub voc)—just as the highest point of Cornwall is Brownwilly, from this adjective and bron—"a protuberance, a hill."

The trigonometrical station was on High Wilhays in the old survey as well as in the new; but the old surveyors at first called it Yes Tor, evidently because the two points are really twin summits of one hill, to the whole of which they applied the name of that point of which they had inquired the name when they saw it from the neighbourhood of Okehampton. But there is no appellation for the hill as a whole, the local population naturally requiring to distinguish and not to generalise. The surveyors found out their error soon enough to name the two points correctly in the ordnance map; but, as the elevations were not printed on that map, it could do nothing to correct the mistake which they had caused to be current in the book world, that Yes Tor was the highest point of the moor. The confusion is gradually dying out; but even still you occasionally see in a guidebook that Yes Tor is visible from such or such a point, when only High Wilhays is so.

In Delabèche's Report on the Geology of Cornwall, Devon and West Somerset, a short list of elevations is printed from the early records of the old survey, in which the mistake occurs three times within the limits of Dartmoor of calling twin summits, or a whole hill, by the name of the lower summit or of a lower point on the hill, no doubt by hasty generalisation from the only name at first known to the surveyors; the heights of High Wilhays, Out Hill and Rendlestone Tor being given as those of Yes Tor, Fur Tor, and North Hessary Tor respectively. The ordnance map and the guidebooks are right about Out Hill and Fur Tor; but the name of North Hessary Tor is so printed on the ordnance map that it is impossible to say with certainty what it is meant to apply to, and the books almost always use it for Rendlestone Tor, to the confusion of pedestrians from a distance. The new one-inch map will be right in all these points, the six-inch map already being so.

Can the name of Wills Neck Hill, the highest of the Quantocks in West Somerset, contain the same element as Brownwilly and High Wilhays?

J. WESTLAKE.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Feb. 9, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "National Life and Thought in Egypt," by Mr. J. O. McCuan.

7.30 p.m. Ethical Society: "The Civilisation of Christendom," by Mr. Bernard Bosanquet.

MONDAY, Feb. 10, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Electrical Phenomena in Nature," by Mr. Sheldford Bidwell.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Private Houses and Palaces of the Romans, III., by Mr. G. Aitchison.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "The Electromagnet," IV., by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.

8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Search and Travel in the Caucasus—an Account of the Discovery of the Fate of the Party lost in 1838," by Mr. Douglas W. Freshfield, illustrated by Photographs by Sig. V. Sella and Mr. H. Woolley.

TUESDAY, Feb. 11, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Post-Darwinian Period," IV., by Prof. G. J. Romanes.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Cast Iron and its Treatment for Artistic Purposes," by Mr. W. R. Lethaby.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "The Money of the British Empire," by Mr. Lealey O. Probyn.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "Bars at the Mouths of Tidal Estuaries," by Mr. W. H. Wheeler.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "Some Skulls, dredged by Mr. G. F. Lawrence from the Thames, in the Neighbourhood of Kew," by Dr. Garson; "Characteristic Survivals of the Celts in Hampshire," by Mr. T. W. Shore.

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 12, 8 p.m. Microscopical: President's Address.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Modern Improvements in Facilities for Railway Travelling," by Mr. George Findlay.

8 p.m. Shelley: "Prometheus Unbound," by Mr. W. F. Revell.

THURSDAY, Feb. 13, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Three Stages of Shakspeare's Art," I., by Canon Alinger.

8 p.m. London Institution: "Travers Lecture, II., 'The Law affecting Passengers by Railway,'" by Mr. Aubrey J. Spencer.

8 p.m. Royal Academy: "The Private Houses and Palaces of the Romans," IV., by Mr. G. Aitchison.

8 p.m. Mathematical Society: "Semi-Invariants," by Mr. S. Roberts; "Ether Squirts," by Prof. Karl Pearson.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "The Theory of Armature Reactions in Dynamos and Motors," by Mr. J. Swinburne.

FRIDAY, Feb. 14, 8 p.m. New Shakspeare: "An Elizabethan Bookseller," by Mr. Sidney L. Lee.

8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Problems in the Physics of an Electric Lamp," by Prof. J. A. Fleming.

SATURDAY, Feb. 15, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electricity and Magnetism," I., by Lord Rayleigh.

4 p.m. London Geological Field Class: "The Tertiary Rocks on which London Stands," I., by Prof. H. G. Seeley.

SCIENCE.

Gai Valeri Catulli Carmina. Recognovit Ioh. P. Postgate. (Bell.)

MR. POSTGATE has here presented his readers with a new recension of the poems of Catullus, in a small pocket-form, and in a type which looks well, and does not take up much room. The book is pretty enough, though hardly comparable with Haupt's small edition in clearness to the eye. Haupt's edition, however, has nothing but the mere text of the poems. Mr. Postgate has appended at the foot of each page the readings, where necessary, of the three earliest MSS.

In a short Latin preface the editor combats the view which I have very explicitly stated in my recently published Commentary, that most of the conjectures put forward by modern critics on Catullus are, as compared with those made by the scholars of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, uncertain and worth little. It was only after a patient examination of the poet, continued through many years, that I ventured to pronounce this opinion; and it remains unshaken. Whether the increasing study of palaeography will elicit results yet unattained, or indirectly promote the same cause by the discovery of a new and better MS., is no doubt still in the future. It is stated that a photographed facsimile of the Paris MS., known as Germanensis (G), is shortly to be issued. Well worked as this mine has been already, it is not impossible that when it is made available to a larger number of workers, it will reveal something of importance to a fresh critical faculty.

Mr. Postgate's edition, as regards orthography, moves on the same lines as L. Müller's. He never writes mea es, meo est, solita est, &c., but mea's, meo'st, solita'st; never aequum, uacuum, but aequom, uacuom. I am glad to see that he has restored Hortalus, which I aimed to prove the right spelling against Ortialus of most editors and Munro.

Most of the editor's own conjectures have already been published in the Leyden Mnemosyne or the Cambridge Journal of Philology. To those journals the reader is referred for a detailed exposition of Mr. Postgate's views. In not a few cases his discussions are valuable and interesting, even when the actual result in the concrete form of an emendation fails to convince. Every reader must form his own opinion on this point; if I may speak my own, I confess to have found Mr Postgate as little satisfactory as most of his predecessors. Nor can I at all agree with him in his prevailing admiration of Bährens as a conjecturer; though, indeed, to Bährens's theory of the inter-relation of the MSS. Mr. Postgate has given in his adhesion, and without Bährens's edition the present volume would probably never have seen the light.

The following are among the better specimens of the new editor's divinatory powers:

"Credo et quo grauis acquiescat ardor"
(ll. 8)

for "ut cum—acquiescet."

"Istis: commodum enim: uolo ad Sarapim Deferri,"
(x. 26)

which appears to me no improvement on Hand's

"Istis: commodum enim uolo ad Sarapim
Deferri."

"Et haec pessima sic puella uidit
Ioco se lepido nouere diuis," (xxxvi 9, 10)

for "se puella uidit Iocose lepide."

"Malest me hercule et si laboriose," (xxxviii. 2)

for me h. et laboriose. Here I must demur. Ei (the interjection) is not only weak poetically, but questionable as Latin. The same tendency to interjections is shown by our editor in two passages of lxiii.

"nulli a coluere iuueni," for acoluere or accoluere of MSS, and

"Tacita a quem mente requirunt," by way of accounting for tacita quema mente of the Thunaeus. Would it not be preferable to write tacita quem a mente requirunt?

"Immo taedet obestque et magis atque magis," for

"Immo etiam taedet obestque magisque magis."
(lxiii. 4)

The admirers of Munro will not be pleased to find one of his least happy restitutions printed as if from the MSS; I mean the impossible liv. And can anyone really say he thinks typum in lxiii. 9 at all likely to have been corrupted into tubam? To print anything so purely tentative as either of these guesses is a derogation to the general execution of Mr. Postgate's volume, and (what is worse) to the memory of England's greatest scholar.

ROBINSON ELLIS.

TWO RECENT WORKS ON PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

Graphical Statics: Two Treatises on the Graphical Calculus and Reciprocal Figures in Graphical Statics. By Luigi Cremona. Translated by T. H. Beare. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) In 1870 Cremona published his elementary work on the Graphical Calculus, entitled Il Calcolo Grafico; and in 1874 it was translated into German. In 1872 appeared his pamphlet on stress and framework diagrams, entitled Le Figure reciproche nella Statica Grafica; and in the following year a free German translation was published. French translations of both works appeared later; and now, if at the eleventh hour, we have from the Oxford Press English translations in a companion volume to Cremona's Elements of Projective Geometry. Before expressing our opinion as to the great value of these translations, we should like to ask the delegates of the Clarendon Press whether it is on their authority that this book is being advertised as "New Work on Graphical Statics," by Prof. Cremona; and, further, on what ground it is entitled "Graphical Statics" at all? In the first place, works written seventeen to eighteen years ago can hardly, in the guise of a new translation, be termed new; and in the next place the first treatise is not on Graphical Statics at all, and the second is rather an exercise in the geometry of reciprocation than the form of discussion on framework and stress diagrams which we look for in a treatise on Graphical Statics. Further, we should be glad to know whether it is at the instance of the delegates, or due to the translator, that the terms "polygon of forces" or "polygonal circuit" and "funicular polygon" are used instead of the convenient words "vector-polygon," and "link-polygon," introduced by Profs. Clifford and Henrici. The latter terms enable us to discuss the geometry of vectors or localised steps without any reference to force; and the student cannot be too early induced to separate the notions of the Graphical Calculus from any special physical quantity which may afterwards be dealt with by its processes. Having eased our minds on these points, we are the better able to be grateful to the Clarendon Press and to Prof. Beare for this book. If it is not mistaken for a new work on Graphical Statics, nor supposed to be a modern treatise on the Graphical Calculus, then we can only heartily commend it to first-year students in the numerous engineering schools now established throughout the kingdom. It is true that the Graphical Calculus of 1870 is not that of 1890. There is not a word in this volume on graphical integration, graphical differentiation, and graphical solution of differential equations. The chapters on the reduction of areas and on the discovery of centroids are very elementary. We miss any discussion of moments of inertia and the reduction of volumes, the construction of abacs and the representation of statistical information. But while Cremona's treatise is thus essentially a first book on graphical methods, it is far and away superior to anything which has yet appeared in the English language. The works hitherto published on so-called graphical arithmetic, or on graphical statics, in this country may be safely said to have done more to discourage than foster the new calculus. There is nothing clumsy, there is nothing hurried in Cremona's treatment; and if he has in some cases treated a special problem where the engineering student may want more general solutions, he has probably done well to limit his discussion to cases which a student with a school knowledge of geometry and algebra can grasp at an early stage of his college course. Of the pamphlet on reciprocal figures it is more easy to speak with enthusiasm from the standpoint of the mathematician than from that of the teacher. The deduction of the reciprocity of frame and stress-diagrams from Möbius's Null-system is a graceful piece of geometry in itself; but we speak from experience when we say that it is hopeless to expect the average engineering student to appreciate it. The method of reciprocal figures is so powerful, and yet so simple of application, that a student's advance may be unnecessarily delayed if he has first to grasp Möbius's ideas on polar plane and point; and if he does follow Cremona's discussion of these conceptions, the few applications to simple frames which occur in the following chapters will hardly show him the power of the method, especially in the great range of pinned arches and girders such as are dealt with by Ritter and are common in German practice. There is much that is very excellent in this pamphlet, but that excellence appeals more directly to the mathematical than to the engineering student. The latter may read it with advantage, but hardly as a first book on framework. He may come to it when he is sure of his methods, and wishes to widen his insight by examining a novel and ingenious treatment of the first principles of reciprocal diagrams. Prof. Beare's translations are carefully and correctly done, and he does not appear to have sacrificed accuracy to fluency. We think the book will distinctly supply a gap in our sadly deficient literature on Graphics; and we trust that if it reaches, as we think probable, a second edition, the title may be changed to one which more accurately describes the contents.

"ENCYCLOPÄDIE DER NATURWISSENSCHAFTEN."—Handbuch der Physik. Dritte Lieferung. (Breslau: Trewendt.) The third part of this handbook, to which we have previously drawn attention, marks a distinct advance both as to matter and method on the first two parts. It is principally occupied with the subject of elasticity, which it continues and concludes; the few pages on hydrostatics hardly allowing a judgment to be formed as to the probable merits of the discussion of that subject which is to follow. All the articles on elasticity and cohesion are due to Dr. F. Auerbach, with the exception of that on Afterstrain, which is dealt with by Dr. Ferdinand Braun, himself an investigator in this field. Dr. Auerbach, while practically exhibiting no originality of treatment, has yet put together the results of the most recent researches of such mathematical physicists as Hertz and Voigt, and the numerical details of the myriad German experimentalists. The compilation is thus the most useful treatise on physical elasticity which has yet appeared. The facts here gathered together have hitherto had to be sought in innumerable scattered and often nigh inaccessible memoirs, and we can safely predict a wide field of usefulness for the 100 pages in this handbook devoted to elasticity. After a discussion of the general equations of elasticity and an analysis of the resolution of stress and strain, Dr. Auerbach refers to the most recent experiments on the influence of temperature, then we have the pretty theorems of Saalschütz for very flexible struts (pp. 244-5), and next a long discussion of the various recent experimental investigations of the "stretch-squeeze ratio"—i.e., the ratio of lateral compression to longitudinal extension of a bar subjected to pure traction. The author adopts Voigt's view that Poisson's molecular theory, in which this ratio equals one-fourth, has not been shown to hold for any isotropic body without question, and that there are many bodies for which it has been shown not to hold. Now, most of the materials for which he gives details were tested in the shape of wires whose isotropy, even after annealing, is very questionable; nor can we lay as much stress as he does on the arguments of Voigt that a piece of glass for which the ratio was .21 was really isotropic and homogeneous. In the case of crystals it may, we think, be safely said that Poisson's relations among the constants do not hold; but in this case the polarity evidenced by crystallisation is almost a proof of polarity in the molecules, and therefore a strong argument against Poisson's theory. Voigt has recently attempted to explain multi-constant elasticity by a polar force between molecules. Unfortunately, this theory breaks down in the case of isotropic bodies, unless indeed we deny their existence entirely, and suppose what we term isotropic bodies to be bodies of confused crystallisation, the semi-isotropic bodies of Voigt, or amorphous bodies of Saint-Venant. An ingenious attempt by Voigt to explain bi-constant isotropy in this manner will be found in the December number of Wiedemann's Annalen.

On the whole we think that there are good reasons for doubting whether everything can be explained by polar molecules, and we believe that the keynote to bi-constant isotropy lies rather in Jellet's hypothesis of modified action. Dr. Auerbach next turns to flexure and torsion, reproducing Clebsch's treatment of Saint-Venant's problems. He ascribes on p. 260 to F. Neumann a method of dealing with these problems which is really due to Poisson and Cauchy, and which led those scientists, and afterwards F. Neumann, followed by Voigt, to very erroneous results. The fact that this method is not sound seems to have escaped Dr. Auerbach. To attribute the refutation of the erroneous torsion formula, which Cauchy actually obtained by this method, to Voigt is certainly a little curious (p. 273); but our author does not appear to have as wide an acquaintance with French as with German literature. Perhaps the most interesting part of the treatise is pp. 275-89 dealing with the elasticity of crystals. Although Dr. Auerbach pays no regard to the labours of Rankine extended and simplified by Saint-Venant, he still gives a very interesting account of the elasticity of crystals based on the researches of F. Neumann and his school, principally Voigt. The work of the latter is here focussed, and will be found of extreme interest by English physicists who may not have kept themselves au courant with recent German research in this direction. The following article on Impact deals with Saint-Venant and Neumann's theory for rods, with details of the experimental investigations of Boltzmann, Voigt, Hausmanninger, &c., and, further, with Hertz's luminous theory of impact on curved surfaces, notably spheres. The latter theory is later applied, after Hertz, to deduce an absolute measure of hardness (pp. 315-16). The next section is devoted to Cohesion, and is not very satisfactory. Far greater attention ought to have been given to Bauschinger's results on the limit of elasticity, which are of quite as great physical as technical importance. The experimental numbers for the strength of struts given at the top of p. 312 are, we believe, due to Rondelet, and were given by him for wood only, and date back to the eighteenth century! Why they are reproduced here, and cited as if true for all materials, it is difficult to say. The formulae for torsional strength on p. 313 are quite wrong, being based on Cauchy's theory, which the author has rejected some pages previously. Lastly, the few remarks on absolute resilience on p. 314, are very insufficient, and, we think, misleading. The final section dealing with elasticity—namely, that on Elastic Afterstrain by F. Braun, gives a very fair account of German research on this subject, due to Weber, Kohlrausch, Meyer, Boltzmann, Warburg, and the crowd of minor experimentalists. While this section teems with useful facts, it gives also a picture of the present very unsatisfactory condition of the theory. Boltzmann's theory will hardly satisfy fully any but the most easy-going of physicists; and Maxwell's, as developed mathematically by Butcher, has not yet received sufficient experimental confirmation, notwithstanding Barus's labours. Thus, while these pages give a very complete account of the present state of our knowledge of afterstrain, they yet bring our ignorance vividly to the fore, and suggest much need for extended investigation. On the whole, this elastic portion of the Handbuch der Physik will be undoubtedly useful. Parts of it are so good that we can only wish that just that additional care had been given which would have made them still better.

THE NEXT ORIENTAL CONGRESS.

IN continuation of the article under this heading in the ACADEMY of December 14, 1889, we may state that the protest there referred to has now received 167 signatures.

At a meeting of English supporters of the movement, held at the German Athenaeum on January 15, the following resolutions were adopted:

1. "That the signatories express their grateful appreciation of the most hospitable manner in which Orientalists from all parts of the world have been received by King Oscar II. and the peoples of Sweden and Norway.
2. "That the original principles of the International Congress of Orientalists, as laid down at its first meeting in Paris, in 1873, in the 'statuts définitifs adoptés par l'assemblée internationale' be maintained in their integrity.
3. "That London be the seat of the next Congress, from September 1 to September 10, 1891.
4. "That the subscription be £1, or 25 francs, for every member, native or visitor, lady or gentleman, specialist or other.
5. "That the committees proposed by the French general assembly for the various countries (with power to add to their number) be accepted, and that the English organising committee for the next Congress, thus elected, place itself in communication with the above-mentioned committees, and with Orientalists generally, in order to receive and give early information of the questions to be discussed at the next Congress, to suggest subjects or methods of inquiry to specialists and travellers, to arrange for prize essays and other awards, to summarise the researches made on every field of Oriental learning since 1886, and to propose measures for the cultivation of Oriental studies in various countries as indicated in the enclosed circular.
6. "That no special privileges or distinctions of any kind be accepted by any member, delegate, or office-holder (as such) of the Congress, except what the Congress itself may confer for services rendered to science or in furthering the aims of the Congress.
7. "That there be only two banquets, one at the beginning and the other at the end of the Congress, and only two excursions out of London (say to the universities of Oxford and Cambridge) after the conclusion of the labours of the Congress.
8. "That the prize and other awards be, as far as possible, equally distributed among the various branches of Oriental learning.
9. "That the English committee of organisation be empowered to arrange for grants and donations towards the general or any special objects of the Congress, and to receive the subscriptions of members.
10. "That the English members and others who wish to receive one or more foreign members in their houses during the time that the Congress is held be pleased to communicate the number they can so accommodate to any member of the English committee, at an early date, for due notification."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE YENISSEI INSCRIPTIONS.

Barton-on-Humber: Jan. 27, 1890.

Prof. Stephens (vide his letter, ACADEMY, November 30, 1889, p. 359) having very kindly lent me his copy of the Inscriptions de l'Enissei, I have made a preliminary examination of the script; and as the subject is of much interest, and also as the professor hopes that "some Britishers will try to make a beginning," perhaps the following remarks may interest readers of the ACADEMY.

The inscriptions would require three or four months' study to enable a student to grow into them, so as to obtain definite views on verbal detail; but the following facts and deductions are fairly obvious. (1) About 60 different forms are employed, exclusive of evident variants; probably the actual number of distinct characters is just about 50. A great number of characters appear reversed. Further examination is required in many instances to determine whether a variant or a distinct character is intended. (2) Words are sometimes undivided, but generally divided by interpunction (: , ' , :), as in Etruscan. Sometimes the interpunction has been accidentally omitted, as also is the case in Etruscan. (3) The inscriptions are alphabetic, not syllabic; they are to be read from right to left, and are not written Βουστροφνηδόν. (4) There is an initial and a non-initial form of a, and perhaps of some other letters, as in Mantchu, &c. (5) The forms of the following Runic letters occur: a-ae-o, t, u, c, c-k, x, g, h, l, s, n, t, d, b, and m; and, perhaps, of several others, e.g., ng. (6) Forms similar to those occurring in what Prof. Sayce calls the "Asiatic" system of writing appear to a considerable extent—e.g., the Kypriote e, u, ko, ta, pi, re, ru, ma, je, ji, va, and zo, the Karian g, es, h-hh, kh, and re, and the Lykian a-e, u, h, u-v, and n. The presence of this element is too decided to admit of the hypothesis of chance. (7) There appears to be no direct connexion between the Yenissei and the Italic alphabets.

Those who have read my paper on "The Etruscan Numerals" (Archaeological Review, July, 1889), and letters in the ACADEMY on the same subject, will remember that the region of the Yenissei inscriptions is that formerly occupied by the Arintzi and Kamacintzi peoples, the remains of whose dialects present such a striking resemblance to Etruscan; and the inscriptions, so far as I have been able to transliterate them, show a form of speech akin to Etruscan, and evidently (as of course would be expected) belonging to the Turanian family of language. Prof. Stephens says, "As yet, not one word has been deciphered"; and, writing to me on December 9, he observes: "If we could only get one word read, we should soon have more." I venture, therefore, without dogmatism but still with considerable confidence, to give the reading of "one word" as a specimen.

In Ins. No. III., which consists of six lines of considerable length, I noticed immediately the word abaga. It occurs in the first, second, and sixth lines, and also in Ins. No. VIII., l. 2. and No. XII., l. 4, and, therefore, proves that the inscriptions are not written Βουστροφνηδόν. I think there can be no reasonable doubt which letter in the script is a. Prof. Donner puts the character in question, which appears in seven variant forms, at the head of his list, and next to the Runic b. The initial a is different from the non-initial; and one of the seven forms is that of the Lykian a-e and the Volscian a. The b and g are the exact Runic forms of those letters. It is to be noted that the Yenissei a, which is akin to Alpha, is not the Runic a; and that "the Greek Alpha disappeared from the Futhorc at a very early period" (Isaac Taylor, Greeks and Goths, 61).

The reading having been ascertained, next as to the meaning; and here, too, there is no uncertainty. Strahlenberg, in his Vocab. Calmucko-Mungalicum (1730), gives "Abaga, a grandfather." The modern Buriatic abaga, Tungusic awaga = "uncle," "father's brother"; and, in Koibal, "grandfather" is aga. The allied forms are easy to trace through many dialects, although they signify different relationships.

The alphabet of the inscriptions as noticed contains about fifty letters—cf. the Buriat alphabet. a, 'a, e, i, o, ö, u, u, k, kj, x, xj, h, g, ng, j, l, lj, r, rj, s-sh, zh, tsh, dzh, n, nj, t, tj, d, dj, s, z, ts, dz, p, b, m (37), and ten diphthongs.

I reserve further remarks at present, and hope that the claw may help to reconstruct the lion.

ROBERT BROWN, JUN.

THE LYCIAN LANGUAGE.

Newbury: Feb. 1, 1890.

Major Conder's interesting paper in the ACADEMY for January 25 will no doubt assist the Iranian hypothesis of the origin of Lycian by lending to it the weight of his name; but his arguments will hardly satisfy anyone who has spent (or wasted) labour on that irritating dialect.

It will only be possible for me to examine now his chief contentions:

"The liquid sounds, the numerous long and short vowels, and the inflexions are alike Iranian; and among the latter the genitive singular (hi), the nominative plural (he), the genitive plural (neme), the infinitives (ase and asi), the prefixes (tro, mé, yat, né, o) all appear to me clearly to define the language."

The liquid sounds might show that Lycian was rather of the Iranian than of any other branch of the Indo-European family, if it had been proved to belong to that family at all. But that is the very point at issue.

The numerous long and short vowels are entirely due to the transliteration which Major Conder has adopted. This differs much from the usually accepted one, given and supported with able arguments by Savelsberg (Beiträge, i. 7-22). And it differs especially in this, that the German professor admits no difference between long and short vowels. Should not Major Conder have disproved the accepted transliteration before basing arguments on a new one, which, besides, is not free from inconsistencies? For example, he writes "oune," "eionei," "prinavatu," rendering the same letter first by ou, then by o, and lastly by u. Nor are these the only instances.

To go on to the inflexions, the genitive in -h is certain, but it is not certain that it is not confined to proper names.

The termination -he (usually written -hi) is perplexing. It occurs once in a bilingual (Lewisu, a very ill-cut one), apparently as a nominative plural ending, "prineziyehi" = Greek οικτιοι. But, elsewhere, whenever a word with this ending is found in any of the few passages whose meaning is certain, it is never nominative and never demonstrably plural. It may, perhaps, be better explained as not being a case ending at all.

The genitive plural -neme (-nimi) does not exist. Only three words have that ending: "khauvonimi," "trbbonimi," and "madunimi." Of these, the first is without question a proper name in the nominative singular, since Limyra 38 begins: "Khauvonimi built this tomb." "Trbbonimi" is also a proper name in the nominative singular. It occurs on a coin, and its genitive singular is seen in Limyra 43. There is nothing to fix the meaning of "Madunimi."

As to the infinitive -ase (or asi), none of the eight words with that ending occurs in an intelligible context, but they appear to be cases of substantives. For instance, "atiasi" is formed directly from atla, "self"; and there can hardly be a verb "to self." The common verbal ending -ade, or rather -di, is either future or conditional, not infinitive (see Limyra 4, 3; 5, 2; &c., &c.).

The prefixes tro, ne, and o are not supported by the inscriptions; yat is impossible, as no Lycian word begins with y; me might be a prefix, but is extremely obscure, and it is a pity that we are not told what it means.

Passing by for a moment the statement about the numerals, we come to a list of words "which clearly point" in the Iranian direction:

"Of these," says Major Conder, "some are rendered certain by the Greek bilinguals, such as gina, "wife"; goro, "tomb"; se, "and," and a few others."

But gina (properly khina) does not occur in any bilingual, unless a new one has been found, nor can it well mean "wife"; for in Xanthus 4 it is joined with lada, which certainly means "wife"; so that the builder would be represented as raising a tomb "to his wife and his wife." Goro is an old misreading for the common word khupu, a "tomb."

The rest of the words given may be divided into three classes: (1) words clearly borrowed from Persian, as khesadrapahi, a "satrap," and Mithrapata, the proper name of a Persian governor; (2) words that do not exist, as masa, toma, and depe; (3) words whose meaning is in itself unknown, but which are translated in a certain way merely because they resemble certain Persian words. To rely on them as proving the Iranian affinities of Lycian is surely to argue in a vicious circle. The same remark applies to all the so-called numerals which Savelsberg has discovered, and indeed to almost all his renderings. If Lycian is not a kind of Old Persian, they all fall to the ground. Nor can it be argued that the fact of his translations making sense proves the rightness of his method. For Corssen made sense of Etruscan; and Savelsberg does not always make sense of Lycian.

It would take too long to examine all the forms on which the Indo-European theory is based. One example must suffice. Prinavato is a common third person singular of a verb. In Lewisu, we find the corresponding third person plural, prinavoto. On these most important and hitherto undoubted forms depends our knowledge of the difference between the singular and plural of the Lycian verb; and on them the supporters of the Indo-European hypothesis greatly rely. But they are open to three objections:

(1) The apparent plural prinavoto never recurs. But o and e being interchangeable in Lycian, we may expect to find the equivalent prinaveto. And we do find it in Pinara iv., where it is a third person singular.

(2) On the other hand, in all the other passages (Limyra xi. 1, xii. 1, xxiii. 1) where this verb has a plural nominative, the form is prinavato, as in the singular.

(3) The letters o and a are often exchanged as in prinavo (Xanthus 3) = prinovo (Ant. 3).

It is, therefore, at least possible that the difference is merely one of spelling. And this view is supported by the comparison of the verbs hrppi tatu (Limyra xx.), and hrppibeys totu (Limyra xi.).

The very form, therefore, which is taken to prove that the Lycian verb is Indo-European makes it doubtful whether any distinction existed between singular and plural.

In conclusion, it may be prophesied that the spade will throw more light on the Lycian language than the dictionary. We must be content to wait till the cities of the Eteocretes, and of Crete generally, have yielded up the inscriptions which they no doubt contain.

W. ARKWRIGHT.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE medals and funds to be given at the anniversary meeting of the Geological Society on February 21 have been awarded by the council as follows:—the Wollaston medal to Prof. William Crawford Williamson; the Murchison medal to Prof. Edward Hull; and the Lyell medal to Prof. Thomas Rupert Jones; the balance of the Wollaston fund to Mr. W. E. A. Ussher, of the Geological Survey of England; that of the Murchison fund to Mr. Edward Wethered; that of the Lyell fund to Mr. C. Davies Sherborn; and a portion of the Barlow-Jameson fund to Mr. William Jerome Harrison.

In connexion with the London Geological Field Class, Prof. H. G. Seeley will deliver a course of four lectures upon "The Tertiary Rocks upon which London Stands" at the Gresham College on Saturdays at 4 p.m., beginning on February 15.

THE thirtieth anniversary of the publication of the Origin of Species—which, so far as we know, passed unnoticed in this country—was celebrated on November 22, at Tokio, by a dinner, at which about one hundred Japanese men of science were present. The room was decorated with memorials of Darwin, and with an exhibition of objects illustrating evolution.

M. DAUBRÉE, the distinguished French mineralogist, has presented to the Académie des Sciences a suggestive paper on the conditions under which diamonds appear to have been formed in nature. He first shows that the South African diamonds, occurring in a serpentinous breccia, have probably been brought up from a deep-seated basic magma, rich in olivine, which underlies the granitic crust. He then calls attention to the recent discovery of diamonds in meteorites, and points out the analogy between these bodies and the materials of the earth's interior. On the whole, it seems probable, according to Daubrée, that diamonds are abundant in the profound regions of the earth, and are only accidentally and occasionally brought up to the surface. It is tantalising, however, to learn that these subterranean riches will probably always remain hidden and inaccessible to man.

WE have received from Helsingfors, in Finland, a treatise on The Origin of Human Marriage, by Edward Westermarck, which seems worthy of notice for several reasons. In the first place, it is written in excellent English, and no less admirably printed. In the next place, the author professes himself a follower of the English school of anthropology, and in particular of the statistical method recently expounded by Dr. E. B. Tylor. He quotes a very full list of authorities, the great majority English—including that misleading book, Rowney's Wild Tribes of India, the true character of which was disclosed in the ACADEMY of March 23, 1889; and he has obtained certain information of his own from missionaries in different parts of the world. The greater part of the present treatise, which is introductory to a larger work, consists of a searching criticism of the hypothesis of primitive promiscuity, in the course of which M'Lennan's theory of kinship through females only, and Morgan's classificatory system of relationship, are both severely handled. The author's own view, though not as yet fully expounded, may be gathered from the following passages:

"Marriage and family are intimately connected with each other: it is for the benefit of the young that male and female continue to live together. Marriage is, therefore, rooted in family, rather than family in marriage" (p. 29). * * *

"In all probability, there was no stage of human development when marriage did not exist, and the father always was, as a rule, the protector of his family. Human marriage seems to be an inheritance from some ape-like progenitor" (p. 64).

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

DR. HAMY, Keeper of the Museum of Ethnography, has been elected a "membre libre" of the Académie des Inscriptions, in succession to the late Gen. Faïdherbe.

In a recent number of the Allgemeine Zeitung, Dr. Eduard Glaser, the well-known Arabian traveller, reviews at length Prof. D. H. Müller's recent work, entitled "Epigraphische Denkmäler aus Arabien," pointing out the extent of Jewish influence and the existence of Jewish kings throughout Arabia in early times. In the matter of chronology, he shows that the author has postdated the period of the Minæans by about fifteen hundred years, and—as if in compensation—has antedated the Libjans by more than a thousand years.

THE last number of the Journal of Philology (Macmillan) contains a greater proportion than usual of solid, if not interesting, articles. Several of them, too, exhibit the growing tendency towards MS. research. For example, Mr. Walter Leaf submits the MSS. of the Iliad to a minute examination, with the aim of showing that L probably stands by itself as representing a collateral tradition to the vulgate, going back to the times of Aristarchus—a notable result, if true. Mr. E. G. Hardy gives a detailed account of the newly discovered codex in the Bodleian which contains the earliest text of Jerome's Eusebian Chronicle, though apparently the editing of it is to be left to a German. Mr. J. Armitage Robinson continues his investigation into the sources of Origen's Treatise against Celsus, now arguing that P (which was thought to be independent) is really copied from V. Mr. Robinson Ellis gives the results of his collation of an MS. of Ovid, formerly used by Heinsius, and now in the Maison Plantin at Antwerp; and also prints some textual emendations in the Greek Anthology. By far the longest paper is that by Prof. Nettleship on "Literary Criticism in Greek Antiquity," the Dialogus de Oratoribus of Tacitus receiving special praise. The Rev. Dr. C. Taylor examines the mutual relation of the Didache to the Shepherd, proving that the author of the latter made use of the former document, but in such a manner as to conceal his obligations. And, finally—though first in order—Mr. Arthur Platt traces the history of the Iambic trimeter from early song down to its use in Modern Greek.

On the Interpretation of Plato's Timæus. Critical Studies with special reference to a Recent Edition. By J. Cook Wilson. (David Nutt.) In this pamphlet of 145 pages, which it appears is to be continued hereafter in a second part, Prof. Cook Wilson reiterates, expands, and multiplies his damaging criticisms of the recent edition of Plato's Timæus by Mr. Archer-Hind. It will be remembered that the controversy began with Prof. Wilson's hostile article in the Classical Review, to which Mr. Archer-Hind briefly replied in the next number. Prof. Wilson conceived that it was his duty to substantiate his charges on a large scale, and the present pamphlet is the first-fruits of his resolution. We are not sure that it was worth while to take such pains over breaking an editor upon the wheel, unless the writer could in doing so produce, like Bentley, a work of original and independent value. But, as Prof. Wilson has thought it advisable to spend so much time and trouble on the task, we are bound to record our impression that the execution was not altogether undeserved. It should be borne in mind that it is not only errors and shortcomings which are laid to the editor's charge. He is accused of borrowing far too largely, without due acknowledgment of his debt, and of even composing his notes in such a way as to give the impression that he is correcting and improving upon Stallbaum and others, when in reality he is only repeating information they have supplied him with, and suggestions he has taken from their pages. Conscious unfairness is a thing difficult to establish, and on this part of the indictment we express no opinion. A man may, however, be unfair through not taking pains enough to be the opposite; and we do not see how the editor is to escape from this less serious charge. His treatment of the philosophy and scientific subjects of the Timæus is reserved for the second part of the pamphlet. In the first instalment he is indicted under four heads: the relation of the editor to preceding commentaries, his text and apparatus criticus, his interpretation of the language, and his note on one particular astronomical point in the Timæus. The matters dealt with under these heads are too many, too minute, and too diverse to admit of being epitomised. But the sum of the whole argument is that the editor's scholarship is immature, that he is often confused and incorrect in other respects, that he has often borrowed errors and a fortiori better things from the very scholars on whom he sits in judgment, and finally that he has, if not concealed, at least failed to make known the magnitude of his debt to them. Those interested in the evidence by which these accusations are supported must turn to the pamphlet itself, which will at once enhance Prof. Wilson's reputation for learning and scholarship, and teach us that the Timæus cannot be edited with impunity.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

BROWNING SOCIETY.—(Friday, January 31.)

DR. FURNIVALL, president, in the chair.—The president opened the meeting by speaking of the great loss which the world had sustained in the death of the poet for the study of whose works the society had been formed. They had considered Browning worthy of the most earnest study, both of his contemporaries and of all time; and some credit was due to them that they had challenged attention to his works. Notwithstanding much futile sneering from the ignorant, the challenge had been answered, splendidly in America, and of late years cordially in this country. The society did not make Browning a great poet; but it had helped to vindicate his right to be considered the noble soul he was. And now it could be only a deep satisfaction to every member that he or she had stood out as an open admirer of the poet, before the world had "opened heart" to him. The society had exercised the utmost freedom of criticism in discussing his works; and doing so it had given pleasure to the poet, who was a man, and wanted men to know him and have opinion of his work. He (the president), agnostic as he was, admitted that Browning's work had been to give expression to a confident belief in God, in immortality and the soul. He laid before the society the following resolutions:

- "(1) That this meeting of the Browning Society records its sorrow at the death of the poet, Robert Browning, in whose honour it was formed, and expresses its sense of the great loss that literature and the world have suffered by his decease.
- "(2) That this meeting also records its sympathy with the poet's son and family at their great loss, but rejoices that they were with him at his death.
- "(3) That this meeting further records its gratification and thankfulness for the extraordinary outburst of praise and generous appreciation of the poet from the press and people of all English-speaking nations, as well as those of the continent of Europe, and also for the burial of Robert Browning in Poets' Corner of Westminster Abbey.
- "(4) That this meeting also appeals to the poet's son to answer this grand tribute to his father by the greatest service he can do to the poet's memory—a shilling selection of his most popular characteristic poems, a volume which this society and every one of its branches have long earnestly wished for.
- "(5) This meeting also records its own great satisfaction at having for the last eight and a half years challenged, and in a certain sense compelled, attention to the great merit of the works of the late poet, and having thus had some share in effecting the marked change in opinion concerning them since the lines appeared in the Ring and the Book, 1868-9, "Such, British Public, ye who like me not," &c.

The resolutions were carried unanimously. Dr. Furnivall, continuing, touched on the various poems in Asolando, dwelling on the courageous optimism of its epilogue, and the freshness of spirit, as of a youth, shown in its two exquisite love-poems. He then invited remarks from members present on the value of Browning's works to them personally, which led to an interesting discussion, in which Dr. Berdoe, Mr. Robert Whyte, Mr. Revell, Miss Whitehead, and Miss Wilson took part.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, February 3)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—A paper on "The Conception of Sovereignty" was read by Mr. D. G. Ritchie. The conception of sovereignty which is expressed in Austin's famous definition may be taken as the central point of the characteristically English school of jurisprudence, and of the political philosophy of Hobbes, Bentham, and Cornwall Lewis. The historical method, especially as applied by Sir H. Maine, is supposed now-a-days to have supplanted the analytic. Both methods are, however, necessary in the study of institutions. But philosophical analysis must get beyond the abstractions of the English jurists and economists. Even if the Austinian conception be applied only to highly developed modern constitutions, such as those of Great Britain and the United States of America, difficulties arise. Recent apologists of Austin take his "sovereign" as being only the sovereign for the lawyer qua lawyer; but Austin himself meant more than that. In political philosophy we must go behind this legal sovereign to the ultimate political sovereign—a distinction recognised by Locke. This ultimate political sovereign is not to be found in a determinate body of persons, but in that vaguer something which Hume called "Opinion," and Rousseau "The General Will." The value of Austin's conception lies in his insisting on the legal irresponsibility of the legal sovereign. The question of the responsibility of the ultimate political sovereign opens the way into the problems of international law and the philosophy of history.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

FINE ART.

THE OLD MASTERS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE.

III.

GALLERY No. IV., formerly the home of the early Italian and Flemish masters, contains this year a very curious collection of historical portraits contributed entirely by the Earl of Suffolk and the Marquis Townshend. Those lent by the former are chiefly from the hand of Daniel Mytens, and represent, with one or two exceptions, officers who served in the Netherlands under Sir Francis Vere and his more celebrated brother Horace, Lord Vere of Tilbury; while the portraits in the latter group are by Michiel Jansze van Mierevelt and a body of artists bearing some relation to him, and represent this same Horace Lord Vere—most noted of the "Fighting Veres"—and some of his doughty captains. Mytens, amply as he is here represented, does not in Lord Suffolk's series of full-lengths give his measure as he does in some other portraits, such as the fine and sympathetic presentment of Charles I., painted in 1627 and now at the Turin Gallery, or the "George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham," which, with portraits of some others among King James's courtiers, appeared a few years since at Christie's. There is, notwithstanding the singular patience and skill displayed in the modelling of some of the heads, and more especially in the rendering of Jacobean costumes of an elaboration which is as tasteless as it is extraordinary, an element of the mechanical and the perfunctory in the conception of these portraits d'apparat which is not a little repellent. The two finest are the companion pictures of "Sir Edward Sackville" and "Richard Sackville, Earl of Dorset," in which a certain youthful vitality and brilliancy in the glance wars with the stiffness and conventional dignity of bearing of the two splendid young nobles. There is absolutely no excuse for attributing to Lucas de Heere the historically interesting but technically third-rate portrait of "Sir Jerome Bowes," the ambassador of Queen Elizabeth to the Czar of Muscovy in 1583. Nothing in this timid and feeble performance recalls the masterly modelling which distinguished Queen Mary's court-painter. A fine specimen of the art of Michiel van Mierevelt himself is the bust portrait of "Horace Lord Vere," who here appears in aspect a true leader of men, tough and warlike, yet calm and self-contained. Taking this work as a standard, we find that to it at least two of the full-lengths—those of "Sir John Burroughs" and "Captain Milles"—though less excellent in execution, are in the method of modelling the human face closely related. It is, therefore, permissible to refer them to the immediate neighbourhood of the Delft master, who, aided by his son Pieter Mierevelt, his grandson Jacob Delft, and by the well-known Paulus Moreelse, produced or superintended the production of a vast number of similar pieces. The portraits of the other captains are more garish in colour and more careless in the superficial breadth of their execution; and, moreover, they offend by their almost colossal proportions as well as by a certain unsteadiness and want of balance in the postures adopted. It is just possible that they also may have issued from Mierevelt's studio, and that they are the work of pupils who came less near to the style of the master than did the painters of the portraits above mentioned; yet seeing how strongly marked are the differences of method and conception just pointed out, it would be unsafe to assert this with any degree of confidence. The "Portrait of Lady Vere" is a characteristic, though hardly a very engaging, specimen of the manner of Cornelius Janson.

The English pictures, occupying as they do an equal share of the Central Gallery and the whole of Gallery No. 1, make a brave show, and exercise not less than their usual fascination over the public and the connoisseur alike—and alas! to a corresponding degree over the enterprising picture-dealer also. For in America, and even in France, the taste for masterpieces of the English school is on the increase, and after every winter exhibition there disappears from its home some representative performance which England can but ill spare. Sir Joshua Reynolds shines brilliantly in all his various styles of portraiture—whether in his more solemn and official manner, in his sober and domestic style, or in the more dazzling and popular phase of his practice, in which, displaying his peculiar vein of courtly espèglerie, he revels in the charm of English womanhood and English youth. A certain want of transparency and general dryness of aspect in the unusually large "Braddyll Family" (Rev. W. C. Randolph) betrays the predominance of studio work in the draperies and accessories. This appears to me not to exist in the fine, though formal and conventional, full-length of "George, first Marquis Townshend," in which the burnished armour and the crimson robes—glowing as they do with a Venetian richness, suggestive of Titian or Tintoret—cannot well be attributable to any but the master himself. Scarcely can this be said of the whole of the companion full-length of "The Right Hon. Charles Townshend," who appears—a somewhat impersonal and official figure—in his robes as Chancellor of the Exchequer. One accessory, however (a magnificent oriental carpet or rug, covering a table, on which rests a paper of brilliant whiteness), is touched with such breadth and sureness that it cannot well have been executed by the brush which has rendered, with a cleverness of a lower order, the costume and the gold-embroidered robes. More in the Rembrandtesque fashion in which Reynolds loved to reproduce his own features is the superb and well-preserved "Sir William Chambers, R.A." In his very finest manner—that in which he is both dignified and engaging—is, or, rather, has once been, the "Margaret Caroline, Countess of Carlisle," who appears, a three-quarter figure, standing in front of a landscape, dressed in white, with a grey, ermine-lined cloak. Still more a thing of the past, yet singularly beautiful, is the "Hope nursing Love" (B. A. Morritt, Esq.), that portrait of the ill-starred Miss Morris, painted in 1769, of which replicas—belonging respectively to the Earl of St. Germans and the Marquis of Lansdowne—have already appeared at the Academy. Among the very best of Sir Joshua's imaginative pictures of childhood is the famous "Puck on a Toadstool" (G. C. W. Fitzwilliam, Esq.), in which he has not, as in some other instances which could be named, reached or overpassed the verge of exaggeration in the delineation of infantine naïveté. The execution is first-rate, and shows that peculiar suppleness and unity in the rendering of flesh which suggests the triumphs of Venetian technique. The picture is well-preserved, too, save that the reflected lights are of the intense brick-red so often to be found in similar examples—a colour which time or chemical disintegration must surely have intensified. The present is not exactly a Gainsborough year; for this most brilliant and spontaneous of English masters, though by no means badly represented, is unable to compete on equal terms with his great rival. The unfinished monochromatic piece—"The Housemaid: Portrait of Mrs. Graham" (Earl of Carlisle)—shows the Scotch beauty masquerading, like Miss Hardcastle, in the guise of a soubrette or servant. It would, if completed, have been not inferior in fascination to the celebrated picture of the same lady in the National Gallery of Scotland at Edinburgh. Very charming, too, is the "Lady Rodney" (Lord Revelstoke), which has all the vivacity, all the power of suggesting impending movement, with not a little of the undue haste in execution so characteristic of the master. The colour scheme, in which the charming blue-green draperies are too nearly akin in tone to the half-tones and shadows of the flesh, is for this reason not completely satisfactory. Gainsborough the landscape-painter is represented by a large "Market Cart" (Rev. B. Gibbons) and a "Girl with Pigs" (same collection), which are both distinctive of his parti pris in approaching nature. They reveal, if not exactly deliberate insincerity, yet a system of over-hasty generalisation from the point of view of mere pictorial effect. It is hard, for all that, to withstand the charm of their golden glow of tempered and concentrated light, and their general attractiveness of aspect. An earlier—and, in some respects, a truer—phase of the master's style in this branch is exemplified in Mr. G. Cavendish-Bentinck's three charming studies, painted altogether in a lighter and fresher key of colour. He here appears strongly under the influence both of Berchem and of Hobbema. Romney's increased vogue accounts for the large number of second-rate and comparatively uninteresting specimens of his work which appear in the exhibition. Among these we feel constrained to rank the popular "Mrs. Stables and two of her Daughters," which has, if rumour may be trusted, been coveted since its exhibition by collectors both on this and the other side of the Atlantic. By far the best Romneys here are those exhibited by Mr. Henry Fraser Curwen. These include a "Lady Reading," of much completeness and charm both in design and execution, notwithstanding a measure of that affectation of simplicity which the eighteenth century often mistook for ingenuousness; and, above all, the companion full-lengths of "Mrs. Curwen" and "John Christian Curwen." The former of these portraits reveals an approach to real, as distinguished from pretentious, classicality, not only in the casting of the graceful white draperies, but in the rendering of the vivacious and beautiful head; while the latter, showing a young English gentleman in riding-dress leaning against his horse—much after the fashion of Gainsborough's "Colonel St. Leger" at Hampton Court—happily suggests, in their most national phase, true dignity and high breeding. A succès de curiosité is Turner's "Portrait of Robert Williams," lent by the Royal Thames Yacht Club—a three-quarter figure of a rosy and jovial amateur sea-captain, modelled with a certain timidity of touch easy to understand under the circumstances, but revealing, nevertheless, in its strength of general tone and mellow beauty of colour the master of the brush. The success among English landscape-painters is this winter quite as much for Sir A. W. Calcott as for Constable—the hero of so many displays at the Academy. The former is well known as one of our most learned and accurate masters; and in his emulation of the great Dutch marine painters he attains often to a remarkable success, notwithstanding a system of colouring in its results leaden and repellent—and especially so in grappling with the phenomena of bright and tempered sunlight. Two of the examples here deserve, however, to take a rank seldom accorded to the artist's works. These are "The Shrimper" (Rev. B. Gibbons), a splendid reargate scene, in which the stormy sky and the agitated sea recall Ruysdael; and the powerful "Hampstead Heath" (Mrs. Johnson), which has certainly been suggested either by Rembrandt or his pupil De Konick. Constable occupies the post of honour in the Central Gallery, with yet another "Dedham Lock," known also as "The Leaping Horse"—a performance of magnificent strength, but already (it was painted in 1825) of considerable mannerism. By the same painter are two remarkable sketches in oils widely divergent in style: "The Chain-Pier, Brighton," of which the finished original was here two years ago, and the "Stour Valley," showing a Corot-like delicacy of suggestion, which is unusual, even in this preliminary stage of the English master's work. All the loving care and the delicacy of execution which Sir David Wilkie lavished on his best work is to be found in his large landscape "Sheep Washing" (Rev. B. Gibbons); the freshness of which, however, has been sacrificed to the wealth of skilfully wrought yet not unduly prominent detail, while the colour is dull and a little chalky. Among several examples of the art of Richard Wilson, the finest is the large "Sion House" (Rev. B. Gibbons). Here something unduly mechanical in the rendering of the trees and buildings is redeemed by the exquisite all-pervading glow of the atmosphere, saturated with sunlight, and recalling not only the great French antetype of our English Claude, but also the painter, par excellence, of afternoon light, Cuyp. A number of English artists of eminence, other than those already mentioned, are represented in the galleries, and much time might be not unprofitably spent in describing their work. Thus, among the older masters we find Zoffany, John Singleton Copley, Sir Wm. Beechey, and the less known John Hamilton

Mortimer and William Peters; while among those nearer to our own time are Mulready, Sir E. Landseer, Leslie, Linnell, Webster, and the theatrical Francis Danby—scenic, and never much more than scenic even in his easel pictures—so that he appears sadly empty and pretentious when weighed in the balance with his greater and soberer contemporaries.

Although the South Kensington Museum has long contained a number of full-size casts from Alfred Stevens's most important works—including portions of the Wellington Monument, and the fine chimney-piece at Dorchester House—it is doubtful whether the variety and scope of his splendid talent have ever been made manifest to the general public as they are by the collection of sketch-models, casts, paintings, drawings, and designs coming under the head of industrial art, temporarily brought together in the water-colour room at Burlington House. We must go back to the Italian Renaissance, or to Jean Cousin as the typical representative of its development in France, in order to find an artist as variously gifted as Stevens, whether as a sculptor, a designer in the noblest and vastest field of decorative art, or an inventor and adapter in that branch of pure decoration appropriated to industrial purposes, which most modern masters have too hastily assumed to be beneath their notice; though in it a Perugino, a Pintoricchio, a Raphael, a Holbein, showed themselves supreme. And yet, so great is just now the revulsion of feeling in favour of a too-much-neglected glory of modern England, that we have to beware lest we overestimate the actual products of this noble art of Stevens, fine and genuine as these undoubtedly are. He had penetrated himself to an extraordinary degree with the essence as well as the form of Michelangelo and Raphael; and perhaps no other modern artist, dominated to the same extent by these vast personalities, succeeded better in avoiding mere slavish plagiarism of artistic motives than he did. Yet one cannot rid oneself of the idea that his art never reached that ultimate process of development, in which, while continuing to derive nourishment from the great examples of the past, it might have shaken itself free of all trammels, and have expressed itself in a fashion more personal and more in consonance with the time to which it belonged. Still finer than the Wellington Monument—of which the complete sketch-model, crowned by the projected but unexecuted equestrian statue, is here—would have been the "Monument to commemorate the Exhibition of 1851," in which, apart from the happily-imagined sculptural elements, there is apparent a nicer balance of the architectural parts. In the Wellington Monument, it must be owned that the Michelangelesque groups in the round which adorn the sides project awkwardly, and mar the unity of the composition; while the equestrian statue, suggested though it be by Donatello's "Gattamelata" at Padua, is clumsy and, as here shown, unsuccessful. One of the finest pieces of pure decoration in the collection is the design for the embellishment of the reading-room at the British Museum, in which are, however, to be discovered reminiscences not only of the Sixtine Chapel, but of Raphael's "Sibyls" at S. Maria della Pace. Nothing here is more remarkable than the long series of red-chalk drawings from the nude, in which is displayed, if not infallible accuracy of draughtsmanship, yet a rare nobility and consistency of style, with an ever-haunting recollection of the two great guiding stars of Stevens's firmament. In the department of industrial art, the designs exhibited are of varying merit; but the best of them—especially some designs for chimney-pieces, and for bronze candlesticks supported by putti—are in the finest style of the cinquecento. Not the least remarkable examples of the artist's scope and variety, as of his true comprehension of the methods as well as the aims of the Renaissance, are the brilliant and luminous copies, on a small scale, after some masterpieces of Titian, including the "Assunta," the "Presentation of the Virgin," and the "Venus of the Tribune."

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MUTILATION OF MONUMENTS IN EGYPT.

Near Rodah (Assiut): January 21, 1890.

No doubt you have heard that, almost at the same time when so much attention was being paid to the priceless antiquities of the Bulâq Museum in the transfer to Gizeh, some fiend has been secretly destroying some of the most interesting monuments of middle Egypt.

We heard in Cairo about six weeks ago that no less than twenty-one name-ovals of the kings on the walls of the tombs of Ameni and Khnum Hotep had been ruthlessly cut out of the inscriptions, and no doubt sold to some museum agent in Europe or America.

To-day, on my annual trip up the Nile to inspect the irrigation works, I passed Beni Hassan without visiting the tombs, and went on to Der el-Barsha, where on a length of some six kilometres there exists a set of rock-cut tombs with inscriptions and paintings of the VIth, XIIth, XIIIth, and XVIIIth Dynasties. Among them is the celebrated tomb of the Colossus on a Sledge—one of the few well-preserved frescopaintings of the XIIth Dynasty which really shows us how the Egyptians moved these great statues. Last year the Colossus was intact; and the tomb, though ruined in its southern wall, had many fine examples of cattle, and on the outer wall delicately executed reliefs of ostriches and other birds. I regret to say that the spoiler has visited this and cut away three quarters of the vertical-lined inscriptions. He has also destroyed the face of the Colossus and the head of the slave-driver on its knee. He has cut away all the Usartasen name-ovals, save one which is grooved all round with an irregular gash, four to six inches wide. He has also cut out several of the fine bulls in the bottom line; and not content with this, he has hacked to pieces the left wall of a little tomb, apparently by its style of the XIIIth Dynasty. Here his efforts have not been crowned with a commercial success, for the inscription is mauled and hacked to bits, and beyond a few hieroglyphic signs he cannot have got much of marketable value. He has also destroyed, in a roughly hacked cut, two-thirds of the interesting dedicatory inscriptions of Thothmes III. in the large cave on the north side of the ravine. I had not time to look at the VIth Dynasty caves.

It is evident from the objects selected for removal that the spoiler is directed by some European agent; and I write this to put Egyptologists on the alert, so that if the face of the Colossus or the stolen cartouches are found in any European or American Museum, you may hold its curator up to the execration of the scientific world. This Colossus face was evidently a portrait of a nobleman of the XIIth Dynasty, and was very valuable from a racial-type point of view. Sir Gardiner Wilkinson figures it in his book; but his rendering of the face was not correct, as the type was more negroid than the delicate features of the XVIIIth Dynasty. He has given it the conventional XVIIIth-XIXth Dynasty face, so well-known at Qurrah, &c. The Colossus fresco is mentioned on page 415 of Murray's Handbook for Egypt (edition 1890).

This regrettable loss shows more clearly the necessity for a society for the preservation of these out-of-the-way but instructive remains; as the present Egyptian Museum Committee, while wrangling over the propriety of letting European societies dig in the ancient mounds, allows these unique objects to be at the mercy of the museum thief in the present instance, or, as at Assiut, at the mercy of a stone contractor. Two years ago these quarrymen began blasting just over the large cartouche of Seti II. on the Manfalut rocks, when they had two miles of other rocks to blast. I got the Assiut police to interfere.

J. C. ROSS (Lieut.-Col.),
Inspector-General of Irrigation, Egypt.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE learn from the Oxford Magazine that the British School at Athens, under the directorship of Mr. Ernest Gardner, has opened its season with nine students, of whom four are Oxford men. Messrs. Tubbs and Munro have begun trenching on the site of Salamis in Cyprus; but the difficulty of securing a site for excavation in Greece has not yet been settled. The French have raised a prior claim to Troezen; and it is probable that Megalopolis will be selected.

Two courses on sculpture, of three lectures each, will be given shortly at the Royal Academy by Mr. A. S. Murray, keeper of the Greek and Roman antiquities at the British Museum, and Prof. J. H. Middleton, of Cambridge. Mr. Murray's subject is "Sculpture in Greek Temples," and his course will begin on Monday, February 17; Prof. Middleton's subject is "Florentine Sculpture in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries," commencing on Friday, February 28.

MR. TALFOURD ELY—who has lately been lecturing at University College on behalf of Prof. R. Stuart Poole—has obtained permission to give a series of five demonstrations at the British Museum, to be entitled "Outlines of Greek Art." He proposes to deal with the whole subject, from the early art of the islands and Mykenae down to the late bronzes and terra-cottas. The first demonstration will be on Wednesday, February 25, at 3 p.m. Tickets may be obtained from Mr. Ely, 73 Parliament Hill Road, Hampstead.

MRS. TIRARD will give two courses of lectures to ladies in the British Museum during Lent, the subjects being, "Life in Ancient Egypt," and "Religion of Ancient Egypt." Each lecture will be illustrated with diagrams, and afterwards by a visit to the Egyptian Galleries, in order to examine the antiquities referred to. Part of the proceeds will, as usual, be given to the Egypt Exploration Fund, of which Mrs. Tirard is the local hon. Sec. for West London.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY will sell on Monday next, February 10, a large collection of engravings of portraits, formed by Mr. J. M. Mackenzie, of Edinburgh, to illustrate the life of Nell Gwyn. It will be remembered that Mr. Mackenzie's magnificent library of books connected with the stage was dispersed at the same rooms last year.

MESSRS. BOUSSOD, VALADON, & Co. have now on view, at the Goupil Gallery in New Bond Street, what is considered by many to be Troyon's masterpiece, "La Vallée de la Touques."

IT appears from a letter in the Nation of January 16 that the appeal for subscriptions to enable the American School at Athens to excavate at Delphi has up to the present met with a very inadequate response. Some of the colleges have guaranteed funds according to their means; but no wealthy individual has come forward. The total amount of money required to buy out the occupants of the village of Castri is 75,000 dollars (£15,000). The Greek government, however, has extended the time for which the offer remains open until June, 1890.

THE last number of the American Journal of Archaeology (London: Trübner) consists mainly of papers contributed by members of the American School at Athens. Messrs. W. J. McMurtry and Mr. M. L. Earle report on the excavation of the theatre at Sikyon; while the latter also describes the most interesting find—a statue broken off below the middle, probably of the third century B.C., representing the youthful Dionysos. These papers are illustrated with four plates. Mr. Carl D. Buck, in continuation of former papers, deals elaborately with the inscriptions found at the Attic deme of Ikaria; and Mr. A. L. Frothingham, Jun., describes (with plate) an early rock-cut church at Sutri, in Etruria. We would also draw attention to an interesting letter from Dr. Dörpfeld, refuting certain statements of Mr. W. J. Stillman about Tiryns and Mykenae.

British Landscape and Coast Scenery. By E. Duncan. Marine Painting. By E. Duncan. Flower Painting for Beginners. By Ethel Nisbet. (Blackie.) These are three more of the "Vere Foster" series, and are all very good in their different ways. Miss Nisbet's flowers are beautifully drawn, and the chromo-lithographs reproduce the drawings in a manner which explains their execution as perfectly as possible. A beginner who is able to copy these examples with success will be well grounded in the use of brushes and colours. The titles of the other books are a little misleading. The late excellent water-colour painter whose name they bear appears to have made the drawings reproduced in colour, and some of the sketches; but the letterpress is by "an eminent teacher." There is, however, no fault to be found with the descriptions of Duncan's drawings; and the practical instructions for copying them are very clear, and teach a sound method. In addition to the drawings by Duncan both books contain a number of tolerable reproductions of plates from the Liber Studiorum and the etchings for them, accompanied by the descriptions of Mr. Stopford Brooke; so that there is plenty of interest and variety in the illustrations, and the books are not without attractions of a literary character.

THE STAGE.

THE NEW START AT THE AVENUE.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER's more or less temporary management of the Avenue Theatre began last Saturday night with the performance of two pieces, both of which are more than fair examples of the different types to which they belong. The "curtain raiser"—to give, with every possible apology for doing so, the often ridiculous current name to a dramatic piece which does not happen to be in two or three acts—the "curtain raiser" is the work of Mr. F. W. Broughton, the best known and most accepted writer of our shortest plays. And though "Fool's Mate," in so far as its plot turns upon the successful wiliness of one of tender years—a mere child in fact, impersonated by Miss Grace Murielle—creates a barrier to ready acceptability which only skill of treatment can overcome, it receives, we are bound to say, that skill of treatment at the hands of author and of actors alike. Mr. Broughton's old-world dialogue—for the action of "Fool's Mate" is laid in a bygone time—is ingenious in its necessary artificiality, and his conception of character is telling. Besides the young lady whose name we have already mentioned, there are engaged in the performance Mr. Nutcombe Gould, Mr. Fred Terry, and Miss Mary Kingsley. The costumes have been carefully studied—the "interior" is picturesque and sufficiently rich. Clearly, "Fool's Mate" has not been put upon the stage for a few nights only, or with a trace of the indifference with which the "curtain raiser" is apt to inspire the purely commercial manager.

And Mr. Broughton's quaint and skilful little piece is followed by an elongated farce, exactly such as Mr. Charles Wyndham, only three or four years ago, would have been delighted to produce, and was indeed wont to produce, at the Criterion. We do not use the word "elongated" with any intention of disparage. "Dr. Bill" is longish, but not longer than it may rightly be; only, in the older days of the theatre, such a motive as it supplies was wont to be exhausted within the limits of a single act. Mr. Hamilton Aidé is to be congratulated on the dexterity and success of his adaptation from the French. The immediate ancestor of "Dr. Bill"—so to put it—is "Le Docteur Jo-Jo," of MM. Carré and Raymond Deslandes, produced at Cluny two or three years ago; but it is to an earlier work by a Bohemian classic—M. Labiche—that farcical comedy, or elongated farce, like "Dr. Bill," is almost bound to be indebted. The practitioner of medicine who gives his name to the play is one who has turned with some rapidity from a genteely appreciative bachelor to an uxorious married man. He asks now from life nothing but inglorious ease and conjugal affection. But his father-in-law—like the father of Frou-frou as he was represented by M. Ravel—is unwilling to acquiesce in such a failure of energy. At all events, he will urge the medical man into renewed publicity and professional practice; and in such practice and in such publicity the doctor is brought into most compromising contact with various ladies whom of old he had not hesitated to visit. The untoward accident is followed by misapprehension, the misapprehension by untoward accident. All is confusion. What with one person's fiery jealousy, and another's officious meddling, and another's blameless but impulsive error, nobody is quite sure of the position of anybody else. And, with regard to the apartment of the doctor, everyone is where he should not be, and with the particular person with whom he most of all ought not to be; until at last the curtain falls on a general illumination of the position of things, and serenity succeeds to storm.

There are but few actually dull moments in the piece; none at all in the noisy second act. And the piece is played with skill, and, on the whole, with dash. We are already behind-hand with the obvious but yet necessary criticism on Mr. Fred Terry's medical man—he wants the full air of comic apprehension which Mr. Wyndham was wont to import into his rendering of such scenes as many of those through which Dr. Bill passes. And he wants, too, it may be, a very complete identification of himself with the serious side of the character, if really serious side it can be said to have. But, for all that, Mr. Fred Terry is bright and generally acceptable. Miss Fanny Brough and Miss Marie Linden play their parts like artists to the manner born—or, rather, like artists who have learnt their work to the full. Miss Elizabeth Robins acts with the discretion, tact, and grace which the London playgoer is now recognising as among her possessions. Miss Carlotta Leclercq, Mr. Albert Chevalier, and Mr. Benjamin Webster—one of these gentlemen the father-in-law, and the other a "maasher" of an entertaining type—bear their part creditably in the production. Mr. George

Alexander himself—admirable actor as he is—need be in no great hurry to appear on his own boards. He has placed on them a couple of pieces which have the elements of attractiveness, and has got together a company quite fitted, as a whole, for their work.

F. W.

STAGE NOTES.

MRS. LANGTRY's sudden illness has caused the postponement of her revival of "As You Like It" at the St. James's; and, for the moment at least, this theatre remains closed.

A REVIVAL of "Our Boys"—with Mr. David James, of course, in the character he created—will almost immediately take the place of "Cyril's Success" at the Criterion.

MISS AGNES HUNTINGTON—who, since her first appearance at the Lyric Theatre, had been a chief attraction there—has suddenly seceded from the theatre: the reason, it is now announced, being that her part in "Marjorie" was not only ill-suited to her voice, but was an actual strain upon it.

MR. FREDERICK HARRISON—in whom, especially in eighteenth-century parts, we had ventured to recognise an actor of much promise—has been appointed "business-manager" to Mr. Tree at the Haymarket. He will certainly be in his right place in front of the curtain; but there are likewise some right places for him on the other side of it, and we hope he will not permanently abandon them.

MARY O. ROWSELL has herself dramatised her novel, The Red House; and the play, in three acts, will be produced at a matinée in London shortly after Easter.

MUSIC.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE programme of last Saturday's Popular Concert included Mendelssohn's Quintet for strings in B flat (op. 87). Madame Néruda's playing in the remarkable Adagio could scarcely be surpassed for finish and feeling. The whole work was admirably rendered. Mr. Franz Rummel was the pianist, and he gave Beethoven's Sonata in C (op. 53)—of all his Sonatas, the one which has been most frequently performed at these concerts. Mr. Rummel has excellent technique, but his reading of the work left much to desire. His reception was not an enthusiastic one. Miss Liza Lehmann pleased greatly in an old Irish melody arranged by Dr. Stanford, and in a quaint old English song.

On the following Monday evening Mr. Rummel was again the pianist. He played Schubert's Impromptu in A flat (op. 90, no. 4) with somewhat exaggerated expression, Chopin's Nocturne in D flat in a neat manner, and Mendelssohn's Rondo Capriccioso with such brío as to secure for himself an encore, for which he selected Chopin's Berceuse. He also took part in Schumann's D minor Trio. Miss Christine Neilson, with a well-trained mezzo soprano voice, made a favourable début in songs by Brahms and Rubinstein.

MR. W. ASHTON ELLIS will give a lecture on behalf of the Wagner Society at Trinity College, Mandeville Place, on Wednesday next, February 12, at 8.30 p.m. His subject is "Wagner's Letters to Thalig, Fischer, and Heine."

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.

Every Evening, at 8.

LONDON DAY BY DAY.

Mr. Geo. Alexander; Messrs. Marius, Beveridge, Shine, Rignold, Abingdon, Balfour, Wilfred, Russell, East, &c.; Mesdames A. Murray, M. Rorke, E. James, G. Elliot, and Clara Jock.

Preceded, at 7.15, by POLLY'S VENTURE.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.15, FOOL'S MATE.

DR. BILL.

Messrs. Frederick Terry, Nutcombe Gould, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Marie Linden, Mary Kingsley, Grace Murielle, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, and Fanny Brough.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9.

PINK DOMINOS.

Messrs. Herbert Standing, Alfred Mahby, A. Boucicault, E. Dagnall, Williams, Bearn, and C. H. Hawtry; Mesdames Rose Baker, Goldway, Robertson, Lydia Cowell, and Alma Stanley.

Preceded, at 8, by ONE SUMMER NIGHT.

Messrs. Day, Lugg, Boucicault, &c.; Miss Rickards, &c.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD and Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.

Every Evening, at 9.

AUNT JACK.

Preceded, at 8.15, by TO THE RESCUE.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

THIS DAY, at 1.30 and 7.15.

JACK AND THE BEANSTALK.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Every evening, at 8.

BUY BLAS AND THE BLASE ROUE.

Messrs. Fred Leslie, Fred Storey, and Dalton Somers; Mesdames Ellen Farrer, Marion Hood, Sylvia Grey, Linda Verner, Blanche Massey, and Letty Lind.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. F. R. BRISQON.

Every Evening, at 8, Thursday and Friday excepted, Shakespeare's Fairy Comedy, with the Mendelssohn incidental music.

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

MATINEES OF A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, every Saturday and Wednesday. Doors open at 2, commence 2.30. Overture, 2.15. No fees. Every Thursday and Friday Evening, at 8, until further notice, Shakespeare's Comedy, THE TAMING OF THE SHREW, and on THURSDAY AFTERNOONS, FEB. 13 and 20, at 2.30.—GLOBE THEATRE.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERBROOK-TREX.

Every evening, at 8.30.

A MAN'S SHADOW.

Messrs. Tree, Fernandes, Kemble, C. Collette, E. M. Robson, Allan, Harcourt, Tapping, Gurney, and Harwood; Mesdames Tree, Minnie Terry, Norreys, and Julia Nelson.

Preceded, at 7.45, by GOOD FOR NOTHING.

Miss Norreys.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Lessee, Mr. F. J. HARRIS.

Manager, Mr. H. GRIFFUS LONSDALE.

Every Evening, at 8.

A Comedy Drama, in four acts, entitled

A NOBLE BROTHER.

FEBRUARY 17, LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.

Every Evening, at 8.30.

MARJORIE.

Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Camille D'Arville.

Preceded, at 7.45, by JOHN SMITH.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE

Every Evening, at 7.45.

MASTER AND MAN.

Messrs. Henry Neville, J. H. Barnes, Robert Pateman, Bassett Roe, C. Dalton, E. W. Gardiner, Sidney Howard, F. Shepherd, Geo. Dalsiel, E. Mayeur, E. W. Lawson, Morton Baker, &c.; Mesdames Bella Pateman, Fanny Brough, — Huntly, &c.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40.

the funniest farcical comedy in London,

OUR FLAT.

Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.

Every Evening, at 8.

THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL.

Messrs. Fred Thorne, Thibberg, Cyril Mande, Frank Gillmore, J. B. Blythe, P. Grove, Oswald York, C. H. Perry, Wheatman, J. Horton, Leigh, and John Maclean; Mesdames Mary Collette, Coralie Owen, L. Beyer, Hanbury, and Winifred Emery.

NIAGARA IN LONDON.

Colossal PICTURE of the GREAT FALLS. Original effects by Philip-potiaux. Pleasant lounge, music, American sweetest store. Refreshments by Regimot. Electric Light. Building cooled throughout. Admission 1s. 10 to 10.—York-street, Westminster (St. James's-park station). Second year. Nearly one million visitors.

THERE IS
No Nourishment in Tea or Coffee
but
PLENTY IN COCOA especially in
VAN HOUTEN'S
which
UTILISES IN THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE DEGREE
All the Flesh-forming Elements
while Developing the Flavour and Aroma.

ORIGINAL PATENTORS.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3 lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

THROAT
IRRITATION
AND COUGH.

Soreness and Dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough, and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. In boxes, 7d.; tins, 1s. 1d.; labelled "JAMES EPPS & CO., Homoeopathic Chemists."

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUTMOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

348, 349, 350, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

MEMORY. A. LOISETTE'S
SYSTEM.—"I was impressed with the possibilities of improvement to memory which your Lectures in CAMBRIDGE opened up."—R. N. Ingle, M.A., M.D., University Lecturer
(Jan., '90). "Physiological, scientific."—Dr. Andrew
Wilson (April, '89). "We again recommend the system."—Dr. Wilson (Jan., '89). "Great advantage to strong memory, incalculable aid to weak one."—
Dr. Buckley. "Excellent travelling companion."—
Capt. J. B. Hays, R.N.—Apply 87, New-Oxford
Street, London.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and Terms arranged for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

Publishers, Printers, and Binders,

31, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY
LANE, LONDON.

FRY'S Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so well."

COCOA

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE,
19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.
Established 1782.
Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.
Liberal Loss Settlements.
Prompt Payment of Claims.
Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.
LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below $100.
The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.
FRANCIS HAVENSCROFT, Manager.

GOLD PEN,
WITH DIAMOND POINT.
ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and
POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.
Also
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

MESSRS. BELL & SONS' LIST.

NEW BOOKS.

Ready at Mudie's and all Libraries, 2 vols., demy 8vo, 82s.—NOW PUBLISHED FOR THE FIRST TIME.

THE EARLY DIARY of FRANCES BURNET, 1768-1778. With a Selection from her Correspondence, and from the Journals of her Sisters, SUSAN and CHARLOTTE BURNET. Edited by ANNIE RAINE ELLIS.

"Mrs. Ellis, who has produced the best recent editions of 'Evelina' and 'Cecilia,' has expended no small amount of labour on the production of Fanny Burnet's 'Early Diary,' which is now printed for the first time. That it should have been so long retained in manuscript is surprising, for it almost vies in interest with the well-known diary that begins with the date at which these earlier pages end. It is a work deserving all the care Mrs. Ellis has bestowed on it."—Athenaeum.

"Here for the first time are given to the world the early diaries of one of the most amiable and delightful creatures that ever lived. Mrs. Ellis assures us—and we can well believe her—that the labour of deciphering the manuscript and preparing it for the press has been by no means a light one. Not content with that, she gives a well-written preface, in which she describes the characters who meet us most frequently in the diaries; and she has added, moreover, copious notes which must have cost her a world of trouble. We have rarely come across so sparkling, so fascinating, and yet so relevant a commentary."—Scots Observer.

BY FRANCES BURNET (MADAME D'ARBLAY).

EVELINA. With an Introduction and Notes by A. R. Ellis. 3s. 6d.

[Bohn's Novelists' Library.]

CECILIA. With an Introduction and Notes by A. R. Ellis. 2 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

[Bohn's Novelists' Library.]

A FOURTH EDITION OF

HANDBOOK to ROBERT BROWNING'S WORKS. By

Mrs. SUTHERLAND ORR. Fcap. 8vo, 6s.

THE WORKS of FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS. Whiston's Translation, thoroughly Revised by the Rev. A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. With Topographical and Geographical Notes by Col. Sir C. W. WILSON, K.C.B. Vols. I., II., and III., containing the Life of Josephus and the Antiquities of the Jews, each 3s. 6d.

[Bohn's Standard Library.]

"Now that Josephus has been so accurately Englished by Mr. Shilleto, there is no reason why ordinary students should not make acquaintance with the most interesting period in the history of an interesting people."—St. James's Gazette.

BJÖRNSON'S ARNE and the FISHER LASSIE. Translated from the Norse by W. H. LOW, M.A. 3s. 6d. [Bohn's Novelists' Library.]

"Their charm and fresh simplicity have no parallel in modern fiction."—Scotsman.

"Mr. Walter Low's work as translator deserves a special word of commendation. His English is easy, natural, and well chosen, and he shows plenty of spirit in the dramatic scenes."—St. James's Gazette.

THE THOUGHTS of BLAISE PASCAL. Translated from the Text of M. AUGUSTE MOLINIER by C. KEGAN PAUL. 3s. 6d.

[Bohn's Standard Library.]

NEW BOOK BY MR. GIFFEN.—In 1 vol., demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE GROWTH of CAPITAL. By Robert Giffen, LL.D.,

Author of "Essays in Finance," "Stock Exchange Securities," &c.

Ready at Mudie's and all Libraries.

THE CROWN PRINCE and the GERMAN IMPERIAL

CROWN. Personal Recollections of the late Emperor Frederick. By GUSTAV FREYTAG, Author of "Debit and Credit," &c. Translated from the Seventh German Edition by GEORGE DUNCAN, M.A. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

NEW EDITION REVISED, 3s. 6d.

WATERLOO: the Downfall of the First Napoleon. A

History of the Campaign of 1815. By GEORGE HOOPER, Author of "Wellington," "The Italian Campaigns of General Bonaparte," "The Campaign of Sedan," &c. With Maps and Plans. [Bohn's Standard Library.]

"An able monograph on Waterloo."—Athenaeum.

"One of the most successful volumes in Bohn's Standard Library."—Army and Navy Gazette.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: a Literary Biography. By

KARL ELZE, Ph.D., LL.D. Translated by L. DORA SCHMITZ. Small post 8vo, 5s.

"Thoroughly sound and pleasantly readable."—Spectator.

"We confidently recommend it to Shakespearean students."—Athenaeum.

STANDARD WORKS.

COLERIDGE'S (S. T.) WORKS. 6 vols.

3s. 6d. each.

[Bohn's Standard Library.]

Vol. 1. Friend. A Series of Essays on Morals, Politics, and Religion. Portrait.

Vol. 2. Aids to Reflection. Confessions of an Inquiring Spirit; and Essays on Faith and the Common Prayer-Book. New Edition, Revised.

Vol. 3. Table-Talk and Omiana. By T. ASHE, B.A.

Vol. 4. Lectures on Shakspeare and other Poets. Edited by T. ASHE, B.A.

Containing the Lectures taken down in 1811-12 by J. P. Collier, and those delivered at Bristol in 1813.

Vol. 5. Biographia Literaria; or, Biographical Sketches of my Literary Life and Opinions; with Two Lay Sermons.

Vol. 6. Miscellanies. Aesthetic and Literary; to which is added THE THEORY OF LIFE. Collected and Arranged by T. ASHE, B.A.

EMERSON'S WORKS. 3 vols. 3s. 6d.

each.

[Bohn's Standard Library.]

Vol. 1. Essays, Lectures, and Poems

Vol. 2. English Traits, Nature, and Conduct of Life.

Vol. 3. Society and Solitude. Letters and Social Aims, Miscellaneous Papers (hitherto uncollected), May-Day, &c.

HAZLITT'S (W.) WORKS. 7 vols.

3s. 6d. each.

[Bohn's Standard Library.]

Vol. 1. Table-Talk.

Vol. 2. The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth and Characters of Shakspeare's Plays.

Vol. 3. English Poets and English Comic Writers.

Vol. 4. The Plain Speaker. Opinions on Books, Men, and Things.

Vol. 5. Round Table. Conversations of James Northcote, R.A.; Characterist'cs.

Vol. 6. Sketches and Essays, and Winterslow.

Vol. 7. Spirit of the Age; or, Contemporary Portraits. New Edition. By W. CAREW HAZLITT.

C. S. CALVERLEY'S WORKS.

Uniform Edition, in 4 vols., crown 8vo.

Vol. I. LITERARY REMAINS. With Portrait and Memoir. Edited by WALTER J. SENDALL. Second Edition. 10s. 6d.

Vol. II. VERSES and FLY-LEAVES. New Edition. 7s. 6d.

Vol. III. TRANSLATIONS into ENGLISH and LATIN, with Additional Pieces. Third Edition, Revised. 7s. 6d.

Vol. IV. THEOCRITUS. Translated into English Verse. Second Edition, Revised. 7s. 6d.

FLY-LEAVES. Original Edition. Fcap. 8vo, Sixteenth Thousand, 3s. 6d.

VERSES and TRANSLATIONS. Original Edition. Fcap. 8vo, Twelfth Edition. 5s.

Complete Edition, post 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

LEGENDS and LYRICS. By Adelaide ANNE PROCTER. With an Introduction by the late CHARLES DICKENS. And Portrait: Riched by C. O. Murray, from a Painting by E. Gagliotti Richards. Fourteen's Thousand.

"Here is a book of real verse, which, as a gift-book to all the true and tender-hearted, cannot be exceeded."—Athenaeum.

SHAKESPEARE. Edited by S. W. SINGER. With a Life by W. W. LLOYD. Uniform with the Aldine Edition of the Poets. 10 vols. 2s. 6d. each; in half-morocco, 5s.

"The Aldine Edition of Shakespeare is of a small octavo size, convenient for carrying about, and is printed in good clear type. There is a biography of Shakespeare, introductions to each of the plays, and a series of foot-notes, which are brief, practical, and to the point, and sufficient in number without becoming, as is the case with most notes, an irritating distraction to the reader."—Saturday Review.

CRITICAL ESSAYS on the PLAYS. By W. W. LLOYD. Uniform with the above, 2s. 6d.; in half-morocco, 5s.

"Mr. Lloyd's essays on the Plays of Shakespeare are of the highest repute."—Academy.

HISTORY of MODERN EUROPE.

from the Taking of Constantinople to the Establishment of the German Empire, A.D. 1453-1871. By the late Dr. T. H. DYE. A New Edition. 5 vols., 2s. 12s. 6d.

This work, which has been for some time out of print, has been revised throughout for this Edition, with the introduction of fresh matter, and the addition of new chapters, bringing the history down to the year 1871.

A HISTORY of the INTELLECTUAL

DEVELOPMENT of EUROPE. By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D. A New Edition, thoroughly Revised by the Author. With Index. 2 vols., 5s. each.

Social advancement is as completely under the control of natural law as is bodily growth. The life of an individual is a miniature of the life of a nation. To demonstrate and illustrate these two propositions is the special object of this work.

ENGLAND in the FIFTEENTH

CENTURY. By the late Rev. W. DENTON, M.A., Worcester College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 12s.

"Versatile as Mr. Denton's publications proved him to be during his lifetime, we should hardly have expected him to make a posthumous reputation as an English historian. Yet his work on 'England in the Fifteenth Century,' by its wide erudition and sober good sense, not to speak of its vigour and picturesque quality as a literary production, shows that he possessed and had cultivated the capacity to write the history of a difficult time in some of its most important aspects."—Athenaeum.

BOSWELL'S LIFE of JOHNSON, with the TOUR in the HEBRIDES and JOHNSONIANA. New Edition, with Notes and Appendices, By the Rev. A. NAPIER, M.A., Trinity College, Cambridge, Vicar of Holkham, Editor of the Cambridge Edition of the "Theological Works of Barrow." With Frontispiece to each vol. 6 vols. 3s. 6d. each. [Bohn's Standard Library.]

"A model of good editing."—Academy.

A DICTIONARY of ROMAN COINS, Republican and Imperial Commenced

by the late SETH W. STEVENSON, F.S.A., Revised in part by O. ROACH SMITH, F.S.A., and completed by F. W. MADDEN, M.R.A.S., Members of the Numismatic Society of London. Illustrated by upwards of 700 Engravings on Wood, chiefly executed by the late F. W. Fairholt, F.S.A. 1 vol., 8vo, 2s. 2s.

TEUTONIC MYTHOLOGY. By Jacob Grimm. Translated from the Fourth

Edition, with Notes and Appendix, by JAMES STEPHEN STALLYBRASS. Demy 8vo, 4 vols., 2s. 2s.; or separately, Vols. I.-III., 15s. each.

"The best extant introduction to the studies of mythology and folklore. A handbook for travellers abroad and observers at home."—Mr. F. YORK POWELL, in the Academy.

"These three volumes are a store of curious learning."—Spectator.

"This volume is a wonderful compilation, and abounds in erudition."—Western Antiquary.

In a Review on Vol. IV., Notes and Queries

A New and Complete Catalogue of Works published by Messrs. BELL will be sent, post free, on application.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 928.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1890.

PRIME 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE CORRESPONDENCE OF PRINCESS LIEVEN AND EARL GREY, by ARTHUR ARNOLD	109
BURY'S HISTORY OF THE LATER ROMAN EMPIRE, by C. OMAN	109
AMBROSE'S TRIP THROUGH THE EASTERN CAUCASUS, by W. R. MORFILL	110
VIOLET FANE'S AUTUMN SONGS, by ARTHUR SYMONS	111
TWO BOOKS UPON MODERN ECONOMICS, by G. P. MACDONELL	112
MRS. EDMONDS'S LIFE OF RHIGAS, by the Rev. H. F. TOZER	113
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE	113
SOME HISTORICAL BOOKS	114
TRANSLATIONS FROM THE CLASSICS	115
NOTES AND NEWS	116
UNIVERSITY SETTINGS	117
TRANSLATION: "PLATO TO AESTHETICS," by J. E. S.	117
OBITUARY: MRS. JOSHUA STANGER; A MEMORY, by the Rev. R. D. RAWNSLEY	117
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	117
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	117
CORRESPONDENCE:— A Danish Contribution to the Question of the Origin of Printing, by Prof. George Stejneger; The Etymology of "Terro," by Paget Toynbee; "Kenapa" in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, by the Rev. O. Plummer; "The Story of the Nations—Early Britain," by A.	118
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	118
MARGOLIOU ON ECCLESIASTICAL, by Prof. CHRYSTIE	119
CORRESPONDENCE:— Ocellus, etc. 5, by Prof. A. Palmer	120
SCIENCE NOTES	120
PHILOLOGY NOTES	120
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	120
THE ART MAGAZINES	121
MR. JOHNSON'S PICTURES OF HIGHLAND SPORTS, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	122
A NEW MEZZOTINT	122
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	122
STAGE NOTES	123
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	123

PRIVATE SECRETARY.—LADY desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. Latin, French, German, shorthand. Rapid writer. Knowledge of Political and Social movements. Highest references.—C. D. M., 4, Gray's Inn Residences, E.C.

A YOUNG LADY desires DAILY ENGAGEMENT as amanuensis to Literary Lady or Gentleman. Rapid Type-Writing, Correspondence, Shorthand, and fluent French (acquired abroad).—Apply G. H., 35, Oldbaldon-road, Stoke Newington, N.

FOR SALE, ONE SHARE (£100), in a well established MAGAZINE, to which the purchaser (if competent) might become a contributor.—Address: A. B., Holmby, Grange-road, Sutton, Surrey.

WANTED.—ORIGINAL ARTICLES, SHORT TALES, ESSAYS or POEMS for a new MAGAZINE published in Austria. No remuneration, but authors reserve copyright.—MSs. to be addressed: Editor, F. W. ELLMENREICH'S VERLAG, Meran, Tyrol, Austria.

OUTLINES OF GREEK ART.—TALFOURD ELY, M.A., F.S.A., will give FIVE DEMONSTRATIONS at the BRITISH MUSEUM (at 3 p.m., on TUESDAYS and THURSDAYS, beginning FEB. 25TH). If six persons apply by Feb. 22nd.—For details, and for tickets (price £1 1s.) write to Mr. ELY, 73, Parliament Hill, road, N.W.

TO AUTHORS.—MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS, 18, Bonville-street, Fleet-street, London, E.C., are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS., and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. Digby & Long have also every convenience and ample facilities for the publication of MAGAZINES. Editorial offices if required.

TO LIBRARIANS. WANTED, for the REFERENCE DEPARTMENT of the EDINBURGH PUBLIC LIBRARY, a SUB-LIBRARIAN. Must have a good knowledge of Classical and Modern Languages and of Library Work. Salary, £150 per annum. Also SUB-LIBRARIAN for the LENDING DEPARTMENT, with knowledge of Modern Languages and Library Work. Salary, £120 per annum. Applications, with a Copy of Testimonials, to be lodged with the undersigned, on or before 30TH FEBRUARY, 1890.
HEW MORRISON, Librarian and Clerk.
Edinburgh Public Library, 1st February, 1890.

A THIRD EDITION IS NOW READY OF THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

For FEBRUARY, containing:—

AUSTRALIAN FEDERATION. By Sir C. GAVAN DUFFY, K.C.M.G.
BISHOP LIGHTFOOT. By Archdeacon FARBAR, D.D.
OXFORD PROFESSORS AND TUTORS. By Professor GARDINER.
FUTURE OF ENGLISH MONARCHY. By FRANK H. HILL.
MR. BARING-GOULD'S NOVELS. By J. M. BARRIE.
CRITICAL STUDY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By Canon DRIVER, D.D.
DEFOE'S WIFE. By G. A. AITKEN.
THE EIGHT HOURS' QUESTION. By R. B. HALDANE, Q.C., M.P.
PHILOSOPHICAL BUDDHISM in TIBET. By GRAHAM SANDBERG.
A VOYAGE with GENERAL GORDON. By WM. H. SPENCE.
THE TAXATION OF GROUND VALUES. By C. H. SARGANT.
UNIONIST FUSION. By FREDERICK GREENWOOD.

St. James's Gazette says:—"The Contemporary Review," seems on the way to regain its old rank in periodical literature. The present number is full of interest and ability."
Guardian says:—"Contains an important article by the Professor of Hebrew at Oxford, which presents us with a useful statement of the most modern conclusions by a highly competent scholar."
Speaker says:—"It is a particularly good number."
Review of Reviews says:—"Thoroughly on the nail and up to date."
Christian World says:—"Canon Driver's article supplies a long-felt want."

ISBISTER & CO., LIMITED, 15 & 16, TAVISTOCK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Books can be exchanged at the residences of Subscribers in London, by the Library Messengers.
SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY. COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

A Large number of Copies of the Best and most Popular Books of the Season are now in circulation at MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

All Works of general interest are freely added immediately on publication.
Library Catalogue for 1890, 1s. 6d. Prospectuses and Clearance List of Books on Sale, Postage free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, New Oxford Street.
BRANCH OFFICES: 241, BROMPTON ROAD, and 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

F. E. TROLLOPE'S NEW NOVEL.

At all Libraries, in 2 vols.

AMONG ALIENS.

By F. E. TROLLOPE,

Author of "That Unfortunate Marriage," "A Charming Fellow," &c.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

Second Edition, price 2s. 6d.

THE FUNCTIONS of the BRAIN. A Popular Essay. Four Plates. By JULIUS ALTHAUS, M.D.

"Admirably illustrated." The subject is treated in a masterly manner and the book will be welcome alike to the surgeon and the general reader."
Academy

Also, by the Same Author.

ON FAILURE OF BRAIN POWER. Third Edition, with Engravings. price 1s. 6d.
London LONGMANS & Co, Paternoster-row.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—Mrs. TIRARD (Miss HELEN BELOE) will give, during Lent, TWO COURSES of LECTURES to LADIES, in the BRITISH MUSEUM, on "THE LIFE and the RELIGION of ANCIENT EGYPT."—Syllabus, &c., by letter only, from Miss C. GOLDSMID, 3, Observatory Avenue, Kensington, W.

EXCHANGE or SELL ANYTHING which you do not now want through "THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART," which also contains a considerable quantity of interesting and useful literary matter on a great variety of subjects, especially addressed to Amateurs in Art, Music, Literature, Science, Mechanics, Gardening, House-keeping, Management of Poultry, Dogs, Goats, Cage Birds, and Pits generally. Price 2s., of all newspapers; or specimen copy for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

BARGAINS in every description of Personal Property can be secured through "THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART," which also contains a considerable quantity of interesting and useful literary matter on a great variety of subjects, especially addressed to Amateurs in Art, Music, Literature, Science, Mechanics, Gardening, House-keeping, Management of Poultry, Dogs, Goats, Cage Birds, and Pits generally. Price 2s., of all newspapers; or specimen copy for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHOR'S MSS., PLAYS, and all kinds of COPYING executed quickly and accurately. Terms, 1s. per 1,000 words. Satisfaction guaranteed. Shorthand taught (short system), schools attended. Terms moderate.—Address F. HALL, 13, Albert-square, Stratford, E.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of the PRINCESS LIEVEN and EARL GREY. Translated and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GUY LE STRANGE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with portraits, 30s.

The LETTERS of MADAME du NOYER during the REIGN of LOUIS the FOURTEENTH. Now first Translated from the Original by FLORENCE LAYARD. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Notes and Portraits, 30s. [Next week.]

THE FIRST of the BOURBONS. By CATHERINE CHARLOTTE LADY JACKSON, Author of "Old Paris," &c. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with portraits, 34s.

SARDINIA and the SARDES. By CHARLES EDWARDES, Author of "Letters from Crete." In demy 8vo, 14s.

A HUNTER'S WANDERINGS in AFRICA: a Narrative of Nine Years spent amongst the Game of the Far Interior of South Africa. With Accounts of Explorations beyond the Zambesi, on the River Chobe, and in the Matabele and Mashona Countries, and with full Notes upon the Natural History and present distribution of all the large Mammals. By FREDERICK COURTENEY SELOUS. With Nineteen Full-page Illustrations by J. Smit, E. Whymper, and Miss A. B. Selous. New and Cheaper Edition, just ready. In 1 vol., 8vo, 18s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

TWO NEW SERIALS FOR THE NEW YEAR IN THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

I. ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton, Author of "Cometh up as a Flower," &c.

II. PEARL POWDER. By Mrs. Annie EDWARDES, Author of "Ought We to Visit Her!" &c.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."
A HEAVY RECKONING.

By E. WERNER,
Author of "No Surrender," &c.
In 8 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN UGLY DUCKLING."
BY WOMAN'S FAVOUR. By Henry ERBOLL, Author of "The Academician," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Next week.]

NOW READY.

STRANGE GODS. By Constance COTTERELL. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

By the Author of "THE PHANTOM FUTURE."
SUSPENSE. By H. S. Merriman, Author of "Young Mistley," &c. In 8 vols., crown 8vo.

ALSO, NOW READY.

A New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, scarlet cloth, 3s. 6d.

PARKWATER. By Mrs. Henry Wood. Forming the 26th Volume of the New Serial Issue of Mrs. Wood's Novels now in course of publication. A new volume appears at monthly intervals.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

Vol. I. (A-CONO) now ready.

THE CENTURY DICTIONARY

An Encyclopaedic Lexicon of the English Language.

Edited by Prof. W. D. WHITNEY, Ph.D., LL.D. (Yale University).

PROFUSELY AND ARTISTICALLY ILLUSTRATED.

Cloth gilt, sprinkled edges, £2 2s.; half-morocco, cloth sides, marbled edges £1 18s.

Also in 24 Monthly Parts, price 10s. 6d. each.

The Standard (Leader).—"This new lexicon of the English tongue is, on its own line, perhaps the most complete and comprehensive that has ever been attempted. Besides the etymology, the meaning, and the use of each particular word, it gives in a condensed form such explanatory matter as would be required by a person in search of special knowledge. Almost every page contains some picture which enables the eye to easily and rapidly take in the meaning of the text. Such assistance to the understanding of the letterpress is invaluable. It devotes a great deal of its space alike to terms which are usually considered obsolete, and to the more important technical and local words. The present work has every right to claim that it has reached a high standard of excellence. The quotations are apt and numerous, and supply the student with typical examples of the styles of our chief writers."

The Daily Telegraph.—"The work is copious and erudite. A distinctly important work. A word must be added in recognition of the excellence of the illustrations—animals, coins, costumes, geometric figures, and ancient alphabets being all rendered with faithful care."

New York: THE CENTURY COMPANY.

Ready next week, 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

ITALIAN CHARACTERS IN THE EPOCH OF UNIFICATION.

By the Countess E. MARTINENGO CESARESCO.

The Work will contain the Lives of BETTINO RICABOLI, STANFORD AZEGLIO, UGO BASSI, DANIEL MANIN, THE CAROLIS, LUIGI SETTEMBRINI, THE POERIOS, and many others.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

GOD in SHAKESPEARE: a Critique of Pure Idealism. By "OLELIA."

"Les faits primitifs et élementaires semblent nous avoir été cachés par la nature avec autant de soin que les causes; et quand on parvient à les voir, c'est un spectacle fort nouveau et entièrement imprévu."—Fontenelle.

"This book deserves to rank as one of the most remarkable contributions of this or any other century to Shakespearean literature. Its practical value, too, is great; for it is written by one who has a thorough knowledge of Shakespeare, and the possession of it will become acquainted with many cross readings of texts of which, probably, he had previously been unaware."—Art and Literature.

On February 20, Vol. 23 of "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

RUSSIA

By W. R. MORFILL, M.A.,
Reader, to the University of Oxford, in the Russian and other Slavonic Tongues.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.; PRESENTATION EDITION, cloth, gilt edges, 5s. 6d.; LIBRARY EDITION, cloth, red tops, 6s.

Also, lately issued, in same Series.

THE BARBARY CORSAIRS. By STANLEY LANE-POOLE, Author of "Turkey," &c.

"Mr. Lane-Poole, who has already contributed more than one volume to this excellent series, has produced an interesting book on a little-known subject."—Observer.

"The book is written in a spirited style that suits its subject excellently, and has a series of quaint and instructive illustrations."—Scotsman.

2 vols., medium 8vo, cloth, 32s.

THE LETTERS of HORACE WALPOLE

Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Professor C. D. YONGE, M.A. Portraits and Illustrations. Limited Edition of 750 Copies.

"The present selection has the recommendation of being judiciously made, and the edition is handy, and, of course, economical. The collection gives sufficiently satisfactory examples of the writer's versatility and the range of his tastes. The letters are in themselves extremely interesting. Horace Walpole was the Greville of his time."—Times.

Vol. III. of "THE CAMERO SERIES."

WORDSWORTH'S GRAVE, and other Poems. By WILLIAM WATSON. Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, 2s. 6d.

"Along with an indubitable vigour and felicity of expression, Mr. Watson has a fervour of sentiment and a rightness of thought."—Scottish Leader.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN,
Paternoster-square, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Important Works at all the Libraries.

OLIVER CROMWELL, the Protector

An Appraisal based on Contemporary Evidence.

By REGINALD F. D. PALGRAVE, C.B.,
Author of "The Chairman's Handbook," &c.
Small demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

OUR RECENT ACTORS; being Recollections, Critical, and in many cases Personal, of late Distinguished Performers of both Sexes. With some incidental Notices of Living Actors. By Dr. WESTLAND MARSTON. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Dr. Marston's memoirs of 'Recent Actors' may be recommended as excellent reading. Scholarly, but thoroughly interesting, impartial and wholly genial."—World.

THE LANCASHIRE LIFE of BISHOP

FRASER. By JOHN W. DIGGLE, M.A., Vicar of Mossley Hill, Liverpool, Hon. Canon of Liverpool, Author of "Godliness and Manliness," "True Religion," &c.; also Editor of Bishop Fraser's Sermons. Fourth Edition. 1 vol., demy 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"This fascinating biography."—Standard.

THE COLONIAL YEAR BOOK. By

A. J. R. TRENDELL, C.M.G., of the Inner Temple. With Introduction by Professor SEELEY. Crown 8vo, 750 pages, cloth, 6s.

"It is a valuable work of reference that deals fully with our trans-oceanic realm, more than eight millions in extent, and describes the commercial aspect, the growth of trade, and the history of each colony."—Daily Telegraph.

JOURNAL of H.M.S. ENTERPRISE

on the EXPEDITION in SEARCH of SIR JOHN FRANKLIN'S SHIPS by BEHRING STRAIT, 1850-53. By Captain RICHARD COLLINSON, C.B., R.N., Commander of the Expedition. With a Memoir of his other Services. Edited by his Brother, Major-General T. B. COLLINSON, R.E. Demy 8vo, with 6 Maps, Portrait, &c., cloth, 14s.

New Novels at all Libraries.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Princess of Thule," "In Far Lochaber," "A Daughter of Beth," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"A remarkably easy book to read. The author's touch has been light all through this long story; but seldom more bright, amusing, pathetic, humorous, and tender."—Saturday Review.

KIT and KITTY: a Story of West

Middlesex. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "Clara Vaughan," "Springhaven," "Cripples the Carrier," &c. Third Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"Kit and Kitty" is a manly book, with a sort of fine, open delicacy of sentiment, thoroughly wholesome and pleasing."—Athenaeum.

DUCHESS FRANCES: A Novel. By

SARAH TYTLER, Author of "Citoyenne Jacqueline," "Saint Mungo's City," "Lady Bell," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s.

IN SATAN'S BONDS: a STORY of LOVE and CRIME. By FREDERICK EASTWOOD, Author of "The Chronicle of Sir Harry Earleleigh, Bart.," "Calumny," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 3s.

Just ready, crown 8vo, boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

ADELA CATHCART. By George McDONALD. Being the latest addition to the New and Cheaper Issue of "LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS."

NEW EDITION NOW READY, Price 3s. 6d.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE

INCLUDING
Travels, Adventures and Discoveries in Central Africa
AND
Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone.

By H. M. STANLEY,

Author of "Through the Dark Continent," &c.
With Map and Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE,
AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED),
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1890.

No. 928, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Correspondence of Princess Lieven and Earl Grey. Edited and translated by Guy le Strange. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

THIS correspondence has a certain interest, but that is rather personal than political. Such revelation as there is of secrets of state is concerned with matters which have passed into the historical period. The personality of two very attached, able, and astute correspondents is ever before the reader, and has an attraction far beyond that of the general matter of these volumes. The Russian Princess displays remarkable facility in writing political gossip, and the replies are worthy of one who was a great statesman and prime minister. There is no possibility of forgetting the sex of the writers. The princess makes constant reference to her womanly affection for Lord Grey, who himself, in the most anxious hours of statecraft, never appears to have overlooked the claims of his correspondent. Both were keen politicians; each highly valued the information to be gained from the other. The princess evidently made discreet use of Lord Grey's news at St. Petersburg, and he found her news a very useful assistance to one who had not much liking for association with the gossips of London society. The lady was forty and the gentleman sixty when the correspondence opens, and it is unnecessary to say that throughout the volumes there is not a word of any compromising character. The letters were certainly not designed for publication; but in November, 1846, the princess so far contemplated the possibility that she fixed "the round figure of the year 1880" as a date at which the light of such publicity might be allowed to shine upon them.

Let us proceed to give some indication of the writers from their own words. A sort of character portrait may be made up with a few carefully selected extracts. They were both anxious for political secrecy, or rather for judicious use of their information as a means of extending their influence. The princess writes:—

"I beg you to understand that in writing to you as freely as I do, I believe myself to be speaking in all confidence, for very different letters do I write to the gossips."

Soon after there occurs one of their not infrequent approaches to a quarrel. About the time when the foundation of Greek independence was in question, the lady issued a threat:

"My dear lord, I for my part shall consider as personal anything you may say having a tendency to embarrass the fulfilment of the treaty, which I regard as the sheet-anchor of Greek independence."

To which Lord Grey replies:

"I must submit to the penalty if I should be so unfortunate as to incur it; but in my turn I must add, not a threat, but the expression of a resolution equally sincere and equally firm that if our friendship is broken off on this ground it can never be renewed."

Another advance to a quarrel occurred years after, when Lord Grey, in the time of Polish troubles, invited Prince Czartoryski to dine. At this time Lord Grey was Prime Minister, and the Polish prince met some members of his cabinet. This moved the wrath of the wife of the Russian Ambassador, who expressed her grief and anger:

"My dear lord, this man whom you, the Prime Minister of England, have just received with every token of friendship and consideration which you could show to a foreigner of the highest distinction, is a state criminal—convicted of high treason against his sovereign—a sovereign who is the friend and the ally of England."

Prince Lieven asked as to this dinner explanations from Lord Palmerston, then Foreign Secretary. To the princess Lord Grey replied that he "must protest against, and never will submit to, such an interference."

At one time they had difficulties of another sort. Lord Grey writes:

"I was rather surprised at being told the other day that Lord Melbourne had said at Brooks's that I had written to you to say that he would be the First Lord. . . . I begin to think one ought to repeat nothing—literally nothing; and I am become wonderfully discreet in this respect."

The princess sometimes gave warning of the need for caution. In one place she says:

"What I am telling you is all from the official reports which my husband has received from Lisbon."

The husband sometimes wished to see the earl's letters, and at other times parts were read to him; but the princess was an ingenious correspondent, and arranged with Lord Grey that when she placed a passage in brackets that was not to be answered and no reference was to be made to it. Yet even in such well-directed letters she did not always feel a perfect confidence. In one she says:

"A sheet of paper always appears to me such an insecure confidant that I dare hardly begin. If you were here with me it would be different. My letters, I trust and believe, are like our talks, tête-à-tête, for you alone, and go no further."

They were zealous and punctual correspondents. Said the princess:

"Write to me every week, and write long letters, and about everything. Believe that I shall think of you very often, and that means always."

This was received with the remark:

"A poor substitute for my daily visit, but it made me very happy as a proof of your kindness and remembrance. How I have missed you, and how I shall count the months and weeks till you return!"

The following is a specimen of a most valued letter from the princess:

"The Duke of Wellington has told me that all would go off well; that he was sure of his position; that he could carry out all his intentions; that Reform could no more be carried through without him than the Catholic question; that he would have nothing to do with it, and consequently that nothing would be done. In a word, he feels perfectly sure of his position. Come and see me at one o'clock if you can. Tear up this note, but let me know that you have received it."

Lord Grey, as an active politician, naturally delighted in that sort of correspondence; but it is obvious that the present interest of such letters—and this is a fair sample—is not very great. Yet we must observe that, as to remarks of this sort, the able editor of these volumes has placed us in some difficulty. We are told that the third and concluding volume is ready, and will be published should the reception accorded to the present volumes warrant its appearance. To some extent, this announcement forces our hand. We cannot take part, or share, in any responsibility for the suppression of the third volume. We feel that the spirit of the vivacious Russian princess would be outraged were it so withheld. We must, therefore, be circumspect in our criticism. She was mistress of the arts of clever women, and humoured Lord Grey, who did not like the Duke of Wellington, as only a woman could:

"I am delighted to hear of O'Connell's arrest. You know how I adore vigorous measures. I am quite proud of the honour that will accrue to you from this. . . . Your greatest defect is that you do not allow yourself to be sufficiently guided by your own incontestable superiority of judgment."

It is of some present interest to know that in 1826 Lord Grey wrote of driving the Turks out of Europe as a "laudable endeavour"; that the king said of Navarino "that the actor had deserved a riband, but that the act deserved a halter"; that Lord Grey was almost inclined to go the length of the opinion expressed by Cicero that the most disadvantageous peace is to be preferred to the most successful and glorious war; that the princess in 1832 wondered when "you will have the clôture in your parliament"; that she thought Buckingham Palace "contrived to exhibit the perfection of bad taste in every possible way."

We have given, as seems right, most space to the personal features in this long correspondence, and it is undoubtedly a great factor in politics. To his dear friend, the ambassador, Lord Grey admits—and many who know the mainsprings of political action will sympathise with the remark:

"I am not the enemy of Russia, but if I had a disposition to be so it would be checked and controlled by all the sentiments of regard and attachment which I must ever feel for you."

After that, who can say there is no value in political friendships? That such ties are important and may affect great matters and high purposes is, perhaps, one of the most useful lessons to be learnt from this correspondence.

ARTHUR ARNOLD.

A History of the Later Roman Empire (A.D. 395-800). By J. B. Bury. In 2 vols. (Macmillan.)

THIS is a most creditable piece of work, and fills a gap in the cycle of English books dealing with the history of the Early Middle Ages. It fits on to the scheme of Mr. Hodgkin's Italy and her Invaders, and ceases at the point where Finlay's history of the Byzantine empire begins to grow full and detailed. If some of our contemporaries would only write the annals of the emperors of the second and third centuries, it would now be possible for the reader to go through the whole history of the Roman empire from Augustus to Constantine XIV. without having to content himself with Gibbon's meagre epitome, or to fall back upon chaotic German monographs.

It is, perhaps, a little difficult to judge, by a glance at the title of Mr. Bury's book, the nature of its subject matter. The expression, "Later Empire," has been used with countless meanings, to cover parts greater or smaller of the period that lies between Commodus and the siege of Constantinople in A.D. 1453. In this case the author, to quote his own words, designs by it

"the four centuries during which the transition from the ancient world to the mediæval world may be said to have taken place. Ancient and mediæval are words vaguely used; but, whatever latitude we give them, no one applies the term mediæval to fourth-century history, or the term ancient to that of the eighth. The year A.D. 395 marks the end of the last reign in which the Roman empire was still intact, and is consequently a convenient date for a starting-point. The coronation of Charles the Great marks a new departure in European history, and is, therefore, as Arnold recognised, a suitable end as well as a suitable beginning. After A.D. 800 there are two Roman empires; and the history of Irene's successors naturally occupies a separate book, as the history of the Eastern Roman empire."

Prof. Freeman might, perhaps, deprecate the distinction here drawn between "ancient" and "mediæval" history; but the illogical majority which persists in using the terms will recognise the point of Mr. Bury's definition.

The tale of the conquest by the Teutonic nations of the western half of the Roman empire in the fifth century is told in this work with no great attempt at detail; as the author observes, he does not wish to collide with Mr. Hodgkin. The annals of the Isaurian dynasty, on the other hand, at the end of his book, have received considerable attention in Finlay's great work. Justinian, too, has his historians. But there are two considerable periods of history which have never before been adequately treated in English, and which Mr. Bury opens up to the general reader. The first of these periods is the history of the East-Roman lands from Arcadius to Justin I.; the second the time between the death of Justinian and the rise of Leo the Isaurian. We have often wondered how many men in England could give a concise account of the domestic policy of Anastasius, or stand a short viva-voce examination in Maurice's Persian war. Now, we doubt not, the number will be increased.

The history of the reigns between Arcadius and Justinian is set before us by Mr. Bury in a new light. Instead of insisting on barbarian invasions and theological disputes alone, and thereby producing a picture of dismal colouring, he points out that the period was one of fiscal, military, and social recuperation. While the West-Roman lands were overrun from end to end by the Teuton or the Hun, the East-Roman empire suffered comparatively little. The Balkan peninsula, it is true, endured several harrowing invasions; but Asia Minor, Syria, and Egypt were free for a hundred years from the sight of a foreign foe. Three short wars with the Sassanian monarchs of Persia were waged; but the enemy was so firmly held in check that he never could cross the Tigris or Euphrates. It is true that Asia Minor was more than once the scene of an Isaurian rebellion; but such troubles did no damage that can be compared in destructiveness to the results of a Hunnish or Vandal invasion. The empire, too, was fortunate in its rulers—Marcian, Leo I., and Anastasius were all men of mark, prudent and economical, as well as strong. Even Theodosius II., though personally insignificant, was "much beloved by senate and people," and delegated his power to administrators of merit, such as Anthemius and Cyrus of Panopolis. Financial recovery is shown by the enormous issue of gold solidi which distinguishes the period. They are still so common that a piece of Leo or Anastasius can be bought for within a shilling of its metal value. The military restoration of the empire kept pace with its fiscal rally; and Leo I. saved the East from the danger which had overwhelmed the West—the preponderance of Teutonic condottieri like Stilicho and Ricimer—by cutting down the alien element in the imperial army and replacing it by Isaurian, Cappadocian, and Armenian regiments raised from among his own born subjects.

While speaking of the army we may mention that the military side of history is the sole one in which Mr. Bury's book is not altogether satisfactory. The main outline of each campaign is stated clearly enough; but there is neither a general introductory sketch on the methods of the warfare of the time, nor any detailed accounts of particular engagements—not even of important and interesting fights such as Tagina or Casilinum, of which we have ample descriptions in the chronicles. It would not be possible to gather from Mr. Bury's pages whether the chief force of an East-Roman army in the sixth century lay in its infantry or its cavalry, or to form an idea of its highly complicated organisation into "bands," "turmae," and so forth. This want of attention to military matters somewhat vitiates the argument of Mr. Bury's excellent chapter (in vol. ii.) on the origin of the system of Themes. He speaks as if there might be several "turmae" stationed in a Theme, while those bodies were really the highest units in the army-organisation of Byzantium, and were each the garrison of a whole Theme.

For the five chapters which deal with the literature of the time we have nothing but praise. They are thorough and sound, without ceasing to be bright and interesting. Mr. Bury has dived deep into his authors—he has probed to the bottom the interminable cantos of Nonnus Dionysiacus, whom he rather likes, and formed some original theories on the even less generally known George of Pisidia. He ingeniously disentangles iambic fragments of a lost work of that writer on the Armenian campaigns of Heraclius, from the midst of the Chronicle of Theophanes. It will be of some comfort to writers of iambics to know that George, though otherwise a blameless poet enough, systematically violated the rule about the final cretic, which has vexed so many modern minds. The sections dealing with social life and manners are equally meritorious; that treating of the rise and development of the Iconoclastic movement is particularly worthy of notice.

Finally, we have one wish to express, that when Mr. Bury produces a second edition of his work he will add a few maps. Much has been done of late to reconstruct the geography of the East-Roman empire, particularly in Asia Minor. But the classical atlas is practically useless for one who wishes to follow the campaigns of Maurice or Heraclius, and the historical atlas never gives a map of the East on a scale which is of any use.

C. OMAN.

A Trip through the Eastern Caucasus, with a Chapter on the Languages of the Country. By the Hon. John Abercromby. (Edward Stanford.)

TRAVELLERS in the Caucasus—from the days of Sir John Chardin, who visited the country at the close of the seventeenth century—have been comparatively rare. Chardin has left us a book full of picturesque narrative. His account of Tiflis is delightful; and readers are not likely to forget the quaint engravings to be found in his fine folio, especially his picture of the grand banquet at that city. Those who travelled in the Caucasus in the nineteenth century have been induced by various motives. Klaproth made a philological tour; Dr. Freshfield and his companions visited it for mountain-climbing; and Mr. Bryce's trip was probably to study the country politically. Mr. Abercromby seems to have been induced to go partly by love of adventure, and partly by philological curiosity. His volume possesses the special interest of dealing with parts of the Caucasus which are seldom seen by travellers. Perhaps Dr. Gustav Radde, the curator of the museum at Tiflis, who has explored many regions of the country, has dealt with them. In the numerous articles which he has contributed to that very interesting periodical, the Transactions of the Caucasian section of the Russian Imperial Geographical Society. But, to the best of our knowledge, no English traveller has told us about them.

Unfortunately, there is rather a sameness about Mr. Abercromby's pages, and we carry away a somewhat confused impression. Our author does not meet with any exciting adventures. He is armed with a good passport, and everything goes smoothly. Moreover, he is throughout obliged to rely upon interpreters, not merely for the various Lezghian dialects—only an Uslar would be equal to those—but he does not seem to have possessed a mastery of Russian. We find the want of this knowledge frequently confessed in his pages. If we get a little tired of the "incubus," as he styles the commis voyageur from Riga, whom he picked up as a guide, we shall find much that is amusing in the folklore the author has collected, which, we imagine, will be welcome to many. At Akhti, for example (p. 49), he finds sticks with rags attached to tombstones in a cemetery.

"Though I knew the reason why this was done, I wished to find out what explanation Mejid would give, and so put the question to him. He replied they were the tombs of men celebrated for their devoutness and goodness. It was believed to bring one good luck to tie a rag to a stick and attach it to a tomb. Sick people also left rags there, hoping by that means to transfer their sickness or disease to the tomb itself."

Among the Pahavs, a tribe reckoned by ethnologists to belong to the Georgian family, Queen Tamara is held to be a divinity. Travellers in the Caucasus will remember how it is the fashion to attribute all ancient buildings and monuments to this sovereign, who flourished in the twelfth century. Some of the best pages in our author's book on the subject of folklore and local customs are taken from a volume of the series of Transactions already alluded to. This publication is full of valuable articles, but they are unfortunately little known to our Western folklorists.

An interesting part of Mr. Abercromby's book is the account of his visit to Kubachi. This village at one time enjoyed a great reputation for the skill of its workers in brass. The local tradition is that they are descendants of some Franks who originally, as the name would seem to imply, came from Europe. Mr. Abercromby considers them to have been Syrians. The earliest information about the inhabitants of Kubachi appears to have been given by a certain Herber, a colonel of artillery, who served in Peter the Great's Persian campaign. In his work on the people of Daghestan he asserted that the ancestors of these villagers were Franks who established themselves in the mountains of Daghestan in the seventh century. The story took various shapes, some declaring that the inhabitants were from Genoa, others that they came from Bohemia or Moravia. This last report so stimulated the curiosity of the Moravian brothers or Herrnhuters, settled at the Sarepta Colony on the Volga, that in 1781 they sent to Kubachi two deputies to establish relations with their Caucasian countrymen and co-religionists. In 1782 the emissaries returned to Sarepta with the information that the people of Kubachi professed Islam, and had nothing in common with the Moravian brothers. Uslar did not make any profound study of this language; but, from what he knew of it, declared it to be one of the Akushino-Khaidak dialects, totally unconnected with any European idiom. Weidenbaum thinks that the notion may have arisen from some Roman Catholic converts settled there, the word "Frank" being frequently used to express the followers of the Latin as opposed to the Greek faith. Perhaps some of our readers will remember the photograph of this most picturesque looking little town which is given on p. 194 of Erckert's work. The houses are seen rising tier upon tier in a series of terraces. This kind of building is characteristic of many towns in the Caucasus, and may be seen in parts of Tiflis. Our author gives us descriptions of some of the workmanship of the people of Kubachi; but besides productions in the Oriental style, he found "two large brass chargers of undoubtedly German manufacture," on one of which he discovered a German inscription. He considers that the decline in Kubachian art is to be attributed to the falling-off of the old demand for costly weapons. Peace reigns in the land. There is no need now for damascened steel helmets, for coats of mail, for elaborately worked swords, guns, and silver pistols! This state of affairs, however depressing for art, is certainly good politically. It is gratifying too, to find that the Caucasus is getting repopled after the great drain upon its population caused by the immigration of the Moslem inhabitants into Turkey.

From one of his guides, Akim, Mr. Abercromby must have had a fine opportunity for collecting folklore; but, unfortunately, he was unable to make full use of his advantages:

"Akim beguiled the time, as was his wont, by telling stories, but which were never fully enough translated for me to take down, even if I had had time to stop for the purpose. The most interesting fact connected with these folk-stories was his thorough belief in every incident, however miraculous. For instance, he has not the slightest doubt, though he has never seen it himself, that some trees bleed when they are cut."

One of his tales was that a hunter went out hunting, and for three days saw no game; but on the fourth he saw a stag, at which he fired, but only succeeded in wounding. He followed it up and killed it, when it transformed itself into a beautiful girl, whom he ultimately married. Akim also knew how to read the future in the shoulder-blade of a sheep; for on one occasion he read in one some misfortune which was to happen to them, but which luckily never took place. We wish Mr. Abercromby had given us much more of this folklore collected by himself on the spot, and not merely translated from books.

He is not a bad hand at description, as we see by his account of Derhend on p. 208. For his ethnography he has trusted to the excellent work of Erckert, already mentioned (Der Kaukasus und seine Völker, Leipzig, 1887). This may be said for most purposes to be the best work in the field. Weidenbaum's very useful Guide—which is said to be officially inspired—is in Russian (Putevoditel po Kavkazu, Tiflis, 1888), and unfortunately a closed book to many. Prof. Kovalevski has also published some valuable papers on communal land systems in the Caucasus.

Mr. Abercromby has added a final chapter on the structure of some of the Caucasian languages, all of the Lesghian family, according to Erckert's classification, who, we believe, follows in the main Baron Uslar. This savant divides with Schiefner the honours in the study of these perplexing tongues. Uslar (1816—1875) began his labours in 1861, and continued them till his death. He investigated the following languages: Abkhasian, Chechen, Avar, Lak, Khürkilin, Kürin, and Tabasaran. He is thus pre-eminently the great authority for what may be called the Lesghian family. Unfortunately, his books are difficult to obtain. Some of them were published in lithograph at Tiflis. The labours of Schiefner are included in the Mémoires of the St. Petersburg Academy. Of some of the papers of the latter Mr. Abercromby has made use, giving a summary of those which deal with Ud, Kürin, Hürkan, Kasikumik, Avar, Chechen, and Tush. The last language is considered by some to be an outlying member of the Georgian family; but it must be confessed that it exhibits great variations. It seems mixed with the tongue of the Chechens. But the Georgian group is itself very loosely defined, for Suanetian and Mingrelian differ greatly from Karthweli or Georgian properly so called. For Mingrelian we have as yet only the valuable "Mingrelian Studies" (Mingrelskie Etiudi) of Prof. Tsagarelli, of St. Petersburg (St. Petersburg, 1880)—a work referred to by Mr. Abercromby—and the few notes given by Brosset in his Chronique Géorgienne; and in Suanetian there is nothing but a Primer published at Tiflis in 1864, and the Vocabulary collected by Consul Peacock in 1877. The "prefixing, infixing, and suffixing," as Mr. Abercromby has it, of characteristic letters in nouns, verbs, &c., reminds one very much of the strange building up of the Georgian verb as it has been explained by Prof. Tsagarelli: thus, m-i quar-s-ar, "I love thee"; literally "thou to me dear art." This power of incorporation seems paralleled by such expressions as nuni v-itaira dila urci, "I sold my horse"; literally, "by me it-sold-I my horse" (p. 307). In this respect, and in their want of grammatical gender, these languages resemble Georgian. Mr. Abercromby has done a service in collecting the most important observations in the valuable papers of Schiefner, but naturally struggles with the difficulty of the task of giving a grammatical sketch of these rugged and peculiar languages. He can hardly be said to have made their principles clear. Why did he not give us some vocabularies collected on the spot, as Consul Peacock has done? Unfortunately the Caucasian languages—with the exception of Karthweli or Georgian in the restricted sense, with its rich literature—require to be investigated a great deal more before we can generalise about them. They await the coming philologist.

In his concluding remarks Mr. Abercromby propounds the view that these languages have much in common with the Old Medie; but the arguments by which he supports this view are not convincing. There are two good maps appended to the book: the ethnological one is useful, but it cannot be compared with that of Erckert. The woodcuts strike us as rather clumsily executed.

W. R. MORFILL.

Autumn Songs. By Violet Fane. (Chapman & Hall.)

THIS book of Violet Fane's is very obviously the work of a woman: it is feminine alike in its merits and in its defects. For the most part it is written in a style of fluent, heedless impetuosity, dropping into fineness as if by accident, but often becoming fine; with a real personal feeling, struggling through, rather than informing, the verse itself—the very dashes, fluttering hither and thither in rich profusion over the pages, being the typographical sign of a certain looseness of construction. With this writer, the passage seems unconscious from a grotesque commonplace about

"an inky wave
Of inspiration on the virgin page" to a genuine felicity in the selection and use of just the word really wanted rather than its conventional synonym—as in the occurrence of the word “burdocks,” with real heightening of effect, in place of the usual “weeds” or “flowers,” when some pathetic allusion is made to the dead bones lying underneath them.

Violet Fane is not an artist, but she is interesting. The charm I find in the book is in its personal quality—the attraction of a woman really speaking to one. And the attitude of mind is in itself attractive. It has a quality of tossed and uncertain energy, impatiently unresigned, with petulant and charming quarrels against life, changing colour and occasion as the mood changes. It has at the same time a frank vision of things as they are, and an audacious determination to believe them what they should be—a woman's masterful way of dealing with realities. There is shrewdness too, cleverness, a dash of humour, a quaint and sprightly fancy. And, above all, there is warmth—warm feeling which is really genuine and often effective, though not always expressed in the convincing way. Here is a sonnet—ornamented with that wild feminine punctuation—which speaks straight, and says vividly what it means to say :

“THE SLAVE TURNED TYRANT.

“Should you despise her for that,—born to sway
She serves instead ;—at your beloved feet
Meek and obedient, that she takes her seat,
And,—as you frown or smile,—is grave or gay ;—
A word,—a look,—can darken all her day
Or make night glorious,—but, as thus you mete,
Conscious of might,—alternate bitter and
sweet,
Careless of what you do, or what you say,—
Think, Master mine ! not thus, in by-gone days Dared your hand smite her, or your accents check
The love you craved for ! . . . Hers has been the fault
Who raised her slave to sit above the salt,
And so, she may not chide, but only prays
For mercy,—with your heel upon her neck.”

There are other pieces, more elaborate than this, in which the passion becomes dramatic. “She will not wake !” and “False or True ?” are both striking: the latter is unfortunate in seeming a sort of echo of certain of Browning's Dramatis Personae, the former challenges comparison, not to its advantage, with work so perfect in its kind as some of Mr. Coventry Patmore's graver and more intense poetry. In a lower key, but perhaps one of the most really, though quietly, successful pieces in the book, is the poem to “Clara (Aged Seventeen)” —a piece with a certain grave mellowness, a sober charm, about it. Personal feeling has here achieved form, appropriate form; and the mother, writing about her daughter, conveys to us exactly her own sensation before the somewhat mournful mystery of growth :

“Yet, sometimes,—as I watch her standing thus,
I ask myself, half-sadly: Where is she,—
That other Clara,—who was once with us,— Whose head could scarcely reach above my knee ? . . .
“I seek her in the shady orchard walk,—
I miss her pattering footsteps on the floor,—
Yet hear the echo of her baby-talk
And read her height upon the nursery door.
“No curly head comes to the window-sill
As once,—responsive to my loving call,— Tho' there the painted bars are fasten'd still
That saved the pretty nestling from a fall ;—

“But, thro' them, somehow,—little Clara fled,—
And, every day, I mark, with new surprise,
The stately maiden, sent me in her stead
With pensive mien and earnest waiting eyes,—

“A woman grown, and nursing in her breast
Haply,—a thousand fond imaginings.—
Her wings all ready plumed to leave the nest,
Her fancy eager to outstrip her wings.”

Violet Fane has also, as we have said, a humorous shrewdness; and we see it in “An Egotist's Creed,” in the “Fable.” The faint charm of sentiment and fancy which clings, a vague perfume, about her work, is seen in “A Homeless Love,” and, especially, “The Mer-Baby.” This little poem is as quaint and pretty as the picture by Miss Dorothy Tennant for which it was written.

ARTHUR SYMONS.

TWO BOOKS UPON MODERN ECONOMICS.

The English Poor: a Sketch of their Social and Economic History. By T. Mackay. (John Murray.)

The Land and the Community. By the Rev. S. W. Thackeray. (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.)

BOTH Mr Mackay and Mr. Thackeray have had the same starting-point in their inquiries—the fact that the great majority of the people are unpropertied, living as wage-earners from hand to mouth. They have both investigated the historical causes which have produced such a state of society, and to a large extent the evidence upon which they rely is similar. Following with especial interest the history of property in land, they both trace “the gradual divorce of the English peasant from the soil,” and the growth of the great class of landless labourers. They are nearly in agreement as to the analysis of the evil. The possession of property, says Mr. Mackay, means that the possessor has the right or opportunity of labour or employing labour; while men who are mere wage earners have not this right or opportunity, but live in a condition of precarious dependence. The right to land, says Mr. Thackeray, means the permission to labour; the denial of the right results in inability to obtain a sufficiency of remunerative employment, and involves ultimately the denial of the right to life. How the mass of the people may become independent by securing opportunities of labour is the problem which each has set himself to assist in solving. Yet, though they have thus looked at the same facts and have been similarly impressed with the extent and character of the existing evil, these two writers might have been born and bred in different planets, so completely are they separate, the one from the other, not only in their solution of the problem, but in their habit of mind and their views of fundamental facts of human nature. Restore the land to the community, says Mr. Thackeray, and you will remove the causes and conditions which now tend to create the enormous gulf of inequality which separates the rich from the poor. That inequality, says Mr. Mackay, has come about because the socialistic legislation of centuries has prevented nature from taking her own beneficent course of weeding out the unfit; we must retrace our steps and learn to rely upon individual effort, self-reliance, and thrift.

Of Mr. Thackeray's Land and the Community it is enough to say that the author is a follower of Mr. Henry George (who writes a commendatory preface); and that after giving a superficial and not always correct account of the history of land-holding in England, and laying down certain broad statements of natural rights, which are supported by quotations from Mr. Herbert Spencer, Magna Charta, the Holy Scriptures, and other sources, he proceeds to advocate the appropriation of ground-rents by taxation and the application of the proceeds for the benefit of the whole community. As for compensation, Mr. Thackeray would give none in a direct form, but he finds that the compensations which would accrue indirectly to landlords would be sufficiently ample.

Mr. Mackay's work deserves to be spoken of with more respect; for it has the merit of dealing with realities. It is an emphatic plea for individualism, written for the most part with a moderation which in individualists is very rare. No one who has in mind the working of the poor law in the beginning of this century, and the incalculable evil which then was wrought on English character, and who observes the steady growth in our own day of a socialistic optimism, will regret that we have still left among us economists of the strictest sect, preaching to the people and their legislators the wholesome doctrine that moral and material progress must come mainly through individual effort. We should be glad, indeed, if every member of parliament and county councillor were to pass through a phase (not too prolonged) of Herbert-Spencerism. In so far as they remind us of the disturbing and often disastrous effect of state intervention, such books as that of Mr. Mackay serve a very useful purpose. But to say that it helps us much in the solution of social and industrial problems is a different thing. There runs through it the assumption that state intervention, whatever may be the counterbalancing good in particular cases, necessarily results in a diminished sense of individual responsibility and a relaxing of individual effort. Is not this a begging of the question? May the result not be that the effort of individuals takes a new direction, in which it is more effective? We leave to the state the repression of crime, and the individual does not suffer a deterioration of character because he is thus protected against robbery and assault. Why should the effect of the Factory Acts and other similar legislation be different? Is not each case to be tried on its own merits? As to Mr. Mackay's main doctrine, if he were a less serious writer, we should take it as a bit of grim humour. Social philosophy is surely a poor study if it can teach us only that the hope of the poor lies in the acquisition of property by the practice of thrift. Dealing with a book of half-truths, we feel inclined to oppose another half-truth; and say that the practice of thrift acts as a check on the progress of the class of wage-earners, that their aim should be to raise their standard of living, and that a means of doing so is to live intelligently up to their income.

It would be an injustice to Mr. Mackay if no notice were taken of some fine extensions of individualism which he proposes. In the obscurity of a foot-note he suggests that the state, by lending its machinery for the recovery of debts, helps to keep the incompetent employer from extinction, and that some curtailment in the state guarantee of business contracts would do much to rid commerce of dishonest traders; but this is hazarded only as a pious opinion. In sober earnest, however, he proposes as a means of reforming our system of land tenure that the state should refuse to enforce any contract whatsoever with regard to land. There is a good deal to be said for this bold idea; but why, on Mr. Mackay's principles, should the state enforce any contracts at all?

G. P. MACDONELL.

Rhigas Phoraios; the Protomartyr of Greek Independence. By Mrs. Edmonds. (Longmans.)

THIS is a biographical sketch of a man whose name is held in veneration by all Greeks, but who is hardly more than a name to modern Englishmen. This, however, was not the case during at least the second quarter of the present century, when his stirring song, Δεῦρε, παῖδες τῶν Ἑλλήνων, was familiar to our countrymen through Byron's spirited version, "Sons of the Greeks, arise."

The history of Constantine Rhigas is, in brief, the following. He was born at Veles-tino, in Thessaly, the ancient Phærae, which lies to the north-west of the Gulf of Volo—probably about the year 1754, though the date of his birth cannot be accurately ascertained. His father was a man of some wealth and position; and he gave his son a good education at the seminary at Kissos, on the eastern slopes of Mount Pelion, in the district of Magnesia, where the Greek communities enjoyed a condition of prosperity which was hardly known elsewhere. It was here that he imbibed the love of learning and the patriotism which distinguished him in later years; and he never failed to acknowledge the debt of gratitude which he owed to his instructors—excellent specimens of those schoolmasters who, both at that time and in the Greek-speaking provinces of Turkey at the present day, have done more than any other class of men to elevate the people, and keep alive in them the sentiment of nationality.

After he was grown up, he left Thessaly, because of the persecutions to which he himself and his father were exposed at the hands of the Turks in that neighbourhood; for the Koniarates—as the Thessalian Turks are called, since they are the descendants of a colony which was transferred thither from Konieh in Asia Minor—are notoriously among the most fanatical of the Mussulmans in Europe. He had already conceived the project of liberating his countrymen from their oppressors, and now he set forth with the object of devoting his life to the furtherance of it. After visiting Mount Athos, in order to obtain the sanction of religion for his work, he proceeded to Bucharest, where he soon became noted for his great literary acquirements; for he was not only perfect master of the French language, which he spoke with the same facility as he did his own, but was also well versed in the classical writers of Greece and Rome, and in the best modern authors of Germany and Italy. In 1790, when Nicolas Mavrogenes, a man of great capacity, was appointed Hospodar of Wallachia, the talents of Rhigas attracted his attention, and he made him his secretary. Under these auspices, and, as it would appear, not without the cognisance of his chief, Rhigas founded the Hetairia—a secret society for promoting the freedom of Greece; and subsequently to the occupation of Bucharest by the Russians and the fall of Mavrogenes, he betook himself to Vienna, which was then full of wealthy Greek merchants and of young students of that race. Among these he soon aroused a strong feeling of patriotism, and now the work of the Hetairia was vigorously prosecuted—but in secret, because the Austrian government was in alliance with Turkey, and strongly opposed to any aspirations for freedom. The stirring songs and addresses of Rhigas were printed at night with every care to prevent discovery, and were afterwards circulated, with fictitious titles, by special emissaries throughout Greece, where they excited the strongest enthusiasm.

But, as Rhigas was well aware that it was impossible for the Greeks to win their freedom for themselves, he turned his thoughts towards France as the champion of liberty at that time, and made a direct appeal to Buonaparte to assist them. On receiving from that general an invitation to meet him at Venice, he started in 1797 for Trieste, after sending on before him the boxes which contained his papers, and among them his communications with the Hetairia. This incident brought his career to a sudden close. By ill-luck his papers fell into the hands of the Prefect of Trieste; and, after they had been examined, Rhigas on his arrival was arrested as a conspirator. On this he appealed to the generosity of the Emperor Francis, but to no purpose, for orders were returned from Vienna that he should be delivered up to the Turkish authorities. He was, therefore, conducted to Belgrade, and the Pasha of that place condemned him to be thrown, manacled, into the Danube; but, owing to the powerful resistance which he made to those who would have dragged him to execution, the mode of punishment was changed, and he was shot in prison. Immediately before his death he uttered these memorable words: "I shall now die as a soldier. I have sown seed enough, and the time will come when it will sprout, and my nation will gather its sweet fruit." "The noblest death," it is said, "is to die in vain"; and this was true in Rhigas's case, if by "in vain" is meant with no designs accomplished or purposes realised. But his prophecy was verified, for within a quarter of a century from his death the War of Independence commenced; and nothing contributed so much to this as the desire of freedom which was propagated by his songs, and the principles which he had so eloquently advocated.

The chief authority for Rhigas's life is his biography, by Perriaevos, who was his disciple and companion during the most important period of his career; but additional information with regard to him has been obtained by Prof. N. G. Polites, of Athens, who visited his native place, Veles-tino, in order to collect and compare the numerous traditions which still exist there with regard to him. Mrs. Edmonds, in her simple and faithful narrative, has made use of these sources with judgment and a strict regard to historic truth; and she has done good service in depicting a heroic character, in which singleness of purpose and self-devotion were combined with marked sagacity, moderation, and strength of will.

H. F. TOZER.

NEW NOVELS.

Duncan Moray, Farmer. By Sophie F. F. Veitch. In 2 vols. (Alexander Gardner.)

Master of His Fate By J. MacLaren Cobban. (Blackwood.)

A Game of Bluff. By Henry Murray. (Chatto & Windus.)

Broughton. By A. S. Arnold. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

James Vraile. By Jeffery C. Jeffery. In 2 vols. (W. H. Allen.)

Engaged to be Married. By L. T. Meade. (Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.)

The Lost Ring. By M. Clerke Melville. (Nelson.)

MISS VEITCH has, in Duncan Moray, Farmer, returned to what seems her favourite ideal of a love-affair—the passion of a girl of gentle blood and refined nature for a physically and morally strong man who is beneath her in social status. Duncan Moray to some extent, therefore, recalls Angus Grams; but it is greatly superior as a work of art. Here and there in Miss Veitch's first novel there was exhibited a tendency, if not to rant, at all events to Rhodian rhetoric. In Duncan Moray, there is absolutely nothing of the kind. It is the compactest, the most interesting and, all things considered, the most satisfactory—although The Dean's Daughter still remains the cleverest—of the novels published by this very promising author. It proves, above all things, that Miss Veitch can preserve a secret for nearly three volumes. It is only towards the close of her book that the reader, who is familiar with mysteries even of The House on the Marsh type, begins to entertain the idea that Mr. Elliott, the father of as loveable a heroine as ever figured in a Scotch novel, is one and the same with that unmitigated scoundrel and villain, James Carfrae. Mr. Elliott has quite as much unscrupulousness in his composition of the kind which, perhaps unjustly, is designated Napoleonic, as Jim the Penman or the Master of Ballantrae; and he is perfectly original. It is not easy to forgive him his first murder, when he is in Australia, and known as James Carfrae. It was committed from the lowest of motives. But it is easy to conceive of a desperate man removing such a danger and stumbling-block as, in the end, the father of Duncan Moray became to Mr. Elliott. The arrival of Nemesis—tipsy—in the shape of the brother of the murdered man, Henderson, and the suicide of Elliott himself, are episodes admirably designed and equally well executed. Plot apart, Duncan Moray, Farmer is notable for its carefully finished Scotch portraits. There is, perhaps, too much of Antoninus Pius in the elder Moray, and even too much of Marcus Aurelius in the younger; but both have a substratum of that peculiar Scotch sweetness of disposition which is quite compatible with Calvinism, and need not necessarily be dissociated from high cheek bones. Lady Sinclair, the friend of both Duncan Moray and Isabel Elliott when they are in difficulties, is also a very lifelike sketch of a level-headed, warm-hearted Scotch lady of the old school, who despises Mrs. Grundy, but is, nevertheless, not above enjoying a bit of gossip.

Regarded as a tour de force, Mr. Maclaren Cobban's Master of his Fate is undoubtedly a success; but it is greatly to be hoped that, having achieved it, so very able and promising a writer will seek fresh woods and pastures new. For one thing, the moral vampire, Julius Courtney, who is sufficiently "master of his fate" to commit suicide when it is desirable for the sake of others as well as of himself that he should do so, recalls inevitably, though unreasonably, the everlasting Dr. Jekyll. For another, Julius's dissertations on, and dissections of, himself are wearisome even if they are weird. Nora, however, who is as much of a heroine as Mr. Cobban allows himself in A Master of His Fate, is really a very sweet and thoroughly English girl; and, doubtless, her creator will in the future be able to place her—or a twin sister—in a pleasanter and wholesomer environment.

Originality of plot is the one redeeming feature of A Game of Bluff, which is essentially an unpleasant and almost unreadable story. As a scoundrel, Ralph Purden cannot be said to be altogether a novelty, although many of his characteristics are not so much those of an Englishman as of an American living in one of the Pacific States. He is certainly not the first man who has sought, by means of bigamy, to get rid of a wife of whom he has grown weary. But there is decided originality in the idea of his being ennobled into something approaching to self-sacrifice by an illicit and, in every sense, indefensible passion. It may be admitted, too, that several of the portraits in A Game of Bluff—especially Ralph's irretrievably mean and Bohemian brother-in-law, his austere and sincere relative and patron, the very down-right Arkinstall, and the fascinating and guileless Elsie—are well sketched. But the story, as an artistic whole, is a disappointment, and suggests that Mr. Murray has gone beyond his depth. He must beware of a tendency to fine and affected writing, which is disclosed in such a sentence as "Before an Areopagus of his own sex Ralph would have found as easy and complete an excuse for his mésalliance as any man could need."

Broughton is as well-intentioned, ill-constructed, and inartistic a story as has been published even in these days. Mr. A. S. Arnold, who has already published a well-intentioned, ill-constructed, and inartistic Life of Carlyle, has got hold of some ethical ideas. These, doubtless in obedience to the cardinal doctrines of the "Philosophy of Clothes," he has embodied in various persons, including a bad but reformable squire, his daughter, his young saviour and fiancée, the woman he has ruined, and a certain wandering and more or less murderous Joe. These impersonations of ideas wander about over three volumes; and such of them as are not killed off meet in the final chapter, where we have visions of "that perfect state which is immeasurably beyond all finite comprehension, where the unfathomable mysteries of life will be explained, and all the amazing contradictions of human nature reconciled."

There is a very great amount of ability—and of all kinds needful in fiction—in James Vraile; and if its author be a new writer his name is unfamiliar) he will, in all probability, have a career before him. This is, indeed, a most melancholy story. James Vraile, a man who recalls at once General Gordon and William Dobbin, and is of the stuff of which heroes and martyrs are made, marries a pretty butterfly of a girl, who does not appreciate him, and elopes with a heartless, smooth-tongued civilian. He then devotes himself to his little boy; the child dies; finally Vraile dies himself. This "Story of a Life" is therefore, to all intents and purposes a tragedy, relieved almost solely by the moral greatness of the chief sufferer. But the evolution, both of the plot of the tragedy and of the character of Vraile, is managed with admirable skill. There is nothing unnatural even in the manner in which Vraile heaps coals of fire on the head of the man who has ruined him. Certain of the rather subsidiary characters in James Vraile—more especially the crabbed but devoted Uncle Ben and Edith Dare, the daughter of Vraile's enemy—are quite worthy of a place in the same gallery as that which contains the unfortunate martyr himself. Some of the scenes are laid in India, others are laid in England. It would be difficult to say which seem the truer to life. Mr. Jeffery has also managed to introduce the Salvation Army into his story, without either sneering at or gushing effusively over that remarkable body. He has a gift of genuinely satiric characterisation; but he must beware lest it run away with him. "Mrs. Bompas," we are told, "had retired from a wharf in the Mediterranean on the death of her consort, the successful coal merchant, choosing St. Dogwell's as a retreat, because she was distantly connected with the whole county, and because her education had been neglected at a school in Chatterleigh, the nearest town of importance and her birthplace—reasons which entitled her to county family distinction, and gave her a right to feel thoroughly at home."

There is something more than "smartness" in this; but there is a danger lest that something should degenerate into "smartness."

Engaged to be Married is a remarkably good specimen of the kind of story that is written expressly for the girls of the book muslin—or, perhaps, one should nowadays say ponce silk—type. There is in it Emmy, who is sweet and strong; there is Dorothea, who is pretty and weak; there is the ogre Sir Percival; there is, in fact, the usual crowd of folks whose chief business, at least in stories, is to criticise engagements and marriages. And, of course, all ends as it should end. Emmy's captain proves faithful to her, in spite of the subterfuges that Sir Percival resorts to, with a view to compelling him to marry money in the person of Rosamund Hotspur; and Dorothea marries her artist, and is more or less happy afterwards. Engaged to be Married is, of course, gracefully written.

A Lost Ring belongs to the class of ecclesiastico-historical romances, but is greatly superior to average works of that class. It deals with the times of Andrew Melville—that Melville who, in the opinion of many, was to Knox what the Jacobin was to the Girondin, and who, we are told in this chronicle, "at nineteen, having exhausted the intellectual provision of his own university (St. Andrews), sought the famous schools of Paris, and became there as distinguished among scholars as he had been at home." It would be unfair to reveal the secret of the plot, inasmuch as that secret is in effect the whole of it. It is enough to say that the leading villains are remarkably well drawn, and that the narrative of the adventures of Carco, otherwise "Mr. Cammill," recalls Kidnapped in some of its passages. Will Green, the remarkable compound of scoundrelism and scholarship who appears in the very first chapter, is new even in Scotch fiction. The author of The Lost Ring seems to be somewhat handicapped by his purpose, yet he—if it be he—has done so very well in it that a great deal better may be expected from him in the future.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

SOME HISTORICAL BOOKS.

Calendars of the Proceedings of the Committee for Compounding, &c. 1643-60. General Proceedings. Edited by M. A. Everett Green. (Printed for Her Majesty's Stationery Office.) Like all Mrs. Everett Green's works, the present volume is the result of great industry and of admirable power of condensation. It is none the less valuable because its detailed information is so various that no general description will fit it. Each inquirer will find help in it according to his tastes. It is better to give a specimen than to attempt to gain a general prospect. Two entries, one at p. 60 and the other at p. 85, give lists of sequestered estates, the one in Wirral Hundred, in Cheshire, and the other in Gloucestershire. In both of these we have an estimate of the value of the estates after and before the Civil War. From both we derive a precisely similar result, namely, that the letting value of land had diminished almost precisely 50 per cent. Figures, however, are deceptive, and Mrs. Green's Calendar does not solve the question whether the diminution was general, or special to sequestered estates, where there might be an objection to pay the full rent to the sequestrators, lest a turn of fortune should bring back the old proprietor to claim the whole rental as due to himself. Fortunately, a letter of Sir Roger Burgoyne among the Verney MSS. solves the question. From this it appears that London house rent had in 1644 declined in exactly the same proportion, and we may, therefore, trace the fall of rentals to general causes.

In the Memoir of George Byng, Lord Torrington, which Prof. Laughton has just edited with loving care for the Camden Society, had been the work of one skilled in composition or possessed of the gift of telling a story with some approach to effect, its interest for the general reader would have been heightened. Its authorship is invested with some mystery; for it is evidently the composition of a certain navy expert connected with official life, indeed engaged in the actual working of the Admiralty, but the writer's name has hitherto escaped inquiry. The most telling passages in the narrative are those setting out the intrigues by which the English navy came over to the cause of Dutch William, and describing the capture of Gibraltar. The memoir ends abruptly, before Byng had been raised to the peerage. Though no mention of the fact occurs on the title-page, the volume is supplemented by some extracts from a journal by the Rev. Thomas Pocock, a relation of Byng by marriage, and a navy chaplain at this date. Prof. Laughton says that he counted twenty different spellings of Sir Clowdley Shovell's Christian name. Did not one antiquary find 140 variances in the spelling of the name of Birmingham, and another enumerate even more differences in the name of Mainwaring?

Old English Catholic Missions. By John Orlebar Payne. (Burns & Oates.) The eighteenth century is a dark period in the history of the Roman Catholic body in England. From the date of Henry VIII.'s quarrel with the Pope until the accession of George I., the extreme danger in which every priest stood of a cruel death, and the dread which must have hung over every layman, renders the time memorable to every student of religious history. With the advent of the eighteenth century milder days followed. The two risings in favour of the exiled royal family pressed hardly on men who were in no way connected with the insurrections; but Englishmen had improved since the days of Charles II. Titus Oates and his crew had no representatives in the '15 or the '45. The men who suffered for treason under the first and second Georges were, whatever we think of the politics of those days, all of them in some sort legally guilty. Mr. Payne's Old Catholic Missions eschews politics. His scope is limited, but the work is well done. It will form most useful material for anyone who shall undertake to write a history of the English Roman Catholic body under the penal laws. It would appear that in the earlier times there were few places where priests were regularly stationed. London and some other large towns were probably never without priests, and here and there a great landowner, such as Belted Will Howard, contrived to keep a chaplain in his house; but such people were thinly scattered, and even to them it must have been accompanied with no little danger. The common custom was for the priest to pass on in disguise from one country house to another. His arrival was secretly notified to the Catholics round about; and, as soon as his ministerial work was ended, he departed in disguise to some other place where he knew that he would be gladly welcomed, and every precaution taken for his safety. The priest's hiding hole was in those days a needful adjunct to every Catholic mansion. Some few, we believe, exist yet. Many have been destroyed during the present century. For several generations the Roman Catholic church has been rigorous as to keeping records of baptisms, marriages, and burials; but in times such as those of which we have been speaking it was very difficult for accurate registers to be preserved. It is not possible in many cases to ascertain when priests became permanently settled at any given place. Secrecy was so necessary at the time that all evidence has perished. We believe, however, that, when no evidence exists to the contrary, it may be assumed that the date of the earliest register marks the appointment of the first priest who was stationed on the mission to which it relates. Few of these begin earlier than the year 1700. In 1836 a Royal Commission was issued for making inquiries as to the non-parochial registers then in existence. It was the desire of the government that all such registers should be deposited in Somerset House. Many of those belonging to Protestant Nonconformists were given up; but when the Catholic Vicars Apostolic were applied to, they pointed out reasons why it would be inconvenient to part with them. We imagine that at the first it was the intention of the authorities that none should be surrendered. As they were private property the matter was entirely in the hands of the bishops. In or before 1840 a change of view seems to have taken place, for Mr. Payne has found a large collection of these interesting documents at Somerset House. From his description of them they seem to have been kept in an irregular manner; but there can be no doubt that, as records of matters of fact, they are as truthful as those kept by the clergy of the Established Church. The entries with regard to marriage are of special importance. The decrees of the Council of Trent relating to marriage had, as a matter of course, no effect in England; and, therefore, until the passing of the Marriage Act of 1753, nothing was absolutely necessary beyond consent of the parties. It is not easy to tell how Roman Catholic marriages were solemnised before the passing of that memorable statute. Many are certainly entered in the parochial registers; but it does not, therefore, follow that in all cases they were performed by the minister of the parish. It is probable that in some cases where the squire, the parson, and the priest, were on neighbourly terms with each other, an entry would be made in the "church books"; for it must be borne in mind that until 1753 the signature of the celebrant was not required, and is, indeed, very rarely to be found. For genealogical purposes Mr. Payne's volume will be found most useful. It contains numerous entries relating to the great Yorkshire house of Scrope, some of them proving facts for which, we believe, there is no evidence to be had elsewhere. In fact, there are very few great Catholic houses of the North for whose life-histories Old Catholic Missions does not furnish help.

MR. WALTER RYE, whose published works for 1889 were enumerated in a recent number of the ACADEMY, has added yet another to that list. This is a catalogue of the principal MSS. relating to Norfolk in his own library, superbly printed in folio, with numerous plates and woodcuts. Many of his cherished possessions came from the Frere sale, when the genealogical and antiquarian MSS. of Bokenham, Peter le Neve, Anthony Norris, and T. Martin were first made known, and at the same time dispersed. Perhaps we ought not to say "dispersed"; for, with the exception of a few acquired for the British Museum or the Record Office, the most important portion are now at Winchester House, Putney, where their present owner—in marked contrast with their former owners—allows them to be consulted by historical students. Among the Frere MSS we may specially mention the Histories of the Hundreds of East and West Flegg, Happing, and Tunstead, compiled by Anthony Norris about the middle of the last century, which are about tenfold more copious than the corresponding chapters of Blomefield. These Mr. Rye hopes before long to print, with additions from his own collections. Another MS. volume which Mr. Rye must regard with mingled feelings is Le Neve's Calendar of the Feet of Fines for Norfolk, which covers the ground he has himself gone over again with so much labour and expense, and which also includes some notes of fines now lost. But space fails us to record all the treasures here set out, with careful indexes. We doubt whether any in the long roll of English antiquaries has ever before placed his collections at the service of fellow-students with such generosity as Mr. Walter Rye.

TRANSLATIONS FROM THE CLASSICS.

Selections from the Greek Anthology. Edited by Graham B. Tomson. (Walter Scott.) This is a very pretty addition to Mr. Sharp's "Canterbury Poets"; and the editor's introduction relates in some twenty-five short pages nearly all that is known of those multitudinous asteroids called the Greek Anthologia. We agree that if the Anthology be, as Longfellow said, "one of the saddest of books," it is also, as the editor calls it, "one of the most entirely human." But there is a vein of contemporary affectation in the praise given to Zeus (Introd. p. xxi.) that "there is no one to portray for us 'The Real Rufinus'; no dishonourable ghoul to 'howl up' and reprint some old, forgotten love-letters of 'pure Simonides,' proving him thereby not pure, in very sooth, but most unworthy—a weak and garrulous sensualist."

Now, really, one of the best functions of the Anthology is to cure intelligent and imaginative minds of a mawkish interest in the amours of Byron and Shelley, in the mis-published love-letters of Keats, in "the Harriet question," and all the rest of it—yet here, in a preface which will be, and ought to be, read, we have those miserable topics re-suggested in this deprecatory way. κόσμον ἢ σιγὴ φέρει. The bulk of the translations may be referred to four persons—Dr. R. Garnett, Miss Alma Strettell, Mr. Andrew Lang, and Mr. W. M. Hardinge. Mr. J. A. Symonds, Mr. E. Myers, Mr. Goldwin Smith, Prof. Lewis Campbell, are also represented, as well as some of our older writers. Of the first four, Mr. Lang shows the most evenly good craftsmanship throughout. He is nowhere better than in the rendering (Introd., p. xxviii.) of Meleager's lament for Heliodora. Miss Strettell is less evenly good; but at times writes admirably, as on p. 129, where she is rendering a sighing epitaph of Leonidas of Tarentum. Mr. Hardinge relapses often into very ordinary versification; but when he is bright, as in the version of Meleager on p. 155, he is very bright indeed. Yet here, we think, the form of the original poem is unduly interfered with. Dr. Garnett was certainly inspired with point and humour in rendering (p. 117) Leonidas thus:

"Menodotis' portrait here is kept;
Most odd it is
How very like to all the world, except Menodotis."

But for sheer incisiveness we prefer the version of Nicarchus, by H. Wellealey, on p. 192.

"The screech-owl sings; death follows at her cries:

Demophilus strikes up; the screech-owl dies."

It is a pretty little book: sparks without smoke.

The Argonautica of Apollonius Rhodius. Translated into English Prose by Edward P. Coleridge. (Bell.) It would be curious to know how many people in the world have ever read Apollonius through. We should not like to affirm that Mr. Coleridge stands alone, but he must be one of a small band. It is not that Apollonius is not worth reading, but that what he has to tell has been very well told otherwise. Kingsley's "Argonauts" in the Heroes, and Morris's Life and Death of Jason, have told to thousands with applause a story which very few among those thousands will ever trace back, even with Mr. Coleridge's help, to its main origin, the Argonautica of Apollonius. As Mr. Coleridge points out, the latter part of the adventurers' voyage, as described by Apollonius, is neither traceable nor possible. You cannot, you never could, "row through rivers right across Dacia, Moesia, Illyria, and Dalmatia into the Adriatic" from the Danube. But, after all, this is only a legendary poem about an early voyage. The journey is not impossible, though it certainly involved the building of more than one Argo, and a good deal of foot travelling, too. Argo, one and indivisible, is just the extra touch of poetry that gives the legend its charm, while as history it may be discounted. Mr. Coleridge has studied, we should say, good models of prose translation. Witness the transit of Argo through the Symplegades (Book ii., p. 72):

"So she sprang forward twice as far as any other ship would have yielded to rowers, and the oars bent like curved bows as the heroes strained. In that instant the vaulted wave was past them, and she at once was riding over the furious billow like a roller, plunging headlong forward o'er the trough of the sea. But the eddying current stayed the ship in the midst of The Olashers, and they quaked on either side, and thundered, and the ship-timbers throbbed. Then did Athens with her left hand hold the stubborn rock apart, while with her right she thrust them through upon their course; and the ship shot through the air like a winged arrow. Yet the rocks, ceaselessly dashing together, crushed off, in passing, the tip of the carved stern."

This is spirited; yet, in the final sentence, we must remark that it was Argo that was passing, not the rocks.

The Works of Flavius Josephus. Whiston's Translation, revised by the Rev. A. R. Shilleto. Life of Josephus. Antiquities of the Jews. In 3 vols. (Bell.) The old-fashioned and inaccurate translation by Whiston (1737) of "the learned and authentic Jewish historian and celebrated warrior" certainly needs revision if it is at all to hold its ground against the version of Trail and Taylor (1851); but we doubt whether the present revision is such as to ensure success. The editor promises to amend Whiston's baldness, prune and curtail his archaisms (!), correct his misspellings and mistranslations, and keep close to the text where he has been turgid and paraphrastic. Mr. Shilleto has, no doubt, overhauled the old book, and put right many obvious blunders; but he has by no means corrected it wherever correction was desirable, nor are all his changes changes for the better. Whiston knew enough of Roman usage to have doubts about making "Julius Cains" in Josephus xiv. 10, § 8, to be both praetor and consul (a translation of στρατηγὸς ὑπατος); but Mr. Shilleto shows no doubts. In many other matters, where independence would have been desirable, he follows him unquestioningly. On the other hand, no exception need be taken (in xx., 5, § 4) to Whiston's simple old phrase which tells how Cumanus felt "fear lest the multitude should go into a sedition"; but Mr. Shilleto must needs alter this to the slangy equivalent—"fearing that the multitude would go in for another riot." It is no doubt better to have his version than Whiston's, because it is founded on a newer text—though not the newest; but we still want a scholar who shall translate Josephus with full knowledge of technicalities and with decent respect for the English language.

Versions and Imitations in Greek and Latin. By William Wardlaw Waddell. (Glasgow: Maclehose.) This is a little book of a kind that was more common some years ago than at present. Originating, as the Latin preface leads us to suppose, in the competitions and rivalries of studious youth, it has been worked up and expanded in the writer's maturity, and shows the graceful imitative taste which classical studies so often leave as their memorial—too often as their sole memorial. Versions of Ariosto in Homeric Greek; pretty adaptations of such poems as "Begone Dull Care" into the style of the pseudo-Anacreon; Froissart's description of Sir John Assueton's exploit against the French knights, rendered into Herodotean prose (is ερηνηκῆσι a graceful equivalent for "French"?); the siege of Londonderry described in the style of Thucydides (a really considerable performance, both in quantity and quality); and a characteristic passage from The Origin of Species, put with great skill into scientific Greek, form the bulk of Mr. Waddell's

Greek diversions. Those in the Latin language seem to us less interesting. There is grace in the Alcaic rendering of Tennyson's "Love and Death." We observe that Mr. Waddell largely allows hiatus between the third and fourth lines of the Alcaic stanza, which Horace normally avoids; indeed, the third line, the crux of the metre, is roughly treated by him—e.g., in the spirited rendering of "Scots, wha hae" (p. 69), such a line as jars upon the ear. And the mixture of hexametric, elegiac, and nondescript metres in the version of "Lead, kindly Light," seems to us to imitate rather the outward form than the essence and music of the original. The epigram on Aristotle is neat:

"Siccabimus cum corde venas"

ὃς ποτ' ἔριστον ἔθηκε τέλος προτέροισι σοφοῖσιν εὖ ἐτέθη κέλνυ τοῦτον Ἀριστοτέλης.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS are about to publish a volume of essays, entitled The New Spirit, by Mr. Havelock Ellis, editor of the "Contemporary Science" series and the "Mermaid" series of Elizabethan Dramatists. The volume will contain studies of five writers whose influence on the thought of the time has been, and is, considerable: Diderot, Heine, Ibsen, Walt Whitman, and Tolstoi. An introduction and conclusion will deal more generally with the problems of current life and thought.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next week Italian Characters in the Epoch of Unification, by the Countess Martinengo Cesaresco, containing lives of the patriots Ugo Bassi, the Cairolis, Daniel Manin, Constance d'Azeglio, and others. The work will also be issued simultaneously by the Fratelli Trèves, of Milan.

MESSRS. R. BENTLEY & SON will shortly publish a new work of fiction by Hugh Westbury, which is understood to be the pseudonym of a well-known Liverpool journalist. The author's first book, Frederick Hazleden, was a bright story of contemporary English life. Its successor, to be entitled Acte, is a romance of the time of Nero; and Hugh Westbury has followed the early tradition which attributes the conversion of Acte to St. Paul.

THE March volume of the "Canterbury Poets" will contain The Lady of Lyons and other Plays, by Lord Lytton.

MESSRS. GEORG, of Basel, will shortly issue a French translation of the late Sir Francis Adams and Mr. C. D. Cunningham's work The Swiss Confederation, by M. Henry Loumyer, conseiller of the Belgian legation at Bern, and an old friend and colleague of the authors, M. Ruchonnet. The Swiss Minister of Justice and Police has written an introduction.

MESSRS. BICKERS & SONS announce Induction and Deduction: a Historical and Critical Sketch of successive Philosophical Conceptions, by Constance C. W. Naden, edited by Dr. R. Lewins.

A NEW and complete edition of William Leighton's Poems, with illustrations, is announced as to be published immediately by Mr. Elliot Stook.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. have in the press a story entitled Mine Own Familiar Friend, by Miss A. L. Harris.

THE next addition to "Warne's London Library" will be an original story by Miss E. J. Clayden, entitled By the World Forgot.

THE American branch of the publishing business of Cassell & Co., Limited, has been acquired by a syndicate of Americans, trading, from and after January 1, under the designation of "The Cassell Publishing Company." The new company will be carried on under the management of Mr. Oscar M. Dunham, who has been associated for many years with the business; and it will continue to act as the agents throughout the United States and Canada for the sale of the publications and works of the English company, which on its part will act similarly in Great Britain, the colonies, and on the continent of Europe for the American publications of the Cassell Publishing Company.

A FRAGMENT of a MS. of the "Divina Commedia," consisting of four cantos of the Paradiso, has lately been discovered by Signor Zanino Volta, of Milan, in the binding of an old book belonging to the Biblioteca del Collegio Ghislieri at Pavia. Signor Volta assigns the MS., which must have been a handsome one, to the middle of the fourteenth century, and judges it to be the work of a Roman, Tuscan, or South Italian scribe. It is to be hoped that this interesting fragment will be printed.

MESSRS. SOTHERBY will sell on Monday and Tuesday of next week a miscellaneous collection of books and MSS. Besides the musical library of Mr. Alexander Foote, we notice the following attractive lots: Sir Walter Scott's MS. of the first canto of "The Lay of the Last Minstrel"; Moore's MS. of "Lalla Rookh," together with his corrected proof sheets; Tennyson's MS. of the lyrics interpolated in "The Princess," which vary considerably from the printed versions; Bishop Wilson's MS. diary during the last twelve years of his life at Calcutta; Sir John Franklin's MS. journal at Malta and the Ionian Islands in 1831; and two fine vellum MSS. of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries—an illuminated Horae, and the latter half of Wiclif's translation of the Bible—which are believed to come from the Abbey of Reading. Among the printed books, we may mention Blake's Marriage of Heaven and Hell, Book of Thel, and Visions of the Daughters of Albion, bound up in one volume; and the Reports of the Council of the Royal Scottish Academy, from 1828 to 1881, illustrated with 154 portraits and 279 autograph letters.

THE trustees of the British Museum have just made a present of duplicates to the Guildhall Library, consisting of about 5000 books and 11,000 pamphlets. The English books, numbering upwards of 1700 volumes, include a valuable addition to the already rich collection of works relating to London. There are also numerous works in Welsh and Gaelic, Greek and Latin, French, Provençal and other dialects, German, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, Scandinavian, Russian, Hebrew, and Oriental languages. The Pro Sacerdotum Barbis of Valeriano Bolzani (1531), and the sermons preached at St. Peter's, Rome, in 1484, before the election of a Pope, are rare.

THE annual meeting of the Colonial Institute will be held on Tuesday next, February 18, at 4 p.m. The report to be presented by the council is of a very satisfactory character. The total income during 1889 amounted to £7738; and the number of fellows at the close of the year was 3562. The library now contains 7654 volumes, 3585 pamphlets, and 221 files of newspapers. In addition, files of 76 colonial newspapers have been forwarded to the British Museum for preservation there. It will be proposed to make a change in the rules, with the object of limiting admission to the Institute to British subjects.

THE complete collection of Signor Sella's magnificent photographs of the Caucasus, some of which were shown by lantern to illustrate Mr. Douglas Freshfield's paper on Monday, will be on exhibition in the map-room of the Royal Geographical Society from Friday, February 14, till the end of the month.

Readers of Travels in Tunisia, by Alexander Graham and H. S. Ashbee (1887) will remember that one of the features of that altogether admirable book was a bibliography, which covered the entire period from the times of Carthage down to the French protectorate. This bibliography has now been reissued by Mr. Ashbee, in handsome large octavo (Dulau), with an appendix augmenting the number of titles by about one third, and a copious index to facilitate reference. To show how wide is the field covered, we may quote from the preface the following classification of the contents:—

"(1) books on Carthage and Utica, with their history and archaeology; (2) books on Tunisia, or on towns or separate districts of that country; (3) books partly on Tunisia; (4) books on the Barbary States (when Tunisia is included) and their piracies; (5) articles in Sociétés' Transactions, collections of travels, encyclopædias, magazines, and other periodicals; (6) dictionaries and manuals of conversation in the Arab language; (7) a few books not specially on Tunisia, but illustrating indirectly the religion, customs, antiquities, or language, ancient or modern, of that country; (8) Consular reports; (9) some works of the imagination—novels, dramas, and poems."

It is curious to note the favourable treatment which Northern Africa has received from bibliographers. To take only English works—Prince Ibrahim Hilmy has compiled two large though by no means exhaustive volumes of the literature relating to Egypt and the Sudan. For the Barbary States, Sir R. Lambert Playfair, our indefatigable consul-general, published a bibliography of Algeria two or three years ago through the Royal Geographical Society, and has just finished a companion work on Tripoli; while we understand that Dr. Robert Brown is well advanced with his bibliography of Morocco. What would not the student of Indian history give for similar help, even in detached portions of his vast subject?

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

PROF. MAX MÜLLER was prevented by illness from beginning his second course of Gifford Lectures last week. A notice published at Glasgow states that the professor hopes to begin his lectures this week.

In Convocation at Oxford on Tuesday last, a statute proposing the abolition of the viva voce examination in Responsions was passed by a majority of 67 votes to 36.

PROF. JAMES STUART has resigned the chair of mechanism and applied mechanics at Cambridge, which he has held since the foundation of the office in 1875.

AMONG the public lectures announced at Oxford are two by Prof. Rhys, on "Celts and Pre-Celts"; and three by the Choragus, on "The Great Netherland Musicians and their Influence on Italy," "The Progress of Pure Choral Music in Italy," and "The Culmination of Pure Choral Music." The latter course will be delivered in the Sheldonian Theatre, with musical illustrations.

THE Fitzwilliam Museum syndicate at Cambridge have issued a report, proposing (inter alia) that Mr. M. R. James, of King's College, be re-appointed to the office of assistant-director of the museum, with the special duty of cataloguing and arranging the collection, which has lately been largely augmented through the excavations at Naukratis and in Cyprus.

At the meeting of the Ashmolean Society at Oxford on Monday last, Mr. F. R. Dixey read a paper on "The Wing-Markings of Butterflies as a Guide to their Phylogeny."

THE English translation of the "Ajax," to be performed at St. Andrews on Thursday next and the two following days, is that of Prof. Lewis Campbell; and the part of Athena will be taken by Mrs. Campbell.

PROF. H. A. STRONG, of University College, Liverpool, was elected a fellow of the Scottish Society of Literature and Art at the last meeting of the council of that society held on February 7.

THE Durham University Journal of February 8 contains a classified list of the public writings of the late Bishop Lightfoot. His letter on "The Muratorian Fragment" in the ACADEMY of September 21, 1889, is included; but not that which appeared in the ACADEMY of May 21, 1887, entitled "The Earliest Papal Catalogue," in which he claimed to discover the lost list of Hegesippus in Epiphanius, Haer. xxvii. 6.

PROF. MARGOLIOUTH's recent inaugural lecture at Oxford on "The Place of Ecclesiastics in Semitic Literature," which is reviewed in the ACADEMY this week, has been the subject of two elaborate articles in the Oxford Magazine, signed S. R. D.

TRANSLATION.

PLATO TO ASTER.

'Αστὴρ πρὶν μὲν ἔλαμπες ἐπὶ ζῳοῖσιν Ἔθνος νῦν δὲ θανάῳ λυμπεῖς Ἑσπερος ἐν φθιμένοισι.
Anthologia Palatina, vii. 670.

SWIFT TO STELLA.

WHILE, Stella mine! bright life was thine,
My Morning Star wast thou.
E'en dead and gone, thou shinest on,
My Star of Evening now!

J. E. S.

OBITUARY.

MRS. JOSHUA STANGER.

MRS. STANGER, who died at Keswick on Thursday of last week, was a daughter of William Calvert, the only friend of Coleridge, and the brother of the Raisley Calvert who left £900 to Wordsworth. Brought up at Greta Bank (since the residence of the Speddings), her childhood was spent with Coleridge's and Southey's children, and she remembered both the poets, as well as Wordsworth and Shelley. Wordsworth visited at her father's house, and Shelley stayed a few days there on his way from Wales to Edinburgh in 1813. Her recollections of Hartley Coleridge were very intimate, and for Southey as a man she had a feeling of the deepest reverence. She died at 85 years of age, and was probably the last link with the poets of the Lake country.

A MEMORY.

M. S., obiit Fieldside, Keswick, February 5, 1890.

CHILD of the brother of that generous man
Who, vowed to Death, bequeathed his friend, release

From trivial care, and gave the muses ease,
And set laborious Wordsworth in the van—
You knew Nurse Wilsey, coaxed Old Clogger Dan,
Climbed unproved on Southey's genial knees,
Watched for the bard's home-coming through the trees,

And, wreath in hand, to crown the Laureate ran.
Bright shone the sun, the Orostwaite bells rang clear,

When blue-eyed Sara and that Rydal maid,
The gentle Dora, tended you as bride.
But now another bridal morn is here,
Christ in the heavens has called you to His side,
And all the vale is rolled from sun to shade.

H. D. RAWNSLEY.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

WE cannot expect that every number of the Antiquary should be equally interesting. The one before us is, we are sorry to say, dull. The two articles on the Tudor Exhibition, by the Hon. Harold Dillon and the Baron de Cossion respectively, are the redeeming feature. The Baron de Cossion knows more of ancient arms and armour than any other dweller in England; no one can read the paper he has given us without learning much from it. The conference on altar stones contains facts which will be new to most of the readers. The Rev. Joseph Hirst has, we believe, made these objects his especial study. We wish the editor of the Antiquary would open his columns to correspondents, for the purpose of a full catalogue being made of the mediaeval altar-slabs which yet exist. We believe all the brasses now to be found in our churches have been catalogued. The old altar-stones have an interest for moderns, for many reasons. We fear that, when churches undergo the process called "restoration," ignorant workmen often destroy what time has so long spared. Miss Florence Layard tells a curious story of spiritual possession. The paper by the Rev. Alfred S. Porter on the mediaeval tiles of the priory of Great Malvern would have been more instructive if it had been accompanied by illustrations.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BELLY, F. L'isthme américain: notes d'un premier voyage en 1888. Paris: Fischbacher. 7 fr. 60 c.
CART, J. Histoire de la liberté des cultes dans le canton de Vaud, 1798–1899. Paris: Fischbacher. 4 fr.
CHAMPEAUX, A. de. Histoire de la peinture décorative à toutes les époques. Paris: Renouard. 15 fr.
COMTESSA, Le Comte G. de. Le Comte d'Orsay: physiologie d'un roi de la mode. Paris: Quantin. 8 fr.
HART, G. Ursprung u. Verbreitung der Pyramus- u. Thibe-Sage. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 60 Pf.
JOURN, H. Charles Lebrun et les arts sous Louis XIV. Paris: Renouard. 60 fr.
LAGERZ, G. B. de. Les Normands dans les deux mondes. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 5 fr.
MINOR, J. Aus dem Schiller-Archiv. Ungedrucktes u. Unbekanntes zu Schillers Leben u. Schriften. Weimar: Böhlau. 2 M.
NOTICE sur un manuscrit du XIV^e siècle, Les Heures du Maréchal de Boucicaut. Paris: Morgand. 160 fr.
RIS-PAGUOT. Dictionnaire des poisons d'orfèvres. Paris: Renouard. 15 fr.

HISTORY, ETC.

- AKTENSTÜCKE zur Wirthschaftspolitik d. Fürsten Bismarck. Hrg. v. H. v. Porchinger. 1. Bd. Bis sur Uebernahme d. Handelsministeriums (1880). Berlin: Hennig. 12 M.
AYENEL, le Vicomte G. d'. Richelieu et la monarchie absolue. T. 1. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 60 c.
BAUDRILLART, A. Philippe V. et la cour de France 1700–1718. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 10 fr.
BAUZON, l'abbé. Recherches historiques sur la persécution religieuse dans le département de Saône-et-Loire pendant la Révolution. T. 1. Paris: Bouillon. 10 fr.
BIEN, Edmond. Paris pendant la Terreur. Paris: Didier. 8 fr. 50 c.
DENIFLE, H., et Aem. CHATELAIN. Chartularium Universitatis Parisiensis. T. I. (ab anno MCO usque ad annum MCCLXXXVI). Paris: Delalain. 80 fr.
DUQUET, A. Guerre de 1870–1871. Paris: le quatre-Septembre et Ohatillon. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
LEHMANN, E. De publica Romanorum servitute quaestiones. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
MUTTER, Berthold van. La Suisse sous le pacte de 1815, 1815–1890. Paris: Fischbacher. 8 fr.
PRESENSE, L. de. L'Eglise et la Révolution française: histoire des relations de l'Eglise et de l'Etat de 1789 à 1814. Paris: Fischbacher. 7 fr. 50 c.
RASTOUL, A. Le Maréchal Baudouin, 1798–1871, d'après ses mémoires et des documents inédits. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 5 fr.
SUBROUT, R. Un corsaire malouin: Robert Surcouf. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- BORNEMANN, J. G. Beiträge zur Geologie u. Paläontologie. 1. Mit. Ueber den Buntsandstein in Deutschland u. seine Bedeutung f. die Trias. Jena: Fischer. 7 M.
DELAFOUD. Bassin houiller et permien d'Antun et d'Espinaç. Faec. I. Stratigraphie. Paris: Baudry. 12 fr.

ROSENHOFER, A. F. Afrikanische Schmetterlinge d. k. k. naturhistorischen Hofmuseums. I. Wien: Hölder. 2 M.
 SCHULTZ, A. Die Hymenopteren-Gruppe der Eurytomiden. 2. Abth. Wien: Hölder. 10 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

AVISTA. Edited by K. F. Geldner. II. Khorda Avesta. Fasc. 6. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 18 M.
 BURGASS, E. Darstellung d. Dialects im XIII. u. XIV. Jhd. in den Départements Seine-Inférieure u. Eure auf Grund v. Urkunden unter gleichzeit. Vergleichg. m. dem heut. Patois. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
 DEVAUX, A. De l'étude des patois du haut Dauphiné. Paris: Welter. 2 fr. 50 c.
 LIESEBERG, F. Die Sieger Mundart e. Idiom d. Unterharzes, besonders hinsichtlich der Lautlehre dargestellt. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 4 M. 80 Pf.
 PETER, J. De C. Valerii Flaccidi vita et carmine. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 SCALA, R. v. Die Studien d. Polybios. I. Stuttgart: Kohlhammer. 5 M.
 SUMMERS, F. De Theophrasti Orphicæ forma antiquissima dissertatio. Berlin: Calvary. 1 M. 80 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A DANISH CONTRIBUTION TO THE QUESTION OF THE ORIGIN OF PRINTING.

Copenhagen: Feb. 10, 1890.

The ACADEMY has for years endowed research by its large hospitality to students engaged in enquiries out of the common beat. Therefore is it that it has so many friends among the learned, the wide world over. How much light has been thrown in its columns on science manifold by the letters of so many "diggers" with pick or pen! One subject which went through many of your numbers, in papers afterwards collected by the ingenious author as a separate volume, was the discussion by Mr. Hessels on where, and by whom, printing was invented. They excited great interest among the class it concerned, and polemical pieces for and against have followed.

At Copenhagen, also, Mr. Hessels's articles were eagerly looked for, and privately much debated. Now, a new Danish Club having lately been organised here for ventilating everything connected with books and bookbinding, &c., the whole question has been taken up afresh by a veteran historical and literary writer, able to speak with authority, being also for many years a worker in the field of bibliography. This gentleman, well known in Great Britain, is Dr. O. Bruun, keeper of the Danish National Library. A few weeks ago came his quarto, pp. viii. and 92, under the title De nyeste Undersøgelser om Bogtrykkerkunstens Opfindelse (Philipsens Boghandel, Kjøbenhavn, 1889). It is the first volume issued by the above-mentioned "Forening for Boghaandværk." Besides engravings in the text, it has six facsimiles of rare leaves, partly printed in colours.

Characteristic of Dr. Bruun is a certain dry humour, which is very refreshing, combined with exceptional urbanity and modesty of tone. He not only knocks no one down, but he clenches nothing where there may be any loop-hole of doubt. He also appreciates the many difficulties—that the primitive press technicalities were written of in Latin; that the very oldest things bear no dates; that the transition from block-books, &c., to types will never be fully understood; that decisive contemporary documents are few or nowhere; and that no single man can properly consult and compare these scarce imprints, unavoidably scattered in public and private bookrooms. The whole treatise goes direct to the point, shows immense reading of the literature, and great personal labour. In style it is not intended for the indolent many, but will be welcomed by those especially interested in this pursuit. Chapter i. is given to Coster, the next to Gutenberg, the last to "The Technical Details connected with the Invention of Printing." This third chapter is of great value, and we gladly observe the librarian's familiarity with the mysteries of type metals, type cutting, type founding, the "chapel," ink, paper, and so on—an advantage not many such writers have had. Dr. Bruun particularly shows his sagacity by insisting that the real kernel of the whole dispute is—the cutting and casting of movable metal types.

I dare not dwell on his pages; but the public may well expect some idea of his final verdict. I give it in a few lines as I can. At p. 58, after handling a crowd of very early statements, founded on fact or tradition, as to Gutenberg and Mainz, he says:

"But what can we produce from the same period as to Coster? Not one single word, merely that the Cologne Chronicle speaks of Dutch Donatuses."

And, again, at p. 84, 85:

"As far as I can see, it was Gutenberg who theoretically thought out the various steps in the art, and who practically took those steps. How or whence he got his first ideas is no business of mine, as little as what his imperfect beginnings may have been; for I cannot get hold of anything real on these heads. We have no sure notices as to the materials in the very earliest years; but we have the results staring us in the face, and these are eloquent enough. . . . Is there any chance that the future may bring evidence so strong as to overturn my theorem—that the art of printing books with movable cast types was first found by the genial mechanician and metal worker, Johan Gutenberg, who also constructed the earliest type-casting machine?"

GEORGE STEPHENS.

[We may mention that Mr. Hessels's championship of the claims of Coster has also called forth a reply from Italy—L'Origine Tedesca e l'Origine Olandese dell' Invenzione della Stampa, by C. Castellani (Venice: Ongania). We hope shortly to notice Signor Castellani's little book; at present we must be content to say that he is altogether in favour of Mainz and Gutenberg.—ED. ACADEMY.]

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "TERTRE."

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: Feb. 6, 1890.

If Mr. Bradley's conjecture (ACADEMY, January 18) that tertre comes from terriatrum, terristra, from Lat. terra, be unacceptable, I would suggest that the origin of the word might be found in the Lat. titulus.

In Late Latin titulus had a meaning of 'boundary,' 'limit' (see Du Cange, s.v. Titulus), whence, apparently, the Fr. titre, as a 'hunting-term,' got its meaning of 'post,' 'station':—"lieu, relais où l'on poste les chiens, pour courir la bête à propos quand elle passe" (Littré).

There seems no phonetic difficulty in the way of connecting tertre, O.Fr. telre, with titre, Prov. and O.Fr. (fifteenth and sixteenth centuries) titre, from Lat. titulus; and it requires no great effort to connect them in meaning likewise, if the above-mentioned sense of titre be taken into consideration.

The similarity in meaning between titre, as a hunting term, and tristre is striking; and one would be tempted to connect them were it not for the difficulty in that case of accounting for the s in the latter word.

I see, by the way, that Mr. Bradley, on the authority of Laourne, credits Froissart with the use of tristre in one of his poems in the sense of tertre, "mound." This instance was apparently unknown to Scheler, who only mentions the forms terne, tieme=tertre. These occur both in the Chronicle and in the poems.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

"KENEPAS" IN THE ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE.

Corpus Christi College, Oxford: Feb. 11, 1890.

Dr. H. Logeman, Professor of English in the University of Ghent, has kindly pointed out to me that my suggestion as to the meaning of kenepas has been anticipated by Kluge in an article in Paul and Braune, Beiträge viii. 528-9, who says "Sollte man nicht ein altfriesisches kenep = alt nord. kanpr 'sohnurbart' anknüpfen dürfen?"

I am glad at any rate to have brought independent historical confirmation of a solution which Kluge proposed on purely philological grounds.

CHARLES PLUMMER.

"STORY OF THE NATIONS—EARLY BRITAIN."

Feb. 10, 1890.

Adverting to the review of this book in last week's ACADEMY, one of the most astonishing slips may be found in the full-page plate on p. 111. This engraving purports to represent two flint knives, in the chapter illustrative of the English Conquest. The illustration really shows to a much reduced scale the front and edge view of a large Palaeolithic implement, now in the collection of Dr. John Evans, which was found in the Stoke Newington gravels by Mr. Worthington G. Smith.

A.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, Feb. 16, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "National Life and Thought in Spain," by Mrs. Cunningham Graham.
 8 p.m. Ethical: "Friendship," by Mrs. Bryant.
 MONDAY, Feb. 17, 5 p.m. London Institution: "The Poetry of William Dunbar," by Prof. W. P. Ker.
 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Sculpture in Greek Temples," I., by Mr. A. S. Murray.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Lecture—'Stereotyping,' I., by Mr. Thomas Bolas.
 8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Distinction between Society and the State," by Mr. J. S. Mann.
 TUESDAY, Feb. 18, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Post-Darwinian Period," V., by Prof. G. J. Romanes.
 4 p.m. Colonial Institute: Annual Meeting.
 7.45 p.m. Statistical: "Statistics of Insanity in England, with special reference to Evidence of its increasing Prevalence," by Mr. N. A. Humphreys.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Ocean Penny Postage and Cheap Telegraph Communication between England and all Parts of the Empire and America," by Mr. J. Henniker Heaton.
 8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Shanghai Water-Works," by J. W. Hart; "The Tyam Water-Works, Hong Kong," by J. Orange; "The Construction of the Yokohama Water-Works," by Mr. J. H. T. Turner.
 8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Additions to the Lizard Collection in the British Museum," I., by Mr. G. A. Boulenger; "A Guinea-fowl from Zambesi, allied to Nomada cristata," by Mr. P. L. Slater; "The Genus Cyon," by Dr. Mivart.
 WEDNESDAY, Feb. 19, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Organisation of Secondary and Technical Education in London," by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.
 THURSDAY, Feb. 20, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Three Stages of Shakspeare's Art," II., by Canon Alinger.
 7 p.m. London Institution: "Franz Schubert and his Successors," by Mr. Carl Armbruster.
 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Sculpture in Greek Temples," II., by Mr. A. S. Murray.
 8 p.m. Linnean: "The Fruit and Seed of Juglandia," "The Shape of the Oak Leaf, and the Leaves of Viburnum," by Sir John Lubbock.
 8 p.m. Chemical: "The Behaviour of the more Stable Oxides at High Temperature," by Dr. G. H. Bailey, D.Sc., and Mr. W. B. Hopkins; "The Influence of Different Oxides on the Decomposition of Potassium Chlorate," by Mr. G. J. Fowler and Mr. J. Grant.
 8 p.m. Electrical Engineers.
 FRIDAY, February 21, 5 p.m. Physical: "A Carbon Deposit in a Blake Telephone Transmitter," by Mr. F. B. Hawes; "The Geometrical Construction of Direct Reading Scales for Reflecting Instruments," and "A Parallel Motion suitable for Recording Instruments," by Mr. A. P. Trotter; "Bertrand's Refractometer," by Prof. S. P. Thompson.
 8 p.m. Geological: Annual General Meeting.
 7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers: "Some Types of American Locomotives, and their Construction," by Mr. C. N. Goodall.
 8 p.m. Philological: a Dictionary Evening, by Mr. Henry Bradley.
 9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Magnetic Phenomena," by Mr. Sheldford Bidwell.
 SATURDAY, Feb. 22, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electricity and Magnetism," II., by Lord Rayleigh.
 8.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.
 8 p.m. London Geological Field Club: "The Tertiary Rocks on which London Stands," II., by Prof. H. G. Seeley.

SCIENCE.

An Essay on the Place of Ecclesiastical in Semitic Literature. Inaugural Lecture by D. S. Margoliouth, Laudian Professor of Arabic. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

IN a work on Hebrew wisdom, called Job and Solomon (1887), I called the attention of English students to an important essay by Prof. Bickell, in which he claimed to be able to retranslate the Book of Ecclesiastical into Hebrew by comparing the three chief ancient versions, especially the Greek and the Syriac. In the judgment of this eminent Hebrew and Syriac scholar, Sirach (as we will call the book) consists of seven-syllabled verses, which in the "alphabetic song on Wisdom" (Eccles. li. 13-30) are linked together in four-lined strophes, but elsewhere in simple distichs. I stated that I reserved my opinion on Bickell's theory as to the possibility of an approximately correct restoration of the text of Ben Sira till the appearance of a complete edition from his pen. Three times in the same year* Bickell announced his intention more or less distinctly of publishing the "Urtext" of Sirach. I fear that illness has compelled him to postpone his plan, otherwise I am certain that the news of Prof. Margoliouth's gallant attempt to do the same work would have roused the veteran to activity. So far as the short published specimen of Bickell's "Urtext" goes, he does not entirely agree with the Oxford scholar in his view of the character of Ben Sira's Hebrew. This, however, is comparatively a slight matter. What is important is that knights should observe the rules of the tourney, and be courteous and even generous. If Nöldeke's brief reference to Sirach in his Alttestamentliche Literatur had a claim to be mentioned, surely Bickell's learned article and threefold announcement of his project had a greater claim. It was not enough to refer to this brilliant innovator's doctrine of Biblical metres; a candid admission of his priority in Sirach studies would have honoured the junior scholar, and prepossessed us in favour of his work. In fact, Prof. Margoliouth's merits are such that he could well have afforded to recognise his predecessor. Few men of his age have given so many proofs of varied linguistic attainments as he has done; and it is no secret that the prize-dissertation out of which his later work has grown (the present lecture is the "prodromus" of a book) was far above the ordinary standard for such compositions. His ingenuity, too, as his emendations of Greek and Arabic texts have proved, is at least equal to his scholarship; and it is this ingenuity which has somewhat imperilled the fruits of his earlier researches. His object in the dissertation was to compare the Greek and Syriac, and to follow the traces of the "Urtext" which, as anyone who looks closely will admit, gleam now and again through those versions. But his ambition has grown since then. He wishes to retranslate the book verse by verse into metrical New-Hebrew; and he gives us in this lecture specimens of his translation, justifying them by philological notes of great interest and full of surprises.

* Zeitschrift für katholische Theologie, 1882, pp. 326-332; Carmina Vet. Test. Metrica, 1882, proel., p. 4; Dichtungen der Hebräer, I, 1882, p. viii.

For a surprise it will certainly be to many readers to find how large a New-Hebrew element Prof. Margoliouth admits into the diction of Ben Sira. Though later in point of time than Ecclesiastes, one would not have expected this writer to have wandered so far from the old paths. The lecturer, indeed, is not much surprised. At least, upon consideration he finds that the result is perfectly natural, now that he has given up the assumption under which he says that Dr. Edersheim and he had at first worked, that "the language of Ben Sira was the language of the prophets" (p. 6). This extraordinary assumption (did Dr. Edersheim really share it?) has been followed by as strange a reaction. He now thinks, having separated himself (only for a time, I hope) from critical Hebrew scholars everywhere, that the books of the Old Testament can be arranged chronologically with reference to their linguistic types—a paradoxical view which I can only account for by the bifurcation which is still too prevalent in Oxford between the study of the language and that of the "subject-matter" of the Old Testament. Upon this new assumption Prof. Margoliouth can bring himself to believe that the vocabulary of Sirach is practically that of the Aboth d'Rabbi Nathan—later, that is, than the Mishna itself, and, further, to accept "a whole dictionary of philosophical terms, of logical phrases, of legal and of theosophical expressions," and a large amount of "serious alteration" of the "structure and grammar of the language" (pp. 6, 21). Now, I suppose there is no competent scholar who really supposes that "the language of Ben Sira was the language of the prophets." Most will agree with Delitzsch that, without assuming the complete accuracy of the quotations from Sirach in the Talmud and Midrash, the style of the "Urtext," though modelled upon the "Solomonic," was yet not free from those later words and idioms which were the germ of the Rabbinic dialect (see Zur Gesch. der jüdischen Poesie, 1836, p. 21). And can we, on grounds supplied by uncertain and often most precarious inferences from the versions, venture to accept Prof. Margoliouth's conclusions, however seemingly advantageous to a literalistic theology which ought to be extinct, and is certainly not that of the able editor of Lux Mundi? I do not wish to speak disparagingly of the author's "restorations." They are not purely arbitrary; there is a method in what may seem to some so wild. But the guiding clue is, unfortunately, that of a doubtful metrical theory. If it be true, as even the author admits, that that brilliant innovator, Gustav Bickell, has not thoroughly made out his case for the metrical character of Old Testament poetry, is it likely that a restoration of the "Urtext" of Sirach would be more successful? I do not say that there are not many traces of metre in the Old Testament poetry, nor that passages of Sirach could not be restored in metre with some probability. There are lines in the two specimen-versions (xii. 8-11, and xvi. 17-23) which may be approximately correct. But the attempt to produce a connected restoration of a metrical Hebrew text seems to me hopeless, and I fancy that Bickell himself must have found this out. In dealing with Old Testament poetry, that great metrician had at least an early traditional form of the Hebrew text, besides the versions, to work upon; but in Sirach he has but the versions.

It would be interesting to compare Bickell's restoration, which I suppose is partly ready, with that of Prof. Margoliouth. Has the former lighted independently on such a bold restoration as the latter has given of xvi. 21? The note which seeks to justify the translation, "No eye beholds my doings," is one of those surprises of which I spoke. I will not enter at much length into philological criticism. How acute the author is, and at the same time how daring, I need not say. But I will mention three of the more prominent of his many bold suggestions (pp. 14-16). The first is that παρρησία, in a saying inserted by MS. 248 at Eccles. xviii. 29, is merely a transliteration of Hebrew par'ōsh "flea," and that the Greek words (see p. 14) are a stupid rendering of a Hebrew proverb meaning "a live flea by itself is better than a couple of dead lions (literally, a dead lion taking hold of a dead lion)." The second is that an equally unintelligible Greek saying inserted by MS. 248 at xviii. 9 means, when put into Hebrew, "and all the years have not the same number," at the cost of admitting the hybrid grammatical form hashshonāthā ("the years" = ἡ κοίτη). The third, that another inserted passage at xxii. 23, which runs, according to the Greek, "one must not always despise the circumference" (!), means, according to the New-Hebrew "Urtext," "one must not despise a learned man who is a beggar." A very suitable parallel to the second clause, "nor should a brainless man that is rich be admired"; but gained at the cost of accepting not merely the Targumic b'sar "to despise," but a form nowhere attested in Hebrew or Syriac, 'alim (cf. Arabic 'alim "a learned man"). This last importation of an Arabic exotic must be taken with Prof. Margoliouth's note (p. 20) on the second clause of xvii. 30, "because the son of man is not immortal." The Hebrew for "immortal," he thinks, was 'olāmī, an equivalent, to which he was guided by a curious "error" of the Syriac version, "for his thoughts are not man's thoughts"; i.e., 'ilmō from a supposed word 'ālem "intellect," cf. Arabic 'ilm "knowledge." If Sirach wrote 'olāmī, I do not wonder that the Syriac translator made a mistake; but I do wonder that instead of giving this Hebrew word (coined ex hyp. by Sirach) its natural Syriac meaning, "mundane" (often in Fathers: see Payne Smith), he went out of his way to select an Arabizing word, which all the world had forgotten till Drusius re-created it for another passage in Sirach, and Hitzig (thinking perhaps of the connexion invented by Arabic lexicographers between 'alam "world," and 'alima "to know") clung at it to explain a hard passage in Ecclesiastes (Eccles. iii. 11). I need hardly add that Prof. Margoliouth follows Drusius in his interpretation of Eccles. vi. 22. But may not that hard passage simply mean that Wisdom being pre-mundane, and having "come forth from the mouth of the Most High" (xxiv. 3), none can know her real name except by divine revelation? (Comp. Judges xiii. 18, Rev. xix. 12, 13.)

My conclusion is that Prof. Margoliouth's judgment is not equal to his learning. He forms his opinions rapidly, and is very confident of their correctness. But he has fallen into many snares from which a less brilliant scholar would have escaped. He is also too fond of out-of-the-way learning, and of misleading antitheses. I trust, however, that his labour will not be thrown away. It cannot be so, of course, as regards himself; but the public of scholars ought to profit by his very careful comparison of the Greek and Syriac versions. No more important task has been undertaken by English Hetrasts in our day, and no one is more fitted to perform it than Prof. Margoliouth, if he will but be on his guard against himself. There should be no digressions, no useless learning, no importation of "dialectic words for which we should search the Rabbinic literature in vain." Condensed critical annotations are wanted, not a complete "restoration" of the "Urtext." Prof. Margoliouth, who has already shown such self-restraint in his edition and translation of an Arabic commentary on Daniel by a Karaite Jew (Anecdota Oxoniensia, 1889), ought not to find this limitation of his field too irksome. And I must regretfully express the hope that he will revise his unfortunate utterances upon Old Testament criticism and modern theology in the last three pages of this lecture—assuring him, first, that critics are no more the foes of prophecy and revelation than he is; and, secondly, that if advanced criticism of the prophetic writings is reconcilable with the debased Hebrew of Ecclesiastes it is equally so with any conceivable results of the criticism of the text of Ecclesiasticus.

T. K. CHRYNE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CATULLUS XXV. 5.

Trinity College, Dublin: Jan. 31, 1890.

This is the Catullian crux. I print it in full:

"Cicade Thalle mollior cuniculi capillo,
Vel anseris medullula vel imula oricilla

"Idemque Thalle turbida rapacior procella,
Cum diua mulier aries ostendit oscitantes,
Remitte pallium mihi meum, quod involasti
Sudarumque Saetabum catagraphosque Thynos,
Inepte quae palam soles habere tamquam avita.
Quae nunc tuis ab unguibus reglutina et remitte,
Ne laneum latusculum manueque mollicellas
Inusta turpiter tibi flagella conscribillent,
Et insolenter aestues, velut minuta magno
Deprensa navis in mari vesante vento."

Scholars know the variants by heart. O has mulier aries, G mulier alios, with aves as well as aries written above alios. The large majority of second-rate MSS. have mulier aves, and it is from mulier aves I deduce what I believe Catullus wrote:

"Cum diua miluorum aves ostendit oscitantes."

"When the goddess of kites shows you birds agape." Miluorum is used in its metaphorical sense of rapacious thieves; and the metaphor is continued in involasti, "which you swooped on," and in unguibus, "your talons." I think this clears up, what so sadly wanted clearing up—the use of diua. Diua could not possibly stand by itself; diua miluorum is diua furum, the patroness of thieves, Laverna. No metaphor is more common than the comparison of a thief to a hawk; and that that must have been the metaphor here is shown by the sequel. Cf. Plaut. Poen. 5.5.13: male ego metuo miluos: Male illa bestia est: ne forte me auferat, pullum tuum. Pers. 3.3.5: pecuniae accipiter. Bacch. 2.3.40. em, accipitrina haec nunc erit. NIC.

Deceptus sum: Autolyco hospiti aurum credidi. Pseud. 3.2.62: an invenire postulas quemquam coquam, Nisi miluinis aut uquilinis unguis? It may not be a mere coincidence that another cook, another man of miluinis unguis, appeals to Laverna in the Aulularia as his patroness (Aul. 3.2.31).

ARTHUR PALMER.

SCIENCE NOTES.

At the last meeting of the Zoological Society, Mr. A. D. Bartlett communicated some observations on wolves, jackals, dogs, and foxes, based mainly upon his experience of those in the Gardens. His remarks tended to prove that all the varieties of the domestic dog owe their origin to wolves and jackals, the habit of barking having been acquired under the influence of domestication; and that the dog is the most perfectly domesticated of all animals. At the next meeting, Prof. St. George Mivart will read a paper upon "The Genus Cyon"—the wild dog of India.

We have received a budget of the valuable papers issued as Bulletins by the Geological Survey of the United States. Several of these are by Mr. R. S. Woodward, who has charge of the mathematical division of the work of the survey, and from their nature will interest the geographer rather than the geologist. In one of them Mr. Woodward enters into a learned discussion of the form and position of the sea-level, while in another he reports on the determination of certain astronomic positions in Missouri, Kansas, and New Mexico; and in a third he offers a series of mathematical formulae and tables to facilitate the construction and use of maps. Palaeontologists will be glad to see Dr. C. A. White's beautifully illustrated descriptions of certain invertebrate fossils from various localities on the Pacific coast, including a collection from Alaska, all of which are new. Dr. J. O. Russell contributes a memoir of high geological merit on the subaerial decay of rocks. He also discusses the cause of the red colour of certain rocks, like the sandstones, shales, and marls of the Trias. Having shown that crystalline rocks may, on their decay, produce red sands coated with ferric oxide due to the decomposition of hornblende, mica, and other iron-bearing minerals, he concludes that the red sandstones may have derived their colour during the subaerial disintegration of the rocks whence they were originally derived. Prof. Shaler devotes a Bulletin to a description of the geology of Nantucket, an island off New England, consisting mainly of glacial sands, clays, and gravels.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

MESSRS. KING & COOKSON have been encouraged by the success of their Principles of Sound and Inflection in Greek and Latin to compile an abridgment of that work for the use of junior students. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) At the same time, they have somewhat modified the general character of the original by adding a fresh chapter on comparative syntax, which they state to be mainly based upon Delbrück's Syntaktische Forschungen and Monro's Homeric Grammar. This change is expressed in the new title, "An Introduction to the Comparative Grammar of Greek and Latin." So far as we know, the book has no rival as a manual of the modern doctrines of classical philology for the higher forms of schools.

Another excellent school-book—Dr. James Gow's Companion to School Classics—has received the compliment of being translated into French by M. Salomon Reinach, who, apart from his well-known works on archaeology, is himself the author of a Manuel de Philologie Classique, in two volumes. The translation is styled Minerva. (Paris: Hachette.) On the whole, the original is followed closely, though the chapter on the history of philosophy is omitted, as not being required for French schools, and the number of illustrations is increased from French sources. It may be prejudice, but we prefer the typography of the English book, though no doubt the French is the cheaper.

THE seventh volume of Coray's posthumous works, which was published last year (Athens: Constantinides), contains that scholar's notes on Hesychius and critical emendations of his text. It was known that he had written such remarks and corrections, from references that he made to them in his other works; but they were supposed to have been lost until quite recently, when Coray's copy of Alberti's edition of the Lexicon was found in Chios, with the marginalia in his handwriting. These have been edited by Prof. Damalas of Athens, and the work is published at the expense of several natives of Chios who are resident in Alexandria. The editor has introduced, along with Coray's notes, the remarks on the same words in Moritz Schmidt's five-volume edition of Hesychius, "in order," as he says, "to prove the critical and philological acuteness and learning of Coray, whose corrections in many points are confirmed by those of later critics, while in others they surpass theirs, and succeed, where others have failed, in throwing light on the right reading of the frequently corrupt text, which is of the greatest value both for the ancient and the modern language, and for the study of the Greek dialects."

A perusal of the book will show that this is no idle vaunt, and will arouse the reader's admiration for Coray's extraordinarily wide and minute acquaintance with Greek literature and the criticism of it, and for his readiness in applying this knowledge. It will further be seen how great an advantage he possessed in the matter of interpretation from his familiarity with Greek as his native tongue, and also from his extensive acquaintance with other modern languages, the idioms of which often furnish him with serviceable analogies. The work is one the publication of which should excite the gratitude of scholars and lexicographers.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

OLIPTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, Jan. 25.)

W. O. H. CROSS, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. J. W. Mills, in a paper on "Dryden's 'Essay on Dramatic Poesy,'" called attention to its detailed references to the dramatic unities and to Dryden's surprising statements that all tragedies should be written in rhyme, and that because rhyme is to us in lieu of quantity to the ancients.—Mr. Walter Strachan read a paper entitled "The Ethics of 'Measure for Measure,'" saying that many a sermon preached in rolling periods through some vast, crowded minster has lacked the noble teaching of this play, which brings powerfully before us the weakness of man's nature, the divine character of forgiveness, the sanctity of woman's honour; and Shakspeare here, as elsewhere, shows that in the worst of men there is still some germ of goodness.—Mr. John Taylor, in a paper on "Shakspeare's Monks and Nuns," said that, while it was not correct to allege, with Mr. Goldwin Smith, that Shakspeare had no tinge of sympathy with Roman Catholic asceticism, it could not be shown, as M. Rio and others would have us believe, that he belonged to that Church. We need not assume Chaucer to have been a separatist from the Church on account of his sarcastic delineation of monks and friars, or Lord Tennyson to be a secret Romanist because of his sympathetic portrayal of St. Agnes or Sir Galahad. Neither need we consider the author of "Measure for Measure" to have been of the pre-Reformation faith by reason of his recognition of sincerity and sanctity where less tolerant minds could discover but self-delusion and hypocrisy. The adversary of monasticism will in vain search Shakspeare for fine passages in reprobation of monks and nuns and of their devotional practices. Chaucer, when the abbey was in full splendour, makes his representative abbot and friar as the veriest worldlings. But there is nothing of the kind in Shakspeare. He represents them as sedate and reverend men with full sense of the responsibility of their profession. Had the Duke in "Measure for Measure" been a true friar, he would hardly have won our respect for veracity, seeing his methods of falsehood, circumvention, and under-plot in securing the success of his policy. And had Isabella been a confessed nun, her intemperate outbreaks would have been sadly inconsistent. As it is, it is difficult, notwithstanding her obdurate and sublime chastity, to admire one who, in her first enthusiasm for recluse life, thought the rules of her order not sufficiently austere, and yet at the last renounced them altogether, and forsook her cell for a court. Shakspeare saves his real monks and friars and nuns from such worldly tarnish.—Mr. L. M. Griffiths discussed some various readings in "Measure for Measure."

OTYMBRODORION SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, January 29.)

STEPHEN EVANS, Esq., in the chair.—Prof. Dobbie, of the University College of North Wales, read a paper on "Scientific Farming as applied to Wales," and explained the steps taken towards organising a complete system of agricultural education in the principality. The scheme proposed and now partly carried out in regard to North Wales implies: (1) the equipment of an agricultural department at the college at Bangor; (2) the establishment of local schools, at which work of the following kind would be carried on: (a) lectures in all the departments of agriculture, (b) classes in agriculture, and in the sciences most intimately related to agriculture, (c) instruction in dairy work, (d) field experiments; (3) the promotion of agricultural instruction in primary schools. This scheme seeks to embody the following principles, which are essential, in Prof. Dobbie's opinion, to the success of any comprehensive system of education in agriculture: first the association of agricultural with general education, whereby the narrowing influences of special education are guarded against; second, utilisation to the utmost of an existing means of instruction; third, regard for the special requirements of each district.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, February 3.)

PROF. T. McK. HUGHES, president, in the chair.—Archdeacon Chapman read a communication and exhibited documents on the purchase of the manor and advowson of Mepal in the fourteenth century by the prior and convent of Ely, as witnessed by a series of parchments which are preserved in the muniment-room of the cathedral. The document of chief interest which he exhibited was a Computus Roll of a certain monk, William of Wysbech by name, presented to the chapter in the year 1361, which contained a detailed account of moneys which he had received and expended for the convent, in the purchase and mortification of the manor and church. By this account it was shown that only a small portion of the necessary funds were provided from the treasury of the house, the greater part having been voluntarily subscribed by the monks themselves and their friends in the neighbourhood. The names of all the donors are set out at length with the sums which they gave; and special gifts are recorded of silver vessels, fork, cups, and mazer-bowls. The amount of the purchase-money is the first item on the debit side; and there follows an exact entry of three several journeys which the monk had taken to London for the purpose of obtaining the king's licence for the conveyance of the property to the Church of Ely, with his personal expenses, and the fees which he paid to the various officers of the king. Other documents, to the number of twenty-four, were also shown and described, by which were illustrated the several legal processes which had to be gone through, and the various transfers which had to be effected, before the requirements of the mortmain-acts of that time could be satisfied, and the property legally conveyed to the "dead hand" of the Church.—Mr. E. A. W. Budge commented as follows on the Syriac and Coptic versions of the Martyrdom of St. George of Cappadocia, the patron saint of England: A few years ago I became aware of the existence of a Coptic MS. containing the history of George of Cappadocia, his martyrdom, the building of his shrine, Lydda, and the miracles which took place in it. This MS. belongs to one of the old collections preserved in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and is divided into three sections. The first gives a brief account of his life and martyrdom, and was written by his servant, Pasikrates, who professes to have been present during the whole time of his master's torture, and to have witnessed his death. The second relates the account of the bringing of George's body from Tyre to Diospolis, and the building of a shrine there by his kinsman, called Andrew. This section purports to have been written by Theodosius, Bishop of Jerusalem. The third section contains the narrative of the miracles which took place in the shrine, and gives an account of the death of Diocletian by miraculous means. This MS. is written in the Memphitic, or Coptic dialect of Lower Egypt. There is preserved in the Vatican an encomium upon St. George of Cappadocia by Theodotus, Bishop of Ancyra, whose testimony is perhaps the most valuable of all, for it preserves many details which amplify the brief narratives of Pasikrates and Theodosius. Theodotus is probably to be identified with the Palestinian monk who caused a disturbance at the Council of Chalcedon, A.D. 451, and who afterwards came to Jerusalem and usurped the throne of Juvenal, from which he was expelled about the year 453. The work of Theodotus is referred to and quoted by Theodotus, who lived in the early part of the fifth century. Thus we have two full accounts of the martyrdom of St. George written before the end of the fifth century. We may take the matter a step further back, to prove that the story was known at the end of the third century; for we are distinctly told that Diocletian sent one of his generals called Eulichos, to demolish a shrine in Syria built in honour of St. George. The Coptic account, however, of the martyrdom, which appears to have been translated from the Greek, has been so altered by the Coptic scribe that the original form of the story has quite disappeared in this version. I may say in passing that this version was read publicly in the churches of Upper Egypt soon after the sixth century. As the work was known in Egypt at an early date, it follows as a matter of course that it would also be known to the Syrian monks who lived in the Soete desert. We should then expect that a translation into Syriac would very soon be made by them, and this turns out to be actually the case. We have in the British Museum three Syriac MSS. containing the history of St. George. They were written in the sixth, eleventh, and twelfth centuries respectively. A fourth MS., of great value for the text, which is indicated in this paper by D, is preserved in the University Library of Cambridge. If we compare the Coptic and Syriac versions of the history of St. George as we know it from the MSS. described above, we shall see that they are to all intents and purposes identical, and that they appear to have been translated from a Greek original. It is true that the Syriac account differs in some respects from the Greek version published by Pappenbroch in the Acta Sanctorum; nevertheless, making allowance for variant readings in the Greek MSS., it is quite clear that these two versions are the same. The Syriac version is simpler in form, and has less of the miraculous in it than the Coptic; and as the Syriac MSS. are older by three centuries than any Coptic MSS. known to us, we may assume at once that the additions in the Coptic version were added from the imagination of the scribe. As the Coptic version of the story has already been published by the present writer, it will only be necessary here to give the Syriac text of the history with the variant readings of the four MSS., together with an English translation of it. This translation was read, and some observations were made by Mr. Budge, and comparisons drawn between it and the myth, common to so many nations, of the combat between light and darkness.—Mr. Hurton observed that the legends of St. George the Martyr assumed such a variety of form that it seemed impossible to ascribe them all to one origin. Canon Maclean, of the Archbishop's Mission to the Nestorians or Eastern Syrians, had been making translations from their Euchologion; and among the features of a very scanty Hagiology, including the commemoration of the seven Maccabean martyrs and a few other saints, a conspicuous place was given to St. George the Martyr, which was a striking evidence of the widely extended influence of his name.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Thursday, February 6.)

MR. T. H. BAYLIS, Q.C., in the chair.—Mr. J. I. André read a paper on Burton Church, Sussex, an edifice uninteresting as regards its structural features but containing a good screen and loft (the latter seldom met with in Sussex churches); a remarkable fragment of wall-painting representing a female tied head downwards to a Saltire Cross; and several sepulchral monuments. The most remarkable were an effigy of a lady only 3ft. 6in. long, and a brass to the memory of Dame Goring, which has the peculiarity of showing her dressed in an heraldic tabard.—The Rev. Dr. J. C. Cox read a paper on a private seal, engraved on amber, thirteenth century, found in a stone coffin in the church of Old Malton. On the seal is the following inscription: "Secretum signum fons piscis avis leo lignum." Dr. Cox also exhibited some Celtic pottery, Samian and pseudo-Samian ware, flint flakes, bronze bangle and Roman fibula, lately found in Deep Dale Cavern, near Buxton, in Derbyshire.

FINE ART.

THE ART MAGAZINES.

WE prefer Jacques when he is content to be Jacques, and not trying to be J. F. Millet, as he is in the picture goupil-gravured for the Magazine of Art. The woodcuts for "Current Art" are as good as usual; but what does the writer intend when he says that of late years Mr. Hubert Vos has "borne much of the stress and strain of the Suffolk-street Exhibition." Does it simply mean that he has sent several pictures there, and does this hurt him very much? Mr. Alfred Gilbert's memorial tablet to the memory of the late Mr. William Graham is interesting, but the engraving is ineffective. In No. VIII. of "Glimpses of Artist Life," Mr. Spielmann reads some excellent lessons to art critics, which are noticed elsewhere in the ACADEMY. Is he really serious in thinking that the technique of David's "Mme. de Récamier" is simply contemptible; and, if so, what does he mean by "technique"? And, surely, he is too confident in his view that there are many masterpieces in the National Gallery that "please everybody at all times." We doubt if there is one which has not been severely criticised, especially by those most one-sided and most virulent of all art critics—the artists themselves. In this very number of the Magazine of Art Mr. Ford Madox Brown falls foul of the Ansidei Madonna in a way that makes us wish that we could have Raphael's opinion of Mr. Brown's mural paintings at Manchester.]

We are sorry to learn that the portrait of a young lady etched by Mlle. Poynot for the Portfolio is "not one of the least charming" of M. Chaplin's female studies, for we like neither the young lady nor her cat. We are told that she is dressed with "the combination of extreme simplicity and lightness which belongs to her age and class," which raises a question as to which class a young French lady of sixteen or seventeen belongs who wears absolutely nothing above her corsage but a scarf of gauze. The etching by Mr. H. Macbeth Raeburn, after Van Dyck's picture of David Ryckaert in the Madrid Gallery, is finely drawn and brilliant—more, indeed, like a Rembrandt than a Vandyck in its powerful and apparently somewhat capricious lighting. For its articles on "The British Seas," the Portfolio has secured the lively and competent pen of Mr. Clark Russell; but the most interesting article is that by the editor upon Mr. Joseph Pennell, whose recent eulogium of modern pen-drawing is dissected by Mr. Hamerton in his usually patient and skilful way. He is very delicate—almost tender—in his manipulation, but he lays bare the bone when he says:

"The distinct tendency is to take away pen drawing from the painters and etchers, and hand it over to a new class of specialists, men of unapproachable manual cleverness, who can hold their own not by any intellectual or really artistic superiority, but by pure manual mastery. Well, perhaps it is coming to this; but last week, among the drawings in the Louvre, such a consummation did not seem to me desirable."

The Art Journal is setting a good example in choosing as subjects for its etchings some of the most remarkable pictures by the younger painters. Last month Mr. C. N. Kennedy's "Neptune," which was one of the features of the New Gallery last year, was so honoured; and this month we have Mr. Frank Bramley's "A Hopeless Dawn" (excellently etched by Mr. James Dobie), which was purchased by the Chantrey Trustees from the walls of the Royal Academy in 1880. This journal has done well also in securing Mrs. Henry Ady's (Miss Julia Cartwright) interesting article on "Vanishing Rome," together with the charming illustrations of scenes which will soon be swept away. The insertion in this number of some portraits of Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning, by their old friend, Mr. Rudolf Lehmann, is also a sign of editorial energy in a good direction; but it is doubtful whether a little more delay would not have been politic in this case, in order to insure satisfactory reproductions of the portraits, especially that after the oil picture of the poet. "The Royal Academy in the Last Century" is the first of what promises to be a very interesting and valuable series of papers by two authors with unusual opportunities for doing justice to their subject. These are Mr. Hodgson, the present librarian, and Mr. Eaton, the present secretary, of the Academy.

MR. JOHNSON'S PICTURES OF HIGHLAND SPORTS.

THE term Highland Sports is so much associated with the sword-dance, tossing the caber, and such-like athletic entertainments, that the title of Mr. C. E. Johnson's exhibition is calculated to raise expectations which are not unpleasantly disappointed when we find that the artist has only departed so far from his usual habits as to give us deerstalkers and salmon-fishers instead of those more bucolic or romantic personages which he usually introduces into his landscapes. If to some it may appear that sportsmen in tweed suits handling the gun and the rod do not add much to the solemnity of Ben Nevis or the savage majesty of the "Coolins" (as the catalogue phonetically calls the celebrated crags which tower above Loch Coruisk), they must at least admit that Mr. Johnson has never painted the noble scenery of the Highlands with greater skill or with a truer feeling for its grandeur. Art and sport seldom pull so well together as in this fine series of pictures. This is partly because Mr. Johnson is something of a sportsman as well as more than something of an artist, and knows not only how to handle a rod or a gun but how they look when they are handled properly. It is, however, the clever choice of subject, the artistic selection of the most pictorial as well as the most exciting moments which is of chief importance in conciliating his double ranks of critics.

All Mr. Johnson's larger pictures are successful. In one we see a fisherman casting his fly over the "Fank Pool" in the river Orchy—not only a lovely but a "likely" spot (12). In another, a stalker and his gillie, hidden by masses of rock and the slope of the mountain, have just come within shot of a fine stag who raises his head as if sniffing danger (5). In a third, "Grouse shooting, Argyleshire" (23), the shot has been fired, not without success. But none of these exceed in beauty the more peaceful scene of "The Sanctuary" (29), where the deer wander secure from the intrusion of the hunter. This is a beautiful picture of sunny slopes high among the hills, swept with the shadows of moving clouds. The scene is full of light and atmosphere, the colour pure and cool, and the deer are well drawn and charmingly grouped. Here Mr. Johnson's knowledge of the mountains, and his skill in drawing them, is displayed to unusual advantage. The whole design is fine and large, and the modelling of the broadly swelling slopes leaves little to be desired. To this or to "Deer Stalking" (5) we are inclined to give the palm. The latter is very fine in composition and rich in colour. As might be expected, the sport of deer-stalking affords the most numerous and most romantic "subjects." Nearly every incident of the day is recorded, from the early start to the bringing home of the deer. "Going to the Hills" (2), though one of the quietest, is remarkable for the fine painting of the broken foreground, its cool rich colour and perfect irradiation; "A Morning Start" (4), for its softly shadowed hills standing out so clearly, not against but under, the brilliant sky; and "Bringing home the Stag," for the well-drawn figures of the stalwart gillie and his horse winding with practised feet down the steep stony road. Nearly every picture or study has some charm of its own—of subject or design, of choice colour or atmospheric effect. Some fine qualities are common to all of them, and among these brightness and purity of colour are conspicuous.

On the whole, this is a remarkable summer's work, and one which cannot fail to raise Mr. Johnson's reputation as an artist. Throughout all the thirty-eight pictures and studies (though there are few which do not merit the former name) there is no sameness. There is great variety if we take the deer-stalking series alone, but if we include in our view the many other sports illustrated—grouse-shooting, heron-shooting, wild-duck-shooting, woodcock-shooting, salmon-fishing, trout-fishing, yachting—and add to these the pure studies from nature like the lovely "Moonlight Ramble" (18) and the "Seal Rock" (25), the unusual width of Mr. Johnson's range must be acknowledged. Moreover, it is all genuine individual work, the result of careful study and keen observation of nature.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

A NEW MEZZOTINT.

WE presume that the charming face which looks out upon us from the beautiful mezzotint just sent us by Messrs. Buck & Reid is that of Christine Antoinette Charlotte Desmarest, and not of Mary Desmarest, better known as "La Champmeslé," the wife of the actor Charles Cheville (Sieur de Champmeslé), and the mistress of Racine. She has little of the air of a tragedy queen, this sprightly and withal simple beauty—scarcely that of an actress. Unaffected, though doubtless a little vain of the plump and tapering fingers of the hand on which Mr. Norman Hirst has spent so much dexterity, she seems more fit to wear a dainty slipper than a tragic buskin, or even the high-heeled shoes in vogue when Louis XIV. was king. Yet she is said to have filled the gap when her aunt La Champmeslé died, taking her place in "Oreste," and to have subsequently created the parts of Athalie and Semiramis. But—and this is more easily to be believed from this vivacious portrait by Santerre—she was equally good in comedy, and played the rôle of soubrette with sprightliness and charm unrivalled. The portrait is unusually attractive for many reasons. Among the lesser may be cited the costume with the ruff round the bare neck, and the unusual choice by the painter of a "horizontal" canvass for a half-length figure. The plate is pleasant also as a fresh sign that the fine old art of mezzotint is being revived in real earnest by hands which appreciate its distinct qualities. The picture was in the Lonsdale collection, and is a fine example of a painter little known in England. It is, or was, to be seen at the publishers' gallery in Bond Street.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

WE hear that Mr. Mitchell's well-known collection of early German drawings, which includes Dürers and Holbeins of importance, will be sold under the hammer before the season is far advanced.

THE exhibitions to open next week include a series of pictures and drawings of "Royal Berkshire," painted by three of the Royal British Artists—Messrs. Yeend King, John M. Bromley, and J. M. Macintosh—at Messrs. Dowdeswell's galleries in New Bond Street; and an unusually representative collection of the works of Daubigny, at the Goupil Gallery.

ON Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of next week Messrs. Sotheby will sell a miscellaneous assortment of coins, medals, tokens, &c. Most of the coins are English; but there is also included a consignment of Greek and Roman pieces from the Levant. The compiler of the catalogue should not have perpetuated the form "aes graveæ."

MR. EDWIN SEWARD lately delivered at Cardiff an interesting lecture on the earlier methods in English water colour; and his discourse was illustrated by a selection of drawings lent by Mr. Pyke Thompson, from the Turner House, Penarth, and likewise by examples which are the property of Mr. Seward.

Now that Mr. M. H. Spielmann's paper on Critics and Artists has been published in the Magazine of Art, we are better able than we were, when the reading of it at Edinburgh had been but briefly reported, to judge of its real character; and we confess we appreciate, even more than we had expected to do, its qualities of comprehensiveness and insight. While Mr. Spielmann is as ready as anybody to acknowledge the utility of a painter's criticism as bearing upon particular points or upon the work of an artist with whom he may chance to be in sympathy, he does justice to the value of that detachment from a particular line of practice which is within the scope of the literary critic alone. The "value" of literary criticism—nay, more, its indispensableness—Mr. Spielmann, unlike a certain fashionable painter, is too intelligent to "deny." And, among minor matters bearing on the question, Mr. Spielmann points out, with admirable vivacity, that the painter's frequent contempt for what he calls "anonymous" criticism savours of affectation—the painter knowing as well as it is possible to know who is the writer of any criticism of mark in an important organ of opinion, wherein, of course, "the veil of the anonymous" is, so to say, of the very finest Indian muslin. This is but one point, and it is not a great one; but it is long since the question of the relations of critics and practitioners of painting has been threshed out so thoroughly as it has been by Mr. Spielmann.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

ON Tuesday night, Mr. John Lawrence Toole bade farewell to the English public at a last performance at his own theatre; and he starts immediately for Australia, where it is many years since an artist of Mr. Toole's popularity has appeared. Mr. Toole—whom London will regret as much by reason of his qualities as a man as because of his success as a comedian—has become, quite recently, an expert in farewells. When we write these lines a farewell has still to be said by him at an entirely public banquet; but he has already said a farewell to the members of the Savage Club; he has said another farewell to the assembled members of the Green Room Club; and he has—we trust with many pangs—said farewell, at a large afternoon tea, to half the actresses of mark and charm upon the London stage, and to other friendly ladies besides. Australia is now, for a time at least, to have the satisfaction of counting among its guests an actor of wholesome and ever genial humour, of true observation, and of much maturity of method. Less accomplished than Mr. Toole himself in the art of saying farewell, let us, with whatever naïveté and want of finish in this matter may necessarily be perceptible, wish him, heartily, good-bye.

"New Lampe for Old" is the name of Mr. Jerome K. Jerome's new piece at Terry's Theatre, where—during Mr. Terry's prolonged absence—Miss Cissy Grahame will reign. Miss Grahame has already appeared with success in a shorter play by the same author, produced at another theatre; and—having in view, moreover, Mr. Jerome's uncontested popularity as a writer of the lighter fiction and of light essays—it is not surprising that Miss Grahame should have desired to open her present campaign by producing a new play from the wielder of so acceptable a pen. It is a little doubtful, however, whether Mr. Jerome has got quite enough story, or quite enough ingenious complication of incident, to properly occupy the number of acts into which he has cast his play. And, again, it is a little doubtful whether either the extinguished Mr. Postlethwaite—who flourished long ago in Punch—or Henrik Ibsen, whose followers have "talked him up" to very little purpose as yet in England, is quite a sufficiently important personage to inspire the dramatist with three acts of satire. Neither Ibsen nor Mr. Postlethwaite is present, just now, to many men's minds. So far as England is concerned, each perhaps has had his "day"—or as much of it, it may be, as he was entitled to. But this fact, though it affords reason for questioning whether the of basis Mr. Jerome's comedy be sufficiently substantial, affords no reason whatever for denying to the author of the new piece his fertility of resource and his humour of conception and dialogue. Certainly Mr. Jerome is an observer of life as well as of other men's fads about life. Much may be hoped for from him at the theatre. His chief characters—who, as in a satire of this sort they are in duty bound to do, prefer, as a rule, other people's husbands and wives to their own—are represented by Mr. Nutcombe Gould, Miss Cissy Grahame, Mr. F. Kerr and Miss Gertrude Kingston. And all these artists act brightly enough, though one of them—Miss Kingston—is too apt to temper with palpable exaggeration the display of an undoubted talent. For Mr. Penley there is perhaps not quite enough to do. Still, as an eccentric comedian, he is a man of infinite resource; and he only has to appear upon the scene—especially if the scene happens to be a lift—to give men pleasure. Miss Houston and Mr. Lestocq give considerable assistance to the piece in parts which are not of the most prominent. And the piece will very likely do well; for, though it may not be a very large public which will care about its social satire, farcical comedy is in fashion, and this farcical comedy is at least merrily stirring. And Mr. Jerome is in fashion also; and, though his own method is at least as exaggerated as is that of any one of his actors, he, too, has a good deal in him, and the public has not taken to him wholly without cause.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

MR. HENSCHER, anticipating the anniversary of Wagner's death, gave special prominence to that master's music at his fifth Symphony Concert on February 6, and familiar excerpts were rendered in a highly impressive manner. The programme included Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony—a work specially suitable on such an occasion. Here again the conductor displayed zeal and discretion. There was a large and enthusiastic audience. We never doubted Mr. Henschel's intelligence or musical feeling; but we have often thought him too demonstrative, thinking perhaps rather of the music than of his men. He now shows more dignity and command, and the Symphony Concerts seem indeed as if they were about to enter on a prosperous career.

Sir Charles Hallé gave his fourth and last concert on the following evening. The excellent violins again distinguished themselves in Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture. A finished rendering of Wagner's "Siegfried Idyl" followed. Three movements from Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite were delightfully performed. The characteristic "In the Halls of the Mountain King" was repeated. Sir C. Hallé has not yet set his face against the encore system. Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins afforded a strange but effective contrast to the preceding music. The performance by M^{me}. Néruda and Herr Willy Hess was admirable, and called forth loud and prolonged applause. The programme concluded with Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. For the first time, we imagine, this work has been given at St. James's Hall two nights in succession.

Herr Stavenhagen was pianist at the first Crystal Palace concert of the new year on Saturday afternoon, February 8. He played Liszt's paraphrase of "Dies Irae" accompanied by the orchestra. We have already had occasion to notice this piece, the difficulty of which is only exceeded by its ugliness. The programme book refers to it as a "highly prized master-work of pianism, orchestration, and musical construction"; but in this description the writer shrewdly omits to say anything about the character of the music. That Herr Stavenhagen should admire Liszt's compositions is only natural; but he should learn that, at any rate in London, the public do not share his enthusiasm. He played magnificently, but the piece was coldly received. The programme included a Concert Overture "To the Memory of a Hero," by Mr. Claudius E. Couldery. The music is well written, and the composer handles the orchestra effectively; but there is no marked character either in the ideas or in the mode of development. A fine performance was given of Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, and of Gluck's Overture to "Iphigénie en Aulide," with Wagner's appropriate ending. M^{me}. Hope Glenn was the vocalist. Mr. Manns met with an enthusiastic reception.

Brahms's Trio in E flat major (op. 40), for pianoforte, violin, and wald-horn was performed for the first time at the Popular Concerts on Saturday afternoon last, and repeated on the following Monday evening. The combination is an unusual one, and perhaps not altogether satisfactory, but the music is of marked interest. The opening movement, with its alternation of dreamy and lively moods, the deeply pathetic Adagio meno and the spirited finale are highly impressive. The Scherzo pleases us least. The work was magnificently interpreted by Sir C. Hallé, M^{me}. Néruda and Mr. Paersch. The fine horn-playing of the last named deserves special recognition. Sir C. Hallé performed Beethoven's Sonata in F sharp major in his best manner. The programme included some of Heller and Ernet's charming Pensées Fugitives.

Miss Geisler-Schubert and Miss Fillunger gave the first of two chamber concerts at Prince's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. Miss Geisler, a grand-niece of Franz Schubert, paid us a visit last season, and then her intelligent and refined rendering of works by that composer proved her worthy of the honoured name which she inherits. On Wednesday she took part in Schubert's Pianoforte Trio in E flat (op. 100). Herr Strauss and Mr. Whitehouse were her associates. She played well, but was more successful in the passages displaying finish and charm than in those demanding depth and grandeur. The long finale was given without the usual cut. This was perhaps unwise, seeing that her programme included another long work by Schubert—the Sonata in B flat. In this all her good qualities as pianist were brought out to advantage. Miss Fillunger, accompanied by Miss Geisler, sang songs by Brahms, and Robert and Clara Schumann. For the latter she was encored, and gave with much feeling Schumann's "Widmung." Her rendering of Brahms' "Meine Lieder" also deserves mention. There was a good attendance.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

Now ready, price 3s.

THE JOURNAL of the ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND, Vol. XIX., Part III., FEBRUARY, 1890.

Contains Papers by Dr. JOHN BEDDOE, F.R.S.; the Rev. JAMES MACDONALD; and Prof. A. C. HADDON: Anthropological Miscellanea.

London: TRUBNER & Co., Ludgate Hill.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY.

ADMISSION FREE.

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.
(About 30 doors West of Mudie's Library.)

THE GREAT MASTERS.—Botticelli, Lorenzo di Credi, Francia, Michael Angelo, Raffaello, Titian, Da Vinci, Correggio, Rembrandt, Van Dyke, Murillo, &c., REPRODUCED IN AUTOTYPE, Permanent Photography, from the grand Works in the Louvre, Hermitage, Uffizi, Madrid, St. Petersburg, the National Gallery, London; the Royal Collections at Windsor and Buckingham Palace.

The various Galleries have separate Albums, easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of art. Visitors are welcome to come and study them, and will not be solicited to make purchases.

For further particulars, send for the new Pamphlet, 40 pages and Four Illustrations, entitled "AUTOTYPE, a Decorative and Educational Art." Free per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post for 6d

AUTOTYPE BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY offer their services to AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS to produce by the Autotype Process Book Illustrations of the highest excellence of any subject capable of being photographed.

Amongst the WORKS RECENTLY DONE may be cited Wyon's "Great Seal of England"; Dr. Crookshank's "Micro-Photographs of Bacteria"; "Famous Monuments of Central India," for Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.S.I.; "Facsimiles of Early Italian Engravings," for the Trustees of the British Museum; "The Palaeographical Society's Facsimiles for 1889"; Illustrations for the "Journal of the Hellenic Society," &c.

For specimens, prices, and full particulars, apply to the MANAGER.

AUTOTYPE PROCESS.

The AUTOTYPE PROCESS applied to Photographic Engraving on copper.

Portraits from Paintings by Pettie, R.A., Onions, R.A., Holl, R.A.; Specimens of Copies of Drawings, Engravings, &c.; and Examples of Auto-gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, from Life, and from Nature, can be seen at the AUTOTYPE GALLERY.

Estimates and particulars on application.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, W.C.

FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.

President.—Mr. ANDREW LANG.
Director.—Mr. G. L. GOMME

The Publications of the Society are as follows:

- I. The Folk-lore Record, Vol. I. 8vo, pp. xvi, 252. 1878.
- II. Notes on the Folk-lore of the NORTHERN COUNTRIES of ENGLAND and the BORDERS. By WILLIAM HENDERSON. A New Edition, with considerable Additions by the Author. 8vo, pp. xvii, 301. [Published at 21s.] 1879.
- III. The Folk-lore Record, Vol. II. 8vo, pp. viii, 250; Appendix, pp. 21. 1880.
- IV. Aubrey's Remains of Gentilisme and JUDAISM, with the ADDITIONS. By Dr. WHITE KENNET. Edited by JAMES BRITTON, F.L.S. 8vo pp. vii, 273. [Published at 13s. 6d.] 1880.
- V. The Folk-lore Record, Vol. III. Parts I, II. 8vo, pp. 318. 1881.
- VII. Notes on the Folk-lore of the NORTH-EAST of SCOTLAND. By the Rev. WALTER GREGOR. 8vo, pp. xii, 288. [Published at 13s. 6d.] 1881.
- VIII. The Folk-lore Record, Vol. IV. 8vo, pp. 230. 1882.
- IX. Researches respecting the Book of SINDIBAD. By Prof. DOMENICO COMPARETTI. Pp. viii 167. PORTUGUESE FOLK-TALES. By Prof. Z. CONSIGLIERI PEDROSO, of Lisbon. With an Introduction by W. R. S. RALSTON, M.A. Pp. ix, 124. In 1 vol. 8vo. [Published at 15s.] 1882.
- X. The Folk-lore Record, Vol. V. 8vo, pp. 220. 1883.
- XI. Folk-lore Journal, Vol. I. [Published at 18s.] 1883.
- XII. Folk-Medicine. By William George BLACK. 8vo, pp. ii, 227. [Published at 13s. 6d.] 1884.
- XIV. Folk-lore Journal, Vol. II. (Issued Monthly.) [Published at 18s.] 1884.
- XV. The Religious System of the Amazulu. By the BISHOP of ST. JOHN'S, Kaffraria. 1885.
- XVI. Folk-lore Journal, Vol. III. (Issued Quarterly.) [Published at 20s.] 1885.
- XVII. Folk-lore and Provincial Names of BRITISH BIRDS. By the Rev. C. SWAINSON, 8vo, pp. viii, 243. [Published at 13s. 6d.] 1886.
- XVIII. Folk-lore Journal, Vol. IV. (Issued Quarterly.) [Published at 20s.] 1886.
- XIII. Magyar Folk-Tales. By the Rev. W. H. JONES, and LEWIS H. KROFF. 8vo, pp. lxvii, 431. [Published at 15s.] 1887.
- XIX. Folk-lore Journal, Vol. V. (Issued Quarterly.) [Published at 20s.] 1887.
- XX. Folk-lore Journal, Vol. VI. (Issued Quarterly.) [Published at 20s.] 1888.
- XXI. Studies on the Legend of the Holy GRAIL, with special reference to the HYPOTHESIS of its CELTIC ORIGIN. By ALFRED NUTT. 8vo, pp. xii, 281. [Published at 10s. 6d.] 1889.
- XXII. Folk-lore Journal, Vol. VII. (Issued Quarterly.) [Published at 20s.] 1889.
- XXIII. Gaelic Folk and Hero Tales from ARGYLLSHIRE. Edited and Translated by the Rev. D. MACINNES. With a Study on the Development of the Ossianic Saga and copious Notes by ALFRED NUTT. [Immediately.]

The Publications for 1890 will comprise Prof. CHANE's Annotated Translation of the Exempla of Jacques de Vitry; the Society's Journal. Folk-lore (issued quarterly), &c.

Among other Publications in hand for future years are:—The Denham Tracts, edited by Mr. HARDY; An English Version of the Mythical Portion of Saxo Grammaticus, edited by Mr. ELTON and Mr. YORK-POWELL; Folk-lore Excerpts from the Mediaeval Chroniclers, &c.

The Subscription to the Society is 21s. This entitles to receipt of the year's publications and attendance at the meetings. Back publications are procurable upon payment of back subscriptions, such publications as have a price affixed to them are also purchasable separately.

A Prospectus, fully setting forth the aims of the Society and giving detailed contents of the publications, may be had on application to the Honorary Secretary, Mr. J. J. FOSTER, 114, New Bond-street.

PUBLISHER, D. NUTT, 270, STRAND.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready, in 1 vol., royal 8vo, handsomely bound, gilt edges, 31s. 6d.
LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONET-AGE for 1890. Under the special patronage of Her Majesty, and Corrected by the Nobility. Fifty-ninth Edition. With the Arms beautifully engraved.

"Messrs. Hurst & Blackett have just published the new edition of this well-known work of reference, revised and enlarged for the year 1890. 'Lodge's' which has now been before the world for more than sixty years, has always been distinguished by some special feature among which is the care expended on the engraved armorial bearings which are placed at the head of each genealogical family record."—Daily News, Dec. 31st, 1889.

"Lodge's Peerage and Baronetage" comes this year in its fifty-ninth edition, and worthily upholds its established reputation for accuracy, comprehensiveness, and clearness of arrangement. All the changes in the peerage which took place before the middle of December are duly recorded. The volume is, in fact, a well-stored repository of all useful knowledge relating to the titled classes of the realm."—Daily Telegraph, Jan. 9th, 1890.

Now ready, in 1 vol., demy 8vo, with a Portrait of the Author, price 12s.
BENCH and BAR: Reminiscences of one of the last of an Ancient Race. By MR. SERJEANT ROBINSON. Second Edition.

"Full of amusing anecdotes, pleasing recollections, and interesting comments, the book, which contains an excellent portrait of the author, promises to become as popular as Serjeant Ballantine's famous volume."—Globe.

NEW NOVELS.

Now ready at all the Libraries.

PART of the PROPERTY. By Beatrice WHITBY, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Feewick." 3 vols.

A LADY HORSEBREAKER. By Mrs. CONEY. 3 vols.

A MARCH in the RANKS. By Jessie FOTHERGILL, Author of "The First Violin," "Kith and Kin," &c. 3 vols.

"There is a wholesome atmosphere of refined middle-class life which makes the book pleasant reading, while the characters are well drawn, and the incidents neither unnatural nor strained."—St. James's Gazette.

CAST OUT. By Maurice Gerard 3 vols.

"Mr. Maurice Gerard gives us an interesting story, written with much descriptive power."—World.
"The plot is well constructed, and the author manages to excite interest in the fortunes of two generations."—Morning Post.

HER HEART'S DESIRE. By H. PLOTHERO LEWIS. 3 vols.

"Despite its somewhat old-fashioned tone, it is a pretty and winning tale."—Morning Post.

A HARDY NORSEMAN. By Edna L'ALL, Author of "Don van," "We Two," &c. 3 vols.

"On the whole we may say that all the quiet power we praised in 'Donvan' is to be found in the new story. And the humour, though never demonstrative, has a charm of its own. It is not Edna L'All's plea to give her readers much elaborate description, but when she does describe scenery her picture is always alive with vividness and grace."—Athenaeum.

NORMAN AND I. By Kate Cousins. 3 vols.

"The author's pictures of the fairy land in which 'Norman and I' gradually arrive, through renunciation and asceticism, to the highest moral level are often extremely pretty."—Morning Post.

A HAPPY WOOING. By H. Cliffe HALLIDAY. 3 vols.

"A lively story, written in a rare, sprightly fashion, and with a well-developed plot which is full of interest."—Literary World.

SELECTIONS FROM

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

Each in a Single Volume, price 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX."
JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.
CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.
A NOBLE LIFE.
HANNAH.
THE UNKIND WORD.
A BRAVE LADY.
STUDIES FROM LIFE.
YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "SAM SLICK."
NATURE and HUMAN NATURE.
THE OLD JUDGE; or, Life in a Colony.
WISE SAWS and MODERN TRAITS of AMERICAN HUMOUR.
THE AMERICANS at HOME.

BY DR. GEORGE MACDONALD.
DAVID ELGINBROD.
ALEC FORBES.
ROBERT FALCONER.
SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.
ADAM GRAEME.
LIFE OF IRVING.
LAIRD OF NORLAW.
A ROSE IN JUNE.
AGNES.
PHEBE, JUNIOR.
IT WAS A LOVER and HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT (LIMITED).

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

Nearly ready, Complete Edition, in handsome crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., post free.

THE POEMS OF WILLIAM LEIGHTON.

Illustrated by John Leighton.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., post-free.

THE POETS AND PEOPLES OF FOREIGN LANDS.

By J. W. CROMBIE.

CONTENTS.

THE FOLK-POETRY OF SPAIN. By KLANA GROTH.
A ROYAL MOORISH POET. By STARRING VAN DEN WILDEM-BURCH.

"Mr. J. W. Crombie's volume on 'The Poets and Peoples of Foreign Lands' is a genuine and substantial contribution to the belles lettres; it really is calculated to add to the general knowledge and appreciation of literary work. Mr. Crombie supplies not only criticism but biographical data and translations of the poems quoted, and while his verse is neat and accurate, his prose is flowing and pleasant. His book is altogether very readable and informing, and is calculated to instruct as well as delight."—Globe.

MRS. PIATT'S POEMS.

In crown 8vo, tastefully printed and elegantly bound, price 3s. 6d., post free.

THE WITCH in the GLASS, and other Poems. By Mrs. PIATT, Author of "A Voyage to the Fortunate Isles, &c." "Child's-World Ballads, &c." (Published in the United States by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., New York and Boston, price 1 dollar.)

"There is no need at this time of day to assert her claim to recognition on our side of the Atlantic—has not her genius been honoured by a hundred pens? It is just this feminine insight, this fortunate tact in thought and phrase, that gives her verses their unique and incommunicable charm."—Athenaeum.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 3s. 6d.; also in vegetable parchment, 2s. 6d., post free.

A BOOK of GOLD, and other Sonnets. By J. J. PIATT, Author of "A Dream of Church Windows," &c.

Now ready, tastefully printed and bound in cloth, price 6s., post free.

BLOOMS and BRAMBLES. A Book of Verses. By EDGAR FAWCETT.

"A volume of rare beauty; all 'bloom' and no 'bramble.'"—Unicorn.
"Very gracefully conceived; much music and richness of fancy."—Graphic.

"So admirable in their ordering, so French (where to be French is good) in construction, so coloured and precise in imagery, often expressive and subtle."—Athenaeum.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., post free.

POEMS. By George Thomas Coster.

New Edition, Revised, with Additions.

Now ready, tastefully printed and bound, price 2s., post free.

NOW and THEN. Poems. By A. F. HEATON, B.A., Cantab.

CONTENTS.—Reverie—The City of the Soul—Emmanuel.

"One cannot read but with deep interest poems which bear, as the three contained in this slight volume do, the impress of a mind profoundly earnest and concentrated. The poems are didactic to the very roots."—Manchester Examiner.

In tasteful demy 16mo cloth, price 2s., post free.

SORROWS of ANGLO-INDIAN LIFE. By a SUFFERER. With Eight Wood Engravings.

In fcap. 8vo, cloth 2s. 6d., post free.

OCCASIONAL POEMS. By L. J., Author of "Sketches from the Heart," &c.

"A gentle spirit and graceful thoughts pervade the little book."—Christian.
"Every thought is expressed with elegance and force."—Family Churchman.

Now ready, fcap. 8vo, olive cloth, 2s. 6d., post-free.

SHAKESPEARE'S SKULL and FALSTAFF'S NOSE. A Fancy in Three Acts. By BELGRAVE TITMARSH.

"From first to last ingenious and witty."—Morning Post.
"The general vein of satire is well worked. Oxford Chronicle.
"Echo." "The whole thing is very well done; the details are carried out in true Shakespearian style, and the interest is awakened and kept up by the skilful introduction of just as many of Shakespeare's own terms of expression as serve to give a judicious flavour."—Manchester Examiner.

In crown 8vo, cloth, 5s., post-free.

LOUIS the ELEVENTH. A Drama. By JOHN ARTHUR COUPLAND, Author of "Acteon, and other Poems."

"Mr. Coupland has skilfully and artistically woven into a play an important episode in the relations of France and Burgundy of the time of Charles the Bold; many of the situations are effective, and the theme is worked out with simplicity and good taste."—Graphic.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, E.C.

WILL BE PUBLISHED IN MARCH.
THE ANNALS of the BARBER-SURGEONS of LONDON. Compiled by SIDNEY YOUNG. Numerous Illustrations. Demy 4to. Necessary to all who wish to understand the early history of Surgery in England. To subscribers, £1 11s. 6d. After publication, £2 7s. The large paper copies at £3 8s. have been all taken up. Among the subscribers are H.M. the Queen, the Royal College of Surgeons, Royal Colleges of Physicians at London and Edinburgh, Science and Art Department, London, &c.

BLADES, EAST, & BLADES, 28, Abchurch Lane, London

NOW READY.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL MISCELLANIES. No. 1. On the Development of Signatures, with two facsimile illustrations. 88pp. 8vo. By WILLIAM BLADES. Post free on receipt of 1s. 6d.

BLADES, EAST, & BLADES, 28, Abchurch Lane, London.

Just ready, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.; or calf, gilt edges, 10s. 6d. Illustrated with 800 Coats of Arms.

DEBRETT'S HOUSE OF COMMONS AND JUDICIAL BENCH.

CORRECTED TO PRESENT SESSION. Over 400 pp.

DEBRETT'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE, AND COMPANIONAGE for 1890.

NOW READY.

London DEAN & SON, 180A, Fleet-street, E.C.

Now ready, at all Libraries and Booksellers.

Cloth, handsomely bound, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

By MADAME CARENTE.

Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

THE EVE of an EMPIRE'S FALL.

Being Intimate Recollections of the Court of the Tuileries.

Third Edition. By Same Author. Price 6s.

MY MISTRESS, the EMPRESS EUGENIE.

London DEAN & SON, 180A, Fleet-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.

To be had of all Booksellers', price 8s. 6d., in 1 vol., with Frontispiece, cloth, gilt.

COUNTRESS IRENE,

A Romance of Austrian Life.

By J. FOGERTY, Author of "Robert Loeman's Daughters," "Lauterdale," and "Caterina."

"Exceedingly artistic in design and execution." Graphic.

"It contains all the good qualities of a novel." Saturday Review.

J. S. VIRTUE & Co., Limited, 26, Ivy-lane, E.C.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. F. R. BENSON.
 Every Evening, at 8, Thursdays and Fridays excepted, Shakespeare's Fairy Comedy, with the Mendelssohn incidental Music.
 A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

MATINEES of A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, every Saturday and Wednesday. Doors open at 2.30. Overture, 2.15. No fees. Every Thursday and Friday Evening, at 8, until further notice, Shakespeare's Comedy, THE TAMING OF THE SHREW, and on THURSDAY AFTERNOON, FEB. 20, at 2.30.—GLOBE THEATRE.

EPPS'S

(BREAKFAST)

COCOA.

GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING

MADE SIMPLY WITH BOILING WATER OR MILK

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET, MAYFAIR, W.

THERE IS
 No Nourishment in Tea or Coffee
 but
PLENTY IN COCOA especially in
VAN HOUTEN'S
 which
 UTILISES IN THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE DEGREE
 All the Flesh-forming Elements
 while Developing the Flavour and Aroma.
 ORIGINAL PATENTORS.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

CATALOGUES POST-FREE.

S. FISHER, 188, 8 STRAND.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

Established 1783.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5 lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Webber House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

MEMORY. A. LOISETTE'S

SYSTEM.—"I was impressed with the possibilities of improvement to Memory which your Lectures in Cambridge opened up."—R. N. Ingle, M.A., M.D., University Lecturer (Jan., '90). "Physiological, scientific."—Dr. Andrew Wilson (April, '88). "We again recommend the system."—Dr. Wilson (Jan., '89). "Great advantage to strong memory, incalculable aid to weak one."—Dr. Buckley. "Excellent travelling companion."—Capt. J. B. Hays, R.N.—Apply 87, New-Oxford Street, London.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
 FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."

Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE

DURING the EARLY and MIDDLE AGES. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D. New Edition. Demy 8vo. 18s.

"It will be perceived that Dr. Cunningham's book is one of exceptional interest and usefulness. It cannot be too highly praised. It is characterised by research and thought, by a remarkable power of marshalling the varied facts in the vast field which has been traversed, and by singular clearness and felicity of expression." Scotsman.

AN ATLAS of COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY, to Illustrate

Dr. MILL'S Elementary Commercial Geography. By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. With an Introduction by Dr. H. R. MILL. Royal 4to, price 3s.

"The Atlas is, so far as we know, the first work of its kind devoted entirely to a subject which is becoming very much to the front. The Maps are very tastefully executed and the general physical aspects of the regions dealt with are well brought out."—Times.

POLITICAL PARTIES in ATHENS DURING the PELO-

PONNESIAN WAR. By L. WHIBLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge (Prince Consort Dissertation, 1888). Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. (Cambridge Historical Essays Series).

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on QUATERNIONS.

By P. G. TAIT, M.A. Demy 8vo. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 18s.

SOPHOCLES.—THE PLAYS and FRAGMENTS. With Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation in English Prose. By R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., LL.D., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge.

NOW READY.

PART II. OEDIPUS COLONEUS. Demy 8vo. Second Edition, 12s. 6d.

PART I. OEDIPUS TYRANNUS. Demy 8vo. Second Edition, 11s. 6d.

PART III. ANTIGONE. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. New Edition [Preparing.]

PART IV. PHILOCTETES [In the press.]

DEMOSTHENES.—LEPTINES. Edited by J. E. Sandys,

Litt.D., Public Orator in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo. [Nearly ready.]

Pitt Press Mathematical Series.

EUCLID'S ELEMENTS of GEOMETRY.—Books I. and II.

By H. M. TAYLOR, M.A., Fellow and formerly Tutor of Trinity College. 1s. 6d.

Pitt Press Series.

HOMER.—ODYSSEY, BOOK XXI. With Introduction,

Notes, and Appendices. By G. M. EDWARDS, M.A. 2s.

LIVY.—BOOK IV. With Introduction and Notes. By

H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

LIVY.—BOOK V. With Notes and Introduction. By

L. WHIBLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College. 2s. 6d. [Shortly.]

PLUTARCH.—LIFE of TIMOLEON. With Introduction,

Note, and Lexicon. By Rev. HUBERT A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. 6s.

EURIPIDES.—IPHIGENEIA in AULIS. By C. E. S.

HEADLAM, B.A., Fellow of Trinity Hall. 2s. 6d.

MOLIERE.—LES PRECIEUSES RIDICULES. With Inroduction and Notes. By E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. 2s.

RACINE.—LES PLAIDEURS. With Introduction and

Notes. By E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D. 2s.

XAVIER DE MAISTRE.—LA JEUNE SIBERIENNE.

LE LEPREUX de la CITE d'AOSTE, with Biographical Notice, Critical Appreciations and Notes. By the late G. MASSON, B.A. 1s. 6d.

RIEHL.—CULTURGESCHICHTLICHE NOVELLEN. With

Grammatical, Philological, and Historical Notes, and a Complete Index. By H. J. WOLSTENHOLME, B.A. (Lond.). 3s. 6d.

SCHILLER.—WILHELM TELL. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by KARL HERMANN BREUL, M.A., University Lecturer in German. 2s. 6d.

BRITISH INDIA, A short HISTORY of (Uniform with Dr. MILL'S "Elementary Commercial Geography.") By Rev. E. S. CARLOS, M.A., late Head Master of Exeter Grammar School. With a Map. 1s.

The Smaller Cambridge Bible for Schools.

THE FIRST BOOK of SAMUEL. By the Rev. Prof.

KIRKPATRICK, B.D. With Map. 1s.

THE SECOND BOOK of SAMUEL. By the Rev. Prof.

KIRKPATRICK, B.D. With Map. 1s.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MATTHEW. By the Rev. A. CARR, M.A. With Map. 1s.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MARK. By the Rev.

G. F. MAULEAR, D.D. With Map. 1s.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. LUKE. By Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D. With Map. 1s.

COMPLETE CATALOGUES ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE,

AVE MARIA LANE.

GLASGOW: 263, ARGYLE STREET.

PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

Just published, fcap. 4to, half-parchment, rough edges, 5s.

ECHOES from the OXFORD MAGAZINE: being Reprints of Seven Years.

"* * The Poems and Parodies which make up this volume have been selected from a large number of fugitive pieces which have appeared in the columns of the 'Oxford Magazine'—which has had some distinguished contributors since its first issue in January, 1883. This collection is the first which has appeared of its kind in Oxford for many years. Its contents are mainly comic, but some of the pieces are among the best Latin and Greek Parodies which have been produced."

"Bright, pretty, and clever, and not a bit donnish, though largely written by dons."—St. James's Gazette.

"Everyone can thoroughly enjoy the delightful cleverness which is manifest on every page."—University Extension Journal.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, AMEN CORNER, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

PARIS EXHIBITION, 1889.—The CLARENDON PRESS obtained the ONLY GRAND PRIZ and TWO out of the five GOLD MEDALS awarded to British Printers and Publishers.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW LIST.

NEW WORK BY PROFESSOR DRIVER.

Just Published, 8vo, cloth, 14s.

NOTES on the HEBREW TEXT of the BOOKS of SAMUEL.

With an Introduction on Hebrew Palaeography, and the Ancient Versions, and Facsimiles of Inscriptions, by the Rev. S. R. DRIVER, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford.

NEW VOLUME OF THE CLARENDON PRESS. BOTANICAL SERIES.

Just Published, crown 8vo, cloth, 10s.

HISTORY of BOTANY (1530-1860). By Julius Von Sachs,

Professor of Botany in the University of Wurtzburg. Authorised Translation by H. E. F. GARNSEY, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Revised by I. BAYLEY BALFOUR, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Botany, Edinburgh.

NEW EDITION OF MARKBY'S ELEMENTS OF LAW.

Just Published Fourth Edition, 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

ELEMENTS of LAW CONSIDERED with REFERENCE to PRINCIPLES of GENERAL JURISPRUDENCE. By SIR WILLIAM MARKBY, K.C.I.E., D.O.L., late a Judge of the High Court of Judicature at Calcutta. Reader in Indian Law in the University of Oxford, Fellow of All Souls and Balliol Colleges.

NEW BOOK BY MR. J. Y. SARGENT.

Just Published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

MODELS and MATERIALS for GREEK IAMBIC VERSE.

By J. Y. SARGENT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Hertford College, Oxford.

"* * The special feature of the book is the method which it suggests of teaching Greek Iambic composition by reference to parallel passages in Greek Poets."

Just Published, crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled, gilt top, 8s. 6d.

THE ISLANDS of the ÆGEAN. By the Rev. Henry

FANSHAWE TOZER, M.A., F.R.G.S., Fellow and Tutor of Exeter College, Oxford, Editor of Byron's "Child Harold." Includes Visits to Delos, Rhenea, and Tenos; Crete; Naxos, Ios, and Sikinos; Santorin, Antiparis, and Paros; Lesbos; Chios; Samos; Patmos; Rhodes; Lemnos; Thasos; Samothrace. With Maps, &c.

UNIFORM WITH "SHAKESPEARE AS A DRAMATIC ARTIST."

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

THE ANCIENT CLASSICAL DRAMA: a Study in Literary Evolution. Intended for Readers in English, and in the Original. By RICHARD G. MOULTON, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge, University (Extension) Lecturer in Literature, Author of "Shakespeare as a Dramatic Artist."

"A popular and scholarly presentation of the main ideas which underlie the Ancient Classical Drama."—University Extension Journal.

NEW WORK BY PROFESSOR LUIGI OREMONA.

Just ready, 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

GRAPHICAL STATICS. Two Treatises on the Graphical

Calculus and Reciprocal Figures in Graphical Statics. By LUIGI OREMONA, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Rome, Foreign Member of the Royal Society, Authorised English Translation by T. HUDSON BEARE, Professor of Engineering, Heriot-Watt College, Edinburgh.

NEW WORK BY DR. GARDINER.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 8s.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL DOCUMENTS of the PURITAN

REVOLUTION, 1688-1689. Selected and Edited, with an Historical Introduction, by SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, M.A., LL.D., Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, &c.

"* * The Documents in this volume are intended to serve either as a basis for the study of the Constitutional History of an important period, or as a companion to the Political History of the time. The Constitutional Bill of the first Protectorate Parliament has never before been printed."

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the COMPARATIVE GRAMMAR of GREEK and LATIN. By J. E. KING, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Lincoln College, Oxford, and C. COOKSON, M.A., late Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, Assistant Master at St. Paul's School, London; Joint-Authors of "Principles of Sound and Inflection, as Illustrated in the Greek and Latin Languages."

SECOND EDITION, Revised and much Enlarged.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

GOLDEN TREASURY of ANCIENT GREEK POETRY:

being a Collection of the Finest Passages in the Greek Classic Poets. With Introductory Notices and Notes by R. S. WRIGHT, M.A., Honorary Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. Second Edition, Revised and much Enlarged, by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Balliol College, Oxford.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues sent free on application.

LONDON:

HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 929.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

Intending Investors who have already written for Shares or Debentures are informed that no applications can be recognised unless made upon the official forms accompanying the Prospectus, which will be obtainable in due course from the Bankers, Brokers, and Secretary of the Company.

THE ANGLO-AUSTRIAN PRINTING & PUBLISHING UNION, LIMITED.

SHARE AND DEBENTURE CAPITAL, £750,000,

CONSISTING OF

25,000 EIGHT PER CENT. CUMULATIVE PREFERENCE SHARES OF £10 EACH;

25,000 ORDINARY SHARES OF £10 EACH; AND

2,500 FIRST MORTGAGE DEBENTURE BONDS OF £100 EACH,

BEARING INTEREST AT THE RATE OF SIX PER CENT. PER ANNUM.

LONDON BROKERS:

Messrs. HAGGARD, HALE, & PIXLEY, Stock Exchange, and 26, Austinfriars, London, E.C.

WILLIAM H. HART, Esq., Stock Exchange, and 24, Austinfriars, London, E.C.

Specimens of the Work of the various Firms may be seen at 21, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

ST. JOHN WINNE, Sec. (pro tem.),

12 & 14, CATHERINE STREET, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE EARLY DIARY OF FRANCES BURNBY, by W. P. COURTNEY	135
TODD'S PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT IN ENGLAND, by JAMES GAIRDNER	136
WATSON'S WORDSWORTH'S GRAVE, AND OTHER POEMS, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	136
THREE BOOKS ON CENTRAL FRANCE, by the Rev. WENTWORTH WEBSTER	137
BLITHE'S LIFE OF WILLIAM ELLIS, by Prof. EDGEWORTH	138
NODAL'S BIBLIOGRAPHY OF ACKWORTH SCHOOL, by W. E. A. AXON	139
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE	139
RECENT THEOLOGY	139
NOTES AND NEWS	139
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	139
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	139
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A REVIEWER'S REMORSE," by R. LE G.	139
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	139
ROBERT BROWNING'S FIRST SONNET, by Mrs. C. BRIDELL-FOX	139
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	139
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Some Points of English Orthography in the Twelfth Century, by Prof. Napier; A New Medicinal Legend of Virgil, by Prof. Crane; Teichmüller's Definition of "Eidolon," by A. W. Bonn; The Washington Pedigree, by an American	139
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	139
THE PLAYS OF AMORYLUS, by E. D. A. MORSEHEAD	139
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A Babylonian Word "Ammatu," by the Rev. Dr. Owen O. Whitehouse	139
SCIENCE NOTES	139
PHILOLOGY NOTES	139
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	139
TWO ANTIQUARIAN BOOKS	139
THE GLASGOW INSTITUTE OF THE FINE ARTS	139
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A Phœnician Inscription in Cyprus, by D. Pierides	140
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	140
STAGE NOTES	141
BOOKS ON MUSIC, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	141
RECENT CONCERTS	142
MUSIC NOTES	141

A NEW LITERARY CLUB.

THE WALDEN CLUB, 15, Buckingham-street, Adelphi.—Meetings for Discussion of Literary, Artistic, and Social Subjects. 20TH INST. "French Revolution." Present Subscription, 19s. 6d. So soon as circumstances permit Permanent Rooms will be engaged.—Prospectus on application to J. F. L. WHELAN (Hon. Sec.), 73, Pall-mall-road, N.W.

SHAKESPEARE READING SOCIETY.—

Founded 1875.

President—Mr. HENRY IRVING.

The FOURTH ANNUAL READING will be given at the LONDON INSTITUTION, Finsbury Circus, E.C., on WEDNESDAY, the 26th February, 1890, at 8 P.M., precisely.

"MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING."

Rehearsed under the direction of Mr. Wm. Poel.

Tickets, One Shilling each. Early application for Tickets should be made to the Hon. Sec., 16, Stanley-gardens, Kensington Park, W.

AUTHORS and ARTISTS

of ability may for a moderate investment in shares obtain admission to the Paid Staff of Signed Contributors of a popular Illustrated Magazine. Specimens of MSS. and Pen-and-Ink Drawings invited.—Address Magazine, 1, St. Swithen's-lane, London, E.C.

PRIVATE SECRETARY.—LADY desires

RE-ENGAGEMENT. Latin, French, German, Shorthand. Rapid writer. Knowledge of Political and Social movements. Highest references.—C. D. M., 4, Gray's Inn Residences, E.C.

TO AUTHORS.—MESSRS. DIGBY &

LONG, PUBLISHERS, 15, Boulevard-street, Fleet-street, London, E.C., are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. Digby & Long have also every convenience and ample facilities for the publication of MAGAZINES. Editorial officers if required.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHOR'S MSS.,

PLAYS, and all kinds of COPYING executed quickly and accurately. Terms, 1s. per 1,000 words. Satisfaction guaranteed. Shorthand taught (Secret System). Schools attended. Terms moderate.—Address F. BAILEY 19, Albert-square, Stratford, E.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

MISS BRAHAM, late of INGLENOOK, DORKING, has just removed to PIXHOLME, DORKING, and has now space for an additional number of BOYS to train for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Miss Braham is assisted by a Graduate of Oxford University, and by other responsible Teachers, and pays especial attention to Physical Education. Her gymnasium is fitted with the latest apparatus by Herr Stempel, who will give weekly lessons. Inclusive terms 50 or 100 guineas a year according to age.

References remitted to

Miss Buss, North London Collegiate School, N.W.

Rev. J. F. E. Fanning, M.A., King's College, Cambridge.

TERM commenced MONDAY, JANUARY 20TH.

Will be published early in March. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

OUR TITLE DEEDS: A DEFENCE of the CHURCH AGAINST DISENDOWMENT. Being a reply to Mr. Miall's Book, "Title Deeds of the Church of England to her Endowments," by Rev. MORRIS FULLER, M.A., Rector of Ryburgh; Author of "Our Established Church," "Letters on the Disestablishment Question," an Essay on "The Church of England: its History and Claims on the Nation," "Court of Final Appeal," "Lord's Day, or Christian Sunday," "Life, Times, and Writings of Dr. Thos. Fuller," "Pulpit Sparks," "Voice in the Wilderness," &c., &c. Dedicated, by permission, to the Earl of Selborne.

TWO NEW NOVELS.

2 vols., crown 8vo, price 21s.

ON DANGEROUS GROUND: a Novel by the Author of "Crane Court." A love story, the scenes of which are laid chiefly on the banks of the Thames. The heroine, May Denison, is a simple English girl, and it is with her and her immediate surroundings that the story has to deal.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

GLENATHOLE: a Novel. By Cyril Grey.
GRIFFITH, FARRAN, OKEDEN, & WELSH, LONDON.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—

This Society will MEET on WEDNESDAY EVENING, the 26TH INST., at 8 o'clock, at their ROOMS, 21, DELAWARE STREET, ST. JAMES'S PARK, when a Paper by Mr. WALTER T. ROGERS, F.R.S.L., will be read on "BOOKS, their TRANSMISSION and PRESERVATION."

E. GILBERT HIGHTON, M.A., Secretary.

FOLKLORE SOCIETY.

The NEXT EVENING MEETING will be held at 21, ALBEMARLE STREET, on TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 25TH, at 8 p.m., when Papers will be read by W. G. BLACK on "LEGENDS of the ISLAND FRISIANS," and by E. & H. HARTLAND, F.R.S., on "LADY GODIVA."

J. J. FOSTER, Hon. Sec.

THE NEWBURY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

A Monthly Review and Family Magazine for Churchmen and Churchwomen.

ILLUSTRATED. Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS OF THE MARCH NUMBER.

THE PART PLAYED BY WALES in the HISTORY of the ENGLISH CHURCH. By the Rev. GRIFFITH ROBERTS.

THE PARISH and the MANOR SIX HUNDRED YEARS AGO. By the Rev. Prebendary RANDOLPH.

LADY-DAY CAROL. (Illustrated.) By W. CHATTERTON DIX.

EMINENT CHURCHMEN.—I. Rev. JOHN KEELE.

SEQUENCE for the ANNUNCIATION of B.Y.M. From the Forum Missal. By W. JEWITT.

"FREE EDUCATION: how will it affect the Church of England?"

ANTONY VAN DYCK. Part II. (Illustrated.) By G. S. MACQUOID.

THE EARTH as a PLANET. Part II. (By H. CLEMENTS.)

SKETCHES IN CEYLON.—I. The Tomasha at Ratna-pura. By the Rev. W. WOOD, D.D.

MONT DORE les BAINS. By ROSE KINGSLEY.

"THE BISHOPS' BIBLE." Chapters XXI, XXII. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY and H. HIRMAN.

"SWEET CONTENT." (Continued.) Chapters VII, VIII. (Illustrated.) By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

JACQUES MERMET: a Short Story. By Mrs. MACQUOID.

Sermon Outlines—Instructions on the Creed—Biblical Questions—Correspondence—Reviews—"Useful Books" List, &c.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, London.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

Established 1788.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipes and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,

Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY.

ADMISSION FREE.

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(About 30 doors West of Mudd's Library.)

THE GREAT MASTERS.—Botticelli, Lorenzo di Credi, Frauda, Michael Angelo, Raffaello, Titian, Da Vinci, Correggio, Rembrandt, Van Dyke, Murillo, &c., REPRODUCED IN AUTOTYPE, Permanent Photography, from the grand Works in the Louvre, Hermitage, Uffizi, Madrid, Sistine Chapel, the National Gallery, London; the Royal Collections at Windsor and Buckingham Palace.

The various Galleries have separate Albums, easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of art. Visitors are welcome to come and study them, and will not be solicited to make purchases.

For further particulars, send for the new Pamphlet, 40 pages and Four Illustrations, entitled "AUTOTYPE, a Decorative and Educational Art." Free per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE, 185 pp., free per post for 6d.

AUTOTYPE BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY offer their services to AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS to produce by the Autotype Process Book Illustrations of the highest excellence of any subject capable of being photographed.

Amongst the WORK RECENTLY DONE may be cited Wyon's "Great Seals of England"; Dr. Crookshank's "Micro-Photographs of Bacteria"; "Famous Monuments of Central India," for Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.B.; "Facsimiles of Early Italian Engravings," for the Trustees of the British Museum; "The Palaeographical Society's Facsimiles for 1889"; Illustrations for the "Journal of the Hellenic Society," &c.

For specimens, prices, and full particulars, apply to the MANAGER.

A U T O - G R A V U R E .

The AUTOTYPE PROCESS applied to Photographic Engraving on copper.

Portraits from Paintings by Pettie, R.A., Unwin, R.A., Holl, R.A.; Specimens of Copies of Drawings, Etchings, &c.; and Examples of Auto-gravure Reproduction of Photographs from Art Objects, from Life, and from Nature, can be seen at the AUTOTYPE GALLERY.

Estimates and particulars on application.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, W.C.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—NOTICE

to ARTISTS.—THE DAYS for RECEIVING PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, &c., are FRIDAY, SATURDAY, and MONDAY, MARCH 25TH, 26TH, and 27TH, and for SCULPTURE, TUESDAY, APRIL 1ST. Forms and Labels can be obtained from the Academy during the month of March on receipt of stamped and directed envelope.

DAUBIGNY EXHIBITION.—

Messrs. BOUSSOD VALADON & CO., the GOUPIE GALLERY, 116 and 117, NEW BOND STREET, beg to invite COLLECTORS and CONNOISSEURS to view their EXHIBITION of the WORKS of C. F. DAUBIGNY, one of the principal masters of the Barbizon School of Painters. Also "The Vallée de la Touques," the chef d'œuvre of C. Troyon. Open from 9 till 6. Admission One Shilling, including Catalogue.

EXCHANGE or SELL ANYTHING which you do not now want through "THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART." The best terms obtained easily, cheaply, quickly, and safely. Price 2d. of all newswatches; or specimen copy for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

BARGAINS in every description of Personal

Property can be secured through "THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART," which also contains a considerable quantity of interesting and useful literary matter on a great variety of subjects, especially addressed to Amateurs in Art, Music, Literature, Science, Mechanics, Gardening, House-keeping, Management of Poultry, Dogs, Goats, Cage Birds, and Pets generally. Price 2d. of all newswatches; or specimen copy for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

WILL BE PUBLISHED IN MARCH.

THE ANNALS of the BARBER-SURGEONS of LONDON. Compiled by SIDNEY YOUNG. Numerous Illustrations. Demy 4to. Necessary to all who wish to understand the early history of Surgery in England. To subscribers, £1 11s. 6d. After publication, £2 1s. The large paper copies at £3 8s. have been all taken up. Among the subscribers are H.M. the Queen, the Royal College of Surgeons, Royal Colleges of Physicians at London and Edinburgh, Science and Art Department, London, &c.

BLADES, EAST, & BLADES, 28, Abchurch Lane, London

NOW READY.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL MISCELLANIES. No. 1. On the Development of Signatures, with two facsimile Illustrations. 8pp. 8vo. By WILLIAM BLADES. Post free on receipt of 1s. 6d.

BLADES, EAST, & BLADES, 28, Abchurch Lane, London.

Just ready, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.; or calf, gilt edges, 10s. 6d. Illustrated with 800 Coats of Arms.

DEBRET'S HOUSE OF COMMONS AND JUDICIAL BENCH.

CORRECTED TO PRESENT SESSION. Over 400 pp.

DEBRET'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE, AND COMPANIONAGE for 1890.

NOW READY.

London DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet-street, E.C.

Now ready, at all Libraries and Booksellers.

Cloth, handsomely bound, crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

By MADAME CARENTE,

Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

THE EVE of an EMPIRE'S FALL.

Being Intimate Recollections of the Court of the Tuileries.

Third Edition. By Same Author. Price 6s.

MY MISTRESS, the EMPRESS EUGENIE
London DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet-street.

NOW READY.

To be had of all Booksellers, price 8s. 6d., in 1 vol., with Frontispiece, cloth, gilt.

COUNTRESS IRENE,
A Romance of Austrian Life.

By J. FOGERTY, Author of "Robert Leeman's Daughters," "Lauterdale," and "Caterina."

"We have not read a more agreeable story for a long time."—Illustrated London News.

"A charming story, with some highly dramatic incidents."—Westminster Review.

J. S. VIRTUE & Co., Limited, 26, Ivy-lane, E.C.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

TRIAL BY COMBAT.

By GEORGE NIELSON.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS & NORGATE.
Glasgow: W. HODGE & Co.

1890.

NOW READY.

Thirtieth Annual Publication. Price 50s., elegantly bound.

Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

THE COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM: a Royal Manual of the Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. Containing Notices of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Heads of Families in the United Kingdom, their Heirs-Appeant or Presumptive, together with a Record of the Patronage at their disposal, the Offices which they hold or have held, their Town Addresses, Country Residences, Clubs, &c.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

NEW NOVEL, AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

REDEEMED in BLOOD. By LADY FLORENCE DIXIE. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d. "Incarnates the author's well-known theories about the education and position of women. The way is paved for various thrilling adventures."—Times. "There is real grit in the book."—St. Stephen's Review.

London: HENRY & CO., 6, Boulevard-street.

Now ready, at all Booksellers. 700 pages. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

HAZELL'S ANNUAL, 1890.—A Cyclopedic Record of Men and Topics of the Day. Re-written to date. Contains over 3,500 Original Articles by Eminent Specialists on every question now before the public.

"An extraordinary amount of information at a low price....We can imagine few volumes more useful to place on the table of the reading-room of a public library or of a mechanics' institute."—Academy.

LONDON: HAZELL, WATSON, & VINEY, LD., 1, CECIL LANE, E.C.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

New ready, tastefully bound in cloth, 9s.

THE LIBRARY.

VOLUME FOR 1889.

Full of valuable matter to the Librarian, the Bibliographer, and the Student.

Now ready, in handsome crown 4to, 7s. 6d. post free.

THE ANTIQUARY.

VOLUME THE TWENTIETH.

A Magazine devoted to the Study of the Past.

"The Antiquary of to-day fills the place occupied by the Gentleman's Magazine in the days of our grandfathers."—Academy.

Now ready, strongly bound in cloth, 7s. 6d. post free.

THE BOOKWORM.

VOLUME FOR 1889.

An Illustrated Treasury of Old-Time Literature for all Book-Lovers.

"This second volume is full of valuable information, anecdotes, stories of old booksellers, collectors, and a vast amount of entertaining, amusing, and instructive reading."—Newcastle Chronicle.

In crown 8vo, tastefully printed and bound in cloth, and published at 4s. 6d.

The KING'S BOOK of SPORTS:

a History of the Declarations of King James I. and King Charles I. as to the Use of Lawful Sports on Sundays, with a Reprint of the Declarations and a Description of the Sports then Popular. By L. A. GOVETT, M.A., Oxon.

Contents.

1. KING JAMES I.
2. THE DECLARATION or BOOK of SPORTS.
3. SPORTS of the TIME, LAWFUL and UNLAWFUL.
4. THE REISSUE of the BOOK of SPORTS.
5. THE RESULTS of the REISSUE.

UNIFORM WITH THE FIRST SERIES.

Antique Paper, cloth, 7s. 6d.; Hand-made Paper, Roxburgh, 12s. 6d.; Large-Paper Copies, 21s. each net.

THE SECOND SERIES OF

YORKSHIRE LEGENDS and TRADITIONS. By the Rev. THOMAS PARKINSON, F.R.Hist.S., Member of the Surtees Society, of the Yorkshire Archaeological and Topographical Association, Vicar of North Otterington, &c.

Tastefully printed in 8vo, and handsomely bound in cloth, £1 1s.

The ANCIENT LAWS of

WALES, viewed especially in regard to the Light they throw upon the Origin of some English Institutions. By the late HUBERT LEWIS, B.A., of the Middle Temple, formerly Scholar of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, Author of "Principles of Conveyancing," "Principles of Equity Drafting," and Editor of "Goldsmith's Equity." Edited, with a Preface, by J. E. LLOYD, Lecturer in History and Welsh at the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth.

THE FIRST VOLUME IS NOW READY.

In 2 handsome vols., demy 8vo, tastefully printed and bound in Roxburgh, 250 Copies, £3 13s. 6d. 25 Copies have been printed on LARGE PAPER, £6 6s. net, each Copy being numbered and signed.

BOYNE'S TOKENS. Issued in England, Wales, and Ireland in the Seventeenth Century, by Corporations, Tradesmen, and Merchants. A New and greatly Augmented Edition, with Notes of Family Heraldic and Biographical Interest respecting the various Issuers of the Tokens, and connecting them with important families of the present day. Illustrated with Engravings and Plates. Edited by G. C. WILLIAMSON.

Tastefully printed and bound, 6s., post free.

INDEX to the FIRST VOLUME of the PARISH REGISTERS of GAINFORD, in the COUNTY of DURHAM. Part II. MARRIAGES, 1560—1784.

"Although at first sight this work may not appear to have any practical utility, it is likely to prove of great value to students of old parish life in England, and also to those who wish to refer for genealogical purposes to the register."—Morning Post.

Now ready, royal 8vo, stiff covers, 3s. 6d.

"THINGS of INDIA" MADE

PLAIN; or, a Journalist's Retrospect. (To consist of Four Parts, or Two Volumes.) By W. MARTIN WOOD, formerly Editor of the Times of India and of the Bombay Review.

Part III. Section 5.—FINANCE: Imperial, Provincial, Anglo-Indian.

"Mr. Wood is here giving his countrymen the benefit of the close and practical interest he has taken in Indian questions, which he discusses in a candid spirit, and with evidence of thorough mastery."—Liverpool Albion.

"Marked by fulness of knowledge and a broad and intelligent view of the questions he discusses."—Manchester Guardian.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.COURT LIFE UNDER the PLAN-

TAGENETS (Henry II.). By HUBERT HALL, F.S.A. of H.M. Public Record Office. With 5 Illuminated Plates, 4 Facsimile Plates in Tint, and 39 Contemporary Cuts. Large 8vo, 15s. "A surprisingly successful reproduction of the life of England in the reign of Henry Anjou. Of striking interest and genuine value."—Scotsman.

Also, BY THE SAME AUTHOR, large 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THIRD EDITION of

SOCIETY in the ELIZABETHAN

AGE. With numerous Coloured and other Plates from Contemporary Drawings, and a large folding Coloured Map of London in the 16th Century. "Students of Elizabethan literature may well rejoice in the recent addition to their libraries of Mr. Hubert Hall's highly interesting and most useful work."—Professor W. HALLS in the Academy. "People who wish to understand the manners and customs of our ancestors of the sixteenth century as they really were, and not as they ought to have been, cannot do better than read it."—Truth.

ROBERT OWEN: LIFE (1771-1858).

TIMES, and LABOURS of. By LLOYD JONES. Edited by W. CAIRNS JONES. With Portraits, &c., 6s. "He laboured for the people, he died working for them, and his last thought was for their welfare."

COMPARATIVE GRAMMAR of GREEK and LATIN. Edited, from the French of Prof. VICTOR HENRY, by R. T. ELLIOTT, M.A., late Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford. With a Preface by Prof. H. NETTLESHIP. 7s. 6d. "A much-needed work."—Prof. SAYCE. "No better book has appeared."—Classical Review.

HABIT and HEALTH: a Book of Golden Rules for Middle Age. By GUY BEDDOES. With special reference to Ailments besetting Professional and Business Men. 3s. 6d.

OFFICIAL TOUR through BOSNIA and HERZEGOVINA. By J. DE ASBOTH. With a very large number of Plates and Cuts. Imperial 8vo, 21s. "Promises much to the archaeologist and historian, the student of primitive literature, poetry, and laws, and the searcher after picturesque scenery and customs."—Scotsman. "A most valuable work....Profusely illustrated."—Athenaeum.

THE HISTORY of PHILOSOPHY,

By Dr. J. E. ERDMANN. Translated by several English and American Scholars, and Edited by Prof. W. S. HOUGH. I. ANCIENT and MEDIEVAL. 15s. II. MODERN. 15s. III. SINCE HEGEL. 12s. "The best general history to be got."—Scotsman.

NEW EDITION, THOROUGHLY REVISED, 7s. 6d.

CYCLOPEDIA of EDUCATION.

Contributed to by many of the most eminent Educational Specialists.

SECOND EDITION (within one year) of

THE PAGEANT of LIFE: an Epic of Man. By GEORGE BARLOW. 4s. 6d. "That wonderful book, which has created so great a sensation in the literary world."—Vanity Fair. "Few will withhold admiration from its lofty thoughts and splendid diction."—Daily Telegraph. "Has made its mark, and is bound to create a deep and lasting impression."—Birmingham Mail. "Of undoubted power, and quite exceptional poetic merit."—Post. "Full of beauty and rich in music."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MORGANTE, the LESSER. By Sirius.

6s. A prose satire upon the literary fashions, the philosophic theories, the political doctrines, and the modes and manners of the present times.

SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES. Each 2s. 6d.

10. SOCIALISM in ENGLAND. By

SIDNEY WEBB, LL.B. Development of Socialist Ideal. Rise of English Socialist Movement, English Socialist Organisations, Socialism in the Churches, Socialism at the Universities, Socialism in Political Economy, Parliamentary and Municipal Socialism, Socialism in Politics. With full references to recent publications.

1. WORK and WAGES.....Thorold Rogers.2. CIVILIZATION: Cause and Cure.....E. Carpenter.*3. QUINTESENCE of SOCIALISM.....Dr. Schaffé.

"Readily the manual needed. Brief, lucid, fair, and wise."—British Weekly.

4. DARWINISM and POLITICS.....D. G. Ritchie, M.A.5. RELIGION of SOCIALISM.....Belfort Bax.*6. ETHICS of SOCIALISM.....Belfort Bax.*7. DRINK QUESTION.....Dr. Kate Mitchell.*8. PROMOTION of GENERAL HAPPINESS.....Michael

MACMILLAN.

9. ENGLAND'S IDEAL, &c.E. Carpenter.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co., Paternoster-row, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of the PRINCESS LIEVEN and EARL GREY. Translated and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GUY LE STRANGE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with portraits, 80s.

LETTERS WRITTEN during the REIGN of LOUIS the FOURTEENTH, forming the CORRESPONDENCE of MADAME DU NOYER. Now first Translated from the Original by FLORENCE LAYARD. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with Notes and Portraits, 80s.

THE FIRST of the BOURBONS. By CATHERINE CHARLOTTE LADY JACKSON. Author of "Old Paris," &c. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with portraits, 24s.

SARDINIA and the SARDES. By CHARLES EDWARDS. Author of "Letters from Oreste." In demy 8vo, 14s.

A HUNTER'S WANDERINGS in AFRICA: a Narrative of Nine Years spent amongst the Game of the Far Interior of South Africa. With Accounts of Explorations beyond the Zambesi, on the River Ochoe, and in the Matabele and Mashona Countries. By FREDERICK COURTNEY SELOUS. With Nineteen Full-page Illustrations by J. Smit, E. Whymper, and Miss A. B. Selous. New and Cheaper Edition. In 1 vol., 8vo, 18s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

NOTICE.—A New Story by Rhoda Brighton, entitled, "ALAS!" and one by Mrs. Annie Edwardes, entitled, "PEARL POWDER," commenced in the JANUARY Number of the TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE. Now ready, price One Shilling.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."
A HEAVY RECKONING.

By E. WERNER,
Author of "No Surrender," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN UGLY DUCKLING."
BY WOMAN'S FAVOUR.

By HENRY ERROLL,
Author of "The Academician," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

By the Author of "THE PHANTOM FUTURE."
SUSPENSE.

By H. S. MERRIMAN,
Author of "Young Mistley," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

STRANGE GODS. By Constance COTTERELL. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A charming play of wit and humour, a lively, fresh, and engaging style and a sympathetic tone are the attractions of this novel."—Illustrated London News.

ALSO A NEW EDITION.

AN UGLY DUCKLING. By Henry ERROLL. Author of "The Academician," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s. Forming the latest addition to "BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Mr. GEORGE ALLEN (of Orpington), Publisher of Works by Prof. RUSKIN, Mr. AUGUSTUS J. C. HARE, &c., &c., has opened London Premises at 8, BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, W.C.

Some of the later Editions are appended below:—

BY JOHN RUSKIN.

NOW READY.

Small post 8vo, cloth, each 8s.; or in roan, gilt edges, each 7s. 6d.

SESAME and LILIES. A Small Edition, containing only the Two Lectures, "King's Treasures" and "Queen's Gardens," and a New Preface. Tenth Edition.

MUNERA PULVERIS. Six Essays on the Elements of Political Economy.

TIME and TIDE, by WEARE and TYNE. Twenty-five Letters to a Working Man of Sunderland on Laws of Work.

THE CROWN of WILD OLIVE. Four Essays on Work, Traffic, War, and the Future of England. With Article on the Economy of the Kings of Prussia. Third Edition.

QUEEN of the AIR: a Study of the Greek Myths of Cloud and Storm.

THE TWO PATHS. Lectures on Art and its Application to Decoration and Manufacture. Delivered in 1858-59. With a New Preface and Added Note.

"A JOY for EVER" (and its PRICE in the MARKET). The Substance of Two Lectures on the Political Economy of Art. With New Preface and Added Articles.

THE EAGLE'S NEST. Ten Lectures on the Relation of Natural Science to Art.

LECTURES on ART. Delivered at Oxford in 1870. Revised by the Author, with a New Preface.

WILL BE READY ABOUT MARCH. Small post 8vo, cloth, each 7s. 6d. Small complete Editions, with all the Plates of

THE SEVEN LAMPS of ARCHITECTURE.

1. The Lamp of Sacrifice.—2. The Lamp of Truth.—3. The Lamp of Power.—4. The Lamp of Beauty.—5. The Lamp of Life.—6. The Lamp of Memory.—7. The Lamp of Obedience.

The 14 Plates for this Edition have been specially prepared.

ARATRA PENTELICI. Six Lectures on the Elements of Sculpture. With 1 Engraving on Steel and 20 Plates by the Autotype Process.

1. Of the Divisions of Art.—2. Idolatry.—3. Imagination.—4. Likeness.—5. Structure.—6. The School of Athens

ARIADNE FLORENTINA. Six Lectures on Wood and Metal Engraving, and Appendix. With 4 Full-page Facsimiles from Holbein's "Dance of Death," and 12 Autotype Plates.

1. Definition of the Art of Engraving.—2. The Relation of Engraving to other Arts in Florence.—3. The Technique of Wood Engraving.—4. The Technique of Metal Engraving.—5. Design in the German Schools of Engraving (Holbein and Dürer).—6. Design in the Florentine Schools of Engraving (Sandro Botticelli).—7. Appendix.

VAL D'ARNO. Ten Lectures on Art of the Thirteenth Century in Pisa and Florence. With 1 Steel Engraving and 12 Autotypes.

IN THE PRESS, a NEW WORK on FRANCE, with 600 Illustrations, in 4 vols., cloth, 10s. 6d. each.

NORTH-EASTERN FRANCE and SOUTH-EASTERN FRANCE will be ready about Easter.

NORTH-WESTERN FRANCE and SOUTH-WESTERN FRANCE are also in preparation.

LISTS POST FREE.

GEORGE ALLEN, ORPINGTON, KENT; AND 8, BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, W.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

New Novels at all Libraries.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.

By WILLIAM BLACK. Author of "A Princess of Thule," "In Far Lochaber," "A Daughter of Heth," &c. 8 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"A remarkably easy book to read... The author's touch has been light all through this long story; but seldom more bright, amusing, pathetic, humorous, and tender."—Yesterday Review.

"A very pretty book indeed; and will help to pass a pleasant hour as any novel of the season."—Truth.

KIT and KITTY: a Story of West Middlesex. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Author of "Lorna Doone," "Clara Vaughan," "Spring-haven," "Cripps the Carrier," &c. Third Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"Kit and Kitty" is a mainly book, with a sort of fine, open delicacy of sentiment, thoroughly wholesome and pleasing."—Athenaeum.

DUCHESS FRANCES: A Novel. By SARAH TYTLER. Author of "Citoyenne Jacqueline," "Saint Mungo's City," "Lady Bell," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s.

IN SATAN'S BONDS: a STORY of LOVE and CRIME. By FREDERICK EASTWOOD. Author of "The Chronicle of Sir Harry Kersleigh, Bart.," "Calumny," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 31s.

Important Works at all Libraries.

OLIVER CROMWELL, the Protector: an Appreciation based on Contemporary Evidence. By REGINALD F. D. PALGRAVE, O.B., Author of "The Chairman's Handbook," &c. Small demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

OUR RECENT ACTORS; being Recollections, Critical, and in many cases Personal, of late Distinguished Performers of both Sexes. With some incidental Notices of Living Actors. By Dr. WESTLAND MARSTON. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Dr. Marston's memoirs of 'Recent Actors' may be recommended as excellent reading... Scholarly, but thoroughly interesting, impartial and wholly genial."—World.

THE LANCASHIRE LIFE of BISHOP FRASER. By JOHN W. DIGGLE, M.A., Vicar of Mossley Hill, Liverpool, Hon. Canon of Liverpool. Author of "Godliness and Manliness," "True Religion," &c.; also Editor of Bishop Fraser's Sermons. Fourth Edition. 1 vol., demy 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"This fascinating biography."—Standard.

THE COLONIAL YEAR BOOK. By A. J. R. TRENDLE, O.M.G., of the Inner Temple. With Introduction by Professor SEELEY. Crown 8vo, 780 pages, cloth, 6s.

"It is a valuable work of reference that deals fully with our trans-oceanic realm, more than eight millions in extent, and describes the commercial aspect, the growth of trade, and the history of each colony."—Daily Telegraph.

JOURNAL of H.M.S. ENTERPRISE on the EXPEDITION in SEARCH of SIR JOHN FRANKLIN'S SHIPS by BEHRING STRAIT, 1830-55. By Captain RICHARD COLLINS, O.B.B.N., Commander of the Expedition. With a Memoir of his other Services. Edited by his Brother, Major-General T. B. COLLINS, R.E. Demy 8vo, with 6 Maps, Portrait, &c., cloth, 14s.

Now ready, Price ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE

MARCH NUMBER.

CONTENTS:

JOHN RUSKIN: an Essay (6 Illustrations). ANNE THACKERAY RITCHIE.

THE ARMY of the UNITED STATES. General WESTLEY MERRITT, U.S.A. Eight Illustrations, drawn by ERNEST P. ZIEGLER.

THE SHADOW of a DREAM: a Story. Part I. WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS.

HOW to LISTEN to WAGNER'S MUSIC. H. E. KREIBEL.

THE NAJA-KALLU, or COBRA STONE. Professor H. HENSLOUT, Ph.D.

VENETIAN BOATS. ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL. Nineteen Illustrations, drawn by JOSEPH PENNELL.

THE WINGED VICTORY of SAMOTHRAE. (Illustrated.) THEODORE CHILD.

ON the SOUTH SHORE: a Story. (Illustrated.) MARGARET CROSBY.

MANILA and its SURROUNDINGS. (Illustrated.) Dr. SAMUEL KNEELAND.

The RESTORED HEAD of IRIS in the PARTHENON FRIEZE. Dr. CHARLES WALDSCHMIDT.

Besides other Stories, Poems, &c., with 70 Illustrations in all.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED), St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1890.

No. 929, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Early Diary of Frances Burney, 1768-78.
Edited by Annie Raine Ellis. In 2 vols. (Bell.)

NUMEROUS as were the members of the Burney family, they all, from father to child, seem to have been possessed by a peculiar pleasure for writing. The father wrote many books, but at his death he left behind him a "countless, fathomless" mass of papers which his famous daughter, than in old age, had to sift and arrange. Her journals of later years are now supplemented by this diary of her youth, the frank expression of the feelings of a typical English maiden. In writing down her thoughts "at the very moment, my opinion of people when I first see them, and how I alter or how confirm myself in it," her nature found its highest happiness, and she eagerly anticipated even then the pleasure with which in after years she would recall to view the reminiscences of past days. Two of her sisters poured forth their unpremeditated thoughts in ample letters or still more profuse journals; and, though many of the sheets were for prudential reasons committed to the flames, sufficient were still preserved to occupy a hundred pages of Mrs. Ellis's second volume. Susan Burney's letters are mainly filled with the opinions expressed by her father, Dr. Johnson, or Mrs. Thrale, after their perusal of Evelina; but one of them contains a lively narrative of her visit to Sir Ashton Lever's museum. The other sister, Charlotte Ann, was instinct with fun, which often bubbled over into audacious gaiety. She paints to the life her interviews with Garrick in 1777, when he took off Dr. Johnson "most admirably"; and with charming naïveté confesses that, in the expectation of an early visit from the delightful mimic, she "for four mornings was up at seven o'clock" only to find herself, borrowing the slang phrases of the day, "choused, for he niekd us entirely, and never came at all." The last was the least discreet of the sisters; but her faults of speech and action were venial when compared with the indiscretion of their relative, the affectionate but thoughtless Maria Allen. In her letters she stands confessed before us without reserve. Her open follies, her secret wishes are set forth in a string of disjointed sentences. Among women she is a parallel to the Alfred Jingle of Dickens.

"Who had I—to converse with the whole evening—not a female friend—none there—not an acquaintance—All dancing—who then—I've forgot—n'importe—I broke my earring—how—heaven knows—foolishly enough—one can't always keep on the mask of wisdom."

This is a fair specimen of her expressions.

At the opening date of these early diaries Frances Burney was a girl of sixteen, and even at that period of her life many of the talents for which she was remarkable were fully matured. She could not spell, as the words "imagination" and "imagination" in the preliminary address to a certain Miss Nobody prove conclusively, but in that respect she did not differ from many of the illustrious personages of her time. Her marvellous power of photographing in her memory and reproducing the idiosyncrasies of those around her, her gift of retaining the conversations that she listened to in her father's house or in the secluded retreat of "Daddy" Crisp at Chessington, and of transmitting them to paper with the characteristic mannerisms of each speaker unimpaired, are conspicuous everywhere, and cannot be gainsaid. In this natural aptitude she finds but one parallel—that of Boswell—and it is strange that the two British people in which this gift has been most marked should have lived at the same period and have moved in the same circles of society. Mrs. Ellis compares her with Letitia, the sprightly daughter of Sir John Hawkins, a lady who wrote three volumes of Reminiscences, which have fallen into undeserved neglect; but Fanny Burney excels this rival in the implicit trust which we repose in the literal accuracy of her anecdotes. Crisp commended the warmth and merits of Fanny's letters, and with well-deserved partiality pronounced her "a very able portrait painter." Occasionally her diary shows a sarcastic side to her character, and she could generalise on the men of half understandings who possessed "too little feeling to be overpowered with diffidence." Her reading, as has been remarked elsewhere, did not include until late in life some volumes which at that time were usually read in girlhood. "I am reading—I blush to say for the first time—Pope's Works," was her own note in 1771 on this curious defect; but it is a feather in her cap that Southey, with his fine taste in literature, practically concurs in her opinion of that once famous work, Mrs. Rowe's Letters from the Dead to the Living.

Fanny's London life began when she was eight years old in her father's house in Poland Street—a street which was then rendered fashionable by the presence of dukes and baronets—but she was soon moved to her stepmother's house in King's Lynn. Life in a country town did not suit her. "Such a set of tittle tattle, prittle prattle visitants" is her sweeping condemnation of its inhabitants. A city or a village were the only places which could make her life permanently happy; but even at Lynn some consolation was found. At the end of the garden was a summer-house, known then as a "look-out or a cabin," and in this solitary building Fanny would spend many hours in committing her thoughts to paper. Soon afterwards Dr. Burney took a house at the upper part of Queen Square in Bloomsbury, with "a delightful prospect of Hamstead and Hygate," through the vacant north of the square, which was left open—as a notice board used, not many decades ago, to tell passers by—in order that the residents might enjoy the distant view of the hills. The father was as full of romance as his daughters, and it pleased him to know that the house in which he dwelt had once been tenanted by Lord Mayor Barber, the jolly old Jacobite who revelled in the friendship of Pope and Swift. He moved to St. Martin's Street, Leicester Fields—"an odious street," writes Fanny, "but well situated"; and his friends averred that the chief reason for taking this step was to dwell in the house which Sir Isaac Newton had built. Wherever they went Fanny kept on scribbling her diaries. Even in the quaint old mansion of Chessington, where she could enjoy to the full the society of her "Granddaddy" Crisp, she contrived to secure for herself a "little gallery cabinet," where without intrusion from others she could create fresh characters at will. Young ladies did not in the last century make autumnal visits every year to the loveliest parts of England; but Fanny has left as an amusing description of social life at the seaside resort of Teignmouth. There she explored, in company with her friends, the prettiest spots in South Devon, and witnessed in their society the races and sports which were designed for the amusement of the visitors. In this retreat she met the worthy dean of Exeter, Dr. Milles, and his family; Vicary Gibbs, then a Cambridge undergraduate, who afterward rose to fill the highest places in the law; and the Hurrells—a name which survives now in connexion with the family of Froude.

These were pleasant acquaintances; but it is in her London life that she met the most illustrious names in music and literature. Dr. Johnson, of course, came to her father's house in St. Martin's Street; and Fanny Burney had her wits sufficiently about her to notice that "he never speaks at all except when spoken to; nor does he ever start, though he so admirably supports, any subject." Garrick was a frequent and ever welcome visitor, ready to throw himself into any theatrical posture or to imitate any notable person from the great Cham downwards. Johnson's imitator, the unfortunate Hawkesworth, visited them not infrequently, and his character was at once analysed by the watchful Fanny. She and her father agreed that their guest's conversation was "talking book language, for I never heard a man speak in a style which so much resembles writing"; but Fanny credited him with "a small tincture of affectation." Years confirmed this impression, for he was "too precise to be really agreeable, that is, to be natural." But the Burney family acknowledged the worth of his character; and, when he died, a victim to public obloquy, she recorded of him that "the world had lost one of its best ornaments, a man of letters who was worthy and honest." Baretti crossed her path once or twice, and is dubbed "a very good-looking man." Poor Kit Smart was another of her father's friends. In his youth the pair were the most intimate companions, and Fanny "ever respected him in his decline." A large number of the literary men of the day hovered around the Burneys, and of them all many amusing traits of character are recorded. Arthur Young could enter their house as often as he liked, for his wife was the sister of the second Mrs. Burney. "Lively, charming, spirited," are the first epithets applied to him; but the sprightliness of his disposition soon passed away as he realised that he had "half undone himself by experiments in farming." The eccentricities of Richard Twiss, who returned from his travels in Spain with some very tall stories, are painted to the life. Shebbeare had been put in the pillory for libel, and is now gibbeted for all time in Fanny's diary. "He is the most morose, rude, gross, and ill-mannered man I was ever in company with. He aims perpetually at wit, though he constantly stops short at rudeness." Many of the musical parties given by the Burneys are described at length, with the exact sayings of the guests who attended them. Prince Orloff, the reputed murderer of Peter III., was brought to them; and the same distinction was conferred on another savage, Omai, the giant from Otaheite. The latter's manners are contrasted favourably with those of Mr. Stanhope, who, with all the advantages of public school life and private instruction from Lord Chesterfield, "proved after all a meer pedantic booby."

These diaries are full of piquant anecdotes, and have been admirably edited by Mrs. Ellis, who feels, and succeeds in imparting to her readers, a genuine enthusiasm for all the members of the family of Burney.

W. P. COURTNEY.

On Parliamentary Government in England; its Origin, Development, and Practical Operation. By Alpheus Todd, Librarian of Parliament for the Dominion of Canada, &c. Second Edition. By his Son. In 2 Vols. Vol. II. (Longmans.)

ON the appearance of the first volume of this important publication, I pointed out (ACADEMY, January 21, 1888) that it deserved to be better known among us in England as a most elaborate and painstaking study of the British Constitution in its actual working. There is, in fact, no book, so far as I know, that gives anything like the amount of practical information on the subject so carefully digested and arranged. And, though the author has been five or six years dead, the pious zeal of his son, animated by the same enthusiasm, has enabled him to supply the very latest information on everything that concerns our system of parliamentary government down to the date of publication. He has, for instance, given in an appendix the new rules of procedure in the House of Commons adopted in February and March, 1888, as well as the latest orders relating to the closure, while in the text he has inserted a brief abstract of the Local Government Act. So that, for anyone requiring information as to the actual process by which government is carried on in this country, either in its legislative, or in its administrative, functions, this book is really the most complete manual that can possibly be consulted.

For it must not be imagined from the title that the legislative functions of government have engrossed the attention of the author to the exclusion of the system of administration. Quite the contrary. The work contains a pretty full exposition of the mode in which the public expenditure is audited and controlled, the regulations affecting the Civil Service, and the position of the judges in relation to the crown and to parliament. Not the least instructive portion of the work is the first chapter of the present volume, treating of the system by which control is exercised over the public expenditure—a system at once so flexible and so exacting as to reduce to a minimum the danger of a misappropriation of public moneys, and at the same time to leave the hands of the government as free as possible to meet immediate and unwonted demands, and even to disburse sums for secret services. The importance of this system has not always been kept in view by our legislators in the framing of new acts of parliament, as was seen in the case of the moneys raised for the use of the post office in relation to telegraphs, which were made payable to the National Debt Office, and thus exempted from the proper control of the exchequer, with results which were exposed by the Committee of Public Accounts in 1873.

In nothing is the importance of a permanent civil service more apparent than in the auditing of public accounts. It was owing to Burke's exertions to promote economy that a board of audit, named by the crown, was constituted by Act of Parliament in 1785. This board was, in 1866, amalgamated with the exchequer, and its functions as a branch of that department considerably enlarged; so that the controller and auditor general of the exchequer now keep check on the prime minister himself by their reports addressed to the House of Commons, and no expenditure can be incurred contrary to established rules without parliament being informed of it. Yet while the strictest rules are laid down against the misapplication of moneys, or the transference of unused balances even from one to another branch of the same service, the Treasury Chest Fund and some other resources are at the disposal of ministers to supply the secret wants of the public service, subject to a confidential audit by the smallest possible number of persons in whom parliament can place confidence.

It is impossible, of course, to do more than glance at the vast range of subjects included under the head of "Parliamentary Government"; and, I fear, it is equally impossible to convey to the reader any idea of the fulness with which each subject is discussed. The first volume, after a few historical chapters, was mainly devoted to matters relating to the sovereign and the royal prerogative. This second volume treats of the Treasury and the Exchequer, and the Standing Committee on Public Accounts; of the Privy Council and the Cabinet; of the relations of the Prime Minister to the Sovereign and to his Subordinates; of the presence of Ministers in Parliament, their functions and responsibilities; of the Post Office, the Home, Foreign, Colonial, and India Offices; also the War Office, Admiralty, Board of Trade, and other public departments, the Government of Scotland, and the relations of the Judges to Parliament and the Crown. How all this vast and complex organism called the State is held together, and how its innumerable functions are preserved in healthy working order, can only be understood by an attentive study of such a book as that which is now before me.

But on this point one thing may be observed. We hear much about democracy nowadays—some dreading it, some (and these the great majority) speaking of it as an actual fact which has now fairly established itself among us past recall. And yet in this very practical treatise (for Dr. Todd is not a theorist, but only a classifier of recorded facts) we find more than half the space taken up with chapters on the crown, the royal prerogative and the crown's ministers, the rest being mainly concerned with the working of departments! Of course, we hear about parliament almost in every page; for the whole subject of the book is parliamentary government. But that which makes parliamentary government a possibility is the royal authority represented in parliament by Her Majesty's ministers; and that the British sovereign personally is by no means a cipher in affairs of state, a careful study of Dr. Todd's pages will show beyond dispute.

An English monarch is, in fact, compelled to be a statesman by the very necessities of his position. He knows more of state secrets than any one of his advisers, because he is privy to the doings of all ministries, Liberal and Conservative by turns. No act that is not of mere routine can pass without his sanction; and though he may be controlled by his ministers and public opinion, he can control them too to a much greater extent than is commonly supposed. His statesmen, indeed, are not more independent than himself; they, too, like everybody else, must limit their aims by possibilities. Even a Russian emperor is not free to govern precisely as he pleases. In all probability the supposed autocrat exercises less personal influence on the destinies of his country than the constitutional monarch. And yet this influence is quite unseen and cannot in the nature of things be oppressive; nay, it is admitted by popular statesmen who have felt it themselves to have been frequently beneficial.

JAMES GAIRDNER.

Wordsworth's Grave, and other Poems. By William Watson. (Fisher Unwin.)

IF Mr. William Watson had written no other poem than "Wordsworth's Grave" he would deserve a distinct place among contemporary writers of verse; for if this poem is scarcely a "new departure," it certainly does not follow the lead of any living poet. Mr. Watson's masters are not of this age—not Tennyson or Browning or Swinburne—nor are they of the age before, notwithstanding his devotion to Wordsworth; it is rather of "Collins's lonely vesper chimes" and the "frugal note of Gray" that we think as we read the choicely worded, well-turned quatrains, which succeed each other like the strong unbroken waves of a full tide. But if we find that other poets, among whom Milton should be included, have had more influence than Wordsworth on his style, the poet of Rydal is the master of his soul and the main inspiration of his verse. Indeed, though this volume contains some other good things, there is nothing in it comparable, as a whole, to "Wordsworth's Grave"; in the other pieces the author never rises to so high a level as when he is singing the praises of his favourite poet, or rather his spiritual king.

"Wordsworth's Grave" first appeared in the National Review. Those who read and admired it, especially those who also knew the author's Epigrams of Art Life and Nature (Liverpool, 1884), will have looked forward with no little interest to the publication of a volume of verse by the same hand, in which "Wordsworth's Grave" would be included. It was scarcely to be expected that this volume should be a large one. It was perhaps scarcely to be wished; for Mr. Watson was evidently an epigrammatist by nature, one who allows his thought to consolidate before utterance into phrases as few and fine as will carry their meaning. The deliberation and the reticence which belong to so reflective a muse are antagonistic to fertility; but yet the slenderness of this volume is something of a disappointment. There was a welcome ready for a larger company.

To publish too little rather than too much is a rare fault, and something of a distinction among verse writers in these days; but it must be admitted that the pieces now published for the first time are few indeed, and strike few, if any, new notes. The best of them are the dedication "To James Bromley, Lancashire," and the final verses to "Professor Dowden on receiving from him The Life of Shelley." Wordsworth is the real theme of both. They express the reason for the faith that is in him, that Wordsworth is greater than Keats and Shelley or any subsequent poet; and they do this in verse that is always melodious, and often marked by an exquisite felicity of phrase. In the former he sings:

"Enough that there is none since risen who sings
A song so gotten of the immediate soul,
So instant from the vital fount of things
Which is our source and goal;
And though at touch of later hands there float
More artful tones than from his lyre he drew,
Ages may pass ere trills another note
So sweet, so great, so true."

This, though good, is not better than the stanzas in "Wordsworth's Grave," of which it is little more than a paraphrase:

"Not such the authentic Presence pure that made
This valley vocal in the great days gone!
In his great days, while yet the springtime played
About him, and the mighty morning shone."

The lines to Prof. Edward Dowden are more encouraging as to the future of Mr. Watson's muse; for, though the burden is substantially the same, the eloquence is tuned to a higher pitch. The concluding verses rise to poetic fervour, if not to passion:

"Shelley, the hectic flamelike rose of verse,
All colour, and all odour, and all bloom,
Steeped in the noonlight, glutted with the sun,
But somewhat lacking root in homely earth,
Lacking such human moisture as bedews
His not less starward stem of song, who, rapt
Not less in glowing vision, yet retained
His clasp of the prehensible, retained
The warm touch of the world that lies to hand,
Not in vague dreams of man forgetting men,
Nor in vast morrows losing the to-day;
Who trusted nature, trusted fate, nor found
An Ogre, sovereign on the throne of things;
Who felt the incumbence of the unknown, yet bore
Without resentment the Divine reserve;
Who suffered not his spirit to dash itself
Against the crags and wavelike break in spray,
But, 'midst the infinite tranquillities,
Moved tranquil, and henceforth, by Rotha's stream
And Rydal's mountain-mirror, and where flows
Yarrow thrice sung or Duddon to the sea,
And wheresoe'er man's heart is thrilled by tones Struck from man's lyric heartstrings, shall survive."

This is well sustained, and is warmed throughout with the smouldering flame of a poet's reflection. It is Miltonic, but the diction suits the theme. Miltonic, also, are some of the sonnets which are collected under the title of "Ver Tenet brosum," but here the antique costume seems out of harmony with the living tragedy of the Soudan War. They are stately and sonorous sonnets, based upon the best models, and as literary exercises worthy of much praise, but they do not stir the blood. The voice that dares to sing the death of Gordon should not need to borrow its cadences from poets that are dead. The following is certainly "fine," but it is academic:

"Arab, Egyptian, English—by the sword
Cloven, or pierced with spears, or bullet-mown—
In equal fate they sleep; their dust is grown
A portion of the fiery sands abhorred,
And thou, what hast thou, hero, for reward,
Thou, England's glory and her shame? O'er-thrown
Thou liest, unburied or with grave unknown,
As his to whom on Nebo's height the Lord
Showed all the land of Gilead, unto Dan;
Judah sea-fringed; Manasseh and Ephraim;
And Jericho palmy, to where Zoar lay;
And in the valley of Moab buried him,
Over against Beth-Peor, but no man
Knows of his sepulchre unto this day."

In the verses called "England to Ireland (February, 1888)" Mr. Watson trusts more to his own voices; and in the first three stanzas sings out so boldly and well that we are led to hope that we have got a really fine patriotic poem from him at last.

"Could we but gaze for an hour, for a minute,
Deep in each other's unfaltering eyes,
Love were begun—for that look would begin it—
Born in the flash of a mighty surprise."

Why did not Mr. Watson stop there, and spare our imagination the attempt to realise that extraordinary mixture of flame and granite which would, in his opinion, result from the flight of the night-bird of error.

Among the miscellaneous poems a few short ones will be found, like "World Strangeness" and "The Flight of Youth," which are unusually neat expressions of individual feeling. But, taking his published work as a whole, it is as a poetical critic of poets, with a turn for epigram, that Mr. Watson is most to be distinguished from his fellow artists in verse, while, more than most of them, he deserves the name of poet is plain even from his epigrams. Here are four lines to prove it, though (probably on account of the awkward third line) he has not thought fit to reprint them in this volume:

"Adieu, white brows of Europe! sovereign brows
That wear the sunset for a golden tiar,
With me in memory shall your phantoms house
For ever, whiter than yourselves, and higher."

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

THREE BOOKS ON CENTRAL FRANCE.

The Roof of France; or, the Causses of the Lozère. By M. Betham-Edwards. (Bentley.)

Our Home in Aveyron. By G. Christopher Davies and Mrs. Broughall. (Blackwood.)

Les Cévennes, et la Région des Causses. Par E. A. Martel. Avec 140 Gravures. (Paris: Delagrave.)

THESE three books draw attention to the natural beauties of Central France, which, until quite lately, have been strangely neglected by tourists. The two English volumes treat also of peasant property, and the condition of agriculture in the central departments. Mr. Davies adds some valuable information on the mining population. But these works are of very different value. The first is written by a practised writer, almost avowedly to pay the expenses of her journey. We have in it all the factitious enthusiasm of the ecstatic tourist determined to applaud and to make a wonder out of everything. The exaggeration begins with the introductory remarks, and is kept up without intermission to the end.

The object of Miss Betham-Edwards's tour was to visit the Causses of the Lozère, and to descend the Cañon of the Tarn. The book consists of 327 pages; but we arrive at p. 209 before we read "I was on my way to the Causses at last." All before this is simply book-making. The difficulty of reaching the Causses and the Cañon of the Tarn is absurdly magnified. Miss Betham-Edwards tries hard to persuade herself that she is the first English lady who has visited these parts; yet she finds the Salvation Army and Marshal Booth himself already in possession of the Lozère, and our second volume shows at least two English families living on the very edge of this unknown region. The punting down the Cañon and rapids of the Tarn, from Ste. Enimie to St. Rozier, is well described; and the sketches of all the places visited show the skilful writer.

Miss Betham-Edwards, as is well known, is an enthusiastic partisan of peasant proprietorship and of the French republic. In the present volume she tries to prove that the soil of France is not so much sub-divided as it is generally thought to be, and that tenant farms of 1000 acres are not uncommon. Thus at p. 68 we read of a farm

"making up a total of nearly 1000 acres. Much larger farms, he told me, were to be found in the Cantal" (p. 75). "One farm I visited in the neighbourhood was a tenant-holding of about 1000 acres, let at a fixed rental of about £600 a year, and this is far from the largest farm hereabouts" (p. 77). "Another tenant farm near consisted of 1000 acres" (p. 282). "He informed me that he owned four hundred hectares, that is to say, nearly a thousand acres"; and, on the same page, "Thus we find land let or owned in holdings from two and a half to a thousand hectares [not acres, this time]."

Let us now turn to statistics, as given in M. Lebon's France as it is (p. 222). Out of the 14,074,801 properties in France, "very large properties (over five hundred acres) are 0.12 per cent. of the whole number." Can Miss Betham Edwards have made the mistake, in a mountainous district, of enquiring, not how much land do you cultivate, but how much land do your cattle graze over? In such regions often the cultivated land only is the farm or property, the rest comes under quite a different category. Miss Betham Edwards remarks more than once on the paucity of beggars, and strives to leave the impression that beggary and poverty are almost unknown there. The Lozère is one of the poorest departments in France, and we turn to statistics. In one authority we find the number of beggars stated as one to every seven persons. Another authority speaks of 10,080 indigents inscrits out of a population of about 140,000; at Bagnols, out of 397 inhabitants, 203 are indigents inscrits. Can anything show more clearly the worthlessness of the impressions of even an intelligent tourist formed by merely driving through the country? Miss Betham Edwards's extreme optimism in the matter of peasant farming and proprietorship is almost as misleading as the ultra pessimism of Lady Verney. What use can there be in such writing as this, unless to arouse distrust of the author?

P. 22: "M. Taine seems of opinion that the new state of things could have been brought about by a few gentlemen quietly discussing affairs in dress coats and white gloves." P. 268: "The detesters of peasant property, single-minded persons who love the land so well that they cannot support the notion of a neighbour possessing so much as an inch." P. 306: "Yes, peasant property is a detestable, nay, an iniquitous, institution, only to be compared to the Inquisition itself."

On a par with this is the advice to the leaders of the Salvation Army that, instead of going to the Lozère, they should "occupy themselves instead with mastering the principles of Spinoza's Tractatus Theologico-Politicus," Colenso's Pentateuch," and, thrown into the bargain, Sir G. B. Airey's essay on "The Earlier Hebrew Scriptures." But perhaps this is meant for humour.

Our second book is as much more trustworthy in its information about the people as the knowledge of a resident, brought by his occupation into daily contact with them, usually is above that of the passing tourist. It gives an excellent description of life in the valley of the Lot in the Aveyron. The growing intensity of the climate, the increasing exaggeration of its physical features, seems in some measure to be due to the destruction of the forests on the plateaux and higher hills; and this has been to a great extent the work of the Causeenard peasants themselves since the sixteenth century. Sheep pasturing and shepherd's fires, here and elsewhere, are the great enemies of the foresters. Could these be stopped nature alone would in many places quickly repair her losses; but the denuded plateaux get drier and colder every generation, the valleys grow hotter in the summer, percolation increases, and the floods, when they do come, rise higher. Mediaeval buildings, perfectly safe when first constructed, have had to be abandoned of late years as unsafe, on account of the floods of the Tarn. Nowhere in the Alps or in the Pyrenees have we felt such difference of temperature between the hills and vales as in this region. Of the character and habits of the people a very true account is given in this volume—their general politeness, varied with bursts of tiger-like ferocity which necessitate having a revolver always at hand for protection. Nor is this feature confined to the mining class. In 1870, a country gentleman of the Dordogne was beaten almost to death, and burned, still alive, by peasants at a fair in such an outburst. But picnicking on the Lot—a river far more beautiful than is commonly supposed—must be very pleasant. It is unexpected to find the memory of the English domination, and of the campaign of Thomas à Becket, still vivid in these parts. The bitter feeling of the peasantry towards strangers—i.e., persons of their own class from another department, or even parish—is almost universal in rural France, even among those who are habitually most kind to their own people; but against this we must put the feeling of individual and family self-respect which the possession of property undoubtedly creates. Excellent are the remarks on p. 170 as to the most profitable size for peasant holdings, and those on the necessity and the great exertions made to procure litter for the cattle. Altogether this is an unpretending and trustworthy account of village life among the peasants and miners of the Aveyron, and it is illustrated with some pleasing photographs.

Our last work is much more important than either of the other two. It gives a detailed account, with maps and plans and excellent engravings, of the explorations of M. E. A. Martel in the whole region of the Cévennes and Les Causses. Miss Betham Edwards seems never to have heard of these explorations; but Mr. Davies mentions the first report of them in a note. M. Martel not only gives us full descriptions of the Cañon of the Tarn, and a detailed plan of Montpellier le Vieux, a chaos of rocks visited by Miss Edwards; but he narrates at large his own adventurous discoveries, his perilous descent to the subterranean lake in the grotto Des Baumes-Chandes, and of other abysses and avens; and his subterranean voyages in an Osgood portable folding canvas boat on the undiscovered waters of Bramabiau and Padirac. We do not wish to deprive any readers of the excitement of following these attempts in the pages of M. Martel. They will see there that France has nothing now to envy England in the pluck and perseverance of her tourists. These descents were well-nigh as hazardous as the first ascent of the Matterhorn, and the amount of risk was less known.

The last portion of the volume treats in detail of the geology of the region; but the bulk of it, if translated, should serve as a guide next summer to many an Englishman in search of a new sensation not too far from his native hearth. With only one thing have we to reproach M. Martel—why could he not wait to learn from the peasants names for the rocks of Montpellier le Vieux, instead of fixing on them such appellations as the "Gate of Lions," the "Street of Tombs," &c., to remind us of pedants and of our library in the desert of the Lozère?

WENTWORTH WEBSTER.

Life of William Ellis. By Edmund Kell Blyth. (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.)

WILLIAM ELLIS was one of those who might be described as oi περί Bentham. He is characterised in Mill's Autobiography as "an original thinker in the field of political economy, now honourably known by his apostolic exertions for the improvement of education." The latter of these distinctions appears the more conspicuous. With respect to the former, there may be some hesitation of the sort which is said to be felt by examiners whose subject is of a popular character, like English literature. Should marks be given for that amount of knowledge which may be said to come by the light of nature as distinguished from systematic study? Or, rather, should that minimum proficiency which is the common possession of sensible persons be treated as a zero-point from which to reckon the rarer grades of attainment? If we adopt the severer scale of criticism, it will be improper to attribute originality to Ellis's reflections. His reiterated "conduct lessons"; his demonstrations that industry and thrift tend to wealth and happiness do not evince that technical knowledge and analytical power by which we should distinguish economic science from common-sense. It has been well said that the economist should teach, not preach. The writer of catechisms is too apt to base his easy optimism on round statements, which are rather edifying than true. For instance, as to "the effect of machinery on the welfare of the working classes," we deny that it is always without qualification "an increase of wages by adding to the fund which furnishes the means of their employment and maintenance." We might appeal to the authority of one who will not be suspected of prejudice against the cause of capitalists. "I am convinced," says Ricardo, "that the substitution of machinery for human labour is often very injurious to the class of labourers." But we should prefer to compare Malthus's treatment of the subject as evincing those qualities which seem to be deficient in the philosophy of Ellis—the power of looking at both sides of a question, and considering exceptions as well as rules.

These disparaging remarks do not relate to Ellis's educational work. They are directed against the extravagant claims which Mr. Blyth makes for his hero when he compares him with "Adam Smith and the Mills." We fully admit that the artificial simplicity which we complain of as falsifying science may be of some use in elementary instruction. But even with respect to Ellis's educational views, a doubt may be raised whether social science is teachable to the very young. We have much sympathy with the eminent economist who, as we are told, questioned "the possibility of making the abstruse subjects with which the political economist has to deal either interesting or intelligible to children"; and who, with reference to the subject of one of Ellis's lectures, remarked drily that "the subject of wages was one of the most difficult, complicated, and unsettled within the whole province of political economy." No doubt the Socratic method which the lecturer employed was a potent instrument in his hands; but there was one Socratic lesson which he does not seem to have imparted—that which teaches the uncertainty and limitation of human knowledge.

Whatever differences of opinion there may be as to the expediency of Ellis's method, there can be only one feeling as to the nobleness of his purpose. His exertions in the cause of education were truly, as Mill says, "apostolic." In the words of the biographer—"The story of the life of William Ellis is a record of earnest and persevering devotion to the conscientious discharge of the highest duty which a human being can set before himself, namely, the advancement of the well-being of the human race."

The reader of this biography cannot fail to catch the generous enthusiasm of Mr. Blyth's admiration for

"the pure and elevating character of Ellis's teaching, his self-devotion to the cause of the poor and neglected, and his earnest work for the diminution of the vast mass of human misery."

Of the chosen band of Bentham's followers who formed the Utilitarian Society under the leadership of the younger Mill, Ellis was perhaps the one who, after Mill, best illustrated by his practice the principle of utilitarianism. That moral law was to him, as to Mill, in the place of a religion—no mean faith, if judged by its fruits. By perpetuating the example of a life so beneficent Mr Blyth has become himself a benefactor.

F. Y. EDGEWORTH.

The Bibliography, Biographical and Topographical, of Ackworth School. By John H. Nodal. (Manchester: F. Nodal & Co.)

THE increase of Old Scholars Associations is a pleasant sign of the times; and it may be hoped that they will continue to increase and undertake the task of gathering up the traditions and recording the achievements of the alumni whose good work has reflected credit upon the "old school."

Ackworth is the oldest and largest educational foundation of the Society of Friends; and since its opening in 1779 some ten thousand children have passed through its doors. Of many of these the subsequent careers were obscure, though probably useful; but some have attained distinction. Mr. Nodal's task has been to record such contributions to literature as have been made by Ackworth boys and girls. The most distinguished name is that of John Bright, who is, of course, famous not as an author but as an orator. His earliest production has escaped Mr. Nodal's attention. It was a short tract—"A Word to Serious People"—issued in the interest of teetotalism; and although thousands and hundreds of thousands of copies have been circulated, it is in its earliest form now a great rarity. Mr. Nodal brings out an interesting fact. John Bright was not long at Ackworth; but his father received all his education there. As soon as Jacob Bright began to prosper, he decided to give a sum of money yearly "to improve the diet of the scholars." The early discipline of Ackworth was, to say the least, one of Spartan severity. After Bright, the best known name is that of William Howitt, who in his Boy's Country Book has described the school and the locality at the beginning of the century. The long list of Howitt's writings Mr. Nodal only claims as "approximately complete." It would be very difficult to make an exhaustive bibliography of an author who wrote so much, so well, and on so wide a variety of subjects. William Howitt had an elder brother, Emanuel, whose one book was a narrative of American travel, written to show that the Red Skins were the descendants of the "lost" tribes of Israel, who have been found in so many unlikely quarters by enthusiastic theorists. The Ackworth men of science are Mr. J. G. Baker, F.R.S., whose many contributions to botanical literature have earned him a high reputation; Dr. G. S. Brady; Mr. H. B. Brady; Mr. Frederick Enock; Mr. B. B. Le Tall; Mr. Thomas Lister, an excellent field naturalist and a most estimable man; and Dr. W. A. Miller, the chemist. Of men of affairs there are Mr. James Wilson, the Indian Finance Minister; Mr. Henry Ashworth; and Mr. J. F. B. Firth, whose death has occurred since the printing of Mr. Nodal's book. The two Wiffens have not received from a careless public that credit which is due to them for their excellent work as translators. Another interesting Ackworth scholar was Mr. Henry Ecroyd Clark, who became a missionary in Madagascar and wrote a number of treatises in Malagasy. Mr. Nodal has no note of Mr. Henry Bleckley, whose recent death has again called attention to his thoughtful little book on Socrates and the Athenians (1884). The Ackworth girls who turned to literature were Sarah Stickney Ellis, whose works had at one time an immense popularity; Eleanor Dickenson; Susanna Corder; Clementina Watkins; and Mary Hodgson, whose literary faculty was less highly developed than her artistic talent, which was considerable.

There are other names over which it would be pleasant to linger, but those cited will show that Ackworth School has turned out pupils who have used their talents in diverse directions for the advantage of the community. Mr. Nodal is himself an "old boy"; and in this, as in his other work, his accuracy and neatness do credit to the disciplinary influences of Ackworth School.

WILLIAM E. A. AXON.

NEW NOVELS.

A March in the Ranks. By Jessie Fothergill. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Strange Gods. By Constance Cotterell. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

For the Love of the Lass. By Austin Clare. In 2 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Only a Sister. By Walter Adam Wallace. (Roper & Drowley.)

Through the Crowd. By Herbert Simmons. (Roper & Drowley.)

Blind Justice. By Helen Mathers. (Ward & Downey.)

A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur. By Mark Twain. (Chatto & Windus.)

THOUGH any book from the pen of Miss Jessie Fothergill is certain to receive a warm welcome from a large audience both of critical and non-critical readers, I think it quite possible that her new novel, A March in the Ranks, may be received with less warmth of enthusiasm than some of its predecessors. It may seem that in speaking thus I am at the outset striking a key-note of disparagement; but, on the contrary, the unexpressed thought behind this expressed anticipation is a thought of praise, not of censure. If the doctrine which Mr. Ruskin has been expounding for nearly half a century—that truth is not merely a cardinal virtue of art but the cardinal virtue, in the absence of which all other virtues are of no avail—be really worthy of all acceptance, as I believe it is, the special conclusion to be drawn from this general premiss is that A March in the Ranks is the most perfectly artistic of its author's achievements in fiction. Truth is, however, a virtue which, while it tends to perfection, does not in the same degree tend towards popularity—a fact which had become obvious even in the days of Bacon, who, in his first essay, wrote the significant words, "A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure." It may seem a hard saying, but it is a fact that the pleasure given by such books as The First Violin and Probation, and even by the noble Kith and Kin, was at any rate heightened by an element other than the simple naked truth of real life—an element of fantastic morbidity and exaggeration in the conception of some of the most interesting characters and impressive situations. There is nothing of this kind in A March in the Ranks, not a single passage from first to last upon which the most critical reader can lay his finger and say, "Here is a want of veracity of treatment; here the writer over-tops the modesty of nature." Now this is a great thing; but still it will be felt that it is not everything. To be truthful in a literal and dull sort of way is really not hard. The difficulty is to be at once truthful and attractive, to give pleasure without indulging in the "mixture" of which Bacon speaks. And it is just this difficulty which is so admirably overcome by Miss Fothergill. The characters are so brightly and vividly conceived, and the complications which go to make up the story are so natural, so inevitable, and yet so fresh, that the interest awakened by the opening of the tale never declines until the close, but rather, as is fitting, becomes richer and deeper. Such a group of people as the three Nobles—Godfrey, Hilda, and Letty; the two Blundells—Peregrine and Alizon; Giles Barras, and the silly but decidedly ill-used Nelly, would suffice to make the fortune of any novel.

Miss Constance Cotterell's Strange Gods is apparently a first book—the title-page is, at any rate, clear of the name of any predecessor—and as such I cannot but consider it an exceptionally satisfactory performance. I do not refer to any special ability which it exhibits, though it is in many ways very able; for, if a writer have any admirable gift, say of imagination, humour, or insight into character, it is as likely to be seen in his first book as in his twentieth. There is, however, one quality to which we give the somewhat vague name of maturity—the quality which manifests itself in ease, grace, command over material, sure-footedness, and light-handedness—in which a maiden effort is almost always more or less conspicuously deficient; and what makes Miss Cotterell's book noteworthy is the fact that in it this quality is conspicuously present. When one sets oneself to examine the structure of the story, one sees that it is really very slight; but as one reads it, one has no impression of slowness, because—to employ a somewhat colloquial figure—the author knows so well how to arrange her wares of character, incident, and reflection, to such admirable advantage. The story of Janet Minors and her three lovers—the lackadaisical, easy-going Evelyn Chetwynd; the warm-hearted, impetuous, quick-tempered Blase; and the quiet middle-aged scholar, Ambrose Tristram, who does not recognise himself as a lover until, as it seems, the object of his love is slipping away from him—is one of those sweet, graceful, pathetic idylls which do not take us out of the actual world, but rather transfigure that world by providing it with an atmosphere of romance which beautifies and refines it without making it unreal. A wholesomer, pleasanter book than Strange Gods one does not often read, and it is made all the more winning by gleams of bright, unstrained humour.

It is not often that a reviewer has the luck to notice consecutively three novels which are in different ways so good as the two preceding books and Mr. Austin Clare's Tynedale story, For the Love of a Lass. A north-country critic, to whom the dialect of the Northumbrian and Cumbrian borders is fairly familiar, can hardly judge of the extent to which it may interfere with the pleasure of a benighted Southron; but Mr. Clare is merciful as well as realistic, and I cannot think that the difficulties of the conversations will obscure the course of an interesting and, in many parts, powerful story of rustic love and hate and jealousy. The main features of life and character in the secluded northern dales change but slowly. They are to-day not conspicuously unlike what they were a century and a half ago; and Mr. Clare has probably chosen the time of the rising in 1745 simply for the sake of the historical opportunities provided by the fact that his hero, the worthier but less fortunate of the two lovers of pretty Phyllis Dobson, is one of the hunted followers of the luckless Earl of Derwentwater. The story of the rivalry of Hugh Fenwick and Mark Teasdale, so rich in elements of tragic interest, is told with a sustained vigour which leaves nothing to be desired; the passion and pathos are relieved by lighter and brighter episodes and character-sketches; and the book as a whole is one which may be commended with no timid reserves.

Only a Sister is so crowded with grotesque absurdities of structure, incident, character, and conversation, that it is impossible adequately to sample them. We do not know whether most to admire and wonder at the English officer whose friends in Shoreditch address him as "mate" and twice assist him in attempting a felonious assault; the doctor who is a distinguished boxer, a devout Christian, an anarchist, and a master of innumerable languages, who on both occasions foils the wicked Captain Tatterton; the duke, who is married without his acquaintances being aware of it, and who is consequently able in the most natural way to seduce a baronet's daughter; or the curate who, becoming aware, apparently by divine inspiration, that the frail Rosemary has stooped to folly, generously suggests that she shall save her reputation by becoming his wife. Mr. Walter Adam Wallace, or the lady who so calls herself, admits that the doctor is "unique"; but the captain, the duke, and the curate are equally unique, and long may they remain so. Of the style, one brief example must suffice. The girl who is betrayed by the duke and "made an honest woman of" by the curate is, at an early stage of her chequered career, soliloquising about the doctor. "He cannot flirt," she pensively remarks: "he's too good, too simple; so much truer than other men. I wish I were." To write down the epithets by which alone Only a Sister could be adequately described would be gratuitously brutal. From what has been said they can be guessed without difficulty.

When it has been remarked of Mr. Herbert Simmons's story, Through the Crowd, that it displays some power of crude, ill-regulated invention, no other word that has a semblance of even faint praise can be added. It is simply a badly written vulgar book, made worse than it need have been by its author's deviations in the direction of that unsavoury kind of literary ware which, for some unknown reason, is generally described as "realistic." Anything more unlike reality than the greater part of the book it would be difficult to imagine.

I have often wondered why the experiences of the Styrian arsenic-eaters, who are said—apparently on good authority—to die if deprived of their habitual doses of poison, has not been utilised by the writer of some three-volume novel or shilling shocker. The motif has long been, so to speak, in the market; and the voluminous newspaper correspondence elicited by the Maybrick trial brought it under everybody's notice; but Miss Helen Mathers is, I think, the first writer who has turned it to account, and she is to be congratulated upon her success. Blind Justice is a capital story, well-planned and well told; and while most tales of this kind depend entirely upon plot-interest, the writer's portrait of Judith has the attractiveness which belongs only to the imaginative treatment of character. Miss Mathers has never done better work than this.

It cannot be said that Mr. Clemens has never done better work than is to be found in A Yankee at the Court of King Arthur; and, indeed, if the plain truth must be told, his new book is utterly unworthy of him. Though burlesque is the cheapest kind of humour which can be produced by men whose humorous faculty is of the slenderest sort, it has a field in which it may legitimately exploit itself; but the Arthurian legends, which, to us of the age of Tennyson, have become saturated with spiritual beauty and suggestiveness, lie a long way outside the boundary of this "scanty plot." If Mark Twain can now find no better raw material for the manufacture of small jokes than the story of the Quest of the Sangraal, he had better retire from a business which, up to this time, he has conducted with distinguished success. We laugh at Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn, and enjoy the laugh because we feel we have a right to it. If we laugh at the new book we are ashamed of ourselves, for we know that the laugh has been obtained on false pretences, and that it bears an unpleasant resemblance to that cacination which has been described as "the crackling of thorns under a pot."

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

RECENT THEOLOGY.

The Word. By the Rev. T. Mozley. (Longmans.) Like many other divines, ancient and modern, Mr. Mozley takes the doctrine of the Logos to be the central doctrine of Christianity, and he interprets it in such a way as to include the whole compass of Christian speculation and duty. This is the object of this work, which he, however, intends not for the learned but for the simple and ignorant. He describes his aim in words which deserve quotation:

"Whose fault it is I cannot say, nor is there any occasion why I should say; but in all ages the simpler folk have had little respect or aid from the learned. I hope to give these simple folk some help towards the understanding of creeds which they are told they must understand if they would be saved, which they do not understand, while few seem to care whether they understand them or not" (p. 2).

With this object of popular utility in view, it need hardly be stated that Mr. Mozley's method is informal and discursive, rather than organic and systematic. If one wished to be cynical one might say that the Logos or Reason, so conspicuous on the title page and cover of the book, is oftentimes provokingly absent from its contents. At any rate, it requires some strain on ratiocination to perceive the immediate relation with the subject of the work of such chapter-headings as "Sensationalism," "Fiction," "Some Pros and Cons of Fiction," "Vital Action, Relative and Reciprocal." Mr. Mozley also errs, by being at times too diffuse, not to say garrulous. But after all deductions, the spirit and aim of the book is so excellent that we have no hesitation in commending it strongly to all thoughtful Christians.

The Minister of Baptism. By the Rev. Warwick Elwin. (John Murray.) In contradistinction from the preceding work, avowedly addressed ad populum, Mr. Elwin's learned monograph is addressed ad clerum. It is a long dissertation, bristling with theological and antiquarian lore on the sacrament of baptism, with the especial object of determining the validity of heretical, schismatical, and lay baptism. Mr. Elwin seems inclined to the opinion that these extra-ecclesiastical methods of administering the rite are invalid, and he suggests that the recipient of such a rite should not be satisfied therewith. We need not add that, as a matter of law, lay baptism, provided the essentials of the rite are present, is "valid, and ought not to be repeated." The chief importance of the work seems to us twofold: (1) it is a learned inquiry into the antiquarianism of the subject; and (2) it is an interesting but not cheering sign of the times.

The Kingdom of God; or, Christ's Teaching according to the Synoptical Gospels. By A. B. Bruce. (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.) We have given the whole of the title of this very valuable book, because it sets forth clearly its author's design. The work seems to us to possess a twofold significance: (1) as a fair discussion of an important subject; (2) as a sign of advance in the treatment of theological questions even in the bosom of the Scottish Free Church. Of the different chapters, ten out of fifteen appeared a few years ago in the pages of the Monthly Interpreter. Dr. Bruce tells us that "the book is a first instalment of a projected work on the leading types of doctrine in the New Testament concerning the good that came to the world through Jesus Christ." We have derived both knowledge and edification from this part of the work, and shall therefore be prepared to welcome its continuation.

The Divine Unity and Trinity. By Herbert H. Jeffresson. (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.) This is a work of very great research and occasionally of profound thought. It may be briefly described as a mystico-ecclesiastical treatise on the Trinity, conceived on a plan which enables the writer to include the whole scheme of ultra-orthodox belief. While starting, however, from a mystical basis, it develops into a sacramentarian materialism, which occasionally assumes a coarse and even grotesque form. It is hard to say whether the writer's speculations on the Resurrection of the body transgress more by their puerility or by their materialistic extravagance. In either case they are extremely repulsive (comp. p. 306). Those who have been dieted on sacramentarian dogma will, no doubt, find thoughts and conclusions in Mr. Jeaffreson's work which they can readily assimilate. To the general reader the book cannot be recommended as containing either wholesome or Christian teaching.

Christian Theism; its Claims and Sanctions. By D. B. Purinton. (Putnam's.) The category of "Theism," even of "Christian Theism," is somewhat large, and therefore it is well to have from Prof. Purinton himself his own definition of it. He tells us (p. 19):

"The possibility of the supernatural is a vital hypothesis in the Christian system. Without it, the system is contradictory and self-destructive. Christianity, like the ancient temple of Dagon, rests on two pillars. These pillars are God and the Bible. If either of them shall ever be torn down by the Samsons of infidelity, the whole temple will lie in ruins. If we would measure its strength, we must examine these massive columns. This is the scope of Christian Theism."

Without being marked by striking originality or profound depth, and occasionally vitiated by stilted and portentous language and a too dogmatic tone, this book contains much well-considered thought and cogent ratiocination. It certainly deserves the attention of thinkers.

Vox Dei: the Doctrine of the Spirit. By R. A. Redford. (Nisbet.) The author of this work claims for it that it is a clear and orderly statement of what is divinely taught and commonly believed on the subject of the Holy Spirit. The author's views on Biblical inspiration, revelation, &c., may not unfairly be described as those which were universally extant in this country during the past half of this century, but which are gradually giving place to wider, more reasonable, and, it may be hoped, not less religious opinions. Still, Mr. Redford is, in his own sphere, a thoughtful man, and a clear and interesting writer; and his book will have an interest for thinkers outside his own special religious circle.

The Works and Days of Moses. By Sir Philip Perring, Bart. (Longmans.) Sir Philip Perring is a bold man. In this pretty little booklet he makes one more attempt to reconcile the early chapters of Genesis with the conclusions of geology. His attempt, except in the matter of courage and enterprise, does not seem to us to differ greatly from the hundreds of similar attempts that have from time to time been made. He is however sanguine of the success he believes himself to have achieved. He tells us in his preface: "In my last chapter but one I open out a new creation which I venture to affirm leaves ample room for every syllable and letter which Moses has written, and every fossil and footprint which geology has discovered." To those who take an interest in a subject pretty well threshed out among learned men, the book may be commended. It is written in an attractive and spirited style.

A Doubter's Doubts about Science and Religion. By a Criminal Lawyer. (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.) We fear it cannot be said of this "criminal lawyer" doubter, as Tennyson said of Arthur Hallam:

"He fought his doubts and gathered strength."

Judging, at least, from the contest which this work is meant to describe, he must gather from most of his doubt-struggles an accession of weakness. Whatever be the author's doubts on the subjects of science and religion, there is one subject on which he entertains the most absolute certitude, and that is his own infallibility. This is, e.g., his ex cathedra mode of denouncing a prominent and rising school of theologians (p. 77):

"Whatever may be said therefore of the theological school here under review, their religion is not Christianity, and their testimony must be rejected as of less value even than that of the Sacerdota-Heta."

Such an utterance may perhaps be seemly in a criminal lawyer who must never affect distrust in his cause, however much he may feel it; but it is hardly the mood in which a cautious thinker should approach the discussion of subjects confessedly difficult and uncertain. We venture to add the suggestion that before the "criminal lawyer" again abandons his professional duties to set right erroneous scientists and theologians, a little preliminary instruction in science and theology might be useful.

A Treatise on Predestination, Election, and Grace. By W. A. Copinger. (Nisbet.) This is a very learned and elaborate treatise on the themes just mentioned. The work reveals a great amount of research into the history of the chief tenets of Calvinism. The author is himself a Calvinist, but sets forth the conclusions of that sect with moderation and Christian suavity. To all who take an interest in the question the book may be recommended. Not its least valuable portion as a history is the admirable bibliography appended, which fills 216 pages. On its special subject it appears to us nearly exhaustive.

Agnostic Fallacies. By J. Reid Howatt. (Nisbet.) This is a collection of Sunday evening sermons addressed by Mr. Howatt to his congregation. It need not therefore be added that they approach the question of philosophic agnosticism from the antagonistic standpoint of theological dogmatism. This does not seem to us the best method of meeting the fallacies which pertain to extreme negation. Agnosticism, being itself the inevitable reaction of extreme and unwarranted dogma, needs a much more sympathetic treatment than Mr. Howatt, with his brother divines, seem inclined to concede to it.

"THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE.—The First Epistle to the Corinthians. By Marcus Dods. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Dr. Dods' methods of Scriptural exegesis and his opinions are so well known, and, notwithstanding certain recent events, so largely appreciated, that we need do hardly more than call our readers' attention to this valuable Commentary. It is marked by the author's well-known characteristics of rich Scriptural learning, catholicity of tone, deep spiritual insight, and an absence of over-weening dogmatism, which, in a popular English commentator, is as rare as it is refreshing. The volume forms a valuable addition to the "Expositor's Bible" series.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE delegates of the Clarendon Press have arranged for the publication of a series of volumes to be entitled "Rulers of India," to be edited by Sir William Wilson Hunter. The distinctive plan of the series is to present to English readers the salient outlines and turning-points in the evolution of the Indian Empire in a carefully-planned sequence of historical retrospects. Each volume will take a conspicuous epoch in the making of India; and under the name of its principal personage will set forth the problems of government which confronted him, the work which he achieved, and the influences which he left behind. The following volumes have been arranged for:—Asoka: and the Political Organisation of Ancient India, by Prof. Rhys-Davids; Akbar: and the Rise of the Mughal Empire, by Colonel Malleon; Aurangzeb: and the Decay of the Mughal Empire, by Sir W. W. Hunter; Lord Clive: and the Establishment of the English in India, by Prof. Seeley; Dupleix: and the Struggle for India by the European Nations, by Colonel Malleon; Warren Hastings: and the Founding of the British Administration, by Captain L. J. Trotter; The Marquess of Cornwallis: and the Consolidation of British Rule, by Mr. W. S. Seton-Karr; Ranjit Singh: and the Sikh Barrier between our growing Empire and Central Asia, by Sir Lepel Griffin; Mountstuart Elphinstone: and the Making of South-Western India, by Mr. J. S. Cotton; Lord William Bentinck: and the Company as a Governing and non-Trading Power, by Mr. Demetrius Boulger; The Marquess of Dalhousie: and the Final Development of the Company's Rule, by Sir W. W. Hunter; Lord Clyde: and the Suppression of the Great Revolt, by Major-General Sir Owen Tudor Burne; Earl Canning: and the Transfer of India from the Company to the Crown, by Sir Henry S. Cunningham; The Earl of Mayo: and the Consolidation of the Queen's Rule in India, by Sir W. W. Hunter. Of these, Dalhousie will be published in March, to be followed by Akbar in April.

MR. BENJAMIN ELLIS MARTIN, whose papers, entitled "In the Footprints of Charles Lamb," will appear in early numbers of Scribner's, claims to have discovered last summer the record of the exact block and floor of Lamb's birthplace, a point not before made, even by Canon Ainger. Mr. Martin has been able, by thorough research, to correct a number of errors which have crept into accepted biographies of Lamb.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL announce for immediate publication Two Summers in Greenland: an Artist's Adventures among Ice and Islands in Fjords and Mountains, by Mr. A. Rüs Carstensen, with numerous illustrations by the author.

THE next volume of the "Lotus Series," issued by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., will be A Lover's Litanies, and other Poems, by Mr. Eric Mackay, with a portrait of the author.

THE "Letters to Living Authors," which have lately been appearing in Wit and Wisdom, will shortly be published in volume form by Messrs. Sampson Low, under the name of the writer, Mr. J. A. Stuart.

New Holidays in Essex, an illustrated handbook to the little-known districts of South-East Essex, including Maldon, Danbury, Burnham, Rochford, and the country between the Blackwater and Thames estuaries, is in preparation. It will be edited by Mr. Percy Lindley, and will give special chapters upon walking, cycling, boating, fishing, and wild fowling.

MESSRS. TRISCHLER & Co. announce the following novels: A Railway Foundling, in three vols., by "Nomad"; Having and Holding, in three vols., by Mrs. J. E. Panton; Midge, by Miss May Orommelin; The Queen of the Black Hand, by Mr. Hugh Coleman Davidson; Heart Wine, The Australian Aunt, and Other Stories, by Mrs. Alexander and others; "Dinna Forget," by John Strange Winter; Agatha's Quest, by Mr. R. H. Sherard; A Society Scandal, by "Bita."

THE directors of the Booksellers' Provident Association have issued invitations to a dinner, open to members of the trade and others directly connected with literature. It will be held on Saturday, March 8, at the Holborn Restaurant, with Mr. O. J. Longman in the chair, and Mr. C. Awdry in the vice-chair. The committee also includes Mr. John Murray (junior), Mr. H. Sotheran, Mr. David Stott, Mr. J. O. Francis, and Mr. J. W. Darton.

MESSRS. SOTHEY will be engaged in selling during the first four days of next week the large miscellaneous library formed in the middle of the last century by Richard How, of Aspley Guise, Bedfordshire. Though it does not contain any extraordinary rarities (so far as can be judged from the catalogue, which is not even arranged in alphabetical order), the collection is rich in translations of the Bible, Americana of the eighteenth century, books written by or against Quakers, and foreign literature in general. We may specially mention Tyndale's translation of the New Testament (Antwerp, 1534)—apparently not quite perfect; Copland's Salomon's Books (1550); the Psalms of David according to the Use of Salisbury (1555)—which is stated to be unknown to bibliographers; the Calvinistic version in Spanish known as the "Bear-Bible," from the printer's device (1569); the rare Rheims version of the New Testament in English (1582); the Armenian New Testament of Bishop Uskan (Amsterdam, 1668); and a set of thirty-one of the Dutch plays of Vondel.

MR. IVOR JAMES, registrar of the University College of South Wales, has published a little booklet, The Source of the "Ancient Mariner" (Cardiff: Owen), which may be commended to the attention of those who collect Coleridgeana. In this he essays to prove that the general idea of the poem, and also many of the details, are derived from "a small quarto of some 140 pages, now extremely rare, entitled 'The Strange and Dangerous Voyage of Captain Thomas James,' printed in London by John Legatt, for John Partridge, in 1633."

A copy of this book is now on the shelves of the Bristol Library, in which Coleridge is known to have read largely during the years 1794-98. It cannot be proved that the book was there at that time, though some presumption to that effect may be drawn from the fact that Southey reprinted two verses out of it. Granting that Coleridge had read it, we may admit that certain floating reminiscences of its contents took shape in "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner"; but Mr. James seems to go much further than the slight evidence warrants when he calls it the "germ" of the poem. Still, we are grateful to him for his elaborate treatment of an interesting literary problem.

A PARAGRAPH which has been going the round of the papers with regard to the recent discovery of a mass of Balzac letters must be taken, we conjecture, "with a grain of salt." Readers of the paragraph—unless, indeed, they know something of Balzac's history—would be apt to suppose that his letters to Mme. Zulma Carraud are now heard of for the first time. So far, in reality, is this from being the case that no small part of the long-published Correspondence of the great novelist consists of the epistles which he was wont, at many periods of his life, to indite to this lady, his friendship with whom is described, in Mr. F. Wedmore's recent book on Balzac, as "wholly sane and beneficent." In this respect it was presumably something of a contrast to his attachment to Mme. de Berny.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

MR. ALFRED EAST, of the Institute, will contribute to forthcoming numbers of the Universal Review an account of his recent trip to Japan, abundantly illustrated with full-page plates from his drawings. The original drawings, we may add, will shortly be on exhibition at the Fine Art Society's.

AMONG the contents of the March number of Scribner's will be an article entitled "The Hidden Self," by Prof. William James, of Harvard, in which that eminent psychologist records his experience of the strange phenomena of hypnotism, and suggests an explanation not dissimilar to that given in the current number of the Universal Review by Mrs. Besant; also a series of rough sketches made by John Ericsson nearly fifty years ago to illustrate his secret system of sub-aquatic naval warfare.

THE March number of the Newbury House Magazine will contain an illustrated memoir of John Keble, being the first of a series of "Eminent Churchmen"; an article entitled "The Part played by Wales in the History of the English Church," by Canon Roberts, of Cardiff; and a continuation of the remarkable picture of the relations between a mediæval dean and chapter and their tenants by Prebendary Randolph, of Exeter—a picture not unworthy, both in learning and in descriptive power, of Dr. Jessop.

MR. RICHARD LE GALLIENNE—whose volume of essays on the work of Mr. George Meredith, with a full bibliography, is now in the printer's hand—will contribute to the March number of Time an article entitled "The Meredithyramb and its Critics."

"THE History of the Gentleman's Magazine" is the title of a series of articles, by Mr. W. Roberts, of which the first will appear in the March number of the Bookworm. The predecessors, rivals, editors, and various other phases of this venerable periodical will be dealt with.

MRS. J. F. B. FIRTH will contribute to the March number of Cassell's Magazine a description of the great annual gathering at Nijni Novgorod, under the title of "A Peep at a Russian Fair."

Two articles descriptive of the career of the late Chief Constable Williamson will appear in Cassell's Saturday Journal: the first under the title of "Forty Years a London Detective," in No. 335, to be issued next week; the second, called "On the Track of Treason," in the following number.

THE Bishop of Exeter will contribute a Hymn for Lent to the March number of The Church Monthly.

THE first number of a new penny weekly, entitled The Princess: a Home Journal for Maid and Matron, is announced for publication on March 1.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE speeches delivered at the meeting held at Cambridge, on January 29, for procuring a memorial to the late Bishop Lightfoot, have been published in full in a special number of the University Reporter. As already stated in the ACADEMY, it was resolved that the memorial should take the form of a portrait, painted by Mr. W. B. Richmond, to be placed in the hall of Trinity College. Mr. Richmond, it seems, received sittings last summer for a portrait commissioned by some of the bishop's friends at Durham; but the new picture will differ from that in some details. Any surplus that may remain from the subscriptions received is to be devoted to augmenting the endowment of the scholarships founded by Dr. Lightfoot himself for the encouragement of the study of ecclesiastical history. We may add that a local committee at Durham has reported in favour of commemorating the bishop by the erection of a statue, and by enlarging the cathedral chapter-house.

PROF. T. F. TOUT, of Lampeter, and fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford, has been elected to the chair of history at Owens College, Manchester, vacant by the promotion of Dr. Ward to the principalship.

IN Convocation at Oxford on Tuesday next, grants of money will be proposed to the Cyprus Exploration Fund, and also towards the expenses of the archaeological tour in Cappadocia about to be undertaken by Prof. W. M. Ramsay, of Aberdeen, and Mr. D. G. Hogarth, a former Craven fellow.

THE Senate at Cambridge have adopted a report applying the sum of £2500, received from the syndics of the Pitt Press during last year, towards defraying the cost of a new wing of the University library.

SIR JOHN STAINER, the new professor of music at Oxford, will deliver a public lecture on Thursday next, in the Sheldonian Theatre, upon "The Characteristics of Schumann's Songs."

DR. S. M. SCHILLER-SZINESSY, reader in Talmudic at Cambridge, is prevented by the state of his health from continuing his lectures for the present.

THE introduction of a novel system of addressing formal interpellations in Convocation to the curators and the librarian has led to an acrimonious and not very profitable discussion concerning the management of the Bodleian. We must content ourselves here with quoting, from the Oxford Magazine of February 12, the statement of Mr. E. B. Nicholson, in reply to the question, "Are the MSS. to be catalogued?" :

"We have in the last eight years published the Digby Catalogue, the Hebrew Catalogue, the Persian Catalogue all but introduction and indexes, the supplement to the Laudian Catalogue, and Mr. Madan's rough list of MS. materials relating to Oxford. We have also finished the MS. catalogue of the Carte papers, and have produced MS. catalogues of all the Clarendon Press MSS. deposited with us. Lastly, we have in one stage or another of forwardness catalogues of the following MSS.: (1) Armenian, now printing; (2) Dravidian, complete; (3) Hindustani, Turkish, and Pushtu, complete but for indexes, &c.; (4) additional Arabic, complete but for indexes, &c.; (5) Coptic; (6) MSS. Rawlinson D; (7) MSS. Bodley; (8) MSS. Bodley additional; (9) additional Greek, complete; (10) continuation of the Calendar of the Clarendon papers; (11) Calendar of the Ballard letters; (12) all the MSS. in 1697 Catalogue not fully recatalogued elsewhere. All this is in addition to the catalogue, kept constantly up to date, of the new MSS. acquired from week to week."

THE Prendergast studentship at Cambridge, will be awarded for the first time next term. Candidates must not have exceeded four years from the date of their degree. The emolument is £200 for one year, but subject to re-election; and a considerable portion of the time must be spent abroad, occupied with research in the language, literature, history, philosophy, archaeology, or art of Greece.

IN continuation of former lists for previous years since 1883, Mr. Falconer Madan contributes to the Oxford Magazine for February 19 a bibliography of "Oxford Books" published during 1889. The total number is not large, though it includes two German publications.

ON the very same day that the telegraph told the calamitous tidings of the destruction by fire of the handsome buildings of Toronto University, with its library of 30,000 volumes, we happened to receive the first number of "Toronto University Studies in Political Science," edited, on the same lines as the similar series of Johns Hopkins University, by Prof. W. J. Ashley, formerly of Lincoln College, Oxford. It is written by Mr. J. M. McEvoy, and traces the growth of the Ontario township, which seems to have been derived from the New York model rather than that of the New England States. When reorganised in 1849, the presiding officer was termed "reeve," an archaism apparently drawn direct from Kemble's Saxons in England. We congratulate Prof. Ashley on having procured an interesting paper, which will, we hope, be followed by many others.

MR. DAVID CUTHBERTSON has in the press a volume of sketches of academical life at Edinburgh, which is also intended to give information about the library, university societies, &c. It will be entitled College Echoes; and will be published in the course of next month by Messrs. J. & R. Parlane, of Paisley.

THE Aberdeen University Dramatic Society are to produce a three-act farcical comedy written by a graduate of that university.

WE hope to give next week an obituary notice of Prof. Lorimer, of Edinburgh, who died on February 13.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A REVIEWER'S REMORSE.

DEAR poet in a distant land,
Of whom I wrote that hard review,
Somehow, I know not why, I feel
Repentant, sir, concerning you.

"In proof" it seemed your just desert,
I never thought of pity then;
But now that Saturday is here
I wish it were to write again.

Though such contrition on my part
May seem a little quaint to you,
Who never meant—why, "bless your heart"—
To take it so au sérieux.

And as I write I seem to see
A wife with fingers in your hair,
Creep close, and whisper, "Never mind,
We love them, dear, so never care!"

R. LE G.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE second number of Le Livre Moderne contains several interesting articles, but perhaps no one requiring comment. If there be an exception, it is the opening paper, which, in discussing book-illustration, holds that long novels are not so well suited for it as short stories. We are not sure of this, though, of course, it is indisputable that it is far less easy to find an illustrator for the one than for the other. The illustration of the number is an encadrement, plentifully vignettied by M. Ernst van Muyden, to a pleasant new "Ballade of Books" by M. Maurice Bouchor. The general design of this is extremely agreeable; and the vignettes, though not quite uniformly good in drawing, are agreeable likewise.

ROBERT BROWNING'S FIRST SONNET.

A SONNET from the pen of Robert Browning is so rare a thing that I think you may like to republish the one I referred to in my article in the February number of the Argosy.

I have accordingly hunted it up from the old pages of the Monthly Repository. It was the first of the small poems published by Mr. W. J. Fox in that periodical, and appeared in the year following his review of "Pauline," and the year previous to his review of "Paracelsus"—viz, in 1834.

E. F. BRIDELL-FOX.

"SONNET, BY ROBERT BROWNING.

Eyes, calm beside thee (Lady couldst thou know!),

May turn away thick with fast-gathering tears:
I glance not where all gaze: thrilling and low
Their passionate praises reach thee—my cheek wears

Alone no wonder when thou passest by;
Thy tremulous lids, bent and suffused, reply
To the irrepressible homage which doth glow
On every lip but mine: if in thine ears
Their accents linger—and thou dost recall

Me as I stood, still, guarded, very pale,
Beside each votarist whose lighted brow
Wore worship like an aureole, "O'er them all
My beauty," thou wilt murmur, "did prevail
Save that one only"—Lady, couldst thou know!

"August 17, 1834."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE

- OOCHIN, H. Boccaccio: études italiennes. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
KALISCHER, A. Oh. Heinrich Heine's Verhältnis zur Religion. Dresden: Oehlmann. 1 M. 60 Pf.
LEGOUVÉ, E. Fleurs d'hiver—fruits d'hiver: histoire de ma maison. Paris: Ollendorff. 3 fr. 50 c.
LEONARDO DA VINCI. I Disegni di, della Biblioteca di S. Maestà. Riprodotti in fototipia da P. Carlevaris. Turin: Loescher. 40 fr.
LUCAS, Hipp. Portraits et souvenirs littéraires. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
SCHMIDT, O. Rousseau u. Byron. Ein Beitrag zur vergleich. Literaturgeschichte d. Revolutionszeit. Oppeln: Franck. 8 M.
TÜROK, H. Das psychologische Problem in der Hamlet-Tragödie. Leipzig: Hoffmann. 1 M. 60 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ARMATILÉ, la Comtesse d'. La Comtesse d'Émont, fille du Maréchal de Richelieu. 1740-1775, d'après ses lettres inédites à Gustave III. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
BOURON, V. La Palatium de la Montagne de Rheims. Paris: N. V. Bontou. 50 fr.
CHARAVAY, E. Assemblée électorale de Paris, 18 novembre 1790-15 juin 1791: procès verbaux. Paris: Quantin. 7 fr. 50 c.
CODEX diplomaticus Silesiae. 15. Bd. Urkunden u. Aktenstücke betr. die Beziehungen Schlesiens zum Baseler Konzile. Hrag. v. W. Altmann. Breslau: Max. 8 M.
DIEFFENBACH, F. Der französische Einfluss in Deutschland unter Ludwig XIV. u. der Widerstand der kurbrandenburgischen u. kur-sächsischen Politik. Aus d. Nachlass d. Verf. bearb. u. hrag. v. A. Kohut. Dresden: Oehlmann. 2 M. 50 Pf.
FAY, le général. Marches des armées alliées, du 31 juillet au 1^{er} septembre 1810. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 10 fr.
JACOBS, M. Julliana v. Stolberg, Ahnfrau d. Hauses Nassau-Oranien. Nach ihrem Leben u. ihrer geschichtl. Bedeutung quellenmässig dargestellt. Halle: Hendel. 10 M.

PHILOSOPHY.

- KOENIG, E. Die Entwicklung d. Causalproblems in der Philosophie seit Kant. 2. Thl. Leipzig: Wigand. 8 M.
LAFITTE, P. Cours de philosophie première. T. 1. Théories générales de l'entendement. Paris: Bouillon. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHILOLOGY.

- BEHRM-SCHWARZBACH, F. Libellus περί ἐπικυρίας, qui Demetrio nomine inscriptus est, quo tempore compositus sit. Kiel: Lipsius. 1 M. 50 Pf.
LOTE, J. Chrestomathie bretonne. 1^{re} partie. Breton-armoricain. Paris: Bouillon. 10 fr.
PRIEL, K. Inscriptions hiéroglyphiques recueillies en Egypte. 3^e série. I. Planches. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 40 fr.
STUDEN auf dem Gebiete d. archaischen Lateins. Hrag. v. W. Studemund. 1. Bd. 2. Hft. Berlin: Weidmann. 7 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME POINTS OF ENGLISH ORTHOGRAPHY IN THE TWELFTH CENTURY.

Oxford: Feb. 13, 1890.

According to the theory now accepted by many scholars the letter 3 in Old English probably denoted four different sounds (for other views cf. Sweet, History of English Sounds). It was (1) a guttural spirant, as in North German wagen; (2) a palatal spirant like the y in English "year"; (3) a guttural stopped consonant, as in English "good"; (4) a palatal stopped consonant (before the end of the Old English period this palatal stop had probably undergone assimilation and developed into its present sound of dzh, as in English "bridge"). Initially it had the first sound before consonants and back vowels, the second sound before front vowels and wherever it corresponded to a j in primitive Germanic. Medially and finally (except when doubled or preceded by n) it had either the first or second sound according to the nature of the neighbouring vowels: when preceded by a back vowel (or back vowel + consonant) it was guttural; it was also guttural when followed by a back vowel, unless the preceding vowel was mutated. After n it had the third sound, except when preceded by a mutated vowel, in which case it had the fourth sound. Double 33 (generally written c3) arose in most instances from primitive Germanic 3j, and in such cases had the fourth pronunciation. It had the third sound in a few words, as "fro33a," where the 33 did not originate from 3j.

At the beginning of the Middle English period this state of things remained unaltered, except that initially every guttural spirant had become a stopped consonant, as in "god," "glad," where the g had its present pronunciation.

In Old English the initial palatal spirant was occasionally written i (cf. Sievers, Ag. Gram., § 212, and Sweet, English Sounds, § 544). This is not at all uncommon in the Cotton MS. Tiberius A. 3, a MS. which exhibits some marked Kentish peculiarities: we there find—e.g., teorne for 3orne Wulfstan 173³, foriyme W. 276³, beytlen Logeman, Rule of St. Benedict 65³, aylden 19³, &c. In very early Kentish 3, when preceded by front vowels, became a mere diphthongal vowel, which was often denoted by i—e.g., Epinal Glossary 3rei=W.S. 3re3; and this was, no doubt, in later Old English the general pronunciation, cf. the common late W.S. spelling dæi3 (Sweet, English Sounds, § 553).

But with these exceptions (the Runes I leave out of consideration) there was, up to the end of the eleventh century, no attempt to make any graphic distinction between these various sounds; and it was not until the beginning of the Middle English period that advantage was taken of the difference in form between the native-English 3 and the continental g to make a distinction, the latter being henceforth generally used to denote the third and fourth, while the former was generally restricted to the spirant (the first and second), sounds.

Some little time since Prof. Kluge, who was desirous of having some reliable data on this point for his forthcoming article on the English language in Paul's Grundriss, asked me if I could furnish him with some exact details as to the usage of the scribes in the twelfth century, and it was in compliance with this request that I examined a number of English MSS. belonging to that period. The result has shown that, while the majority of twelfth-century MSS. still retain the old 3 in all cases, and some few have entirely replaced it by g, a small number consistently employ both signs, in order to distinguish between the sounds. As the twelfth-century English MSS. are, with but slight exceptions, copies of older originals, it was to be expected that the scribes of most of them would follow the old tradition, and write 3.

I. MSS. which, in their English portions, use 3 in all cases. Some few of them have isolated instances of g, but without any fixed rule as to the sounds denoted by it. In the Latin portions, where such occur, g is regularly employed.

1. MS. Bodley 180 (twelfth-century MS. of Ælfred's Boethius).

2. MS. Cotton, Julius A. 2 (fol. 136a to the end is in a twelfth-century hand).

3. Domitian A. 9 (contains a fragment of an English Chronicle, the entries being for the years 1113 and 1114. It was printed by Zupitza, Anglia i. 195).

4. Domitian A. 8 (English Chronicle, MS. F. in Earle's edition). Has occasional instances of g without fixed rule. The Latin parts have, conversely, occasionally 3 by the side of the regular g.

5. MS. Laud, 636 (the Peterborough Chronicle). The first hand, which extends down to the year 1121, has only 3. The various hands, from 1122 to 1132, use 3, except in three instances—englelund, lange (1122), engla-lande (1125). The last entry, 1132-1154, only has g (this hand also uses the continental forms of f and r).

6. Textus Roffensis (the greater part of which was written at the command of Ernuif, Bishop of Rochester, who died in 1124). Has only 3, to judge from the facsimile published by the Palaeographical Society.

7. MS. Vitellius A. 15 (fol. 4 ff is a piece in a twelfth-century hand, beginning Gaderode me bonne kizclas, &c. Kizclas is interesting as being an early instance of the word "cudgel." The whole piece was printed by Cockayne in his Shrine, under the title of "Blooms by King Ælfred"). Isolated instances of g occur, but without any fixed rule.

8. MS. Royal, 1. A. 14 (the Gospels, written about the time of Stephen). Isolated instances of g without fixed rule.

9. MS. Addit. 15,350 Brit. Mus. (Charters in a late twelfth-century hand). A very few isolated g's occur.

II. MSS. which have only g.

1. The greater part of MS. Vespasian D. 14 (see below).

2. Faustina A. 3 (contains English charters).

3. Junius 24 (Homilies in a hand of the early part of the twelfth century, all copied from earlier originals).

I may here mention 4. MS. 154 of St. John's College, Oxford (fol. 121b and 122 are English glosses to Abbo's Clericorum decus in a hand of the end of the eleventh or beginning of the twelfth century, ed. Zupitza, Zeitschrift für deutsches Alterthum, 31, 1). The scribe generally uses g, but there are a few instances of 3, without any fixed rule.

III. MSS. which use the two signs 3 and g to distinguish between the sounds.

The Old-English prefix 3e- is invariably written 3e- in Nos. 1 and 2, almost always in No. 3; in No. 4 i- is predominant (the less frequent 3e- is, no doubt, where it occurs, merely retained unaltered from the Old-English originals); in No. 5 i- alone is written.

1. Vespasian, D. 14. Homily MS. written early in the twelfth century. The greater portion is written by one hand, which extends to f. 163b. In this part the sign g is alone used. Then follow six short homiletic bits in different hands: the first from f. 163b to 165; the second f. 165; the third fol. 165b to 166; the fourth f. 166 to 168 (this piece was printed by Kluge, Eng. Stud., 8, 475); the fifth f. 168b to 169; the sixth and last f. 169b. Of these the second, fifth, and sixth use only g, but the first, third, and fourth distinguish between g and 3. In the first (f. 163b-165) there are forty-one instances of 3 and fifteen of g, all employed correctly according to the above rules (3 = the first and second sounds, g = the third and fourth), and there is only one instance in which 3 is used where we should expect g. Similarly, in the third piece the two signs are used correctly with very few exceptions. The fourth piece (the following slight inaccuracies need correction in Kluge's edition: 1. 2, read gebrote, 21 fæzer, 25 on gear, 60 manize, 81 wilif, 84 generize, 85 wunizen) is especially interesting as it differs in one important respect from the two other pieces. While in these latter the sign g denotes only the third and fourth sounds, in this piece g is used not only for the third and fourth sounds, but also for the guttural spirant, the sign 3 being restricted to the palatal spirant. The palatal spirant occurs fifty-six times (fæzere, &c.) denoted by 3 (the nine instances where it is written g are, no doubt, simply scribal errors). The guttural spirant occurs twenty-eight times (fugel, &c.), and is always written g. The numbers show that this cannot be the result of accident; but that the scribe deliberately used the sign g for the guttural spirant, as well as for the third and fourth sounds, thus distinguishing it from the palatal spirant. The forms hegest (Late West-Saxon heazost), eage, and drigen (= Old-English dreozan) are interesting as showing that in these words the guttural spirant had not yet become palatal in the dialect of the scribe. In the East Midland dialect this guttural character was still preserved at the beginning of the thirteenth century, as the orthography of the Ormulum shows, but in the South-West palatalisation seems to have taken place before the end of the twelfth century (cf. remarks on the Worcester fragments).

2. MS. Harley, 6258 B. (contains medical treatises. Cockayne describes it in the first volume of his Leechdoms as MS. O, the wept ðiddteow of his third volume is also taken from it). With occasional exceptions, which are evidently scribal errors, 3 is consistently used for the first and second, g for the third and fourth sounds.

3. MS. Hatton, 38 (Gospels, copied, about the time of Henry II., from MS. Royal, 1. A. 14, see above). Throughout the greater part of the MS. the same rules are consistently observed as in the case of No. 2. Where exceptions do occur, it is generally 3 that is put where we should expect to find g (this happens most frequently after n), and not vice versa. In some parts of the MS. the 3's predominate considerably. In the first chapter of St. John, for instance, 3 alone is used. In all these cases the irregularity has arisen from the scribe having followed his original, which almost exclusively employs 3. The palatal spirant, when preceded by a vowel, is frequently written *i*3, sometimes simply i. In words like ea3e (cf. remarks on Vesp. D. 14) an i is never, so far as I have seen, inserted before the 3, which may perhaps be taken as negative evidence that the spirant was still guttural.

4. MS. Bodley 343 (Homilies, chiefly Ælfric's, written about the middle of the twelfth century). The same rules are observed as in Nos. 2 and 3.

5. The Worcester fragments (found by Sir Thomas Phillipps in old bindings in the library of Worcester Cathedral. Contains portions of Ælfric's grammar, Latin-English glossary, an address of the soul to the body, &c. The fragments seem to be late twelfth century). The third and fourth sounds are invariably represented by g. When final or followed by a consonant the palatal spirant is nearly always represented by i, very rarely by 3; the Old English prefix 3e- has become i-; in other cases the palatal spirant is written 3. In all cases where it is used the sign 3 appears to denote only the palatal, not the guttural spirant; for words like Old English ea3e, &c., in which the spirant was originally guttural, but subsequently in Middle English became palatal, are spelt e3e, &c., in the Worcester fragments, showing that in these and other similar cases it had already become palatal in the dialect (South Western) of the scribe. With these exceptions the old guttural spirant is here represented by w (medially) or uh (finally), cf. heretowa (Old English -to3a) Wright-Wulker 538²⁰, dweruh (Old English dweor3, a dwarf) Wright-Wulker 539²⁰, &c.

The following late twelfth-century MSS., which I have not yet had an opportunity of examining, appear from the printed editions to follow the rules more or less consistently.

6. Vespasian A. 22 (printed in Morris, Old English Homilies, first series, pp. 217-245).

7. MS. Lambeth, 487 (Morris, Old English Homilies, first series, pp. 1-190).

I hope ere long to publish the details which I have collected, together with the results of an examination of other twelfth, as well as of some of the early thirteenth, century MSS., in one of the German periodicals.

A. S. NAPIER.

A NEW MEDIAEVAL LEGEND OF VIRGIL.

Ithaca, N.Y.: Feb. 6, 1890.

While preparing the introduction to my forthcoming edition of the Exempla of Jacques de Vitry for the Folklore Society, I had occasion to study somewhat carefully the imitations in the modern languages of the great Latin alphabetical collections of Exempla. The most interesting and extensive of these are the Spanish Libro de los Enxemplos (in Rivadeneyra's "Biblioteca de Autores Españoles," vol. li; the missing beginning was discovered and printed by A. Morel-Fatio in the Romania, vol. vii, p. 481), and the Catalan Recull de Eximplis e Miracles, Gestes e Faules e Altres ligendes ordenades per A-B-C, tretes de un manuscrit en pergami del començament del segle XV, ara per primera volta estampades, 2 vols., 8vo. (without date, place, or name of printer; but Barcelona, 1881-1888, A. Verdagner, forming part of the "Biblioteca Catalana" of D. Mariano Aguiló y Fuster).

The Catalan collection contains seven hundred and nine stories, each with a title containing the source of the story, and followed by a sub-title in Latin, which gives the alphabetical arrangement. In examining the second volume, which I was not able to procure until last summer, I was struck by the following story of Virgil, which I do not remember seeing before. I give it as it stands in the second vol., p. 286:

"DCLXXXIII.—Eximpli con Virgili ois una filla sua.

¶ VIRGINITATEM in filia amissa pater aliquando crudeliter pugnit.

VIRGILI sabe con una sua filla que volia ser maluestat de son cors, per la quel cosa ell ab les sues propies mance la degolla en vista de molta gent en una gran plaça, dient que mes amana esser matador de filla verge, que pare de corrupuda."

In this story Virgil appears in an entirely new light, and it is interesting to learn how this legend appears in a collection of Catalan Exempla. All that is known of the MS. used by the editor is stated in the title: a parchment MS. of the beginning of the fifteenth century. The language of the text appears to so competent a judge as A. Morel-Fatio (Romania, vol. x., p. 278) to be of about the date assigned to the MS. used by the editor. The contents do not differ from those of the ordinary collections of Exempla for the use of preachers. The authorities most frequently cited are: Jacques de Vitry, Vitas Patrum, Caesar of Heisterbach, Helinandus, Valerius Maximus, Petrus Alfonsi, Etienne de Bourbon, St. Gregory, Petrus Damianus, and the Legenda Aurea. These alone furnish 434 of the 709 Exempla. The alphabetical arrangement and the Latin sub-titles would point to the imitation or translation of one of the great Latin collections. In speaking of the similar Spanish collection, Libro de los Enxemplos, M. Morel-Fatio (Romania, vol. vii, p. 483) said that the Latin collection most like the Spanish was the Alphabetum narrationum of Etienne de Besançon—a Dominican of the second half of the thirteenth century; but that the two works were not the same. Later, in speaking of the Catalan collection (Romania, vol. x., p. 278) the same scholar said that, while the Spanish and Catalan works had many points of contact, they were, however, independent of each other; and he expressed the hope that at the end of the second volume of the Catalan work (which had not then appeared) a table of authorities might be given in order to facilitate comparison with the other alphabetical collections, "et déterminer la source directe du recueil catalan, si tant est qu'il ait été traduit d'une seule collection latine."

I have been fortunate enough to discover this direct and single source, which is none other than the Alphabetum narrationum of Etienne de Besançon just mentioned.

I have seen of this work the following MSS.: Bib. nat. Paris, MSS. Lat. 12,402 (fourteenth cent.); 15,255 (thirteenth cent.); and Brit. Mus. MS. Harl. 268. Etienne's work may be recognised by the prologue, which begins: "Antiquorum patrum exemplo didici nonnullos ad virtutes fuisse inductos narrationibus aedificationis et exemplis," and by the first Exemplum, which is: "Abbas non debet esse nimis rigidus."

Unfortunately I am forced to rely upon the notes I made at Paris and London some years ago, and cannot now make a complete comparison of the Catalan work with its original; but, so far as I have been able to compare it, the Catalan work is an exact and literal translation of Etienne de Besançon's Alphabetum narrationum. The only difference I can find is in the number of stories. The Harl. MS. 268 contains, if my rough count be correct, 792 stories in 320 chapters or topical divisions; the Catalan work contains 709. Clearly, a number of Exempla have been omitted; unless the Catalan translator used a version of Etienne de Besançon containing a smaller number of Exempla than the class of MSS. represented by Harl. 268. However, even if the Catalan translator omitted a few stories, there is no reason to suppose that he inserted any of his own making; and I have no doubt that the Virgil legend stands in the Latin original.

This gives us, then, a new bit of lore about Virgil, collected by a learned Frenchman, probably in the second half of the thirteenth century. (Etienne died in 1294.) The story is evidently a confusion of the Virginian legend; but a confusion, of course, prior to its collection by so learned a man as Etienne, and militates strongly (as Mr. Tunison, to whom I have communicated the story, says) against Comparesi's doctrine of the exclusively Neapolitan character of the misapprehension concerning the etymology of the name Virgilius.

T. F. CRANE.

TEICHMÜLLER'S DEFINITION OF "RELIGION."

Florence: Feb. 15, 1890.

My attention has just been called to a serious misrepresentation of the late Prof. Teichmüller's views occurring in Prof. Max Müller's recent work on Natural Religion. On p. 64 of that volume a definition of religion is quoted as Teichmüller's which was not given by Teichmüller as his own, but as Lotze's, whose views he was very far from sharing, and in this instance subjected to adverse criticism (see his Religionsphilosophie, pp. 21 sq.).

I have reason to believe that whatever pleasure the complimentary reference to Teichmüller by so eminent a person as the Gifford lecturer at Glasgow may have given to the family of the Dorpat philosopher is more than counterbalanced by their annoyance at finding attributed to him expressions which he would have emphatically repudiated.

ALFRED W. BENN.

THE WASHINGTON PEDIGREE.

Philadelphia, U.S.A.: Feb. 4, 1890.

It may be a small affair; but, since truth is better than fiction, pray permit me to say, in connexion with the letters concerning Washington's ancestry which have recently appeared in England as well as here, that it is a mistake to suppose that our first president, or any of his relatives, wrote to England inquiring as to the origin of his family. On the contrary, the inquiry came from England. The Garter King of Arms, Sir Isaac Heard, requested Washington to send him whatever information he possessed regarding the family, that he (Sir Isaac) might, for his own satisfaction, draw up the president's pedigree. (Sparks's Writings of Washington, vol. i., pp. 539, 547, &c.)

The request being granted, the result was that pedigree of Washington which was generally accepted as correct, until proved otherwise by the late Col. Chester. The error consisted in the omission of a generation and the following up of a wrong line. Recently the omission has been supplied by Mr. H. F. Waters, who gives also a line of descent apparently correct.

In conclusion, permit me to remark that it is likewise an error to fancy that we Americans (as has been said) "hunt up" our English ancestors "because they were Englishmen." While we have all proper regard for Englishmen as Englishmen, it is not because our ancestors were English that we inquire after them, but because they were our ancestors.

AN AMERICAN.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, Feb. 23, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "National Life and Thought in Hungary," by Prof. Pulszky.
8 p.m. Biblical: "Moral Development of Girls after School," by Miss Hughes.
MONDAY, Feb. 24, 5 p.m. London Institution: "Rise of Early English Architecture," by Mr. Arnold Mitchell.
8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Sculpture in Greek Temples," III., by Mr. A. S. Murray.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Cantor Lecture—'Stereotyping,' II., by Mr. Thomas Bolas.
8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Further Explorations in the Solomon Islands," by Mr. C. M. Woodford.
TUESDAY, Feb. 25, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Post-Darwinian Period," VI., by Prof. G. J. Romanes.
8 p.m. British Museum: "Outlines of Greek Art. I., the Islands and Mykenae," by Mr. Talfourd Ely.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Discussion, "Water-works at Shanghai, Hong Kong, and Yokohama."
8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "Stanley's Spirometer," by Dr. J. G. Garson; "Some Borneo Traps," by Mr. S. B. J. Skerthley; "The Dieri and other Kindred Tribes of Central Australia," by Mr. A. W. Howitt.
WEDNESDAY, Feb. 26, 8 p.m. Gymnasion: "A Study in Early British Christianity," by the Rev. E. T. Davies.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The English in Florida," by Mr. Arthur Montefiore.
8 p.m. Geological: "The Relation of the Westleton Beds or 'Pebble Sands' of Suffolk to those of Norfolk, and on their Extension inland, with some Observations on the Period of the final Elevation and Denudation of the Weald and of the Thames Valley," III., by Prof. Joseph Prestwich; "A Deep Channel of Drift in the Valley of the Cam, Essex," by Mr. W. Whitaker.
8 p.m. Literature: "Books, their Transmission and Preservation," by Mr. Walter T. Rogers.
THURSDAY, Feb. 27, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Three Stages of Shakespeare's Art," III., by Canon Ainger.
8 p.m. British Museum: "Outlines of Greek Art. II. Architecture and Sculpture," by Mr. Talfourd Ely.
5 p.m. "The Northern Shan States and the Burma-China Railway," by Mr. W. Sherriff.
6 p.m. London Institution: "The Rise of British Dominion in India," by Sir A. O. Lyall.
8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: "The Theory of Armature Reaction in Dynamos and Motors," by Mr. James Swinburne; "Some Points in Dynamo and Motor Design," by Mr. W. B. Eason.
FRIDAY, February 28, 8 p.m. Royal Academy: "Florentine Sculpture in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries," I., by Prof. J. H. Middleton.
8 p.m. Browning: "Browning's Work in Relation to Modern Life," by Mr. W. F. Bayly.
8 p.m. London Amateur Scientific: "Practical Coal-Mining," by Mr. H. S. Streetfield.
9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Evolution in Music," by Prof. Hubert H. Parry.
SATURDAY, March 1, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Electricity and Magnetism," III., by Lord Rayleigh.
4 p.m. London Geological Field Class: "The Tertiary Rocks on which London Stands," III., by Prof. H. G. Seeley.

SCIENCE.

TWO PLAYS OF AESCHYLUS.

The Agamemnon of Aeschylus. With Introduction, Commentary, and Translation. By A. W. Verrall. (Macmillan.)

The Suppliants of Aeschylus. With Introduction, Critical Notes, Commentary, and Translation. By T. G. Tucker. (Macmillan.)

If the paradox may be permitted, we all expect to be surprised when we study a treatise or commentary by Dr. Verrall. But, in the present case, the expectation of a slashing reconstruction of the text, of seeing the Benteian hook courageously wielded anew, is doomed to disappointment. If I ventured to express in a sentence what I think the most notable merit of this commentary, I should say that it was the courageous conservatism with which the text is treated, after such redivision and repunctuation as, of course, involve no outrage on the MSS., but simply show a new discernment applied to their testimony. For instance, most people know that Ag. ll. 385-7, before appearing in the familiar form of πέφανται δ' ἐγγόνους ἀτολήμης Ἀρη

πνεόντων κ.τ.λ.,

had been doctored by Hermann and others as unintelligible; and, indeed, one must agree with Mr. Sidgwick that πέφανται δ' ἐγγόνους ἀτολήμης Ἀρη πνεόντων κ.τ.λ. is "not a sentence at all." But Dr. Verrall reads the MSS. more intelligently, and gives us πέφανται δ' ἐγγονούσα τέλημ τῶν Ἀρη

πνεόντων κ.τ.λ.,

and renders—"It is manifested how pregnant is the insolence of a too-defiant pride, when the fulness of the house overpasseth the blessed mean," referring us, convincingly in my opinion, to ll. 749-73. No doubt, as he sees, ἐγγονούσα and τέλημ for τέλημα in lyrics require some justification. But, personally, I cannot help thinking that this rather provoking puzzle has been solved by a very skilful application of Dr. Verrall's method, which, as everyone knows, does not shrink from coining a word on grammatical principles; and that the MS. is right after all, though it has been read wrong.

But conservatism towards the MSS. is compatible with subversive proceedings in other matters. The Introduction, profoundly interesting as it is, is also profoundly revolutionary. It reconstructs the plot of the play in a manner which will startle everybody. But I think readers of the ACADEMY will be interested in a rough sketch or analysis, such as space permits, of a piece of work which will be memorable, whether it is finally accepted or not.

It cannot be denied that the plot of the Agamemnon, as normally conceived, presents grave difficulties. If the beacon-fires announcing the fall of Troy really reached Argos the same night that the city fell—a dramatic if not altogether a geographical possibility—how can Agamemnon possibly reach Argos next morning early, especially after encountering a great tempest by the way? What becomes of the highly natural and dramatic description of the weary Greeks bivouacking in the city, feasting on its provisions, devastating its temples? Again, when the catastrophe has come and Agamemnon lies dead, why is loyal Argos so powerless, and what are those veteran comrades of the king, who have returned with him, doing, or dreaming about? How comes the city to slip so unresistingly into the power of the guilty lovers? In a word, how does the tragedy fit together as a conceivable whole, whatever may be the splendour of its odes and narratives? No single one of these objections, perhaps, is overwhelming; but, taken together, they certainly seem formidable, and to have "suffered not thinking on" sufficiently.

To Dr. Verrall, "the story as it was conceived by the Byzantine students of the eleventh century, and is still, with whatever dissatisfaction, accepted" (p. xv.) is altogether absurd, and cannot represent the thing which Aeschylus meant and Athens approved; and accordingly he paints a new background, so to speak, to the picture. As I understand him, the real facts are as follows. Troy has fallen at some reasonable distance of time before the play opens—long enough, that is, for the sack and destruction of the city to have occurred, for the preparations for return, and the actual disaster to the fleet, to have taken place; in a word, the appearance of the Herald and of Agamemnon is natural, not miraculous. Ερίε, therefore, the veracity of Clytemnestra's whole story about the beacons, except in this one point, that a beacon has undoubtedly been seen, from Argos, burning on Mount Arachnaeus. The true explanation of this fire is that it is a signal from Aegisthus, lurking with a band of confederates in some lair on the Spider Mountain (so Dr. Verrall, finding confirmation of his ingenious fancy in l. 1493, names the beacon hill) to Clytemnestra, with whom he has already established guilty relations, that Agamemnon is on the seas and approaching the bay of Argos. The watchman, of course, announces the beacon-blaze in all good faith, having been primed by Clytemnestra with the false tale, which she afterwards utters in public, about the anticipated signals from Troy. In reality, there is but one signal-fire, and that kindled by Aegisthus.

Here, perhaps, one may best observe what a new and telling force is thus conveyed to the celebrated and puzzling l. 326—νικῇ δ' ὁ πρῶτος καὶ τελευταῖος δραμών.

I respectfully concur with Dr. Verrall (App. H., p. 194) that all the interpretations hitherto given to this line, standing where it does, are singularly artificial and pointless. By Dr. Verrall's interpretation, the phrase is just sufficiently mysterious to baffle the chorus, which is, of course, Clytemnestra's object, while to the Athenian audience it is a telling sarcasm on her part—they knowing that only one beacon-fire started or arrived at all—and that one, no messenger of glory or conquest, but a sign for the victory of lust, lies, and treachery.

The conspirators hurry to the landing-place, that they may join Agamemnon under the guise of friendship, and be present in force at the fortress, so as in due time to overwhelm by their numbers the surviving comrades of Agamemnon, when he himself lies slain by Clytemnestra. These treacherous attendants are those to whom the chorus makes allusion, especially at vv 799 800; these are the φίλοι λοχῖται of l. 1650. These enable Aegisthus and Clytemnestra to hold the power when they have seized it. The share of Aegisthus in the deed—a share which certainly, in ll. 1643-1645, seems to have been something more than mere complicity—is thus realised; and according to Dr. Verrall (p. xlvii.), "thus, as the story was conceived at Athens in the fifth century, thus, or somewhat thus, was the imperial Agamemnon slain."

I should not be doing justice to this remarkable Introduction if I did not add that no mere abstract or compendium, such as I have tried to give, can represent the force with which its points are pressed home, or the ingenuity with which confirmations of it are discovered in the language of the play. Neither do I feel inclined to contend, with the master of so many legions as Dr. Verrall can bring into the field, in favour of a traditional view, the objections to which I feel most strongly. But some considerations for suspense of judgment will occur to anyone, I think, who reads Dr. Verrall with care.

In the first place—with regard to the crudities and impossibilities of the accepted plot of the Agamemnon—I question whether any tragedy would bear the fierce intellectual light and stringent criticism which Dr. Verrall brings to bear upon this one. The story of the beacons is all but impossible, the return of Agamemnon on the morning after the fall of Troy, hopelessly impossible; the triumph of Clytemnestra and Aegisthus, without any visible adherents, over a loyal population whose discontent certainly had no leaning to Aegisthus is, to say the least, unlikely. But the question is whether these things would present in action the same aspect that they present to the literary student. After all, the drama is a γυναικῶν ψεύδος, in all languages and on every stage. The metrical form of speech never was, nor is, nor will be, natural in action; the events described in "Hamlet" could no more have happened in the time that it takes to exhibit them on the stage than they could happen in five minutes. The whole thing is aimed at an audience more quick to see and to feel than to argue. It is this, I think, and not "concealment and practical misrepresentation" (p. xiv.), as Dr. Verrall affirms, that has kept the "staggering surprises" of the plot from pressing so heavily on the minds of other students and commentators as they press on Dr. Verrall's. He seems to me hardly to realise that the very fact that the plot of the Agamemnon—a play that has been the delight of able men and scholars for many years—has never seemed so monstrous to any of them as it seems to him is in itself some proof that it is possible to be a little too logical and stringent in viewing the drama.

Secondly, we all of us recognise the fact, however illogical it may seem, that men's minds will allow a latitude to a drama whose subject is far removed from them in space, time, and circumstances, which they will not allow to a strictly contemporary play.

"Not Shakspeare himself, says Dr. Verrall (p. 21), "could have made the Londoners content to suppose that a Spanish ship lying at the Nore had fired upon an English ship lying at the Tower. They simply could not suppose it."

No, they could not; but those same Londoners apparently felt quite differently towards the prodigies of Tamburlaine, of Barabas, of the Tragical History of Doctor Faustus. Distance lends enchantment to the senses, as well as to the view. Homer is full of prodigies and literal impossibilities, but what Athenian of the ordinary sort would have felt them as such? The golden haze of an heroic antiquity conceals these logical crags and angles; and probably the age of Agamemnon seemed as remote to an Athenian—in spite of familiar names and localities—as it appears to us. Who looks for demonstrable possibilities in the legend of Loerine? Who does not feel that Coleridge—for once—missed the mark when he criticised the First Part of "Faust" by saying that the incredulus odi is felt in every line? It seems to me—with all respect and gratitude to Dr. Verrall for the surpassing interest of this introductory essay—that the feeling of incredulus odi dominates him too strongly; and that the sense of poetry—which never leaves him in translating or commenting—wavers, in him, before the breath of logical indignation when he views the poem as a whole. Does not Aristotle expressly say that tragedy was originally δόριος τῷ χρόνῳ, like epic? and Dion Chrysostom, apropos of the rival plays on Philoctetes, that no dramatist avoids all improbabilities—e.g., heralds going and returning journeys that require several days?

I have said that, in the matter of the text, Dr. Verrall is highly conservative; in the interpretation of it he leans strongly to innovation. Space forbids me to speak at length about the many passages on which he flashes new and surprising lights. The chief of these he has relegated to an Appendix (pp. 183-222), where some six and twenty passages are discussed with a fullness which would overburden the actual commentary. Of these I can but give samples. In ll. 2, 3, κοιμώμενος στέγαις Ἀτρεΐδων ἀγκαθεν, κυνὸς δίκην, the exact meaning and attitude of the watchman has been much discussed. Dr. Verrall courageously takes κοιμώμενος στέγαις ἀγκαθεν to = "lulled in the embrace of the roof," comparing the πετραία ἀγκάλη in Prom. Vinc., l. 1040. The question is, whether the irony of the expression is equally appropriate here? I think the new interpretation rather wins upon one. On the other hand, is it really so certain that κοιμώμενος στέγαις cannot = "couched upon the roof"? And when Dr. Verrall says that "a man could hardly describe himself as having lain in a certain posture for a year," he is misled by his own stringency. It is not only possible, but easy and natural, for a living man to describe himself by a phrase representing a literal impossibility, or a practical untruth. I trust Dr. Verrall has never been betrayed into saying, "I was bothered to death," or "he preached to us for hours," or into combining the two statements?

Much attention will doubtless be drawn to the interpretation of ll. 49-51, the celebrated simile of the vultures. Dr. Verrall is conservative of the old rendering of ἐκπαῖος as "that which is solitary, aloof from men." But ἀλγεσι παίδων, he thinks, must mean, "in grief from boys," i.e., youthful robbers of the eyrie, παίδων not being a proper synonym for δραγίχων, but used always of "young human beings." This may well be as true as it is certainly plausible; yet I do not think he quite gets over Eur. Ion, 175, by his argument from the supposed prudery of the passage; and I think he certainly ignores the probability of the human word being used here instead of the scientific one, exactly because it is of human bereavement and sorrow, not of melancholy vultures, that the poet is really thinking. In l. 438 we find a wholly new view of the somewhat enigmatic word, πένθεια. Hitherto, it has been viewed as related to πένθος, and—"mourning." But, following Mr. Housman, Dr. Verrall abjures this. Still conservative, however, of the MSS., he devises a new meaning, connected with πενθερός, and renders the whole passage—"There is and must be heartache for the women of every house"—literally "the kinswoman of each man's house is heavy at heart of course," πρέπει meaning "is naturally." If this must be—if the received translation is impossible, as Dr. Verrall rather acridly says—it must. But I do think that, in the transposition of the meaning from grief personified (cf. "Grief fills the room up of my absent child") to the depressed female cousin of the establishment, the poetry suffers horribly. Such is not the case, whatever other objection may be taken to it, with Dr. Verrall's view of the most beautiful, and perhaps most uncertain, passage in the Agamemnon, ll. 417-422:

πολλὸν δ' ἀνέστηνον
τὸ δ' ἐνέποντες δόμων προφῆται
"ἰὼ ἰὼ δῶμα δῶμα καὶ πρόμοι, ἰὼ λέχος καὶ στήθοι φιλόνορες, πᾶρεσσι σιγᾷς ἄμιμος ἀλοιδωρος ἄδιστος ἀφεμένων ἰδεῖν.

To Dr. Verrall, the δόμων προφῆται are "the seers who at Troy revealed to Paris and Helen what was passing at Argos, sighing, in spite of their intention to mock, at the suffering which they could see." He adheres to the MSS. ἄδιστος, resisting plausible conjectures. He takes σιγᾷς ἄμιμος as—"unregarded on the part of the silence." In the following clause he takes φάσμα to mean the wasted form of the pining Menelaus, "he seems but a phantom lord of the house." One might argue this passage till doomsday. I would only say, in passing, that I cannot believe that the seers are Trojans, or that ἀνέστηνον is compatible with triumph, or that the φάσμα is Menelaus. But, having expressed a certain want of sympathy with some elements in Dr. Verrall's work, I wish to bear testimony to its literary beauty. When we turn from the excruciating prose-translations of the great scholar Paley to those of Dr. Verrall, we seem to move in a new world. Allowing for the nonce his view of the passage and of the speakers, who will not part gratefully from Dr. Verrall after reading this:

"And oft they sighed, the interpreters of the home, as they said: 'Ah, for the home! Aha, for the home! Aha! and ah! for the princes thereof! for the husband's bed yet printed with her embrace! There he stands, his curses mocked with silence, the parted spouse, the sweetest sight of them all'?"

More lengthy consideration than is now possible within the limits of a single article is undoubtedly due to Prof. Tucker's edition of the Supplices—firstly, because it is a remarkably strenuous piece of work; and, secondly, because it is a piece of work that very much needed to be done. I cannot doubt that he is right in saying that "critical study, especially with English scholars, is apt to confine itself to certain narrow fields, which it ploughs over and over again, while it leaves terra sita domains of literature which might be reclaimed to great advantage" (Prof., p. vii.).

Of such neglect, the Supplices certainly affords an instance. Except Paley in his complete edition, no English scholar appears to have seriously edited the play. Now that he has completed his labours on the Trilogy, one could wish that Mr. Sidgwick would take the Supplices in hand in the same form. No one, with the memory of Dr. Verrall's novelties fresh upon him, could possibly say that the Agamemnon had been over-edited, but assuredly the Supplices has been under-edited. Prof. Tucker wishes to remove this stigma, and even those who differ from him in details will admit that he has done much towards its removal.

The defect of his edition seems to me to be a slightly pragmatical tone, not towards his brother scholars, but towards opponents in the abstract. For instance, he amends, in passing, Prom. Vinc., l. 680, by substituting αἰπεινός for αἰφνίδιος. Well and good; but why say, in advocacy of this change, that "no careful student of Aeschylus could bear the flagrant tautology ὑπρόσδοκῆτος αἰφνίδιος?" (p. ix.). Where is the tautology? A man is slain in battle suddenly, but not unexpectedly; when we see a thunder-storm roll up, the flash comes suddenly, but not unexpectedly. Like Dr. Verrall, Prof. Tyrrell is too stringent when he detects a superficial inconsistency. But his view, in the paragraph that follows, of Choeph., l. 698, is clear, reasonably expressed, and comes near to convincing. His analysis of the play is needlessly abrupt, and sounds more like a revolver than a piano; e.g. (pp. xvi., xvii.),

"If any native hear us, our tones will remind him of the sorrowing nightingale. This, too, is a manner of dirge. O gods! side with justice against vice and violence. Give us sanctuary. The purposes of Zeus are inscrutable, we only know that his will never fails. Mortals, nay, gods, he lays low in their pride; human wantonness is putting forth new leaves; may he look to it. Thus, though untrained, do I mourn like any dirgewoman."

This style of compression is ugly, and unnecessarily so. Something of the same hardness appears at times in the notes—e.g., in that on l. 43, where he reads, for Porson's ἀνθονομούσας, ἀνθονόμον τὰς, ὁ, προγόνοιο βοός, and annotates "The mention of flowers rather than grass tempers the bestial reference," meaning the reference to Io in her transformed condition—surely a bad piece of style.

On the other hand, persuaded as he is (with Dr. Kennedy) that "the Aeschylean MSS. are clogged with corruption" (p. xii.), Prof. Tucker lacks neither ingenuity nor courage in emendation. The principles upon which he would proceed are well and persuasively expressed on p. xxx. Whether or no l. 125, Διὸς κόρα, ἔχουσα σεμνὴν ὀπί' ἀσφαλές, really needs quite such drastic correction as Διὸς κόρα λέχους ἄσεμν' ἐν Ὀπί' σφάλασα, may be doubted; the reference to Opis is obscure, for I cannot gather that, anywhere else, Orion's attempt is said to have been made on Opis; and λέχους ἄσεμνα does not somehow feel like Aeschylus's language for "lustful conduct." For all that, the conjecture is very ingenious; so, I think, is the conjecture on l. 240, where μηρείται ἄκη stands hopelessly unintelligible. Prof. Tucker would read μητρὶνὰς δίκην. (I do not observe that he anywhere deals with the theory mentioned by Conington, in the Appendix to his Choephorois, that corruptions like these arose from dictation, and that errors of ear are concerned, as well as those of eye.) Personally, I find it hard, in view of the context, to give up δάκη; hard also to assent to the fanciful interpretation given to νεύονθ', in l. 328. Satisfaction is not to be expected on ll. 856-7; but βρότειος ἄτα certainly finds confirmation in l. 509.

In brief, I think that "the antipodean student," as Prof. Tucker dubs himself on p. viii., has produced, in spite of the difficulties alluded to on p. xiii., a very able and erudite edition of a much neglected play. There are some superfluities in the notes—e.g., the second part of that on l. 2; the end of that on l. 82; and the beginning of that on l. 777. But the edition, so far from being superfluous, was terribly needed, and should be treated with gratitude by all lovers of Aeschylus.

E. D. A. MORSHEAD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A BABYLONIAN WORD "AMMATU."

Otesbunt, Herts: Feb. 15, 1890.

In the last number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record Mr. Pinches has published in cuneiform text and transcription a duplicate of the Babylonian Creation Legend hitherto known from K. 5419, 3473, and 4832, &c. Of these the first, with which I am now concerned, was reproduced in Delitzsch's Assyrische Lesestücke (3rd ed., p. 93), while the transcription may be read in Schrader, C.O.T., vol. i., p. 2. Now, in the duplicate just published, the second line of the opening of the Creation Legend reads thus:

"šap-liš am-ma-tu" šu-mu la [zakrat]."

Here ammatu for "ground," "land," "earth," stands in place of ma-tu in K. 5419. It might, perhaps, be thought possible that by a very exceptional combination we might read šap-liš-am. This would, indeed, be a most unusual mode of writing in place of šap-li-šam; for it is notorious that the Assyrians avoided writing phonetically in a word or syllable beginning with a vowel immediately after a closed syllable. There are, however, more examples than we might at first suspect of so exceptional a combination. Delitzsch, in his Assyrian Grammar (Reuther) § 17, cites a-sib-at (II. Rawl. 66, no. 1, 9); and this peculiarity appears most frequently in the case of accented suffixes—e.g. first person -an-ni in Sin sallim-an-ni and other proper names (see Canon of Rulers passim). In the Kassam-cylinder of Asurbanipal I have noted il-lik-am-ma and u-bil-am-ma and other forms of like ending (col. i. 62; ii. 80, 102; iii. 19; vii. 96, 100). But we have no right to assume here anything so unprecedented as an adverbial šap-liš-am parallel with umīšam and darišam (or with fuller termination -am-ma, as in šat-ti-šam-ma), for these endings appear to belong to adverbs of time (see Delitzsch, ibid., § 80 b, 8).

Accordingly, the existence of a word ammatu is warranted by the duplicate. The confident assertion, therefore, of the writer E. (in the Expositor, August 1889, p. 159) that no such form exists in the first Creation-tablet, falls to the ground. This word is obviously Semitic and appears to throw light on two Old Testament passages.

1. In 2 Sam. viii. 1 occurs the somewhat enigmatical metheg ha-ammaḥ. Menius, indeed, on comparing the parallel in 1 Chron. xviii. 1 and the LXX of 1 Sam. viii. 1, would be disposed to reject the Hebrew text of the latter. But its validity seems to be fairly supported by the arguments of Canon Driver in his elaborate and instructive work Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Samuel (Clarendon Press), which has recently come into my hands. If the metaphorical use of the Arabic zimd for "power," "jurisdiction," satisfactorily explains the use of metheg here, may not the Assyrian ammatu guide us to the correct understanding of ammah as meaning here "land" or "district"—a signification better suited to the context?

2. And similarly in Is. vi. 4 we would connect the plural ammôth, "foundations," with the same word meaning in the singular "land" or "ground."

The word ammah, ammatu, is probably derived from the root אמן, signifying "mother." The primitive connexion of earth with motherhood needs no illustration. Compare Sayce's Hibbert Lectures, p. 251. For Delitzsch's assumption (Prolegomena eines neuen Heb. Aramäischen Wörterbuch, p. 109) that the root originally meant "to be broad" or "roomy," I cannot see sufficient evidence.

OWEN C. WHITEHOUSE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for the publication of a French translation of the works appearing in Mr. Walter Scott's "Contemporary Science" series, under the general editorship of Dr. Henri de Varigny. The French publishers will be MM. Lecrosnier & Babbé.

MR. H. H. HOWORTH has contributed to the Proceedings of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society an elaborate criticism of Dr. Croll's well-known theory of alternate glacial and warm periods in each hemisphere, and of interglacial climates. He concludes that neither on meteorological, geological, nor palaeontological grounds can this theory be maintained.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE third volume of the "Old Welsh Texts" is now in the binders' hands, and will be issued to subscribers early in March. This volume is called The Bruts, and contains the text of Brut y Tywysogion, Brut y Saesson, Geoffrey of Monmouth, Dares Phrygius, &c., all but the first having never been printed before. The work has been withheld for ten months in order to examine other MSS. containing similar texts; and these have been classified and reviewed in a preface by Mr. Gwenogvryn Evans, while Prof. Rhys has written an introduction dealing specially with Geoffrey's Brut.

WHEN noticing Messrs. King & Cookson's Introduction to the Comparative Grammar of Greek and Latin in the ACADEMY of last week, we hazarded the opinion that that book had "no rival as a manual of the modern doctrines of classical philology for the higher forms of schools." That opinion, however, was falsified even before it was published by the appearance of an English translation of M. Victor Henry's Précis de Grammaire Comparée du Grec et du Latin, made by Mr. R. T. Elliott, with a commendatory preface by Prof. Nettleship (Sonnen-schein). The original, which has already passed through two editions, was reviewed by Prof. Sayce in the ACADEMY of July 21, 1888. We must be satisfied now to remark that the translator has done well in substituting English for French examples in the explanations of phonetic phenomena and in the comparisons of cognate words. Neglect of this principle seriously impairs the practical utility of the translation of Paul's Principles of the History of Language.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Annual General Meeting, Thursday, January 30.)

THE Master of Christ's, president, in the chair. The following new officers were elected for the current year: president, Dr. Sandys; vice-president, the Master of Christ's; member of council, Prof. Jebb. The Master of Christ's read a paper in which he called attention to a modification in the latest editions of Paul's Principles, pp. 58-60, and Brugmann's Greek Grammar, p. 11 (in Müller's Handbuch, &c.), of the doctrine of the invariability of phonetic sequence. Paul distinguishes from the examples of regular substitution of one sound for another others not regular which he describes as interchange in certain definite cases. These are (1) metathesis, e.g. "wasp" = A.S. waspe, $\psi\epsilon = \sigma\phi\epsilon$, where the sounds are consecutive, or O.H.G. essih (now essig) = aestum, where they are not consecutive, (2) assimilation of two sounds not consecutive, as quinque for Idg. penge, (3) dissimilation, as polegrinus for poregrinus; or δρῶπακτος for δρῶπακτος*, where r is lost, or semestris for semimestris, where a syllable nearly the same as the following syllable falls out. In like manner Brugmann distinguishes gradual and progressive substitutions of sound from metatheses which take place by sudden transition. The writer of the paper gave reasons for inferring that Brugmann, though he only specifies metatheses, yet may be supposed to include the other changes given by Paul, as cases where strict uniformity was not to be expected; and he pointed out that Brugmann gave a reason for this variability (which Paul had not), viz., that the changes were sudden. It was then suggested that if regularity was not to be expected in assimilation of non-consecutive sounds, on the ground that such assimilation was sudden, there might be no reason to expect it when the sounds were consecutive, because it might be plausibly maintained that such assimilations were also sudden. It is notorious that in Latin numerous variations from the ordinary law are found in these assimilations: e.g. we find quondam for quondam* with change of m to n, but quande with none; cena for cena*, but urna for urna*; collis for collis*, but uolnus, where n remains; porrum for porrum*, but dorsum; and many like ones. Even if we allow that some such variations have been plausibly explained, yet many remain for which no explanation has ever been offered. The writer suggested that thorough-going adherents of the dogma of unvarying phonetic sequence might find comfort in this explanation of variations which in fact are found, viz., that when change was sudden, regularity was not to be expected. But he pointed out there was a preliminary point to be settled. The most distinguished phoneticians are not agreed whether there is such a thing as "sudden" change. Sievers (Grundzüge, p. 226, ed.) holds that there is, and gives as an instance labialism in Greek, Umbrian, and Oscan. Sweet, on the other hand, seems at least (H.E.S. § 42) to deny it. With the view of testing this point, and so furnishing a basis for the view described above, the writer gave a full list of the different kinds of sound-change and classified them tentatively as sudden or gradual.—A long discussion followed.

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, February 5) A. H. BULLEN, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. Edmund Gosse read a paper on "The Masques of Ben Jonson." In the course of his remarks, Mr. Edmund Gosse said: It is characteristic of the anomalous character of the development of English imaginative work that, although masques are of exotic origin, and although they are eminently foreign to the instinctive tone of our society, they exist nowhere but in the literature of this country. The entertainments of Ferrara and Venice, of Paris and Madrid, have passed away and left no sign, although, doubtless, they often exceeded in splendour the best that London could produce; but it was in England only that the poet stepped in and gave immortality to a pageant which, without his aid, could last no longer than a gorgeous sunset. Nay more, it was during two generations only that the English masque itself existed as a form of poetical literature. From the year 1512, when Henry VIII., at the feast of Epiphany, danced with eleven others in disguise "after the manner of Italy," onwards till 1603, when Ben Jonson, dissatisfied with the bald form of "entertainments," broke out into his first pure masque, "The Satyr," these forms of courtly show were incessantly revived in the progresses of our monarchs. Sidney prepared a "Lady of the May" and Gascoigne a "Princely Pleasures" in 1575; but these were scarcely articulate, and had not much more literature in them than that "Device of the Indian Prince" which has been attributed to Bacon. The masques which are in any sense poems are only about fifty in all, but they formed the lighter labours of a very goodly company. The masquers are few in number; but Ben Jonson stands up, burly and mountainous, in the midst of them, with Shakspeare holding his right hand and Milton his left. A masque was originally an interlude. Between the acts of a solemn Florentine comedy the stage would be crowded by mummers in beautiful and fantastic dresses, engaged in some allegorical or classical dumb-show. Sometimes, no doubt, the lords would be seated on chairs at the sides of the stage during the serious part of the performance, and would join, being ready habited, in frolic dances whenever the curtain fell. By-and-by these four interludes would be combined with one thread of fancy; and, later still, they would, no doubt for convenience sake, be played together as a single performance. Architecture supplied the scene with all its mechanical contrivances and florid landscape; choreography decided what peculiar dances should be introduced and conducted; music brought an orchestra together; while painting designed the costumes and grouped the actors in masses of exuberant colour. For nearly a century this was enough, and the masque was no more than a very elaborate ballet. But in the midst of the first Jacobean efflorescence, when every bush was ringing with melody, no one could be satisfied with dumb show. Like the performers in Beethoven's Choral Symphony, there came a moment when the excitement of the masquers could not be kept silent any longer; and the masques of Campion, Daniel, Fletcher, Chapman, Beaumont, Jonson broke simultaneously into poetry. It may be said at the same time that it was Shakspeare who, in his "Representation of Hymen," in the "As You Like It" of 1599, first conquered a place in literature for the pure masque. These circumstances being taken into consideration and the genius of the composers of these courtly pageants being recognised, it is at first sight surprising that the positive value of these masques is not greater than it is. The great fault of all those specimens which we possess, with the exception of "Comus," is their inherent slowness, their tenuity of interest. We may turn from Shakspeare's little "Representation of Hymen" in "As You Like It" to Ben Jonson's elaborate study in the folklore of witchcraft which forms the nucleus of "The Masque of Queens," from Campion's earliest masque to Shirley's latest, without finding one which, however splendid, is not essentially trivial. The form permitted no dramatic development, and less individual action than modern opera. Passion of every kind was excluded. There could be no movement of character. Ingenious scenery, splendid dresses, were combined to display the faces, figures, and physical accomplishments of beautiful young aristocrats of both sexes. It is natural for us to wonder how poetry entered at all into these performances, not why in so doing it relinquished so much of its essential vitality. What was left to a masque-poet to do was to exercise his art as a forger of lyrical conceits, to unravel the threads of a moral or loyal allegory, or to reel off quaint lengths of compliment in heroic couplets. Among those who acquitted themselves of these strictly curtailed responsibilities, Ben Jonson stands easily pre-eminent. Where Campion—who is next in order of copiousness—has left us four, of Jonson there are preserved at least thirty, or considerably more than half of the whole existing number of masques. The confinement of the form, its inherent stiffness and insipidity, did not alarm the fighting elephant of Elizabethan song. It added but another to the magnificent trappings which he was proud to carry. Ben Jonson was prepared to adopt, and to stick to, what Shakspeare would only handle in a moment of caprice and Webster would only touch and reject. The consequence was that he gave the tone to this order of entertainment, and that his pieces form the canon of the English masque. Those who examine closely will see that, in point of fact, he invented little. Daniel's "Vision of the Twelve Goddesses," and Campion's "Masque of the Lord Hayes," are more like what afterwards came to be the Jonsonian model than any masque which Ben Jonson had produced at that early date; but there is no question that, with practice, Jonson learned to be much more adroit and amusing than any of his rivals, and in his hands, between 1609 and 1615, the masque rose to its height as a branch of dramatic poetry. The general outline of the typical masque may be given without prejudice to the interior structure, the details of which differed in every case, as the ingenuity of poet and architect dictated. The scene would be the end of some great hall, at Court or in the Inns of Law, for example. The audience, being limited and private, would be content with but half the space, the rest being fitted up as a deep stage, with every species of mechanical contrivance. A trumpet was blown, the curtains fell aside and discovered an altar, round which a throng of priests and pages were dancing; or a mountain top, with the moon rising behind it; or Night, in a star-spangled chariot, hovering from a cloud. Whatever the scene, it encouraged the immediate appearance of some figure or figures elaborately dressed, often as fantastically exceeding the ordinary habit of the day as the knights and ladies so quaintly painted by Zucchero surpassed in splendour ourselves in our subfusc raiment. To the audience the appearance of these gorgeous personages would be fraught with personal excitement. That is the Queen herself, it would be whispered, dancing down the stage hand in hand with the Countess of Bedford, each in a costume of azure and silver, their hands and faces blackened, and adorned with savage ornaments of jewels and feathers wound with ropes of pearl. That in green, with a zone of gold about her, crowned with myrtle—that, surely, is the Countess of Arundel? Thus in a subdued excitement of conjecture, the masque would open, till, after the first dance, some unknown personage, probably a professional actor or reciter, would come forward and begin to intone some of Ben Jonson's solid verse, or link one division to another with a strain of verbal music. For us, these slight pieces live in the poetry they contain, or in the poet's robust prose descriptions, notes, reflections, and prefaces. For the audience, it is hard to believe that they did not mainly subside in their magnificence, in the beauty and quality of the chief masquers, in rumours of the vast sums spent on the dresses, the machinery, the music, and the painting. The poetical record of these effulgent spectacles forms a little backwater in the stream of Jacobean poetry. While the main body of our literature was progressing so rapidly, and changing character irreparably every five or six years, the masques continued to wheel round and round for three or four decades, with no other change than that the lines they drew on the pool they haunted grew slowly fainter and fainter. From the death of Elizabeth to the outbreak of the Civil War the masque continued to hold its clearly-defined place in literature—too aristocratic to be affected by changes in popular taste, preserved amid the ruin of far more solid constructions by its very lightness and evanescence. Mr. Gosse then proceeded to analyse some of the leading examples of the masque, and in particular the "Oberon" of Ben Jonson—A brief discussion ensued, which was opened by Mr. A. H. Bullen, and continued by Mr. Sidney Lee, Mr. Frederick Rogers, Mr. Bertram Dyer, and Miss Grace Latham.

SHELLEY SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, February 12)

Mr. W. F. RAYELL, read a paper on "Prometheus Unbound": the Realisation of its Ideals. All great and permanent work, said the lecturer, must be vitalised by human interest; and of such interest "Prometheus Unbound" is full, in spite of its greatness of scope and indistinctness of outline. Prometheus, as drawn by Shelley, represents the type of character by which the reformation of the world may be brought about; and in depicting this reformation the poet deliberately chose the realm of idealism, since "in emotions," as Herbert Spencer says, "lie the springs of human conduct." The triumph of Prometheus over Jupiter is effected by no force or violence, but by an inner change of spirit—the mind of man, of which Prometheus is representative, having gradually learnt the great lesson that the secret of true freedom is Love. It is by "gentleness, virtue, wisdom, and endurance" that the suffering Titan is enabled to withstand the overwhelming domination of Jupiter, typical of the all-prolific evil which finds lodgment in man's heart—this development of soul and character bringing about the ultimate redemption of mankind.—A discussion followed, in which Mr. W. M. Rossetti, Dr. Furnivall, Mr. H. Buxton Forman, Mr. H. S. Salt, and others took part.

FINE ART.

TWO ANTIQUARIAN BOOKS.

Trade Tokens issued in the Seventeenth Century. By George O. Williamson. Vol. I. (Elliot Stock.) In form, this is a new edition of the well-known book by William Boyne under the same title (1858); but the additions and corrections are so numerous, and they have been so thoroughly incorporated into the original, as to constitute it a new work. The editor is to be congratulated not only upon his opportunities, but still more upon the excellent use he has made of them. Starting with the collections and MS. notes obtained from Mr. Boyne, he recognised at once that he could only bring his task to a successful end by enlisting local co-operation. As contrasted with coins, tokens are peculiarly the subject of local interest. They were never intended to circulate far from their native place; and there for the most part, they have remained to the present day, in county museums or in private cabinets. Above all, it is only by means of local knowledge that their real meaning and history can be ascertained. Mr. Williamson, therefore, deserves the gratitude not only of professed numismatists, but of all those interested in the study of the minor materials of English history, for the modesty with which he has subordinated himself to his county sub-editors. The plan of the work and the general responsibility are his own; but he would be the first to acknowledge how deeply he is indebted to his collaborators for the accurate local information which marks the great difference between his book and that of Boyne. For three or four counties included in this volume, Mr. Williamson has been unable to obtain such local help; and here his pages assume, perforce, the form of a dry catalogue. In one instance the sub-editor has overburdened the text with annotations which would be more appropriate to a local history; and another sub-editor has been unable to refrain from the introduction of unseasonable witticisms. But all the rest is so excellent that we are perhaps doing an injustice to those unnamed when we specially mention for praise the work of Major Lowesley, for Berks; of Mr. H. S. Gill, for Devon; of Mr. J. S. Udall, for Dorset; and of Mr. G. E. Hodgkin, for London. The present volume consists of more than 800 pages, with twelve plates, and several woodcuts in the text for Herts. A second volume will conclude the counties of England, together with Wales and Ireland; and will also contain no less than ten classified indexes, so as to make it "indispensable" to the collector.

New Studies in Old Subjects. By J. A. Sparvel-Bayly. (Elliot Stock.) This is a well-printed and readable volume of antiquarian miscellanies. The element of novelty is not its conspicuous feature, nor have we observed that any new discoveries have been made by the author in those by-ways of historical research through which he leads his readers. But Mr. Bayly has collected from various sources a good deal of interesting matter; and the papers upon "Early Church Dedications," "Pews of the Past," and "The Brewer and his Beer," are particularly noteworthy. The distinction between ale and beer is altogether forgotten nowadays. Formerly ale implied a sweet fermented drink made from malt without hops or other bitter herbs. "A pot of ale," says an old author, "consists of four parts: first the ale, then the toast, then the ginger, then the nutmeg." Beer, on the other hand, was always supposed to contain hops, which certainly formed an ingredient in its composition before the days of Henry VIII. The old distich—

"Hops, Reformation, Carp, and Beer Came into England all in one year"

—must not be accepted as trustworthy evidence in the face of contemporary records. Mr. Bayly quotes from the presentments made at the Hundred Court of Hythe in 1446 a charge brought against certain women in the parish for brewing "cerevisia et bere"; and he gives reasons for assigning to the former word, when it stands alone, the meaning of ale. The hop is not improbably indigenous to the south of England.

THE GLASGOW INSTITUTE OF THE FINE ARTS.

FOR many years past the most characteristic "note" of the exhibitions of the Glasgow Institute has been their variety, their broad and eclectic comprehensiveness. Its directors have welcomed work by representatives of the most diverse artistic schools, have given interest to their displays by including many notable pictures from London, have admitted—and, indeed, sedulously sought for—works of merit by foreign painters, and have every year brought before the public a few productions by great deceased artists. By this comprehensiveness, which has been more distinctly characteristic of its exhibitions than of any other Scottish artistic displays, and by the opportunities for comparison which this comprehensiveness has rendered possible, the Institute has very definitely served the cause of culture in the North, and afforded a boon to such art-lovers—and these are not few—who are unable to make frequent visits to London.

The variety and comprehensiveness to which we have referred has never, we think, been more clearly visible than in that twenty-sixth exhibition of the Institute which is now open. The loan examples include a good version of Reynolds's portrait of himself—the bust picture in a red gown, and holding a roll of papers in the hand, which was engraved in mezzotint by Townley in 1777, and in stipple by J. K. Sherwin, seven years later; a vigorous head of "Grecian" Williams, by Raeburn; and a large Constable, of rather moderate quality, all lent by Sir Charles Tennant; a spirited little circular "Rialto," by James Holland, especially vigorous in the markings that define the details of its architecture; and examples of Wilkie, G. Paul Chalmers, Bough, Diaz, and Monticelli.

Among the more important of the works that come from London are Mr. H. S. Tuke's Chantrey Bequest picture, "All Hands to the Pumps," a subject that is spirited in conception, but rather thin and poor in colouring; Sir J. D. Linton's "Surrender," painted in 1883, a work showing some dramatic interest, but sadly wanting in true painter's power—in vigour of touch, in instinct for colour, in perception that the shadowed side of any coloured object is something more, and quite other, than a merely darkened tone of the same pigment which it shows in light; and two interesting examples of Mr. G. F. Watts—the smaller version of his “Orpheus and Eurydice,” and his noble seated portrait of Sir Frederick Leighton, so graceful and dignified in pose, arrangement of line, and general composition, so noble in its treatment of the crimsons and scarlets of the robe in which the President is swathed, though the actual flesh-tints of the sitter have been, perhaps, too obviously subordinated and adapted to meet the requirements of the colour scheme, we have somewhat less suggestion than might be desired of the forms of the upper limbs beneath the drapery.

Among the works by Edinburgh painters may be named Mr. George Reid's accomplished and forcible portrait of Mr. James Reid (the vice-president of the Glasgow Institute) and Mr. M'Taggart's freely-handled “Machrihanish Bay.” The Glasgow painters are well-represented—Mr. J. Lavery, by his refined classical subject, “Ariadne”; Mr. James Guthrie, by his large equestrian portrait of “George Smith, Esq.,” in which an open-air effect and the resultant relation between figure and landscape background have been attained in a singularly unlaboured, but successful, fashion; Mr. E. A. Walton, by his firmly-touched portrait of a seated girl—a most accomplished study in various tones of grey and ruddy browns, and fascinating in the restful expression of the face, which is repeated most skilfully and sympathetically by the action of the hands; and Mr. Joseph Henderson, by “A Summer Breeze,” one of the best sea-pieces with coast that we have seen from his brush; while Mr. James Paterson, in his “Glencairn,” shows a delightfully visionary scene of early evening after rain, with the grey clouds scattering and their fragments growing dun-coloured and then passing into gold, as they dispart to disclose a sky-space of softly-tinted clarity.

Perhaps, however, the most interesting—certainly the most harmonious—section of the exhibition is that gallery (No. IV.) in which has been collected examples of the work of the “London Impressionists,” along with contributions by certain Scottish painters, mainly painters of the West, whose aims are fresh enough—may we say eccentric enough?—to bear comparison with these. In this room we find a duly important position assigned to the “Nymph” of Mr. William Stott, of Oldham—a work visible not very long ago in the Suffolk-street Art Gallery, and certainly the best of the classically-titled pictures by the artist with which we are acquainted; one which, in the skilfully decorative introduction of the excellently painted crimson roses and hollyhocks, makes one think of Botticelli, and which has the merit of using in as free, untraditional, and closely personal a fashion as did Botticelli himself the classical motifs which have been adopted as its basis. Of the simpler and more naturalistic side of Mr. Stott's art his rendering of “Breakers” may be accepted as a sufficient example. By Mr. A. Roche we have a charmingly touched, pleasantly toned interior with figures, “Tête-à-Tête.” The “London Impressionists” are represented by several works of moderate quality by Messrs. Bernhard and Walter Sickert, by several small subjects by Mr. Paul Maitland, Mr. Frank Bates, and Mr. Theodore Roussel, including the very silvery and harmoniously toned “Barge” of the last-named painter. Among the Glasgow artists working upon lines which have more than a remote similarity to the work of these painters may be named Mr. George Henry and Mr. E. A. Hornel. The aims of these two have, at least, much in common; and what their main aim is may be easily enough seen—their main aim is colour, colour conceived in a manner distinctly personal and individual; for each of the two painters we have named possesses a colour-sense sufficiently strong and true to enable him to invent colour-harmonies or contrasts that are his own, and not merely adapted from others. Both of them seem to have been influenced—Mr. Henry very definitely in his “Cinderella”—by the art of Japan. The weak side of their art, the defects which will chiefly prevent its appreciation by the great public, is its want of realism, its remoteness from the “pure crude facts” of nature. The combinations of colour that appear to the right in Mr. Henry's “Autumn,” its superb flashings of vivid brick-reds through the stems of keenest blue and sharpest grey-white, have been imagined rather than seen; they are abstract colour rather than observed colour; they are combinations not beheld in this world of ours, but rather discovered—as Mrs. Browning says about another thing—“somewhere out of it, I think,” discovered in that “kingdom” of the artist's soul which is “his very own.” Again, the sense for form seems yet singularly defective in both artists; much more in this direction might have been combined with their colour-methods—though, of course, these methods are incompatible with any formal, detailed, or academically accurate insistence upon facts of form. We have devoted what may be, perhaps, thought more than a due proportion of our space to the works of these two painters, because we consider that each of them shows—amid much that is immature and not a little that is extravagant—a clearly personal and individual quality, which is rarer in contemporary art than it should be, and which, when found, is correspondingly delightful; and because we believe that if these two painters continue faithful to their artistic instincts, it will not be many years before they are producing work of true artistic excellence as well as individuality. There is much, indeed, to quarrel with in Mr. Hornel's “Winter Fuel”; but how exquisitely delicate is that face of the child to our extreme right, and what a lovely passage of colour is given by the combinations of pale green against grey introduced in its dress? In a less complex subject, “Study of a Girl's Head,” the same painter has dropped for the moment all eccentricity whatever, and produced quite one of the most artistic, delicate, and purely delightful things in the whole exhibition.

The Water-Colour Room contains one of Mr. Albert Moore's graceful female heads—“Margarete”—a thing perfect, like all that Mr. Moore produces, in its own severely restricted colour scheme; two good Maues, “The Reader” and “Cattle”; Mr. J. M. Swan's extremely vigorous rendering of a “Tiger”; a rustic character-study, “A Country Blacksmith,” by Mr. H. W. Kerr, admirable for the searching and thorough modelling of the worn and weather-stained face; and Mr. J. Thorburn Ross's striking rendering of an “Evening Concert, Venice.”

In the department of sculpture we find Mr. Bruce Joy's dignified head of the Archbishop of Canterbury, various spirited bronzes by Mr. A. Drury, and Mr. D. W. Stevenson's “Sir John Fowler,” one of the most telling of the portrait-busts that this sculptor has produced.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A PHOENICIAN INSCRIPTION IN CYPRUS.

Larnaca: Feb. 2, 1890.

I beg to correct an error in my letter published in the ACADEMY of May 7, 1887, regarding a Phoenician inscription found at the time in a church near Dali, the ancient Idalion.

Owing to the smallness of the letters on the stone, and to many of them being damaged and indistinct, I read the first proper name which occurs as Baalram; it should be Baalmelek (the second).

The mistake was pointed out to me by Prof. Sayce on his last visit to this island; and that my reading of the name was wrong is also confirmed by new copies kindly sent me by Col. Warren, our Chief Secretary to Government. Moreover, in two Phoenician inscriptions, also from Idalion, Melekiathon's father is simply named Baalram,* without the title of king, whereas our newly-found Baalmelek is mentioned as King of Kition and of Idalion. Prof. Sayce has also deciphered the name of the month, which is Merapham.

What then is to be done with regard to the Phoenician dynasty of Kition, which I considered as being uninterrupted? The most plausible conjecture I can make is that Baalmelek II. died without male issue, and that Melekiathon succeeded him, probably as “next-of-kin.”

Substituting Baalmelek II. for Baalram, the revised list of reigns would be the following. I have adopted, as nearly as possible, the dates given by the Marquis de Vogüé, which appeared to me the most correct to go upon.

Baalmelek I.	circa B.C.	450-420.
Azbaal	„	420-400.
Baalmelek II.	„	400-380.
Melekiathon	„	380-350.
Pumiathon	„	350-300.

D. PIERIDES.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

We understand that The Chemistry of Paints and Paintings—a volume embodying the researches which Prof. A. H. Church, of the Royal Academy, has been conducting during several years past—will be published by Messrs. Seeley in the course of next month.

MESSRS CHAPMAN & HALL will publish immediately an English translation of the latest volumes of MM. Perrot and Chipiez's History of Ancient Art, dealing with Sardinia, Judaea, Syria, and Cappadocia, and thus including the so-called “Hittite” art. The two volumes will have nearly four hundred illustrations.

MR. CHARLES GREEN has finished two drawings for the forthcoming exhibition of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours. One of them—the smaller and less important of the two, albeit it is an excellent example of the quiet humour of the artist—presents to us the hero of the comic poem of William Cowper in a guise with which pictorial design has hardly thus far familiarised us. John Gilpin is not, in the drawing of Mr. Green, concerned in any way with the adventures of the day on which he essayed to take holiday. He is, rather, “displaying himself in his parlour, to the admiration of his wife and child, in the uniform of a volunteer officer of the period.” “A Train-Band Captain eke was he,” we are told, in the immortal verse; and it is simply in this capacity that Mr. Charles Green has painted him. The second and larger drawing is not the least important of the Dickens series which Mr. Green is gradually building up. Indeed it is, as a study of quaint character, as memorable as any that have preceded it. It represents Mr. Pickwick, rotund and benevolent, mounted upon a chair in whatever tavern-chamber was appropriated to the meetings of his Club, and now in act to address his fellow members. On his right appears the suave figure of Mr. Tracy Tupman—renowned, as history tells us, for the conquest of the fair. On his left is Mr. Snodgrass, to whom “poetic fame,” as Mr. Pickwick has just reminded him, is “dear.”

* Corpus Ins. Semiticarum, tome i., part 1^{ma}. Idalion, N. 88 and 90.

The Chairman and Secretary and Mr. Nathaniel Winkle are not far off; and in a remote corner sits, discontented with the remarks of the orator, that citizen of Aldgate who will presently interrupt the proceedings by addressing to Mr. Pickwick an observation which will necessitate another member of the Club "rising to order," and which will eventually be withdrawn. It may easily be imagined how thoroughly Mr. Green has entered into the humours of this scene, and with what loving care he has treated every detail of character and costume.

ON Wednesday, and the three following days of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will sell the collection of engravings and drawings formed by the late G. W. Reid, Mr. Sidney Colvin's predecessor as keeper of the prints in the British Museum. Though not containing any of those exceptional rarities which amateurs fight for, the collection may be called fairly representative of every school of the old engravers, including Dürer, Beham, Aldegrever, Lucan van Leyden, Marco Antonio Raimondi, Rembrandt, Van Dyck, Hollar, Faithorne, &c. There are also a few interesting drawings in various mediums by Italian, Dutch, French, and other masters.

THE twelfth annual exhibition of modern pictures in the Atkinson Art Gallery, at Southport, will be opened next week. The exhibition is managed by a committee of the corporation.

ALTHOUGH it is well known that English mezzotints have for the last few years been increasing in value; and although, to boot, the work of George Morland has within the same time gained distinctly in reputation, it is, nevertheless, something of a surprise to find the mezzotints after this admirable master realising quite the prices which they achieved at Christie's last week. At a sale consisting almost entirely, if not indeed absolutely, of the prints after George Morland, certain sums were paid which rival the prices wont to be attained by all but the rarest of the mezzotints after Sir Joshua Reynolds. Morland, it may be remembered, was engraved by the very men whose labours on the copper have added very appreciably to Sir Joshua's fame. With two of these men—William Ward and John Raphael Smith—Morland, was, indeed, connected by marriage; and at least one other great mezzotint engraver of the period—John Young—was engaged from time to time in the translation of Morland's paintings. Last week "Industry and Idleness" sold for twenty guineas; "The Squire's Door" and "The Farmer's Door" for twenty-two guineas; "Mutual Confidence" for £17; "Stable Amusements"—one of the finest of William Ward's—for £20; "The First of September" (morning and evening) for £42; "Juvenile Navigators," for £23; and many others for high prices. We said "high prices"; but, after all, when it is remembered that sums in excess of these are asked for some of the fashionable etchings of the moment—not original work, but copies from talked-about pictures—there is really nothing extravagant in the attitude of the buyer towards the chosen examples of an ancient and sterling art.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE first representation of Mr. Sydney Grundy's three-act adaptation from the French has been appointed for this evening at the Garrick Theatre, where "The Tosca"—in spite of the somewhat laboured enthusiasm with which its performance was received by a section of the press—has enjoyed by no means a long run. Mr. Hare himself has an important part in the new piece; and Miss Kate Rorke returns to the same theatre in the part of the heroine. Miss Rorke has, therefore, been obliged to abandon her performance in "A Midsummer Night's Dream" with Mr. Benson.

AT last a day has been finally determined on for the production of the revival of "As You Like It" at the St. James's. Mrs. Langtry will open this playhouse on Monday next. Mr. Lewis Wingfield is responsible for the elaborate scenic effects, without which a play by a writer so démodé as Shakspeare could not reasonably hope to succeed.

THE Opéra Comique has reopened its doors with a performance of "Les Cloches de Corneville," of which a most notable feature will probably be found to be the resumption by Mr. Shiel Barry of the part in which, now many years ago, he made so legitimate a sensation. The performance cannot fail to offer the attraction of a union of exquisite music with Robsonian tragedy.

NEXT Wednesday evening has been appointed for the annual semi-public reading, at the London Institution, by that now well-esteemed Shakspeare Reading Society, which enjoys the advantage of the coaching of Mr. William Poel. The play chosen this year—which Mr. Poel has carefully rehearsed with the members—is "Much Ado About Nothing." The readers, we learn, will, on this occasion, be reinforced by the presence of Miss Alexis Leighton, who reads Beatrice, and of Mr. S. Johnson, who reads Dogberry—Mr. Johnson appearing by permission of Mr. Henry Irving, who is the president of the society.

MUSIC.

BOOKS ON MUSIC.

Music and Action; or, The Elective Affinity between Rhythm and Pitch. By J. Donovan. (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.) By the aid of Herbartian principles of psychology our author thinks the mystery of music may be easily unravelled. Rhythmic sounds, he tells us, became natural accompaniments of bodily movements, of those which are felt as well as of those which are seen; and such movements were the sources of our feelings of expansion. He also bids us note that intense pleasure attaches to self-expansion. The importance thus assigned to rhythm makes Mr. Donovan very angry with Wagner for having, as he says, aimed at delivering music from the gross material slavery of rhythmic stimulation. The passage from Wagner referred to evidently needs to be studied with its context; for, in his Beethoven, the Baireuth master tells us clearly that "without rhythm music would not be perceptible." "The pitch element of music," says Mr. Donovan, "presents to the mind a set of related ideas, which actively engage attention." And he further asserts that "this attraction of attention, and not any pleasure-giving power in the tones themselves, constituted the first step in the evolution of musical delight." So, if we read our author aright, rhythm is merely a sort of handle to set the human machine a-going, and intellect first concerns itself with pitch. We are inclined to reverse Mr. Donovan's order, and to say that tones, and relation of tones, stirred men's feelings; and that rhythm engaged their intellect. Mr. Rowbotham, indeed, opens his History of Music with the intellectual mystery of rhythmic sound. Our author, however, does not appear to have quite made up his mind as to the effect of rhythm. He tells us (p. 20) that any interval by its slight attraction of attention would cause "a deeper pleasure than rhythmic beats alone could give"; from this we surely have a right to conclude that he ascribes a certain degree of pleasure to rhythmic beats.

Yet (p. 101) he speaks about "rhythmic beats, on the whole painful, even to the demi-savage." But how was the junction between rhythm and pitch effected? In one place, Mr. Donovan speaks of it as "accidental"; in another as "planned in heaven." This may not be very satisfactory; but as no one is likely to deny the fact of the junction of these two elements, we may pass on to other matters.

Mr. Donovan divides music into three classes: (1) that which through mere rhythm and variety of sound-colourings is lulling and inane; (2) that which partially engages the activities of perception; and (3) that which fully engages those activities. And he declares that the greater the power of music to occupy attention by itself the higher and purer the self-expansion and the higher and purer the pleasure. We need not dwell for the moment on the first and second classes. The last fully brings out the author's psychological analysis of music. But what does he mean by "the power of music to occupy attention by itself"? Not the charm, or beauty; not the deep inward meaning which is felt, but which no one has hitherto been able to fathom. No; to our author it is the power of the symmetry and order of pitch relations. If the attention of the intellect be fully absorbed by "pitch" relationship (and Mr. Donovan even includes form in his meaning of the term pitch), then the expansion is most pure; it is an ideal expansion. This our author describes as the highest musical delight. But if music were nothing more than this, surely we should expect to find that that music which, from an intellectual point of view, is the strongest is also the most pleasurable. Experience, however, does not teach this. The fugues in Bach's Art of Fugue absorb the intellect, but, for the most part, leave the heart cold. On the other hand, many of Schubert's compositions fail to satisfy the intellect, but, by their emotional—or we may, perhaps, say musical—power, they produce the highest delight. Schumann was right when he spoke of Schubert's "heavenly lengths." "The minds," says Mr. Donovan, "that have been impressed most with the intellectual elements of music have striven most earnestly to explain the whole meaning and effect of music." He recalls Diderot, who, in his article—"Le Beau"—sees in "the perception of relations" (a happier expression, by the way, than Mr. Donovan's "set of related ideas presented to the mind") the essence of musical delight; and Euler, who considered the delight in harmony to be mathematical. But the more he insists on the intellectual element the more do we feel that he is shirking the real difficulty. With all respect to the great writers and mathematicians who have endeavoured to explain music, one turns with more satisfaction to this saying of Gluck's: "I consider music not merely as an art to please the ear, but as one of the most powerful means of moving the heart and exciting feelings." Or to this of Beethoven's: "Music is the link which connects the spiritual with the sensuous life. Music is a higher revelation than wisdom and philosophy."

Mr. Donovan has a good deal to say about the connexion between music and nameable emotions. This is what he terms "the draping of naked expansion." When the activities of perception are only partially engaged, partially stripped expansion, he says, displays a fitful readiness to dart back to some or other of the dresses that real life has made habitual to it. In other words, music associates itself with emotions. And, adds our author, this explains the easy suggestive power over the emotions possessed by the musical composer. But if the intellect is not sufficiently absorbed to permit ideal expansion, he does not call it the purest style of music. This psychologica analysis again ignores the power of the music as music. Mr. Donovan, indeed, asserts distinctly that the creative impulse which has produced the greatest wonders of harmonic combination is not musical.

Our author has much to say about woman in relation to music. She does not, according to him, possess the powers of self-expansion to the same extent as man, and hence has done nothing really great in music. Considering that emotion has always been thought to play so large a part in music, it is certainly curious that no woman has hitherto made a name for herself as a composer which would be worthy to be placed beside those of Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven. However, until woman has enjoyed equal advantages in the race of life with man, it is scarcely possible to know what she may be capable of accomplishing in art.

To set forth properly the character of the arguments, and the mode in which the author supports and develops them in this essay, would require one of almost equal length. We hope, however, to have said enough to induce musicians to read it; for, although we cannot accept Mr. Donovan's solution of the problem of the genesis and development of music, his earnest and thoughtful remarks deserve attention.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

At the Crystal Palace, last Saturday, Miss Fanny Davies played a Pianoforte Concerto in D by Jacob Rosenham, a composer born in 1813, and now residing at Baden-Baden. Fifty-three years ago he visited London, and his Symphony in F minor was produced at a Philharmonic concert in 1854. He is a prolific writer, and has achieved success in various departments of musical art—operas, symphonies, chamber-music, &c. His opera, "Le Démon de la Nuit," brought out in Paris in 1851, is spoken of as a great success. Schumann reviewed several of his works in the Neue Zeitschrift. The Concerto played by Miss Davies is a pleasing work, and well laid out for the pianist. The writing is of the Moscheles-Mendelssohn school. Schumann has spoilt us, and we can no longer listen to such pieces with enthusiasm; but we can praise the skill and unaffected character of the music, to which Miss Davies did full justice. The programme included Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Symphony—a work which Mr. Manns and his band always interpret in magnificent style. Mdlle. Amelia Sinico made her first appearance at the Palace, and sang "Batti, batti." She has a nice voice, but was extremely nervous.

Herr Joachim made his first appearance at the Popular Concerts on Monday evening, and will remain until the end of the season. Every year the same tale has to be told—viz., that he was received with enthusiasm and that his playing was magnificent. The writer is weary of repeating the same expressions, and the reader, possibly, of finding them recorded. The continued success of the great artist is, however, a fact which deserves notice. The generation which first admired him has, for the most part, passed away, but not its feelings of respect and admiration. These have been handed down. And so long as Herr Joachim continues to visit us, he will be a welcome guest; for last year, in a speech made by him, he declared his intention of withdrawing from public life when he felt he could no longer do justice to the great masters. The programme on Monday included Beethoven's Rasoumowski Quartet in C (op. 59, no. 3) and one in the same key by Haydn (op. 33). Miss A. Zimmermann played in her usual manner some Scarlatti solos, and a short Scherzo by Jadasohn as encore. Herr Joachim gave a masterly rendering of the Bach Chaconne, and a Bach piece afterwards. Miss Liza Lehmann was the vocalist and pleased greatly.

A new work, a Pianoforte Trio in G by Dr. O. H. H. Parry, was performed for the first time at Mr. Dannreuther's Musical Evening at Orme Square on February 13. The opening Allegro is a vigorous movement. So far as workmanship is concerned, there is much to praise in it; but the subject-matter is not of deep interest, and there is a lack of contrast. The Finale may be described in similar terms. The two middle movements—a Capriccio and a Lament—are by far the most attractive. The Capriccio is, indeed, the gem of the work. The programme included Schumann's G minor Sonata, played by the concert giver; Beethoven's Sonata in C for 'cello and pianoforte (op. 102, no. 1); and the same composer's Pianoforte Trio in D (op. 70, no. 1).

On Thursday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Pachmann gave a Pianoforte Recital at St. James's Hall. The programme was one of considerable variety and interest. It commenced with Schumann's Andante and Variations for two pianofortes, which was given with much refinement. Mrs. Pachmann played Schubert's so-called "Fantasie" Sonata in G. We recently had occasion to notice her excellent rendering of this work at a Popular concert. On the present occasion she gave it with equal, if not greater, success. Mr. Pachmann interpreted Mendelssohn's "Scotch" Sonata with skill, but not without affectation, especially in the first movement. A Fugue for four hands, by Beethoven, was given; but the composer, so far as we can gather, was not responsible for this ineffective transcription of the humorous movement written by him in 1817 for two violins, two violas, and 'cello. This piece was followed by another transcription—viz., Henselt's "Si oiseau j'étais," for two pianofortes. This fairy-like Etude is, however, far more attractive in its original form. The programme, which we cannot notice in detail, contained other pieces by Chopin, Liszt, &c. There was a good attendance.

MUSIC NOTES.

MENDELSSOHN'S oratorio, "St. Paul," is the work selected for performance this year at the Crystal Palace. The choruses will be sung by the London contingent of the Handel Festival choir, numbering nearly 3000 voices, a special choir of 500 boys being engaged to sing the chorales, "Sleepers Awake," and "In one true God." The date fixed for the performance is Saturday, June 21. Mr. Manns will conduct.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO
THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a News-vendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

MACMILLAN & CO'S LIST.

BY MONTAGU WILLIAMS, Q.C.
LEAVES OF A LIFE.
Being the Reminiscences of Montagu Williams, Q.C.
2 vols., 8vo, 30s.

A NEW BOOK BY SIR CHARLES DILKE, BART.
PROBLEMS OF GREATER BRITAIN.
By the Right Hon. Sir CHARLES DILKE, Bart.
With Maps. 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

THE DEVELOPMENT AND CHARACTER OF GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE.
By Professor CHARLES H. MOORE.
With Illustrations. Medium 8vo. [Next week.]

THE OXFORD MOVEMENT.
WILLIAM GEORGE WARD and the OXFORD MOVEMENT. By WILFRID WARD.
New and Revised Edition, with Additions. 8vo, 14s.

BY THE REV. CANON WESTCOTT, D.D., D.O.L.
FROM STRENGTH TO STRENGTH.
Three Sermons on Stages in a Consecrated Life (In Memoriam J. B. D.). By BROOKS FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D., D.O.L., Regius Professor of Divinity, Cambridge, Canon of Westminster, &c. Crown 8vo, 2s.

The Sixpenny Edition of CHARLES KINGSLEY'S "ALTON LOCKE, Tailor and Poet," is now ready at all Booksellers and Newsagents.

A NEW STORY BY MR. D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.
JOHN VALES GUARDIAN.
By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY,
Author of "Aunt Rachel," "The Weaker Vessel," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

MRS. CRAIK'S NOVELS.

Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO. beg to announce that they are about to publish a Three-and-Sixpenny Edition of the Novels by the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman," which are in their hands. The volumes will be uniform in style with the recently published Editions of Charles Kingsley, Miss Yonge, Thomas Hughes, and Marion Crawford. The first volume will be published on March 1st, and the Series continued Monthly in the following order:—

OLIVE. Illustrated by G. Bowers. [Ready Feb. 25.]
THE OGILVIES. Illustrated by J. McL. Ralston. [April.]
AGATHA'S HUSBAND. Illustrated by Walter Crane. [May.]
THE HEAD of the FAMILY. Illustrated by Walter Crane. [June.]
TWO MARRIAGES. [July.]
THE LAUREL BUSH. [Aug.]
MY MOTHER and I. Illustrated by J. McL. Ralston. [Sept.]
MISS TOMMY. Illustrated by F. Noel Paton. [Oct.]
KING ARTHUR: Not a Love Story. [Nov.]

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 365, MARCH, price 1s., contains:—
1.—KIRSTEEN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Chaps. XXV.—XXVII.
2.—TWENTY YEARS OF POLITICAL SATIRE. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.
3.—FACTS FOR THE FABIAN SOCIALISTS.
4.—AUSTRALIA from ANOTHER POINT OF VIEW.
5.—THE ILLUSTRIOUS DEAD. By E. G. HOWARD.
6.—ON the NAMING of NOVELS.
7.—THE COURTING of DINAH SHADD. By RUDYARD KIPPLING.
8.—THE HOUSE of COMMONS. By SPECTATOR.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For MARCH, price 6d., by post 8d., contains:—
1.—PORTRAIT of a LADY (of the Brignole Family of Genoa). After PARIS BORDONE. Frontispiece.
2.—A SUBMERGED VILLAGE. GRANT ALLEN. Illustrated by W. Blomcombe Gardner.
3.—RUGBY UNION FOOTBALL. H. VASSALL, Hon. Treasurer of the Rugby Football Union.
4.—THE FORTH BRIDGE. ARTHUR J. KNOWLES. With Illustrations.
5.—THE OLD BROWN MARK. W. E. NORRIS.
6.—MIDNIGHT. D. H. B. ROBERTS.
7.—CATS and KITTENS. Mrs. J. E. FANTON. Illustrated by Louis Wain.
8.—HOW to INCREASE the REVENUE WITHOUT TAXATION.
9.—CYCLE of SIX LOVE-LYRICS.—IV. "He Hears of Her Death." Words by JOSEPH BENNETT. Music by HAMISH MACCUM.
10.—LISMORE. ADRIAN STOKES. With Illustrations by Marienne Stokes and the Writer.
11.—MARCH. A Design. KETWOOD SUMNER.
12.—THE KING of ARABIA. Chaps. VII., VIII. (Cont.) The EARL of LITTON.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THEATRES.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.15, FOOL'S MATE.

At 9,

DR. BILL.
Messrs. Frederick Terry, Nutcombe Gould, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier: Mesdames Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Marie Linden, Mary Kingsley, Gracie Marielle, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, and Fanny Brough.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

Every Evening, at 8.30, OUR BOYS.

Messrs. David James, Leonard Boyne, Arthur Elwood, E. W. Gardiner; Mesdames Olga Brandon, E. Branton, F. Frances, E. Vining, E. Terrie. Preceded, at 7.50, by SWEETHEART, GOOD BYE.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Every evening, at 8,

RUY BLAS AND THE BLASE ROUE.

Messrs. Fred Leslie, Fred Storey, and Dalton Somers; Mesdames Ellen Farren, Marion Hood, Sylvia Grey, Linda Verner, Blanche Massey, and Letty Lind.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARE.

Every Evening, at 8, LA TOSCA.

Messrs. L. Waller, H. Waring, S. Brough, G. Farquhar, L. D'Orsay, C. Dodsworth, C. Hudson, F. H. Knight, F. Powell, R. Power, S. Pringle, R. Harding, and J. Forbes Robertson; Mesdames Bernard-Besre, R. Leclercq, and B. Nation.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. F. R. BENSON.

Every Evening, at 8, Thursdays and Fridays excepted, Shakespeare's Fairy Comedy, with the Mendelssohn Incidental Music, A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

MATINEES OF A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, every Saturday and Wednesday, at 2.30. No fees. Next Thursday and Friday Evening, at 8, LAST TWO PERFORMANCES OF THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.—GLOBE THEATRE.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERHOFF-TREE.

Every evening, at 8.30, A MAN'S SHADOW.

Messrs. Tree, Fernandez, Kumble, C. Collette, E. M. Robson, Allan, Harrover, Tapping, Gurney, and Harwood; Mesdames Tree, Minnie Terry, Norreys, and Julia Neilson. Preceded, at 7.45, by GOOD FOR NOTHING, Miss Norreys.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Sole Proprietor and Manager, HENRY J. LESLIE.

This evening, at 8.30, THE RED HUSSAR.

At 7.45, WARRANTED BURGLAR-PROOF.
Messrs. Ben Davies, A. Marsh, Christian, J. Le Hay, Wood, and Arthur Williams; Mesdames Marie Tempest, B. Irving, Holland, H. Coveney, and Florence Dysart.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.

Every Evening, at 8.15, MARJORIE.

Messrs. C. Haydn Coffey, Joseph Taylor, H. Ashley, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Camille D'Arville. Preceded, at 7.30, by JOHN SMITH.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.30,

THE GONDOLIERS; or, The King of Barataria.

Messrs. Rutland Berrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denay, Wallace Brownlow, Metcalf, Rose, De Pledge, Wilbraham, Gilbert, and Courtice Pounds; Mesdames Geraldine, Ulmar, Rosina Brandram, Deelma Moore, Bernard, Lawrence, and Cole.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LART, Lessees and Managers.

Every Evening, at 8, THE MIDDLEMAN.

Messrs. Willard, Mackintosh, E. W. Gordon, H. Cane, H. V. Edmond, Ivan Watson, C. Crofton, W. E. Blatchley, R. Keith; Mesdames M. Millett, A. Hughes, E. H. Brooke, A. Verity, St. Ange, E. Moore, &c.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the funniest farcical comedy in London,

OUR FLAT.

Messrs. Edouin, Fawcett, Graham, Hawtrej, Eversfield, Nainby, and Sims; Mesdames M. Whitty, Goward, Edmond, Vicat, Sedgwick, Graves. Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS. Messrs. Graham, Eversfield, Nainby; Miss Edmond.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE BUNGALOW.

Preceded, at 8.15, by ISALDA.

Messrs. Chas. Glenney, Yorke Stephens, Compton Coutts, J. Aylmer, A. Rousby, F. M. Capel, Fred Kaye, Bassett Roe, M. Brodie, and R. Stockton; Mesdames Sophie Larkin, Helen Forsyth, Vane Featherston, Marie Illingon, and Cecily Richards.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.

Every Evening, at 8, CLARISSA.

Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Thalberg, Maudie, Yorke, Blythe, Harbury, Grove, Gilmore, and Fred Thorne; Mesdames W. Emery, M. Collette, C. Owen, Bryer, Wemyss, Hanbury, E. Banister, &c.

NIAGARA IN LONDON.

Colossal PICTURE of the GREAT FALLS. Original effects by Philip-potens. Plesant lounge, music, American sweetmeat store. Refreshments by Regaloot. Electric light. Building cooled throughout. Admission 1s. 10 to 10—York-street, Westminster (St James's-park station). Second year. Nearly one million visitors.

THERE IS
No Nourishment in Tea or Coffee
but
PLENTY IN COCOA especially in
VAN HOUTEN'S
which
UTILISES IN THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE DEGREE
All the Flesh-forming Elements
while Developing the Flavour and Aroma.
ORIGINAL PATENTORS.

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT.
(Special terms for quantities.)JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

THROAT
IRRITATION
AND COUGH.
Soreness and Dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough, and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use EPPS'S GLY-CERINE JUJUBES. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. In boxes, 7d.; tins,
1s. 1d.; labelled "JAMES EPPS
& CO., Homoeopathic Chemists."

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Free Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER,

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

MEMORY. A. LOISETTE'S
SYSTEM.—"I was impressed with the possibilities of improvement to Memory which your Lectures in Cambridge opened up."—R. N. Ingle, M.A., M.D., University Lecturer
(Jan., '90). "Physiological, scientific."—Dr. Andrew
Wilson (April, '88). "We again recommend the system."—Dr. Wilson (Jan., '89). "Great advantage to strong memory, incalculable aid to weak one."—
Dr. Buckley. "Excellent travelling companion."—
Capt. J. B. Hays, R.N.—Apply 87, New Oxford
Street, London.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and Terms arranged for Publishing.Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

Publishers, Printers, and Binders,

21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY
LANE, LONDON.

FRY'S

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

Paris Exhibition, 1889; GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

COCOA

SEELEY & CO.'S LIST.

SECOND EDITION.

FANNY BURNEY and her FRIENDS. Select Passages from her Diary and other Writings. Edited by L. B. SEELEY, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Author of "Horace Walpole and his World." With Nine Copper-plates after Reynolds, Gainsborough, Copley, and West. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

"A handy book (and as handsome as it is handy) which should make Dr. Johnson's 'Little Burney' as popular with the desultory reader as she has been with literary persons ever since Macaulay wrote his essay."—St. James's Gazette.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

HORACE WALPOLE and his WORLD. Select Passages from his Letters. With Eight Copper-plates after Sir Joshua Reynolds and Sir Thomas Lawrence. Price 6s., cloth.

"A compact representative selection, with just enough connecting text to make it read consecutively, with a pleasantly written introduction."—Athenaeum.

THIRD THOUSAND.

UNDER SALISBURY SPIRE: a Tale of the Times of George Herbert. By EMMA MARSHALL. With Illustrations, cloth, 5s.

"One of the best which have ever come from Mrs. Marshall's pen."—Athenaeum.

"This charming little tale."—Daily News.

"A delightful volume."—Guardian.

OXFORD: Brief, Historical, and Descriptive Notes. By ANDREW LANG. New & Cheaper Edition, with many Illustrations, cloth, 6s.

"Told in Mr. Lang's best manner."—Literary Churchman.

CAMBRIDGE: Brief, Historical, and Descriptive Notes. By J. W. CLARK. New and Cheaper Edition, with many Illustrations, cloth, 6s.

"A thoroughly artistic work of topographical description and illustration."—Illustrated London News.

NEW EDITION.

EDINBURGH: Picturesque Notes. By Robert Louis STEVENSON. With Illustrations, price 3s. 6d., cloth; or 5s., Roxburgh.

"Delicately and deliciously illustrated and charmingly written; a volume which may be described without exaggeration as a literary gem of the first water."—St. James's Gazette.

THE HAMMER: a Story of the Maccabees. By Rev. A. J. OHUROH and RICHMOND SEELEY. With Illustrations. Cloth, 5s.

"A vivid and picturesque romance."—Daily News.

"A vivid picture of Jewish life and character."—Guardian.

"Full of graphic sketches of those critical days."—Jewish Standard.

BY THE REV. A. J. OHUROH.

ROMAN LIFE in the DAYS of CICERO. 5s.

STORIES from HOMER. 5s.

STORIES from the GREEK TRAGEDIANS. 5s.

STORIES from VIRGIL. 5s.

STORIES of the EAST, from HERODOTUS. 5s.

THE STORY of the PERSIAN WAR. 5s.

WITH the KING at OXFORD. 5s.

STORIES of the MAGICIANS. 5s.

STORIES from LIVY. 5s.

THE STORY of the LAST DAYS of JERUSALEM. 3s. 6d.

A TRAVELLER'S TRUE TALE from LUCIAN. 3s. 6d.

HEROES and KINGS. 1s. 6d.

THE CHANTRY PRIEST of BARNET: a Tale of the Two Roses. 5s.

THE COUNT of the SAXON SHORE. 5s.

THREE GREEK CHILDREN. 3s. 6d.

THIRD THOUSAND.

THE OCEAN of AIR: a Popular Scientific Account of the Atmosphere. By A. GIBERNE. With a Preface by Prof. PRITCHARD. With 16 Illustrations. Price 5s., cloth.

"Miss Giberne has a singularly happy faculty of exhibiting scientific truths in a lucid and popular form."—Guardian.

"It is difficult to overestimate the stimulating effect upon young minds of a book like this."—Saturday Review.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

SUN, MOON, and STARS. Sixteenth Thousand, 5s.

AMONG the STARS. Fourth Thousand, 5s.

THE WORLD'S FOUNDATIONS. Fifth Thousand, 5s.

FATHER ALDUR. 5s.

"A triumph of magnificent illustration and masterly editing."—Times.

"The art magazine which best provides for the needs of the really cultivated student of art."—STANDARD.

"That always welcome periodical."—DAILY NEWS.

"Begins the year well. Changes which are really improvements have been introduced in the number for January."—LEADS MERCURY.

THE PORTFOLIO: an Artistic Periodical.

Edited by P. G. HAMERTON.

Published Monthly, 2s. 6d.—CONTENTS FOR MARCH.

THE LATER DESIGNS of WALTER ORANE. By F. G. STEPHENS. With Illustrations.

THE BRITISH SEA³.—III. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. With Illustrations.

ART during the RENAISSANCE. By P. G. HAMERTON. With Illustrations.

THE HIGHLANDS of WEST SOMERSET. By J. [LL. W.] PAGE. With Illustrations.

THE TUDOR EXHIBITION.

ART CHRONICLE.

Now ready, cloth, gilt edges, 35s.

THE PORTFOLIO VOLUME for 1889, containing Thirty-six Plates and many minor Illustrations.

"Amongst gift-books a foremost place must as usual be adjudged to the annual volume of 'The Portfolio.' This is a most attractive volume, full of good matter, artistic and literary."—Saturday Review.

LONDON: SEELEY & CO., LIMITED, ESSEX STREET, STRAND.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO.'S LIST.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 2s.

INTRODUCTION to the SCIENCE of LANGUAGE.

By A. H. SAYCE, M.A. Deputy Professor of Comparative Philology at Oxford University. Third Edition.

2 vols., post 8vo, 36s.

AN ARABIC-ENGLISH DICTIONARY. On a

New and Unique System. Comprising about 120,000 Arabic Words, with an English Index to the same. By H. A. SALMONE, Arabic Lecturer at University College, London. Dedicated, by Special Permission, to her Majesty the Queen.

Demy 8vo, 15s.; half-morocco, 20s.

THE HISTORY of NEW SOUTH WALES. From the Records. Volume I. By G. B. BARTON, of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law. This Volume contains the History of New South Wales from 1788 to 1789. Illustrated with Maps, Portraits, and Sketches. (Issued by the Government of New South Wales.)

Demy 8vo, 18s.

SOCIAL HISTORY of the RACES of MANKIND.

Third Division. CHIAPO and GUZANO MARIANONIANS. By A. FEATHERMAN.

Post 8vo, 31s.

MYTHICAL and LEGENDARY ACCOUNTS of the ORIGIN of CASTE. With an inquiry into its existence in the Vedic Age. By J. MUIR, C.I.E., D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D.

"* This work is a reprint of the first volume of 'Original Sanskrit Texts,' and is included in Trübner's Oriental Series.

Large post 8vo, with map, 15s.

ENGLISH INTERCOURSE with SIAM in the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. By J. ANDERSON, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE INDIAN RELIGIONS; or, Results of the Mysterious Buddhism. Concerning that also which is to be understood in the Divinity of Fire. By HARGRAVE JENNINGS, Author of the "Rosicrucians, their Rites and Mysteries," &c.

Crown 8vo, 2s.

A BUDDHIST CATECHISM; or, Outline of the Doctrine of the Buddha Gotama, in the Form of Question and Answer. Compiled from the Sacred Writings of the Southern Buddhists for the use of Europeans. With Explanatory Notes. By SUBHADRA BHIKSHU.

Demy 8vo, 14s.

LIFE of WILLIAM ELLIS, Founder of the Birk-beck Schools. With some Account of his Writings and of his Labours for the Improvement and Extension of Education. By E. KELL BLYTH. With Portrait.

"The career of an ardent educational reformer, whose labours in the cause of popular education date from the very commencement of the movement."—Saturday Review.

DEDICATED TO THE EMPRESS FREDERICK.

THE ETHICAL TEACHING of FROEBEL, as gathered from his Works. Two Essays:—I. By MARY J. LYSCHINSKA. — II. By THERESE G. MONTEFIORE. Small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Demy 8vo, with 12 Plates, 6s.

IN TENNYSON LAND. Being a Brief Account of the Home and Early Surroundings of the Poet Laureate, and an Attempt to identify the Scenes and Trace the Influences of Lincolnshire in his Works. By JOHN OUMING WALTERS.

"* Of this Work 150 copies have the Illustrations printed on Japanese Vellum. Price on application to the Booksellers.

Crown 8vo, 6s., bound in buckram.

RUPERT of the RHINE: a Biographical Sketch of the Life of Prince Rupert, Prince Palatine of the Rhine, Duke of Cumberland, &c. By Lord RONALD GOWER. With 8 Portraits.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

BLUNDERS and FORGERIES. Historical Essays.

By the Rev. T. E. BRIDGETT.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

A PLEA for TRUTH in RELIGION.

Crown 8vo, 4s.

A LEGEND of the MIDDLE AGES, and other

Scenes of the Past and Present. By JOHN CODD.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE WING of AZRAEL. By MONA CAIRD.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 930.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS. By William Black, Author of "A Princess of Thule,"

"In Far Lochaber," "A Daughter of Heth," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.
"A remarkably easy book to read.... Seldom more bright, amusing, pathetic, humorous, and tender."—Saturday Review.
"A very pretty book indeed, and will help to pass as pleasant an hour as any novel of the season."—Truth.

KIT and KITTY: a Story of West Middlesex. By R. D. Blackmore, Author of "Lorna Doone,"

"Clara Vaughan," "Springhaven," "Cripps the Carrier," &c. Third Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.
"Kit and Kitty" is a manly book, with a sort of fine, open delicacy of sentiment; thoroughly wholesome and pleasing. Few recent novels have maintained so high a standard of excellence throughout."—Athenaeum.

DUCHESS FRANCES: a Novel. By Sarah Tytler, Author of "Citoyenne Jacqueline," "Lady Bell," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

IN SATAN'S BONDS: a Story of Love and Crime. By Frederick Eastwood, Author of

"The Chronicle of Sir Harry Earleleigh, Bart.," "Calumny," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s.

IMPORTANT WORKS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

OLIVER CROMWELL, the PROTECTOR: an Appreciation based on Contemporary Evidence

By REGINALD F. D. PALGRAVE, C.B., Author of "The Clerk's Handbook," &c. Small demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

OUR RECENT ACTORS: being Recollections, Critical, and in many cases Personal, of late

Distinguished Performers of both Sexes. With some incidental Notices of Living Actors. By Dr. WESTLAND MARSTON. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"Dr. Marston's Memoirs of 'Recent Actors' may be recommended as excellent reading... Scholarly, but thoroughly interesting, impartial and wholly genial."—World.

THE LANCASHIRE LIFE of BISHOP FRASER. By John W. Diggle, M.A., Vicar of Mossley

Hill, Liverpool, Hon. Canon of Liverpool. Author of "Godliness and Manliness," "True Religion," &c.; also Editor of Bishop Fraser's Sermons. Fifth Edition in the press. 1 vol., demy 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 12s. 6d.

"Many important and hitherto unpublished letters enrich a volume which casts a flood of light on every phase of Dr. Fraser's career in Lancashire..... This fascinating biography."—Standard.

MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE'S LIFE. By her Son, Charles Edward Stowe. Demy

8vo, pp. 440, cloth extra, top gilt, with Portraits, Facsimiles, and other Illustrations, 15s.

"It is an extremely interesting and instructive book..... But little or nothing that is here given could be dispensed with, and the trivial no less than the important matters set forth help to make a striking and what looks like a singularly truthful picture of the life of a brave woman and a successful author."—Athenaeum.

THE COLONIAL YEAR-BOOK. By A. J. R. Trendell, C.M.G., of the Inner Temple. With

Introduction by Professor SEELEY. 1 vol., 750 pages, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"It is a valuable work of reference that deals fully with our trans-oceanic realm, more than eight millions in extent, and describes the commercial aspect, the growth of trade, and the history of each colony."—Daily Telegraph.

JOURNAL of H.M.S. "ENTERPRISE" on the EXPEDITION in SEARCH of SIR JOHN

FRANKLIN'S SHIPS by BEHRING STRAIT, 1850-55. By Captain RICHARD COLLINSON, O.B., R.N., Commander of the Expedition. With a Memoir of his other Services. Edited by his Brother, Major-General T. B. COLLINSON, R.E. Demy 8vo, with 6 Maps, Portraits, &c., cloth, 14s.

WORKS BY HENRY M. STANLEY.—NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE; including Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone.

With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

*. The Unabridged Edition, superior in paper and binding and with the Original Maps, price 7s. 6d., can still be obtained.

THROUGH the DARK CONTINENT; from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

*. The Unabridged Edition, superior in paper and binding and with the Original Maps, price 11s. 6d., can still be obtained.

Now ready, Price ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for March.

CONTENTS:

JOHN RUSKIN: an Essay. Anne Thackeray Ritchie. 6 Illustrations. From an Etching by Hubert Herkomer, A.R.A., by permission of the Fine Art Society, London, and Drawings by Harry Fenn after Photographs by Sutcliffe, London.

THE ARMY of the UNITED STATES. By General WESTLEY MERRITT, U.S.A. 8 Illustrations. Drawn by Rufus F. Ziegler.

THE SHADOW of a DREAM: a Story. Part I. WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS.

HOW to LISTEN to WAGNER'S MUSIC. H. E. KREHBIEL.

THE NAJA-KALLU, or COBRA STONE. Professor H. HENOLDT, Ph.D.

VENETIAN BOATS. ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL. 19 Illustrations. Drawn by Joseph Pennell.

THE WINGED VICTORY of SAMOTHRACE. Illustrated THEODORE CHILD.

ON the SOUTH SHORE: a Story. Illustrated. MARGARET CROSBY.

AN IGNOBLE MARTYR: a Story. REBECCA HARDING DAVIS.

OUR INVALID WIVES: a Story. LIZZIE W. CHAMPEY.

MANILA and its SURROUNDINGS. Illustrated. Dr. SAMUEL KNEELAND.

THE RESTORED HEAD of IRIS in the PARTHENON FRIEZE. Illustrated.

Dr. CHARLES WALDEBYN.

&c., &c., 70 Illustrations in all.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE.

Crown 8vo, fancy boards, 2s.; cloth uniform, 2s. 6d.

LORNA DOONE	By R. D. BLACKMORE.
FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD	By THOS. HARDY.
SENIOR PARTNER	By MRS. RIDDLE.
OLARA VAUGHAN	By R. D. BLACKMORE.
THE GUARDIAN ANGEL	By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.
HER GREAT IDEA, and other Stories	By MRS. WALFORD.
SOMEONE ELSE	By MRS. B. M. CROKER.
THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE	By THOS. HARDY.
THE CASTING AWAY of Mrs. LECKS and Mrs. ALESHINE; and the DUSANTES	By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange."
ADELA CATHOART	By GEORGE MACDONALD.
CRIPPS the CARRIER	By R. D. BLACKMORE.

*. To be followed by Others.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
LAW'S JESUITS AND SECULARS IN THE TIME OF ELIZABETH, by ARTHUR GALTON	148
WEDMORE'S LIFE OF BALZAC, by OSWALD CRAWFORD	144
HICKSON'S A NATURALIST IN NORTH OCEANES, by PROF. KEANE	144
COVENTRY PATMORE'S PRINCIPLES IN ART, by G. OTTERBELL	145
MITCHELL'S ENGLISH LANDS, LETTERS, AND KINGS, by O. L. KINGSFORD	146
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	147
RECENT VERSE	148
TWO FOREIGN BOOKS ON ECONOMICS	149
OTES AND NEWS	150
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	151
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	151
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A.D. 1590," by M.	151
OBITUARY: Prof. LORIMER, by J. WESTLAKE; JOHN LOVELL, by RALPH OATNE	151
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	152
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	153
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Loise or Trichmüller, by Prof. Max Müller; Mary Patton and "the Dark Lady" of the Sonnets, by Mrs. Stopes; The Date of the Rushwell Cross, by Prof. A. B. Cook; Early Scholars of Trinity College, Dublin, by the Rev. Dr. J. W. Stubbs; Abercromby's "Trip through the Eastern Caucasus," by Douglas W. Freshfield	151
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK
WESTOOTT'S EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS, I., by Prof. SANDAY	154
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Rawlinson's "History of the Phoenicians," by Canon RAWLINSON	155
SCIENCE NOTES	156
PHILOLOGY NOTES	156
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	156
THE ROYAL SCOTTISH ACADEMY	156
LETTER FROM EGYPT, by Prof. SAYCE	157
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	158
"CLARISSA" AT THE VAUDEVILLE, by F. WEDMORE	158
STAGE NOTES	159
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	159

LINCOLN'S-INN-FIELDS.—OFFICES OR RESIDENCES at 63, in well-lighted, fire-proof, sanitary building. Suites overlooking square. Fine suite of nine rooms cut off at top, furnished or not.

TO REVIEWERS.—A Reviewer, with first-rate library connection, would like to meet with other Gentlemen who have copies of recent works to dispose of. All classes of books wanted.—Write in confidence to STEPHENS, Piccadilly.

COLLECTORS OF GREEK and ROMAN VASES, STATUETTES, and COINS may obtain some interesting and valuable specimens by communicating with F. R. J. CALVERT, Esq., Dardanelles, Turkey.

PRIVATE SECRETARY.—LADY desires RE-ENGAGEMENT. Latin, French, German, shorthand. Rapid writer. Knowledge of Political and Social movements. Highest references.—C. D. M., 4, Gray's Inn Residences, E.C.

TO AUTHORS.—MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS, 18, Boulevard-trait, Fleet-street, London, E.C., are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS., and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. Digby & Long have also every convenience and ample facilities for the publication of MAGAZINES. Editorial offices if required.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHOR'S MSS., PLAYS, and all kinds of COPYING executed quickly and accurately. Terms, 1s. per 1,000 words. Satisfaction guaranteed. Shorthand taught (Script System). Schools attended. Terms moderate.—Address F. BAILLET, 19, Albert-square, Stratford, E.

TYPEWRITING (Remington) 1d. per folio, or 1s. per 1,000 words. Manuscript, 1d. per folio. Shorthand (Pittman's) transcribed. Orders quickly returned.—Miss BRAMM, 45, Mildmay Park, London, N.

CATALOGUES.

CHOICE OLD ENGRAVINGS.

In preparation and will shortly be ready.

A CATALOGUE of an exceedingly fine and interesting COLLECTION, selected from the large stock of GUSTAV LAUBER, Printer, 15, Gerrick-street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. Post free on application.

AUTOGRAPHS.

TO AUTOGRAPH COLLECTORS.—NEW ABSTRACT CATALOGUE, NOW READY, post free, containing upwards of 600 rare and interesting letters, including large unpublished correspondence of Charles Dickens, date 1833; Burns, Scott, Carlyle, Wordsworth, Disraeli, Bach, Mendelssohn, &c.—NORL CORWAY & Co., Experts, Herald Chambers, Martineau-street, Birmingham.

READY NEXT WEEK.

AN EXTRAORDINARY NOVEL!!

LOOKING FORWARD; or, The Disthas.

By ISMAR THIUSEN.

Square crown 8vo, paper covers, 358 pages, 1s.

The aim of the present work is to give such a forecast of the future of our race as may be inferred with some reasonable probability from present conditions and tendencies.

An extraordinary picture of New York and New York Society in the ninety-sixth century.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 27, King William Street, Strand, London.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

FRENCH LECTURESHIP.

APPLICATIONS are invited for the post of FRENCH LECTURER at University College, Liverpool, to be forwarded, with Testimonials, to the COLLEGE REGISTRAR, on or before APRIL 15TH. The Lecturer will be required to commence his duties on the 1st of October. For all particulars apply to the REGISTRAR, University College, Liverpool.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

FREDERICK NIECKS, Esq., Author of "The Life of Chopin," will on THURSDAY NEXT, MARCH 6TH, at 3 o'clock, begin a COURSE OF FOUR LECTURES on "THE EARLY DEVELOPMENTS OF THE FORMS OF INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC" (with illustrations on Bowed Instruments and the Pianoforte). Subscriptions to this Course, Half-a-Guinea; to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

BOROUGH of WOLVERHAMPTON.

The Corporation of Wolverhampton require an ART MASTER to take the general management of their School of Art, and also the supervision of the Art Gallery. Salary to commence at £350 per annum. Candidates must be duly qualified as Art Masters according to the rules and regulations of the Science and Art Department. The person appointed will be required to enter upon his duties after the next May examinations, and will not be permitted to hold any other appointment, or to take private pupils without permission. The official correspondence in connection with the Art Gallery and School of Art will be undertaken by a person to be appointed in that behalf. The engagement may be determined by three months' notice on either side. Said applications accompanied by not more than three recent testimonials addressed to the Mayor, Town Hall, Wolverhampton, endorsed "Art Mastership," must be sent in not later than 30TH MARCH NEXT. Personal canvassing of members of the Corporation will be deemed a disqualification.

HORATIO BREVITT, Town Clerk.

Town Hall, Wolverhampton.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—NOTICE TO ARTISTS.—THE DAYS for RECEIVING PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, &c. are FRIDAY, SATURDAY, and MONDAY, MARCH 5TH, 6TH, and 7TH, and for SCULPTURE, TUESDAY, APRIL 1ST. Forms and Labels can be obtained from the Academy during the month of March on receipt of stamped and directed envelope.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

THE READING ROOM and NEWSPAPER ROOM will be CLOSED from SATURDAY, MARCH 1ST, to WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5TH, both days inclusive. E. MAUNDE THOMPSON, Principal Librarian. British Museum, 24th February, 1890.

EXCHANGE or SELL ANYTHING which you do not now want through "THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART." The best terms obtained easily, cheaply, quickly, and safely. Price 3d. of all newspapers; or specimen copy for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

BARGAINS in every description of Personal Property can be secured through "THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE and MART" which also contains a considerable quantity of interesting and useful literary matter on a great variety of subjects, especially addressed to Amateurs in Art, Music, Literature, Science, Mechanics, Gardening, House-keeping, Management of Poultry, Dogs, Goats, Cage Birds, and Pets generally. Price 3d. of all newspapers; or specimen copy for two stamps from the Office, 170, Strand, London, W.C.

1890.

NOW READY.

Thirtieth Annual Publication. Price 50s., elegantly bound. Dedicated by permission to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

THE COUNTY FAMILIES of the UNITED KINGDOM: a Royal Manual of the Titled and Untitled Aristocracy of Great Britain and Ireland. By EDWARD WALFORD, M.A. late Scholar of Balliol College, Oxford. Containing Notices of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Heads of Families in the United Kingdom, their Heralds-Apparent or Presumptive, together with a Record of the Patronage at their disposal, the Offices which they hold or have held, their Town Addresses, Country Residences, Clubs, &c. London: CHATTO & WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

TRIAL BY COMBAT.

By GEORGE NIELSON.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS & NORGATE. Glasgow: W. HODGE & Co.

NEW NOVEL, AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

REDEEMED IN BLOOD. By LADY FLORENCE DIXIE. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d. "Incultates the author's well-known theories about the education and position of women. . . . The way is paved for various thrilling adventures."—Times. "There is real grit in the book."—St. Stephen's Review.

London: HENRY & Co., 6, Boulevard-street.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY.

ADMISSION FREE.

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

(About 30 doors West of Muddie's Library.)

THE GREAT MASTERS.—Botticelli, Lorenzo

di Credi, Francia, Michael Angelo, Raffaello, Titian, Da Vinci, Correggio, Rembrandt, Van Dyke, Murillo, &c., REPRODUCED IN AUTOTYPE, Permanent Photography, from the grand works in the Louvre, Hermitage, Uffizi, Madrid, Sistine Chapel, the National Gallery, London; the Royal Collections at Windsor and Buckingham Palace.

The various Galleries have separate Albums, easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of art. Visitors are welcome to come and study them, and will not be solicited to make purchases.

For further particulars, send for the new Pamphlet, 40 pages and Four Illustrations, entitled "AUTOTYPE, a Decorative and Educational Art." Free per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATALOGUE, 106 pp., free per post for 6d.

AUTOTYPE BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY offer their services to AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS to produce by the Autotype Process Book Illustrations of the highest excellence of any subject capable of being photographed.

Among the WORK RECENTLY DONE may be cited Wynn's "Great Seal of England"; Dr. Crookshank's "Micro-Photographs of Bacteria"; "Famous Monuments of Central India," for Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.S.I.; "Facsimiles of Early Italian Engravings," for the Trustees of the British Museum; "The Palaeographical Society's Facsimiles for 1888"; Illustrations for the "Journal of the Hellenic Society," &c.

For specimens, prices, and full particulars, apply to the MANAGER.

A U T O - G R A V U R E .

The AUTOTYPE PROCESS applied to Photographic Engraving on copper.

Portraits from Paintings by Pettie, R.A., Oulsen, R.A., Holl, R.A.; Specimens of Copies of Drawings, Etchings, &c.; and Examples of Auto-gravure Reproduction of Photographs from Art Objects, from Life, and from Nature, can be seen at the AUTOTYPE GALLERY.

Estimates and particulars on application.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, New Oxford Street, W.C.

NOW READY.

To be had of all Booksellers, price 3s. 6d., in 1 vol., with Frontispiece, cloth gilt.

COUNTESS IRENE,

A Romance of Austrian Life.

By J. FOGERTY, Author of "Robert Leeman's Daughters," "Lauterdale," and "Caterina."

"One of the brightest and most attractive stories we have recently come across."—Manchester Courier.

"Altogether a good book."—St. Stephen's Review.

J. S. VIRTUE & Co., Limited, 26, Ivy-lane, E.C.

Just ready, handsomely bound, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.; or calf, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

Illustrated with 800 Colours of Arms.

DEBRET'S HOUSE OF COMMONS AND JUDICIAL BENCH.

CORRECTED TO PRESENT SESSION. Over 400 pp.

DEBRET'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, KNIGHTAGE, AND COMPANIONAGE for 1890.

NOW READY.

London DEAN & SON, 160A, Fleet-street, E.C.

In 1 vol., 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

ELEMENTS OF LOGIC as a SCIENCE

OF PROPOSITIONS. By E. E. CONSTANCE JONES, Lecturer on Moral Sciences, Girton College, Cambridge.

CONTENTS.—Part I. Import of Propositions; (1) Of Terms as Elements of Propositions; (2) Of Propositions as Wholes; (3) Of Categorical Propositions; (4) Of Inferential Propositions; (5) Of Alternative Propositions. Part II. Relations of Propositions; (1) Mediate Inferences (Syllogisms); (2) Of Categorical Syllogisms; (3) Of Inferential Syllogisms; (4) Of Alternative Syllogisms.

Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 28, George Street.

London: HAMILTON ADAMS, & Co.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (12s. paper), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5 lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House, Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE,

No. 930.—MARCH, 1890.—4s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

IN THE DAYS OF THE DANIELS.—III.
By LORD LAMINGTON.

IMPROVIDENT THRIFT.

SONS AND DAUGHTERS. CHAP. I.—V.
EST MODUS IN REBUS.

SOME EVENTFUL VOYAGES. By C. F. GORDON CUMMING.

EXCHANGE WITH INDIA. By J. S. WOOD.

THE OLD SALOON.—LIFE OF MRS. BEECHER STOWE—REUBEN SACHS—RECENT NOVELS.

IN PRAISE OF VULCAN

I. THE FORTH BRIDGE.—II. THE KIFFEL TOWER.

By H. D. RAWNSLEY.

THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSION.

THE LATE LORD LAMINGTON.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

MARCH. Price 2s. 6d.

THE REPORT OF THE FARNELL COMMISSION. By MICHAEL DAVITT.
ON BOOKS AND THE HOUSING OF THEM. By the Right Hon. W. E.
GLADSTONE, M.P.A BATTLE DESCRIBED FROM THE RANKS. By ARTHUR V. PALMER.
WALLACE ON DARWINISM. By the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop OF CARLISLE.A SEVENTEENTH-CENTURY PRELATE. By the Rev. J. JESSOP TRAUGH.

ON JUSTICE. By HERBERT SPENCER.

PROPERTY. By the Right Hon. LORD BRAMWELL.

BRAIN WORK AND MANUAL WORK. By PRINCE KROPOTKIN.

A WORKING MAN'S REPLY TO PROFESSOR HUXLEY. By J. D.
CHRISTIE.

OUR MERCHANT SERVICE. By the Right Hon. LORD BRASSEY.

THE SUPPRESSION OF RABIES IN THE UNITED KINGDOM. By GEORGE
FLEMING, C.B., LL.D.

CAPITAL—the MOTHER OF LABOUR. By PROFESSOR HUXLEY.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH & Co., Limited.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

MARCH. 2s. 6d.

AFRICA SOUTH OF THE EQUATOR. By ANGLO-AFRICAN.

SERVANTS AND DOMESTIC SERVICE. By Major GAMBIER-PARRY.

CAN THERE BE A SCIENCE OF CHARACTER? By W. L. COURTNEY, M.A.

WAT TYLER and his CAUSE. By HENRY EVERESSED.

SOME IRISH TRAITS OF THOUGHT AND SPEECH. By HUGH HALL.

DARWINISM REVISÉD. By ALBERT J. MOTT, F.G.S.

TALLEYRAND IN ENGLAND. By LORD COLCHESTER.

THE MOTHER OF THE STROZZI. By EDITH MARGOT.

THE CENTENARY OF WHITE'S "SELBORNE." By ARTHUR GAYE.

TITHES, considered by a TITHE-PAYER. By E. LEIGH PEMBERTON.

POLITICS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

London: W. H. ALLEN & Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH.

COMMUNISM. By EMILE DE LAYLAZ.

DR. VON DOLLINGER. By Canon MAC COLL.

RESULTS OF EUROPEAN INTERCOURSE with the AFRICAN. By JOSEPH THOMSON.

WAS JEHOVAH A FEELING STONE? By ANDREW LANG.

TITHES. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.P.

A PLEA for the PUBLISHERS. By AUGUSTUS JESSOP, D.D.

ANGLO-CATHOLICISM, OLD AND NEW. By Principal FAIRBAIRN, D.D.

THE TAXATION OF GROUND-RENTS. By J. FLETCHER MOULTON, Q.C.

REMINISCENCES OF A CHURCH-RATE STRUGGLE. By Mrs. STEADMAN
ALDIS.FREE SCHOOLS AND PUBLIC MANAGEMENT. By Hon. E. LYULPH
STANLEY.THE FOUR OXFORD HISTORY LECTURERS—
LETTER to the EDITOR. By Professor THOROLD ROGERS.

LISTER & Co., Limited, 15 & 16, Tavistock-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

EDUCATION.

A JOURNAL FOR THE SCHOLASTIC WORLD.

Monthly, Sixpence.

Among the features of this new Journal will be a series of Illustrated Interviews with leading Educationalists, and a number of Articles dealing with the Practical Questions of Secondary Education.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH.

1. EDITORIAL NOTES.

2. AN EDUCATIONAL PIONEER. By Sir EDMUND HAY
CURRIE (with Portrait).

3. THE SANDHURST CANDIDATE. By A COACH.

4. COMMERCIAL CERTIFICATES AND COMMON SENSE.
By J. V. MILNE, B.A.5. HOW SHALL TEACHERS BE TRAINED? By Professor
MEIKLEJOHN.6. SCHOLARSHIP WORK.—I. Mathematical. By H. A.
SAUNDERS, M.A.

7. LETTERS FROM ABROAD.

8. CORRESPONDENCE.

9. EDUCATIONAL GOSSIP.

10. REVIEWS AND NOTICES.

London: ROBEY & DREWLEY, 11, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

THE NEWBURY HOUSE MAGAZINE.A Monthly Review and Family Magazine for Churchmen and Churchwomen.

ILLUSTRATED, Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS OF THE MARCH NUMBER.

THE PART PLAYED BY WALES IN THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH
CHURCH. By the Rev. GRIFFITH ROBERTS.THE PARISH AND THE MANOR SIX HUNDRED YEARS AGO. By the Rev. FREDERICK RANDOLPH.

LADY-DAY CAROL (Illustrated.) By W. CHATTERTON DIX.

EMINENT CHURCHMEN.—I. Rev. JOHN KEBLE.

SEQUENCE FOR THE ANNUNCIATION OF B.V.M. From the Forum Missal.
By W. JEWITT.

"FREE EDUCATION: how will it affect the Church of England?"

ANTONY VAN DYCK. Part II. (Illustrated.) By G. S. MACQUOID.

THE EARTH as a PLANET. Part II. By E. CLEMENTS.

SKETCHES IN CEYLON.—I. The Tomasha at Ratna-pura. By the Rev. W. WOOD, D.D.

MONT DORE les BAINS. By ROSE KINGSLEY.

"THE BISHOPS' BIBLE." Chapters XXI., XXII. By D. CHRISTIE
MURRAY and H. HERMAN."SWEET CONTENT." (Continued.) Chapters VII., VIII. (Illustrated.)
By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.

JACQUES MERMET: a Short Story. By Mrs. MACQUOID.

Sermon Outlines—Instructions on the Creed—Biblical Questions—Correspondence—Reviews—"Useful Books" List, &c.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, London.

THE THEOLOGICAL MONTHLY.

AN EXPONENT OF CURRENT CHRISTIAN THOUGHT AT HOME AND ABROAD.

FOR MARCH, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS.

I. NATURAL RELIGION, by J. ROBINSON GREGORY.

II. ST. PAUL to the COLOSSIANS, by HENRY HAYMAN, D.D.

III. THOMAS OF CELANO'S GREAT HYMN, by ROBERT SMINDLER.

IV. THREE CHARACTER-STUDIES.—II. ST. PETER, by H. N. BERNARD.

V. CHRISTIAN SECULARISM.—No. II. by C. H. CROFTON.

VI. OUR LORD'S TEMPTATION, Viewed in Relation to John vi., by
F. G. CHOLMONDELEY.

VII. CURRENT LITERATURE.

THE HOMILETIC MAGAZINE

FOR MARCH, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

EXPOSITORY PAPERS

OUTLINES OF THE FIRST EIGHT CHAPTERS OF THE EPISTLE to the ROMANS, by Rev. C. CLEMANCE, D.D.

THE HOMILETICAL COMMENTARY.

MICAH, by Rev. A. C. THISTLETON, B.A.

THE CHILDREN'S SERVICE:

TIMOTHY'S GUIDE BOOK.

THE CHURCH YEAR:

THE SECOND SUNDAY IN LENT.

THE THIRD SUNDAY IN LENT.

THE FOURTH SUNDAY IN LENT.

THE FIFTH SUNDAY IN LENT.

THE SUNDAY NEXT BEFORE EASTER.

SERMON OUTLINES FOR SPECIAL TIMES:

SERMON to WOMEN, by Rev. C. L. IVANS, M.A.

BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATIONS:

ANGELIC BEINGS.

PRACTICAL HOMILETICS:

THE CULTIVATION OF CHRISTIAN LOVE, by Rev. C. NEW.

APOSTASY from CHRIST, by Rev. C. NEW.

DIVINE ENCOURAGEMENTS against the TEMPTATIONS to APOSTASY, by Rev. C. NEW.

THE TWO POSITIVE PRECEPTS OF THE DECALOGUE.

THE SIGN of a SAINT.

THE PRAYER for SANCTIFICATION.

THE PRAYER for LEADING and TEACHING.

"GOOD NEWS in a STORM."

JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS STREET, W.

FROM ALL BOOKSELLERS.

MR. WALTER SCOTT'S NEW MAGAZINE.

NEWLY-DESIGNED COVER BY WALTER CRAIG.

VOL. I. THE ART REVIEW. No. 3.

A MONTHLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF ART, MUSIC, AND LETTERS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

PRINCIPAL CONTENTS:

PLATES, AND FULL PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

ITALIAN GIRL. By Sir JOHN E. MILLAIS, Bart.

LIONESS. From BRONZE by BARTY.

ALLA PIU BELLA. By FRANCESCO VENE.

IL RAPIMENTO. By FRANCESCO VENE.

ORIGINAL DESIGN. By HATWOOD SUMNER.

&c. &c.

ARTICLES, &c.

TO the ALMOND, by EDMUND GOSSE, with design by Alan Wright—
NORTHERN GOTHIC SKETCHES—BRUGES, GHENT, DOL, LAON, &c.,by VERNON LEE—REMBRANDT at BURLINGTON HOUSE, 1880, by Dr.
JOHN FORBES WHITE—SPORT and ART, by the Hon. GILBERTCOLLEDGE—GESSO, by GEORGE T. ROBINSON, F.S.A.—FRANCESCO
VENE, with Portrait and two Illustrations, by T. WALTER SAVAGELANDON—PARIS CAUSELIE and NOTE on BARTY, by CHCIL NICHOLSON, with Plate—ANCIENT ENGRAVED GEMS, II., by Dr. A. FRANKCOCKRAE—SOME PERSONAL REMINISCENCES of the late FERDINAND HILLER, by F. CONDER—THE CHRIST-BRIDE, by LAURENCE HAUSMAN—EFFIGIES, by MICHAEL FIELD—TO a ROPE DANCER, by ARTHUR SYMONS—NOTES on EXHIBITIONS—NOTE on JAMES THOMSON, with Portrait—NOTES and REVIEWS, &c., &c.

London: WALTER SCOTT, 24, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row.

Magazine Advertisements continued on page 160.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

The FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW

For MARCH, 1890.

SOME SOUTH AFRICAN QUESTIONS. By the Hon. J. MERRIMAN.

THE MORALITY OF MARRIAGE. By MOSA CAIRD.

THE LYRISM OF ENGLISH ROMANTIC DRAMA. By J. A. STOWDS.

THE EVIL OF BETTING and its CURE. By WILLIAM DAY.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY and POLICE ANTHROPOMETRY. By E. R.

SPEARMAN.

THE LEGEND OF MADAME KRASINSKA. By VERNON LEE.

LORD NAIFIER OF MAODALA. By Colonel KNOLLYS.

JUDICIAL TORTURE IN CHINA. By R. S. GURDNEY.

KING PLAGIARISM and his COURT. By JAMES RUSCIMAN.

THE EIGHT HOURS' QUESTION. By C. BRADLAUGH, M.P. With Letters from Sir GRAHAM BERRY, Sir ARTHUR BLYTH, Sir SAUL
SAMUEL, Sir T. E. FARRER, Mr. GEORGE LIVERSEY, and others.

TWO SUMMERS in GREENLAND:

An Artist's Adventures among Ice and Islands: in Fjords and Mountains.

By A. RIIS OARSTENSEN.

With numerous Illustrations by the Author.

Demy 8vo. (Nearly ready.)

HISTORY of ANCIENT ART in SARDINIA, JUDÆA, SYRIA, and ASIA MINOR.

By GEORGES PERROT and CHARLES CHAPIEUX.

With 296 Illustrations, 2 vols., imperial 8vo.

(Nearly ready.)

ANNALS of BIRD LIFE.

By CHARLES DIXON.

With Illustrations, crown 8vo.

(In a few days.)

A CENTURY of REVOLUTION.

By W. S. LILY.

Demy 8vo.

[Second Edition in the press.]

TEN YEARS' SPORT in FOREIGN LANDS.

By H. W. SETON-KARR.

A New Edition, with Additions, and Portrait of the Author. Crown 8vo.

[Second Edition nearly ready]

NEW NOVELS.

THE LLOYDS OF BALLYMORE.

By EDITH ROCHFORD. 2 vols., crown 8vo

(Next week.)

THE WORLD and the CLOISTER.

By OSWALD JOHN SIMON. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

DEAD STRIPES. By J. Carmichael.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

CHARLES DICKENS'S WORKS.

A NEW EDITION OF THE WORKS OF CHARLES DICKENS
IS NOW IN THE PRESS, TO BE CALLED THE CROWN EDITION.

Each Volume will contain

ALL THE ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS,

And the Letterpress will be Printed from

TYPE EXPRESSLY CAST FOR THIS EDITION

The FIRST VOLUME will be ready on FEBRUARY

25th, and will consist of

THE PICKWICK PAPERS

Containing 48 Original Illustrations and 651 pages of Letterpress, large crown 8vo.

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, Price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH, 1890:

- I. ALAS! By RHODA BROUGHTON. Part I. Chaps. IX.—XII.
II. THE DEAD HEART.
III. EDWARD FITZGERALD.
IV. NOTES on STOCKHOLM.
V. THE TRUE CHRISTIAN.
VI. THE ANONYMA.
VII. LORD HARRY.
VIII. DRYDEN.
IX. FACE ABOUT.
X. THE TRUE HISTORY of MILFORD.
XI. THE WAYS of the EAST.
XII. ON the WING.
XIII. PEARL-POWDER. By MRS. ANNIE EDWARDS. Chaps. XII.—XV.

NEW WORKS.

THE CORRESPONDENCE of the PRINCESS LIEVEN and EARL GREY. Translated and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by GUY LE STRANGE. In 2 vols., demy 8vo, with portraits, 80s.

THE FIRST of the BOURBONS. By CATHERINE CHARLOTTE LADY JACKSON, Author of "Old Paris," &c. In 2 vols., large crown 8vo, with portraits, 24s.

SARDINIA and the SARDES. By CHARLES EDWARDS, Author of "Letters from Crete." In demy 8vo, 14s.
"An instructive and amusing book." Saturday Review.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "UNDER A CHARM."
A HEAVY RECKONING.
By E. WERNER,
Author of "No Surrender," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "AN UGLY DUCKLING,"
BY WOMAN'S FAVOUR.
By HENRY ERROLL,
Author of "The Academician," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

By the Author of "THE PHANTOM FUTURE."
S U S P E N S E.
By H. S. MERRIMAN,
Author of "Young Mistley," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

STRANGE GODS. By Constance COTTERELL. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"A charming play of wit and humour, a lively, fresh, and engaging style and a sympathetic tone are the attractions of this novel."—Illustrated London News.

ALSO, A NEW EDITION.
AN UGLY DUCKLING. By Henry ERROLL, Author of "The Academician," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s. Forming the latest addition to "BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS."

RICHARD BENTLEY & Son, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen

Cassell & Company's Announcements.

Ready shortly. Two vols., demy 8vo, price 24s.

THE JOURNAL of MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF.

Translated from the French.

By MATHILDE BLIND.

Mr. GLADSTONE, in the Nineteenth Century, pronounced this "a book without a parallel."

The translation now offered is from the pen of the lady who first introduced the work to the notice of the English public in her article in The Woman's World.

Ready shortly, price 10s. 6d.

THE LIFE of The Rev. J. G. WOOD.

By the Rev. THEODORE WOOD.

Now ready, price 6s.

THE POPE and the NEW ERA.

Being Letters from the Vatican in 1890.

By WILLIAM T. STEAD,
Author of "Truth about Russia."

SIXTEENTH THOUSAND, now ready, 5s.

THE MASTER of BALLANTRAE.

By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON,
Author of "Treasure Island," "Kidnapped," "The Black Arrow," &c.

SECOND EDITION, now ready, price 6s.

THE SPLENDID SPUR.

By Q, Author of "Dead Man's Rock," &c.

"The Splendid Spur is decidedly Q's most successful effort, and we do not scruple to say that it raises its author to a high place in the new school of novelists—the school of action."—The Times.

"As an historical novel for boys and for grown-up people who know what is good, it is not easy to beat 'The Splendid Spur.'"—Saturday Review.

SECOND EDITION, now ready, price 6s.

STAR-LAND:

Being Talks with Young People about the Wonders of the Heavens.

By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL,
LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.A.S.,
Royal Astronomer of Ireland.
Author of "The Story of the Heavens," &c.
ILLUSTRATED.

"There is no adult who cannot read 'Star-Land' with as much gratification as any of the group of eager scholars represented on the frontispiece."—Irish Times.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate-hill, London.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

Now ready, the 22d Volume of "THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."

R U S S I A.

By W. R. MORFILL, M.A.,
Reader to the University of Oxford, in the Russian and other Slavonic Tongues.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.; PRESENTATION EDITION, cloth, gilt edges, 5s. 6d.; LIBRARY EDITION, cloth, red tops, 5s.
"Mr. Morfill in this book shows that, to thorough knowledge of his subject, he adds both literary skill and unbiased judgment. No better introduction to Russian history could be desired."—Scotsman.

Now ready, in 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

ITALIAN CHARACTERS IN THE EPOCH OF UNIFICATION.

By the Countess E. MARTINENGO CESARESCO.
This Work contains the Lives of BUFFINO RICASOLI, COSTANCO AZEGLIO, UGO BASSI, DANIEL MANIN, THE CAIROLES, LUIGI SETTEMBRINI, THE PORRIOS, and many others.

"THE GEMO SERIES," Vol. III.
Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, 2s. 6d.
WORDSWORTH'S GRAVE, and other Poems. By WILLIAM WATSON.
"The choicely worded, well-turned quatrains, which succeed each other like the strong, unbroken waves of full tide."
Mr. COSMO MOSKHOUSE in the Academy.

Second Editions of Vols. I. and II., now ready.
1. THE LADY from the SEA. By HENRIK IBSEN. Translated by ELEANOR MARX-AVELING.
"A powerful study."—Notes and Queries.
2. A LONDON PLANE-TREE, and other Poems. By AMY LEVY.
"True and tender poetry."—Saturday Review.

Now ready, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.
HEROES and MARTYRS, and other Poems. By JOHN ALFRED LANGFORD, LL.D.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR MARCH.
GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL. Mrs. VAN RENSSLAER
Illustrated by JOSEPH PENNELL.
THE SUN-DANCE of the SIOUX. FRED. SCHWATKA.
Illustrated.
IN MEMORY of FATHER DAMIEN. ANNE REEVE
ALDRICH.
THE "MERRY CHANTER." Illustrated. FRANK
R. STOCKTON.
AUTOBIOGRAPHY of "RIP VAN WINKLE."
JOSEPH JEFFERSON. Illustrated.
SOME WAYSIDE PLACES in PALESTINE. EDW.
L. WILSON. Illustrated.
AN ARTIST'S LETTER from JAPAN. Illustrated.
JOHN LA FARGE.
TOPICS of the TIME. — BRIC-A-BRAC. — OPEN LETTERS.
PRICE 1s. 4d.

Vol. I. now ready (A—CONO).

THE CENTURY DICTIONARY

An Encyclopædic Dictionary of the English Language.
Edited by Prof. W. D. WHITNEY, Ph D., LL.D.
(Yale University).

PROFUSELY AND ARTISTICALLY ILLUSTRATED.
Cloth gilt, sprinkled edges, £2 2s.; half-morocco, cloth sides, marbled edges, £2 16s.
The Work is likewise issued in Monthly Parts, price 10s. 6d. each.

The Standard (Leader).—"This new lexicon of the English tongue is, on its own lines, perhaps the most complete and comprehensive that has ever been attempted. Besides the etymology, the meaning, and the use of each particular word, it gives in a condensed form such explanatory matter as would be required by a person in search of special knowledge. Almost every page contains some picture which enables the eye to easily and rapidly take in the meaning of the text. Such assistance to the understanding of the letterpress is invaluable. It devotes a great deal of its space alike to terms which are usually considered obsolete, and to the more important technical and local words. The present work has every right to claim that it has reached a high standard of excellence. The quotations are apt and numerous, and supply the student with typical examples of the styles of our chief writers."

New York: THE CENTURY COMPANY.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN,
Paternoster-square, E.C.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1890.

No. 930, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

An Historical Sketch of the Conflicts between Jesuits and Seculars in the Reign of Elizabeth. By Thomas Graves Law. (David Nutt.)

MR. LAW has based his interesting and scholarly volume upon Dr. Bagshaw's True Relation of the Faction begun at Wisbeach. That valuable tract is reprinted, and it occupies one hundred and thirty-three pages of Mr. Law's history; there are eleven appendices—of contemporary letters, and of official documents; there are some twenty pages of bibliographical notes, which revive the scarce and forgotten literature of this ecclesiastical dispute; and Mr. Law has composed a full and lucid introduction of one hundred and twenty pages, which illustrates the position, the policy, and the quarrels of the two bitter factions into which the Roman Catholics were divided from the accession of Elizabeth to the failure of the Gunpowder Plot.

Let me say, in passing, that Mr. Law's industry as an editor, and his work as an historian, leave nothing to his reviewers but the obligation of expressing their gratitude.

The immediate causes of the quarrel are sufficiently explained by the full title of Dr. Bagshaw's pamphlet:

"A true relation of the faction begun at Wisbeach, by F. Edmonds, alias Weston, a Jesuite, 1595. And continued since by Father Walley, alias Garnet, the Provinciale of the Jesuits in England, and by F. Parsons in Rome, with their adherents: Against us the Secular Priests, their brethren and fellow Prisoners, that disliked of novelties, and thought it dishonourable to the ancient Ecclesiastical Discipline of the Catholike Church, that Secular Priests should be governed by Jesuite."

From the True Relation of Dr. Bagshaw, who was one of the chief agents in these "garboyles," the uninstructed reader might imagine that the stir at Wisbeach was a mere quarrel of punctilious and touchy clergymen, too eager for precedence, and somewhat impatient of discipline and rule; but Mr. Law's most excellent introduction sets the whole affair in a larger and a clearer view. He examines what was, in Elizabethan days, "the present position of Catholics in England"; he exposes the domestic jealousies, which weakened and distracted the Catholic efforts; and he explains the grave difference, of policy and of procedure, which was the real cause of this weakness and distraction.

The position of Catholics under Elizabeth is worthy of a moment's consideration. When that great queen succeeded, the English court had been for some years a mere satellite of Spain; we were at war with France, and Calais had been taken; the Papacy was eager to retrieve its losses, or at least to hold the slender advantages it had secured under Queen Mary; the affairs of Scotland were menacing and full of difficulty; the coinage was base and the finance in disorder; the country was divided by two religious factions; and each of them had embittered the theological quarrel by grossly misusing its period of supremacy; their passions and their factiousness were increased by the uncertainty of the future, and by all the possibilities of a doubtful and a disputed succession. It is Elizabeth's chief glory that she would not condescend to be a partizan of either sect; she resolved to be the queen of an united nation, and to rule in the interests of that great but quiet majority, whose main desire is for peace and for a vigorous and ordered government. She refused Philip's offer of marriage; but, in spite of innumerable provocations, there was not an open rupture between them, until the eve of the Armada. Peace was made with France, and was preserved with Scotland; the finances were reformed and administered with strict economy; and the energies of the country were diverted into schemes of nautical enterprise and of mercantile adventure. The Acts of Supremacy and of Uniformity were enforced; Elizabeth insisted upon the outward observance of ecclesiastical submission. If she was hard upon fanatic Romanists, she was equally hard upon the factious and restless Puritans; and the wisdom of her policy was no less conspicuous than its vigour, its astuteness, and its success.

"Never," says Mr. Law, speaking of Elizabeth's accession, "had a church so completely gone down before the first blow of opposition. Some nine thousand parish priests were content, with good or bad consciences, to read the Book of Common Prayer, and to preserve their livings. Catholicism was the religion of perhaps half Elizabeth's subjects."

And, if this be true, the greater number of these Catholics must have assisted at the established worship during many years. For an equal period the queen's diplomacy secured a hollow semblance of peace. But no single power could be trusted by the English government; and Elizabeth was forced, very much against her will, to have dealings with the Protestant oppositions in Scotland, in the Low Countries, and in France. In return, the Pope and the Spaniards tampered with Ireland and with the English partisans of Mary Stuart. The Northern counties rose for Queen Mary and for the old religion in 1569; and, in the following year, Pius V. issued a Bull which put an end to the conformity of all obedient Catholics. The subjects of the queen were absolved from their allegiance, she herself was excommunicated and deposed, and,

"As to her own life, it was in constant danger from the assassin. It was the fault of Pius V. and his successors if the English government, in the face of this imminent peril to the nation, refused to distinguish between allegiance to the pope and disloyalty to the state. Yet, notwithstanding the indignation of parliament, and its savage addition to the coercive legislation against Catholics, the executive was for the next ten years surprisingly patient and tolerant. Bishop Challoner ventures to claim only three victims of the penal code as martyrs for their religion before the year 1581."

The penal code appears to have been more rigorous in theory than in practice. It is true that Father Parsons landed at Dover in "a captain's uniform of buff, trimmed with gold lace, with hat and feathers to match"; but Cardinal Allen boasts that, in the year of the Armada, there were "nearly three hundred priests in various noblemen's and gentlemen's houses, and we are almost daily sending fresh ones;" and ecclesiastics went up and down the country unmolested, although their persons, their errand, and their office were equally notorious.

But, as the quarrel became inevitable, the methods of warfare grew fiercer and more unscrupulous. In 1580, a Jesuit mission was undertaken by Fathers Campion and Parsons, who prosecuted the Roman cause with uncompromising zeal. This attempt led to the execution of Campion and to the flight of Parsons—a rude, truculent, and aggressive Jesuit, who came from Balliol; but, though Parsons fled, his agents and his policy remained. He directed them from Rome, and they split the Catholics into two hostile factions. The Jesuits and many of their converts upon the one hand were devoted to the Spanish interest. In their eyes Elizabeth was a bastard, an excommunicate usurper, to whom no allegiance was due. They went so far as to assert that an Infanta was the lawful queen. They opposed all Catholics who were loyal to the government. "Sir Thomas Tresham," writes Father Tichborne, a Jesuit, "as a friend of the state, is holden among us for an atheist, and all others of his humour either so or worse." They hesitated at nothing which might rid them of Elizabeth. The Pope, King Philip, the Duke of Guise, several cardinals, and nuncios and bishops, and their Jesuit agents, were all implicated in more than one scheme of assassination. From these more orthodox designs, the secular clergy and the old Catholics stood honourably aloof. They would make no concession to the government about religion; but their attitude was profoundly constitutional. They obeyed the sovereign who was recognised by parliament; they held that no foreign potentate had any voice in choosing the ruler of the English commonwealth; they were loyal both to their church and to the state, and were willing to resist even the Pope himself in any warlike and political attempt upon the Queen or the realm. They held, with Dr. Dollinger, that a real knowledge of ecclesiastical history would not square with Ultramontane theories and proceedings.

These differences had invaded all the English seminaries upon the continent. At the Roman college there "were seven outbreaks in seven years"; and in England they came to a head within the castle of Wisbeach. At that fortress of the bishops of Ely a band of Roman ecclesiastics had been detained in easy and honourable confinement since 1579. They lived in separate rooms, but met for dinner and for supper in a common hall; before and after they were allowed to walk together in the garden. They were supported, and their kitchen and cellar were most liberally supplied, by the alms of the faithful. They said mass in their own chambers; and many boys resorted to them, ostensibly as servants, but in reality for purposes of education. The faction began at Wisbeach in 1594-5 with the imprisonment of Father Weston, "as meere a Jesuite as if he had been spit out of Father Parsons's mouth." According to the Jesuits, the Seculars were accused of "whoredoms, drunkenness, and dicing, the same being too ordinary with some in this house." And "it is probable enough that there was some hard drinking at Wisbeach, perhaps gambling with the alms of the faithful, and still more probable that the priests occasionally came to blows." That is, we must either believe that the Secular party led unedifying lives; or that the Jesuit martyrs and confessors bore false witness against their clerical brethren. At any rate, the disputes became very serious; Weston's adherents usurped the public offices of the house, and refused all communication with the opposite party. The quarrel was aggravated by jealousies between the old Catholics and the converts; for then, as now, almost every "Catholic of mark was bred a Protestant." The Jesuits were accused "of putting their sickles into other men's harvests"; of appropriating twelve or fifteen times more than their share of the Catholic revenues; of prejudicing laymen against the Seculars; of disturbing all the seminaries by their system of spies and of tale-bearers; and, finally, of aiming at the complete subjugation of the secular clergy. In the disorganised state of the English Catholics, Rome was not willing to grant them bishops, but an arch-priest was appointed; and George Blackwell, sometime Fellow of Trinity in Oxford, and a creature of the Jesuits, was chosen to the office. The brief, the powers, and the duties of this official were most unusual. The Secular clergy appealed against the scheme; and Dr. Bagnshaw went to Rome to undertake their interests. The appellants were alternately cajoled and roughly handled by Father Parsons; but, after many delays, they won their case.

"The results of the appellant controversy," says Mr. Law, "were undoubtedly of national importance. The kingdom owed, perhaps, more than is generally admitted to the appellant priests for the failure of the later Spanish attempts, and for the peaceful accession of James. By their firm resistance to a policy of aggression and violence, and their known readiness to divulge any treasonable projects, they thwarted the Spanish faction at every point. The views which they were the first to broach in opposition to the deposing power, and which ultimately prevailed among the clergy in general, were at least indirectly a gain to the country on the side of liberty and peace."

And the last act of the Seculars was a complete justification of Elizabeth's policy. On the day of her death, they signed this protestation of their perfect loyalty to the Queen and to the Pope:

"For as we are most ready to shed our blood in defence of her majesty and our country, so we will rather lose our lives than infringe the lawful authority of Christ's Catholic Church."

ARTHUR GALTON.

'GREAT WRITERS.'—Honoré de Balzac. By Frederick Wedmore. (Walter Scott.)

"How many people," says Mr. Wedmore, "shall I displease, how many content, if I set forth by declaring that, among the writers whose successes in pure literature this century allows, five alone must be accounted for ever influential—Goethe, Wordsworth, Balzac, Dickens, Browning?"

In Mr. Wedmore's admirable little monograph on Balzac I lay hold of this initial sentence to object to, in the conviction that the rest of his book will afford me no second opportunity. If by "people" in this statement Mr. Wedmore means competent European critics not either Englishmen or Americans, the answer would certainly be that he has contented not a single one. Perhaps not one thoughtful critic in a hundred, if he had to make choice of five writers influential in the past and in the present and likely to be influential in the future, would name more than two out of Mr. Wedmore's list. On the other hand, probably not one in the hundred would exclude the name of Balzac.

The most casual reader of the more advanced and intelligent works of modern German, Russian, American, French, or English novelists is reminded of Balzac at every turn. Their works are his monument. He, whose own lifetime synchronises with the nineteenth-century romantic revival in literature, was one of the romantic school only inasmuch as his genius tried, and triumphed over, nearly every form of interpretation into fiction of the phases of human life. He includes in himself a mystic, a "realist," a classic, a "romantic," and a humourist. After the mediæval fashion of Rabelais. He rises to the cold heights of metaphysical abstraction, he lays bare all the complicated comedy of Parisian life, and shrinks from no form of human meanness and depravity—descending, if possible, to still more hideous and more monstrous forms in the grotesque imaginings of his Contes Drôlatiques.

He is the great exemplar of so many modern novelists that his own reputation suffers thereby. Reading him after them, he seems to lack freshness and originality because we have read his own originality in their borrowings. We often find him tedious because we have made acquaintance with him already at secondhand. Those, and I fear there are not a few, who find Balzac occasionally a tedious writer have, it must be honestly admitted, other and stronger reasons even than this for doing so. There is no man, perhaps, of this century in whose work are found so many isolated instances of deep thought and observation clothed in the brightest wit—of brief, sententious wisdom set with epigrammatic brilliancy; yet he is not a great word-artist in the sense that Shakspeare and Goethe are, in the sense that almost every great French writer but himself is a word-artist. His faculty of literary presentment is for the most part poor, or it is paralysed by the extraordinary wealth of his observation and the feverish activity of his imagination. His style, except for short periods of effort, is involved and clumsy, his narrative long-winded and interrupted by most terrible prolixities of description. This prolixity, however, is perhaps not altogether to be regarded as a fault, if we are to judge the man from his chosen standpoint. He could go so far afield as a novelist, could dig so deep and build so loftily, that after a little time he felt and declared that the novel had not room enough for him. He aspired to be a novelist's chronicler, an historian of the life of his contemporaries; and he kept his eye fixed, not upon the readers of his own day, but upon posterity at large. The consequence is that his works are a repository in which the archaeologist of the future will find accounts of the habits, manners, modes of speech, the tastes and fashions in dress and furniture, and all the intricate methods of trade, traffic, and finance of Balzac's period. The writer on art will be able to turn to his novels for a record of the movement in painting, architecture, and sculpture; the historian of philosophy will there find the speculations of the time set forth, and even the jurist of the future will find an exposition of the laws of this period. In César Birotteau he may even look for a sound exposition of the intricacies of the law of insolvency—not treated broadly and dramatically, as Dickens subsequently treated a branch of our English insolvent law in Little Dorrit, as a telling background for a plot; but a dull, honest, painstaking account such as might delight the heart of an official assignee, after the special manner of Balzac—an interruption of the story, but invaluable for the law student of the future. All technical details relating to every trade and art, all technical words and phrases, the slang of the drawing-room, the street, the elum, the market, the thieves' kitchen, and the law-court—all this flotsam and jetsam of the moment the whirlwind of Balzac's genius gathers together and sweeps wholesale into his novels, till the reader sometimes has forgotten plot, incident, and character, and feels that he has less a novel before him than a storehouse of facts. Assuredly Balzac has prepared a great treat for the patient archaeologist of a coming generation!

In writing his monograph for Mr. Walter Scott's series of "Great Writers," and having regard to the wants of his readers and the space at his command, Mr. Wedmore has judiciously devoted himself to a detailed criticism and commentary upon the chief works of the author, and to a rapid account of his life—both tasks most admirably performed.

Perhaps the time has not even yet come for a full appreciation of the place in contemporary literature held by Balzac. Readers will, I think, close Mr. Wedmore's book with the reflection, which I believe the excellent critic its author would endorse, that in so far as a novelist should deal with the facts of life—with its phenomena rather than with the ideas that underlie them, with the prose rather than with the poetry of humanity—so far as a novelist should be the analyst of human life, the dissector and exponent of human emotions, calm, scientific, and unruffled by sympathy with his subject, Balzac was the greatest master of fiction that ever yet has lived.

OSWALD CRAWFORD.

A Naturalist in North Celebes. By Sidney J. Hickson. (John Murray.)

FOLLOWING in the footsteps of Wallace, Forbes, and Guillemard, Dr. Hickson undertook in 1885 a long expedition to the Malay Archipelago, chiefly for the purpose of studying on the spot some of the minuter forms of marine life in that "paradise of naturalists." The first twelvemonth (July, 1885, to July, 1886) was devoted almost exclusively to the Manado district in Minahassa, north-eastern peninsula of Celebes, together with the neighbouring islet of Talisse, and a short excursion to the more distant Sangir and Talaut Archipelagos between Celebes and the Philippines. Estimated by its extent, this must be called an extremely limited field of research. But such is the endless variety of plant and animal life in those tropical regions that in this narrow space alone the author has gleaned sufficient materials to fill a handsome volume possessing quite exceptional attractions for the botanist, zoologist, and ethnologist. And so far from exhausting the subjects of inquiry, it was with feelings of "remorse" that he was obliged to leave the coral girt, mangrove fringed island of Talisse, the work there begun being still in an "unfinished and imperfect condition."

Most of the materials here brought together have already formed the subject of various papers and memoirs in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Journal of the Anthropological Institute, and other scientific periodicals. But their treatment in those little accessible publications was of too technical a character to detract from the general interest and freshness of the present work. Here the ordinary reader will find such questions as coral formations, mangrove swamp life, the ethnology and folklore of the civilised and wild Malay tribes, the value of missionary work among the inferior races, and so forth, discussed in an agreeable, intelligent, and highly instructive manner.

Referring to the wise administration of Mr. Steller, a German missionary long stationed in the Sangir group, Mr. Hickson remarks:

"A missionary such as Mr. Steller, who teaches the use of some of the simpler arts of the civilised races, and by cultivating the soil himself, brings home to the native mind the practical value of the land he lives upon, undoubtedly increases the happiness and prosperity of the people. The missionary who merely indulges in evangelical dreams, and devotes himself only to the destruction of practices and beliefs which he classifies as 'pagan,' is to my mind worse than useless."

Elsewhere the ministers of the gospel get, perhaps, more than their full share of credit for the astounding change that has taken place in the social condition of the Minahassa peoples during the last few decades. At the beginning of the century they were broken into a multiplicity of savage groups, in a chronic state of intertribal warfare, and addicted to head hunting and even to a mitigated form of cannibalism. Now they constitute a population of peaceful agriculturists, largely civilised, to some extent even educated, and gradually laying aside their numberless rude dialects for the cultivated form of the Malay language current throughout the Eastern Archipelago. But these results are perhaps mainly due to the judicious policy of the Dutch Government, which, while respecting harmless local prejudices, has sternly suppressed practices antagonistic to the general welfare, and introduced an excellent system of land culture, which has converted a great part of the Manado country into a flourishing coffee plantation. Anyhow, the knowledge of what has been accomplished in the neighbouring Philippine archipelago on an immeasurably vaster scale, and in some respects under much more difficult circumstances, should have guarded the writer against the grossly exaggerated statement that in Minahassa the Protestant propagandists "have achieved greater success in their mission than any missionaries at any time in any part of the world."

However, this overdrawn language is amply condoned by the graphic account of the social usages, religious beliefs, "cosmogonies," myths, and legends of the primitive inhabitants of North Celebes and neighbouring archipelagos. Some of the specimens of folklore doubtless lose in verbal accuracy through second-hand translation from the Dutch; but it may be presumed that both the spirit and local colouring of the originals are faithfully preserved. In many of the popular stories mere brute force, as typified by the crocodile, is circumvented by the cunning of the ape, who here plays the part of the fox, the hare and "brere rabbit" in the analogous oral literature of other races. Some of the tales, as our author correctly remarks, have obviously been modified by Christian teachings, under whose influence new ideas have been grafted on the old national myths. But when he refers the origin of natural religions to some form of fetishism, that is, "a belief that every natural object with which the savage came into daily contact possessed a soul or fetish," he wrongly defines fetishism itself, and revives the erroneous notions on that subject which appear to have been first disseminated by De Brosses, and which were thoroughly exposed by Major A. B. Ellis in The Tebi-Speaking Peoples of the Gold Coast (1887). Fetishism is not animism in any sense, and is not a primitive but a later form of natural religion.

Dr. Hickson naturally devotes much space to coral life and reef-building, one of the chief objects of his expedition. The North Celebes waters, however, were not found to be a very favourable field for studying the difficult problems connected with the origin of reefs and atolls. Hence he abstains from entering into the merits of the objections recently advanced by Dr. Guppy and Mr. Murray against Darwin's subsidence theory, merely remarking that he is not a believer in this view, and that his own observations fully confirm Mr. Murray's statement regarding the seaward growth of reefs upon the slope of their own débris. On the other hand, he introduces a fresh element into the discussion by the ingenious way in which he shows that fringing reefs may in some places be associated with the presence of mangrove forests. In Talisse the mangrove swamps themselves were studied under specially favourable conditions, and their importance in determining the local biological and climatic relations is emphasised in more than one eloquent passage:

"When the naturalist first enters the mangrove swamp, he cannot fail to be impressed with two things—the enormous field for investigation in animal and vegetable life that it affords, and the extreme difficulty and discomfort of doing any work there. The various kinds of mangrove trees bearing creepers, orchids, and parasitic ferns; the swarms of ants, termites, flies, mosquitoes, and other creatures of the air; the snakes, birds, fishes, crabs, anemones, and worms, afford endless themes for investigation and research. On the other hand, the damp, stifling, malarious atmosphere and the insect pests are quite sufficient to drive away even the enthusiastic naturalist to purer air and more wholesome places. . . . The conditions of life in the mangrove swamp are so extraordinary that if examples of all the animals found within a given area of it were collected, it would be discovered not only that a very large number of the genera, but nearly every one of the classes, of the animal kingdom were represented. Mammals, birds, reptiles, fishes, mollusks, insects, crustacea, worms, echinoderms, coelenterata, and protozoa, live and thrive within its limits. The same cannot be said of any other region on dry land or in the waters. We find, in fact, a curious combination here of the land, the sea, and freshwater fauna, brought about by the peculiar advantages the swamp affords to various animals of different habits to live and find their food."

Among the curious forms here met are the crustaceans, with a number of real eyes distributed over their carapace, the jumping crab, and the still more remarkable jumping fish, Periophthalmus Koelruter, which prefers disporting itself on the rocks to swimming in its native element, and which appears to breathe more through its tail than through its gills. At least the author claims that his theory regarding this very peculiar caudal function has since been confirmed by the experiments carried out by Prof. Haddon in Torres Strait. On the other hand, he has given up the solution of that other and far more familiar problem of the bloodthirsty propensities of the mosquito, always ravenous for human gore, yet perfectly competent to complete its biological evolution without the stimulus of that invigorating diet:

"The mosquitoes are born and bred in the waters of the swamp; but what they actually feed upon in the imago or flying state, when there are no human beings about, is a mystery to me. It is possible they may obtain a scanty nourishment from the slimy ooze upon the surface of the mud and mangrove roots; but then it is difficult to understand the advantage of their piercing mouth-parts. It may be that of the millions hatched only a few actually deposit fertile eggs, and those may be the lucky ones, who have had a draught of blood of the mammals and birds in the swamps. All that I can say about their feeding is that when we met they seemed to be invariably hungry, and when they fed were never satisfied."

But enough has been said to show the great variety of topics intelligently discussed by this very entertaining "Naturalist in North Celebes." There is a beautiful coloured plate of the curious little Periophthalmus, besides numerous other well-executed illustrations; a copious index, two maps, and a very full bibliography, to which continued reference is made throughout the text on a novel and space-saving plan.

A. H. KEANE.

Principles in Art, &c. By Coventry Patmore. (Bell.)

CHERISHING, if one may say so, an affectionate regard for Mr. Coventry Patmore as a poet, one receives with the greater respect his judgments as a critic; for it is a mistake to suppose that the offices of the poet and the critic are necessarily foreign to each other. A critic who is also a poet has, for that reason, a keener sensibility, a deeper insight into character and the meaning of events, and a wider sympathy with human nature. Without sensibility, or insight, or sympathy, no man has any right to call himself a critic. When Mr. Coventry Patmore follows his poetic instinct his critical judgment is right. But there are one or two instances here—the paper on Emerson is notably one—in which both the instinct of the poet and the discernment of the critic seem to have been overborne by another sense, which may conveniently be called the religious sense.

There is so little in this book that I shall have to take exception to—a proceeding, in any case, to be attempted with all respect—that I shall be glad to get that duty over. First, then, I find myself unable to accept Mr. Coventry Patmore's estimate of Emerson. It seems to me that he has failed to realise the fulness of Emerson's teaching, and the fact of his genius, from the want of that sympathy with his subject which in dealing with most other men and things is the prime quality he displays. Emerson was above all things a religious teacher, but religion with him was absolutely dissociated from dogma. It was a commingled intellectuality and spirituality, of ample sufficiency for a pure and uplifted soul. Obviously, it was out of harmony with a religious system based on theological dogmas and expressed in elaborate creeds. It is well known that Mr. Coventry Patmore's position is that of the exact theologians. That he should be unable to appreciate Emerson's position is therefore not surprising; but it is to be regretted that he should have written thus of a thinker whose writings have given a marked impulse to the thoughtful minds of the present and the last generation:

"Though Emerson could not see that a religion of which there is nothing left but an 'over-soul' is much the same thing as a man of whom there is nothing left but his hat, the religious bodies to which he was for many years more or less attached were less devoid of humour, and the joke of a faith without a dogma became in time too much for their seriousness."

Of this passage it is enough to say that the supposed "joke" has no more quality of fact than Mr. Coventry Patmore's description of the over-soul has of fitness. He has simply failed altogether to understand Emerson. If it were not so he would never have said of him: "His philosophy afforded him only a very narrow range of subject." Emerson's philosophy was really as wide as nature. It embraced the teachings of science and the experiences of men; but it excluded—and that, from Mr. Coventry Patmore's point of view, constitutes its narrowness—the arbitrary deductions of the theologians.

Mr. Patmore writes of Shelley in a vein that will shock some of the poet's devotees. His idea of "What Shelley was" is stated with the coolness of a professor of moral anatomy. I am not sure that this is not well. It is utterly impossible to justify some of the things that Shelley did; and perhaps the best way of dealing with his breaches of the moral law, as understood by society, would be to admit them and pass on. The attempt to defend them is rather a dangerous proceeding, having regard to the need for a social moral law; and it can never be very successful. But Mr. Coventry Patmore's judgment of Shelley's powers, and of his intrinsic character, seems to have been warped by his disgust for the poet's moral aberrations. He speaks of him as being "self-indulgent by habit, ignorant to the end of all that it most behoves a responsible being to know, and so conceited that his ignorance was incurable; showing at every turn the most infallible sign of a feeble intellect—a belief in human perfectibility."

May it not be that the theologian in Mr. Coventry Patmore is again responsible for a criticism which Mr. Coventry Patmore, the poet, would scarcely seek to justify? The belief in human perfectibility does not seem to be a very grievous thing after all; and one would think that conceit, ignorance, and feebleness of intellect are qualities not likely to be found in the company of aspirations aiming at so high a mark. Keats's name is inseparably linked with Shelley's, and nothing is so natural as to pass from one to the other. Mr. Coventry Patmore's estimate of Keats seems to me a faulty one also. He does full justice to all of Keats's work that was comprised within what he calls "his own lovely line"—that of the "Eve of St Agnes," "Isabella," and the Odes; but when he comes to "Hyperion," the grandest piece of writing Keats ever did, he dismisses it with the summary remark that "Keats himself knew and admitted that it was only a semblance and an echo, and therefore wisely abandoned the attempt." It is true that Keats said something of this kind; but it often happens that poets are not the best judges of their own productions. Byron was much nearer the mark when he said of "Hyperion" that it seemed "actually inspired by the Titans."

I have no more fault to find. The far more pleasant duty now falls to me to say that these essays are very delightful reading. The first of them, which gives its name to the book, lays down a principle of intelligent judgment in criticism which most of the other essays pointedly exemplify. When Mr. Patmore is in sympathy with his subject he writes of it with a clearness and force which it would be impossible to excel, and with an eloquence that quite fascinates the reader. There is perhaps no subject so essentially his own as that of "Love and Poetry," on which wedded topics he discourses thus:

"The whole of after-life depends very much upon how life's transient transfiguration in youth by love is subsequently regarded; and the greatest of all the functions of the poet is to aid in his readers the fulfilment of the cry, which is that of nature as well as of religion, 'Let not my heart forget the things mine eyes have seen.' The greatest perversion of the poet's function is to falsify the memory of that transfiguration of the senses, and to make light of its sacramental character. This character is instantly recognised by the unvitiated heart and apprehension of every youth and maiden; but it is very easily forgotten and profaned by most, unless its sanctity is upheld by priests and poets. Poets are naturally its prophets—all the more powerful because, like the prophets of old, they are wholly independent of the priests, and are often the first to discover and rebuke the lifelessness into which that order is always tending to fall. If society is to survive its apparently impending dangers, it must be mainly by guarding and increasing the purity of the sources in which society begins."

That is admirably said, and so is nearly all else in these essays. Whether Mr. Patmore is writing of art, or architecture, or poetry—whether he is discussing the subtlety which constitutes so much of the charm of Rossetti's poems, or those personal qualities in Clough which had a fascination for all who knew him, or is satirising the hasty tendency to confer post-mortem honours on "Smith"—he is equally lucid, and both in matter and style equally charming.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

English Lands, Letters, and Kings, from Celt to Tudor. By Donald G. Mitchell. (Sampson Low.)

MR. MITCHELL introduces his little volume as the result of a series of "talks" intended for the entertainment and instruction of some private friends. In his own words his wish is to "familiarise the average reader with the salient characteristics of the writers brought under notice, and to put those writers into such a swathing of historic and geographic enwrappings as shall keep them better in mind."

The conception is excellent in itself; and, though the execution of such a task must have been far from easy, Mr. Mitchell deserves the credit of having achieved a very considerable measure of success. His "talks," written in a pleasant, familiar style, have the great merit of being at once interesting and fruitful; and this is no small matter in a book intended for those who often have not the time, nor perhaps even the inclination, for serious study. Yet we venture to say that some at least of Mr. Mitchell's readers will be led on to take a deeper and more permanent interest in the subject; and from the care with which the dates and the last editions of each author are indicated they will find it a useful guide for further study.

Mr. Mitchell confessedly writes in the first place for American readers; and we must not, therefore, quarrel with some features in his book which occasionally seem to us unnecessary. But his Americanisms are not of the obtrusive order, and will simply strike the average Britisher as somewhat quaint. He might, however, have avoided such an error as "Christ's Church College" (p. 174).

In his first chapter, our author carries us past the Norman Conquest, giving us brief glimpses of Caedmon and Bede, the stories of whose work would have borne a little fuller repetition, since they never grow old, and would probably come with the charm of freshness to most of Mr. Mitchell's readers. Alfred, Canute, Godiva, Harold the Saxon, and William the Norman, fill up the remainder of his picture of early England; and the second chapter opens with Geoffrey of Monmouth and the Arthurian Legends. Walter Map, of course, occurs in the latter connexion; but the fame of the reputed author of "Meu est propositum in terna mori" might have earned for him a more extended notice, and the Nugas Curialium, that curious mine of old legends, and of information on court-life under the first of the Plantagenets, would have supplied material for a pleasant picture. Giraldus Cambrensis also would fairly turn in his grave could he know that all his pains had not sufficed to secure him mention. No two writers of the Early Middle Ages would have better repaid treatment, and their litera-fame was so great and well founded that we should like to have seen the two lively archdeacons brought out of shadow-land in Mr. Mitchell's pages. But it is easy to cavil at omissions; and we must not expect too much, when, as the writer says, it was only possible to give types. Still, it is just the Early Middle Ages with regard to which it is hardest to realise that men were much as we are, and not only fought, but talked and read, and thought and wrote. However, Mr. Mitchell gives us a long and pleasant sketch of Chaucer at the end of his third chapter, having touched sufficiently on Mandeville, Roger Bacon, and Wycliffe. The next chapter takes us through the fifteenth century ending with Caxton and the Paston Letters, not a period with much to talk of in the present connexion, though Lawrence Minot, and some of the English metrical romances, would have given better material than "moral" Gower and dull Dan Lydgate.

The last half of the book is given up to the Tudors, at least ostensibly; but it gets, perhaps unavoidably, a longish way into the Stuarts, and somehow even Hobbes creeps in. The space is here so much more ample that more detail was possible, and we are not called on to take so many "long strides." The result is proportionately more satisfactory. Mr. Mitchell has wisely omitted Shakspeare from his list, as a long notice would have destroyed the symmetry of the book, a short one have been worse than useless. As it is, space is gained to give a fuller picture of the times of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, and of their great ministers, together with More, Spenser, Sidney, Bacon, Marlowe, Jonson, and others too numerous to mention.

Mr. Mitchell has adopted a pleasant system of telling his story by the aid of quotations not only from the authors he is dealing with, but also from any well-known writer who may serve his purpose. Shakspeare is, of course, in constant use, and Scott's novels are brought in to illustrate the history of Richard I. and crusading times, while Tennyson supplies material for the stories of Godiva, and Harold, and for the Arthurian Legends. To our mind this is a very happy notion, which gives the volume great additional interest, and by the familiarity of the language makes it far more vivid.

Mr. Mitchell has produced an eminently readable series of essays; and we hope they will obtain the wide circulation which they deserve. He speaks as though he had some more "talks" in store. We shall look out for them with interest.

C. L. KINGSFORD.

NEW NOVELS.

The Bondman. By Hall Caine. In 3 vols. (Heinemann.)

Part of the Property. By Beatrice Whitby. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Duchess Frances. By Sarah Tytler. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

A Resolute Purpose. By Katharine Ashburner. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

Two Women or One? By Henry Harland. (Cassells.)

A Manchester Shirtmaker. By John Law. (Authors' Co-operative Publishing Co.)

¹ would be going too far, perhaps, to assert that Mr. Hall Caine has, by his latest novel, The Bondman, placed himself on the shelf where the classics stand. But there is no doubt that he occupies a position far removed from that of the average story-teller, and may be regarded as standing on a pedestal of his own, secure from the kick of the envious passing herd, and only to be approached with ladder, and at personal risk, by him who would reverently wipe off a little dust and cobweb, or chip away, with apologies, some truant angularity. He is an acknowledged master of the art of rousing human passion; and to say that this art is effectively displayed in the present work would be scarcely more than saying that Mr. Caine had not fallen behind himself in an effort put forth in the full maturity of his powers. The Bondman has other claims to notice than this. A serious teaching—if we rightly understand the story—a teaching only imperfectly foreshadowed by the fairy legend that heralds the opening chapter, underlies all that the writer has to tell. He is presenting to us an allegory typifying the impotency of man's schemes of vengeance—or, indeed, schemes of any kind—when conflicting with the mysterious ordinances of the Almighty. Read, indeed, in this light the narrative sometimes appears pregnant with a painfully intense irony, such as may not have been altogether intended by its author. Another point of interest is the brilliant descriptive power exhibited, in which Mr. Caine has fairly surpassed himself; and, lastly, there remains to be noticed the surprising ingenuity with which situations of the most impressive kind are created at every important turn of the story. The scene is laid first in Iceland, where Stephen Orry, a loafing and vicious husband, deserts his wife Rachel, and sails away to the Isle of Man, where he marries another wife and has a son. Rachel also gives birth to a son the very night after her husband has struck and abandoned her. Nineteen years afterwards, on her dying bed, she solemnly charges her son, Jason, to revenge her wrongs upon his father and half-brother, and dies. Just at this time Stephen Orry, in a fit of repentance, sends his son Michael to Iceland, in order to seek out his wife and child and effect a reconciliation. Michael, on his arrival, fails in his mission; but he remains in the country, and in a period of rebellion is elected Republican President of the island. In the meanwhile Jason, arriving at the Isle of Man, saves from death the father he had sworn to slay, and Stephen Orry afterwards dies in his arms. Then Jason falls in love with Greeba, the Manx girl whom Michael had left behind him under promise of awaiting his return, and the real complication of the story commences. Greeba flees to her lover in Iceland, and is followed by Jason. The half-brothers, who are now sworn enemies, continually miss encountering each other, until they meet as convicts in the sulphur mines, and are chained together, neither having the slightest knowledge of the other's identity. Ultimately Jason becomes the passionately devoted friend of Michael, and lays down his life for the man whose destruction had once been his solemnly pledged purpose. Such is the story in brief outline. The question now to be considered is whether the work is, as a whole, satisfactory from every point of view. Well, in the opinion of one who has read every page with the utmost pleasure, but who in his capacity as Devil's Advocate is professionally concerned to leave no possible objection unnoticed, there is this to be said: The language of The Bondman is full of nervous, graphic, and poetical English; its interest never flags, and its situations and descriptions are magnificent—too magnificent, perhaps. Here is the flaw upon which a finger might be laid. Plus quam mortale sapit. The chief actors are something more than mere men and women. They are ἡμιθέων γένος ἄνδρες—young giants fresh from the halls of Odin, who can fell an ox with one blow, or break an opponent's back in a wrestling bout. Their very woes are Promethean; the coincidences that unite or sunder them appear as if arranged by some overwhelming destiny. The atmosphere seems to reecho with the thunders of Thor's ponderous hammer, and agony is piled upon agony, like Ossa on Pelion, till one is apt to regard the action as one would an Aeschylean drama, and to accord a tribute of awe and admiration rather than sympathy. But it is a splendid novel for all that, and does not need the "puff" which the publisher has thought fit to append.

The author of Part of the Property is endowed with a good many of the constitutive elements of the novelist of the future. The genus of the latter animal has not perhaps at this moment been fairly settled, and his definition may therefore be challenged; but the present reviewer is inclined to assign him to the class of which Mr. Howells, the American writer, is the foremost living representative. It is not for a moment contended that Miss Whitby is entitled—as yet, at any rate—to take equal rank with Mr. Howells; for the latter is gifted with a mastery of analytical insight and a charm of manner, both in respect of what he gives us and what he leaves unsaid, that can belong only to one or two in a generation. Mr. Howells would never dream of treating us to such an anticlimax as an account of the funeral ceremonies of the man or woman whose inner nature he had been unfolding through the greater part of three volumes with all the subtlest resources of an unapproachably delicate artistic skill. He would reverently turn from the closing scene, and leave details to the servants. Still, there is resemblance enough between the two writers to justify a comparison. Miss Whitby does not, any more than Mr. Howells, depend for her attractiveness upon the story-teller's ordinary stock-in-trade of perilous or amusing incident, dramatic situation, surprises, coincidences, and such like worn-out devices. Selecting as material some three or four people, brought together by family or other circumstances, she takes for her theme a passage in their lives, commonplace enough perhaps in the eyes of the world around them, but made replete with interest to us, who behold as in a picture the delineation of their characters illumined by the skill of a cunning hand. There is no doubt that a writer who essays work of this kind is taxing the capacity of art to its utmost. In the present book there are only two, or at most three, leading characters—namely, Margaret Chamberlain, aged nineteen; Mr. Anstruther, her grandfather, a country squire; and Jocelyn Carew, a son of Mr. Anstruther's second wife by her first husband. The others, though each is distinctive enough in its way, are subsidiary to the main action. No important incidents are recorded, to relieve the dull routine of country-house life, except a week's visit to a neighbour. Yet a charming tale has been constructed out of these uneventful details—though, to be sure, there is a mournful tragedy eventually, which saddens the closing part of the book; and the author deserves high praise for her successful attempt to evolve keen sympathy out of material which, to a less observant or imaginative mind, would have suggested little element whereon to found a romance.

The lady who for a generation past has been employing her pen upon biography, romance, and fairy tale, under the name of Sarah Tytler, has added two more volumes to her record, dealing with the life of Frances Jennings, well known to fame as a reigning beauty at the court of Charles II., and ultimately espoused by the "aristocratic ruffian" Richard Talbot, created Earl and afterwards Duke of Tyrconnel by James II. Although a biographical notice of Lady Tyrconnel is included among Mr. G. Steinman's Althorpe Memoirs, no life of that hot-tempered, saucy-tongued, volatile, and frolicsome, but scrupulously virtuous dame has ever appeared with the completeness of entourage and minuteness of detail that characterise the present production. Eclipsed as she was in every way as a political celebrity and intrigante by her far more famous younger sister Sarah, who also rose to be a wearer of the strawberry leaves through her marriage with John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, Frances Jennings nevertheless enjoyed a career abounding in romance and vicissitudes of extraordinary interest. Born in the year of Charles I.'s execution, at a little country house near St. Albans, this daughter of a rustic squire obtained—through her mother's influence, soon after the Restoration—a situation as maid of honour to Anne, Duchess of York, daughter of Hyde, Earl of Clarendon, and was thus introduced, when not yet sixteen, to the free-and-easy licentious gaiety of the court at Whitehall. Besieged by every unmarried courtier of the day, including the Richard Talbot above mentioned and that most renowned of lady-killers, Harry Jermyn—whom the present writer designates "an aristocratic cad"—the fastidious beauty remained heart-whole for four years, until vanquished by George, a penniless and untitled younger son of the Hamilton family, with whom she eloped, and whom, after his exclusion from service in the English army on account of his religion, she followed to France, and became a leading figure in the frivolities of Versailles, Fontainebleau, and the Luxembourg, under the rule of the Grand Monarque. Reduced by the death of her husband to absolute want and life in a garret, she again encounters "Dick" Talbot, now grown more roystering and bloated than ever, and marries the lover of her youth. How Talbot, become Earl and Duke of Tyrconnel, ruled Ireland as viceroy, fled with his master, James, to the court of St. Germain after the defeat at the Boyne, and once more returned to die in Limerick, are matters of history. Regarded as a literary production, the style of Duchess Frances is apt to be rather heavy at times; but the matter of the book is sufficiently entertaining to redeem any faults of manner. We are not introduced to many of the celebrities, especially the female celebrities, of the court of Charles II. Perhaps they are reserved for another volume.

A Resolute Purpose, though the work of a lady whose writing shows refinement of taste and considerable imaginative power, is not a lively book. The very gruesomeness of its motif is in itself fatal to liveliness. Nothing short of a past master in the art of fiction could undertake with much chance of success the task of digesting a medical handbook and exemplifying the progressive developments of a hereditary disease by illustrations drawn from a family history. Probably Miss Ashburner's narrative is true enough to facts of real life. We all of us know something—by hearsay, at any rate—of the ghastly skeletons hidden away in the cupboards of patrician families, whose pride it is to have kept their blood for centuries untainted by admixture with an alien strain, and also how the sins of our hard-living forefathers have descended in the shape of deadly diseases unto the third and fourth generation. So that when Fairfax, youthful head of the ancient house of Towerscourt, becomes aware of the grim heritage of madness bequeathed to his family, and resolves to stamp out the taint by imposing lifelong celibacy on himself and his brethren, we feel that he has done quite the right thing, and established his claim to a martyrdom decidedly heroic under the circumstances, and much to be admired by that good-for-nothing majority among us who are inclined to whisper each to himself Medea's "Video meliora proboque, Deteriora sequor." But this does not relieve the tale from heaviness. For the rest, many of the characters are eminently lovable, especially Honoria Fairfax and Herr Volkmann, the Prussian doctor. The writer has an easy flow of words, and frequently attempts by vivacity of narrative to make up for the prevailing tone of seriousness suggested by the subject and fortified by industrious citation of medical authority.

On the other hand, cases now and then occur where wonders of medical science readily lend themselves to the manufacture of sensational plots; and Mr. Henry Harland has been singularly happy in the capital he has created out of a well-known brain phenomenon, in his novelette, entitled, Two Women or One? Dr. Leonard Benary, who tells the story in the first person, rescues from attempted suicide a young and strikingly handsome woman, whose moral nature, however, proves on subsequent acquaintance to be terribly depraved, and whose determination to drown herself, in order to get released from the pangs of a guilty conscience, remains unabated in spite of the doctor's earnest persuasions. He induces her at length to submit to an operation upon one of the bones of her skull, causing a lesion of the cerebral tissues, whereby he promises as a result the total annihilation of memory without injury to the other intellectual faculties, so that the patient upon recovering health and consciousness shall remember absolutely nothing of the past—neither her name, nor her nationality, nor the face of her father or mother, nor even how to speak, walk, or eat—but shall be literally born anew and have to begin life over again from the start. The results of this experiment form the subject of the tale. The plot is decidedly a clever one, and the details are well worked out, so far as they go. The only fault to be found with the book is that there is not more of it. One can hardly help thinking with a sigh of regret what a marvellous combination of thrilling by-plot and circumstance a writer like Wilkie Collins would have grouped round such a brilliant central idea.

It is difficult to understand the precise raison d'être of a novel occupied from beginning to end with nothing but the record of an unbroken series of struggles against starvation, culminating in child-murder, lunacy, and suicide. That the writer of A Manchester Shirtmaker—who is understood to be a lady—is a marvellously vivid narrator of harrowing tales of distress may be freely admitted; her intimacy with some of the most hideous phases of poverty in crowded cities can scarcely be questioned; and her descriptions have a realistic truthfulness which commands all due recognition. But, after all, one is inclined to say of her work, Cui bono? We are none the wiser for such a tale; and if the writer meant to stir us in the direction of redressing the unequal balance of social and economical conditions at present existing, it is to be regretted that she has made no effort to indicate in what way such redress is likely to be best effected. Her story is simply a succession of scenes, each more heartrending and pitiable than the last, unrelieved by a single lighter episode or touch of brightness, and, so far as one can see, conveying no lesson whatever, unless it is intended to illustrate the quotation from Carlyle, printed at the beginning, to the effect that "it is not . . . to die of hunger that makes a man wretched. . . . It is to live miserable we know not why; to work sore and yet gain nothing; to be heart-worn, weary, yet isolated, girt in with a cold, universal laissez-faire," &c. Surely, morbid reflections of this sort are best left unillustrated.

J. BARROW ALLEN.

RECENT VERSE.

An Atonement of East London, and other Poems. By Howard Crawford. (Blackwood.) In his longer poems Mr. Howard Crawford makes an attempt to treat modern life, and to treat it unconventionally—an attempt which at once singles him out from the crowd of gentlemen and ladies who consider that poetry and modern life have nothing to do with one other, and who act on their conviction. Unfortunately, Mr. Crawford's method of treatment is at present much too rhapsodical, and his views of life a little too turbulent and romanesque. His hand relaxes its mastery of his subject at every moment. He is a rider galloping spurred and without a rein. It is impossible for us to quote a passage from the title-poem long enough to give a just idea of the copious volume of verse which rolls, not unmelodiously, through the opening pages. Here are some lines from a similar poem, a little later in the volume:

"The sea city soon
Awakes from her pale sleep in flaming noon,
And toilers smile at rest over their jars
Of wine, and voices rise to mellowing e'en
To greet the expectant moon and the white stars
All passionless, and the alway serene

Heart of the deeps of night. The softer airs
Of love, the lullaby of mother's cares,
And, in the fainter distance, ebbs of song
From gondolas that pass beneath the long
Shades of the palaces, join in a throng
Of music with thin tinkling of guitars
Of wandering youths, that live but for the stars
Of heaven and loved eyes."

Mr. Crawford seems to write with ease—with too much ease; but his verse, while often turgid and always unpruned, is by no means unpromising. This romantic glow, this very fever of flushed luxuriance, is a far more hopeful sign than the cramped neatness of many a more careful workman. The verse is at all events generally sonorous, and thought translates itself into imagery, often in a very picturesque manner. Everywhere there is the throb of life, even when, as in "Jaques Redivivus," the pulse beats to a perfectly mad tune—the tune, not of the melancholy Jaques, but of some James or John whose address is Hanley.

Two Queens. A Drama. By C. J. Ballingall Birrell. (Glasgow: Madehose.) Mr. Ballingall Birrell's little book has also its measure of promise, but promise of a very different kind. Though divided into five acts and called a drama, it is no play but rather a sketch in dialogue, a fragment of history thrown into the form of conversation. The period extends from the death of Edward VI. to the execution of Lady Jane Grey; and the whole interest of the piece lies in the contrast and yet likeness of two unhappy women—the real and the mock queen. The subject is a fine one, and in the hands of a writer like Michael Field it might be turned to pregnant issues. Mr. Birrell, however, is at the mercy of his materials. All he can do is to throw out suggestive hints here and there, to pourtray a moment's emotion with momentary fineness, to impress or move us with a line, a turn of phrase. His work strikes us as that of a very young writer, not without capacity, who is making a first attempt, in which he betrays the gradual progress of his enfranchisement from the tyranny of metrical oppression. His blank verse is curiously stiff, with the formality of the pre-Shakespearean measure; but, now and again, it has a really simple and moving accent—the accent of nature. The book has distinct promise. It remains for Mr. Birrell to justify our expectations of him.

Poems. By May M. Cox. (Bell.) Of Miss or Mrs. Cox (apparently the latter) we are unable to say as much. The book is in parts clever, to a certain extent, and it might once have obtained some reputation for its author as "a pleasing poetess"; but that would have been in the days of Mrs. Hemans, and we are now in the days of Miss Rossetti. Here is a lady who has read her Hemans and her Longfellow, who writes of "The Last Night," "The Felon's Prayer," "The Outcast"; and who, here as elsewhere, is neatly conventional, and expresses very nicely the orthodox feminine thoughts on these subjects. She has a broken heart, and she writes verses on Gordon. She "will not have written in vain" if "in all the world" her verses "waken one responsive echo." One seems to have heard such a remark before. Why will people talk in this way about "responsive echoes"? Either the work is good or the work is bad. There are exceptions, however, even in this. "Poems by May M. Cox" is one of the exceptions.

In Clover and Heather. By Wallace Bruce. (Blackwood.) Mr. Wallace Bruce is a Scotchman who lives, or has lived, in America. He celebrates his country's heroes in his own name, his country's soil in the name of his book, and his country's virtues in every page of his very respectable verse. He has also a good deal of enthusiasm to spare for the land of his adoption; and he prints a number of pieces which he has written for clubs, congresses, anniversaries, and the like American institutions. Among his subjects are "Nobby Island," "The Club of Tahawas," and

"Fair Potomac! dear Potomac! at [whose] name what memories throng!"

He can also do honour to

"'Home, sweet home' and 'John Brown's body,'
'Dixieland' and 'Old Camp-ground,' Swinging symphonies commingled in one bright bouquet of sound."

He can also compose poetic pieces in the manner of Mr. George Sims: human life from the point of view of the district-missionary, convinced that his particular slum is the vilest in the city, and that his particular tracts are the best in the land. Fluent, well-meaning, neatly expressed, Mr. Wallace Bruce's verses are of that old-fashioned school which expresses good sentiments in a reasonable manner, passing from sentiments to sentiment, and alternating between piety and patriotism. If anyone is attracted by this description of Mr. Wallace Bruce's verse, he will no doubt be attracted by Mr. Wallace Bruce's verse itself.

TWO FOREIGN BOOKS ON ECONOMICS.

Freiland: ein Soziales Zukunftsbild. Von Theodor Hertzka. (Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot.) This social picture of the future is introduced by an autobiographical sketch of the author's late studies. Four years ago he had got so far in his socialistic education as to have thrown over rent and a certain portion of profits (Unternehmergewinn). But he still, in deference to the "classic and orthodox view," retained some respect for one factor of the existing system of distribution, namely, interest. Now he has freed himself from this remaining prejudice, and thus completed the "solution of the social problem"—Why do we not become richer in proportion to our increased capacity of producing wealth? The answer to this question, which puzzled Adam Smith and Ricardo—the solution which the greatest theorists, since the rise of political economy, have been groping after—has been revealed to Herr Hertzka. Society is poor, notwithstanding the potentiality of boundless wealth, owing to a deficiency, not of supply, but of demand. This defect is due to the present system of distribution. Where the consumption of the masses is restricted, it is impossible that wealth should increase indefinitely. The rapture attending this discovery deprived the author of the tranquillity requisite for the formulation of abstract doctrines. His exposition has thus taken the popular form of an Utopia. It was thus that "Bacon of Verulam" interrupted his graver studies, and the composition of the Novum Organon, in order to throw off the New Atlantis. So far, the preface. "Fumum ex luce," the experienced critic will probably expect after this introduction. Nor will the Horatian maxim be found to fail, if we look only at the literary side of the work. As the picture of the future is not painted in warm colours of fancy, the story of Freiland is not very entertaining. In the more shining qualities the author is excelled by many of his predecessors in the same walk of literature—a series of imaginative writers extending from Plato to Mr. Bellamy. But it is on the scientific solidity of the reasoning which he has clothed in a popular form that Herr Hertzka rests his claims to attention. In this respect it must fairly be admitted that he has a great advantage over the Capets and the Fouriers. He has some regard for freedom as well as equality.

He does not postulate an entire revolution of human nature. He merely supposes that there will be "no drunkards, no idlers, and no criminals" in the model community of Freiland. He does not ignore the great facts of sex and war. He is honourably distinguished from some contemporary Utopia-mongers in that he does not shirk those difficulties about the increase of population which have baffled the greatest intellects of this century. Herr Hertzka's solution of the Malthusian problem has, at least, the merits of simplicity and originality. The struggle for life, it is universally admitted, evokes qualities useful to the race. Well, among the useful qualities so developed is the attribute of not multiplying up to the limits of sustenance. To assist our conception of the manner in which this principle may operate, it is suggested that animals highly nourished and well-to-do classes of men are less prolific. But we are not left entirely to these doubtful analogies. Should the natural safe-guard break down, there still may be constructed an interior circumvallation. There may be means of averting the evil consistently with our moral and aesthetic senses. Thus the spectre, which has so long thrown a gloom over the banquet of Nature is for ever laid. The Freelanders may enter upon their millennial joys without fear of those consequences which Malthus anticipated in Godwin's ideal state. In Freeland the pleasures of love will not be hampered by a rigorous marriage law. Yet the constancy of lovers will be unbroken. This improvement in nuptial relations will be effected by abolishing the temptation under which so many women now are to marry without love, for the sake of being supported. The extinction of this infamy will be attained by the simple method of making girls independent, giving to every woman as well as man a fair share of the national income. Not that woman will have to struggle as the competitor of man. It is admitted that men are stronger and more powerful as bread-winners. But even in the case of male industries, the part which is played by the individual worker is inconsiderable compared to what is due to the intellectual toil of innumerable past generations. Of this inheritance it is but just that our sisters should have a proportional share. Altogether, the ladies in Freiland are likely to have what our transatlantic cousins call a "lovely time." There will be no more worry about servants. The rough work of households will be performed by the "association for personal service." The members of this society occupy stations or guard rooms in each neighbourhood, from which they can be summoned by telephone to any house. The remuneration for their services is about fivepence for each period of three minutes. The members of the society are all gentlemen—a sort of "gentlemen helps," in short. We must not satiate the reader's curiosity by describing all the good things which are in store for those who have courage to break with the existing order. The picture of the socialistic future is indeed attractive, and it would be pleasant to believe with the author that it only requires a few efficient men to make the ideal a reality.

Elements d'Economie Politique Pure. Par Léon Walras. Deuxième Édition. (Lausanne: Rouge.) Prof. Walras shares with Jevons the honour of having independently discovered the mathematical theory of value; the accident of being "shelved," as Jevons says, in the matter of priority, by Gossen. As compared with Jevons, Prof. Walras seems to us to have certain advantages. He makes it more clear that the formulae of exchange are applicable only where there is perfect competition, not to a bargain between two individuals, or between a company and a body of labourers acting as one man. Again, Prof. Walras directs attention to the interdependence of the different markets in which the entrepreneur deals—buying various agents of production and selling finished products. The symbolic representation of this system brings out clearly a truth which Prof. Marshall was one of the first to state, in his review of Jevons's Theory in the ACADEMY: "Just as the motion of every body in the solar system affects and is affected by the motion of every other, so it is with the elements of the problem of political economy." The use of the analogies which mathematical physics supply to political economy is well illustrated in Prof. Walras's new and enlarged edition. We allude to the passages in which he deduces economic equilibrium from the principle of maximum utility. The new edition is also enriched with many critical notices of writers belonging to the mathematical school. Prof. Walras's criticisms are always fresh and interesting, even when, as often, they appear to us disputable. Thus he says of Jevons "Nous ne saurions accepter la formule de Jevons comme valable que pour le cas restreint où deux individus seulement sont en présence." Now surely this is just the case in which Jevons's formula cannot be accepted. The critic hits a weak point, but he does not hit it quite fair. We were equally surprised by the criticism of Cournot's method of ascertaining variations in the value of money. We had not understood the method as "exclusive," in Prof. Walras's phrase, of certain commodities. Remark on the controversy, whether the present appreciation of money is due to increase of commodities or decrease of gold, Prof. Walras says smartly:—"Je me permets d'insister sur le fait que cette controverse, aussi engagée, n'a pas grand intérêt." For, whatever the cause, the remedy is the same; namely, to augment the currency. Prof. Walras proceeds to prescribe the exact dose. His computations also lead to the Solution of the Anglo-Indian monetary problem. Perhaps he has not sufficiently realised how wide a gulf separates abstract theory from practice. But the discoverer of a new method may be excused if he exaggerates its potency.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. WILLIAM SHARP has finished his Life of Browning, in which he has received assistance from the poet's family; and it will be published as the April volume of the "Great Writers" series.

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD will publish immediately, in a moderate sized volume, the Correspondence between William Pitt and the Duke of Rutland during the six years (1781-1787), when the latter was lord-lieutenant of Ireland. The present duke, better known as Lord John Manners, has supplied an introductory note.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish in May a new novel by Mr. H. Rider Haggard, entitled Beatrice, which we may assume not to be a tale of adventure and wonderment.

The Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff, translated by Miss Mathilde Blind will be published in a few days, in two volumes, by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

In addition to the volumes on Golf, Tennis, Riding, and Yachting which have already been announced in the "Badminton Library," we understand that arrangements have also been made for the following: Mountaineering, by Mr. Douglas Freshfield; Big-Game Shooting, in 2 vols., by Messrs. C. Phillippa-Wolley, W. G. Littledale, Major H. Percy, and Capt. C. Markham; and Coursing and Falconry, by the Hon. G. Lascelles.

A HANDBOOK to the report of the Special Commission, for the use of those who have not the time to peruse the Blue-Book, is to be issued immediately by Mr. Edward Arnold. It will deal briefly with each of the main points handled by the Commission, showing the conspicuous pieces of evidence and the conclusions arrived at by the judges upon the charges brought before them. The whole will be carefully classified and presented in a popular and intelligible form.

UNDER the title of "English Leaders of Religion," Messrs. Methuen propose to commence in the autumn the publication of a series of short biographies, free from party bias, of the most prominent leaders of religious life and thought in this and the last century. Each volume will contain a succinct account and estimate of the career, the influence, and the literary position of the subject of the memoir. Mr. A. M. M. Stedman will edit the series, and the following are already arranged for:—Cardinal Newman, by Mr. R. H. Hutton; John Keble, by the Rev. W. Lock; Charles Simeon, by Mr. H. O. G. Moule; Bishop Wilberforce, by the Rev. G. W. Daniell; John Wesley, by Canon Overton; F. D. Maurice, by Col. F. Maurice; and Thomas Chalmers, by Mrs. Oliphant.

MR. W. HEINEMANN has nearly ready a translation of M. Renan's Etude d'Histoire religieuse. This translation is from the author's latest revised edition, and is made by special arrangement.

A VOLUME entitled Manx Names: a Handbook of Place and Surnames in the Isle of Man, by Mr. A. W. Moore, with an Introduction by Prof. Rhys, will be issued shortly to subscribers, through Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. are adding to their "Social Science" Series a volume entitled Prince Bismarck and State Socialism in Germany, by Mr. W. H. Dawson.

MR. ANDREW LANG contributes an introduction to Mr. Edward Arnold's edition of Lamb's Adventures of Ulysses, which is being prepared for the use of young readers.

YET another series of popular biographies is about to make its appearance—devoted to a wide class of notable people, ambitious, adventurous, eccentric, scheming, daring, fascinating, and enthusiastic. The title of the series is to be, "People who have made a Way in the World"; and the small volumes are to be illustrated with portraits, views, maps, and other actualities. The first volume will be King Theodore of Corsica, by Mr. Percy Fitzgerald. Messrs. Vizetelly & Co. are the publishers.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS will publish early next week a novel dealing with an ideal state of future society, entitled Looking Forward. The author writes under the assumed name of "Imar Thiuseu."

AMONG the new volumes of Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.'s "Young Collector" Series, will be British Ferns, by Mr. E. J. Lowe; British Fossils, by Dr. J. W. Williams; and Colonial Coins and Tokens, by Mr. D. F. Howarth.

THE following have been elected by the committee of the Athenaeum Club under the rule which provides for the election of a certain number of persons annually "of distinguished eminence in science, literature, or the arts, or for public services": Mr. George Dennis, Mr. Luke Fildes, and Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace.

MR. FREDERICK NIECKS will, on Thursday next, March 6, begin a course of four lectures at the Royal Institution on "The Early Developments of the Forms of Instrumental Music," with illustrations on bowed instruments and the pianoforte.

At the meeting of the Victoria Institute on Monday next, March 3, Prof. Legge will read a paper on "Chinese Chronology." The date of the following meeting has been altered from March 17 to March 10, when Sir M. Monier Williams will read a paper on "The Monism, Pantheism, and Dualism of Brahmanical and Zoroastrian Philosophers." On this occasion the meeting will be held at the house of the Society of Arts, Adelphi.

At the meeting of the Elizabethan Literary Society, to be held at Toynbee Hall on Wednesday next, March 5, a paper from Mr. J. A. Symonds will be read, entitled "The Songs of the Elizabethan Dramatists."

On Friday and Saturday of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will sell what is described as "a portion of the library of William Bell Scott, Esq., H.R.S.A., LL.D., leaving London in consequence of ill health." As usual, the catalogue is vily classified; but every page reveals the life history of this veteran poet-artist, and friend of both poets and artists. Here may be seen presentation copies from Leigh Hunt, Landor, Browning, Whitman, Rossetti, William Morris, Swinburne, down to the generation of the Epigoni. Here also are numerous first editions, not only of Coleridge, Shelley, Keats, and Byron, but also of Gray, Thomson, Sterne, Gay, Milton, Marvell, Chapman, Ben Jonson, and the second folio of Shakspeare. Here, again are records of the collector's earlier life in the first Edinburgh edition of Burns and in Bewick's Birds; and yet more valuable materials of his later work in the almost "introuvable" productions of the early German engravers. Many will cherish this "inefficient catalogue," and inscribe upon it for a motto:—

"Ille velut fidas sodalibus olim
Credebat libris, neque si male cesserat unquam
Decurrere allo, neque si bene; quo fit ut omnia
Votiva pateat veluti descripta tabella
Vita senis."

THE statistics of books published during 1889, as given in the Publishers' Weekly of New York, show the same decrease when compared with 1888 as the corresponding figures which were quoted in the ACADEMY of January 4, from the Publishers' Circular. The English total diminished from 6591 to 6057, while the American total diminished in a somewhat larger proportion—from 4631 to 4014. In both cases novels show a large increase; while in both cases too there is a marked decrease in theology, educational, and poetry. Unfortunately, the classification adopted varies so greatly that it would be misleading to push the comparison further. But we cannot forbear pointing out that the Americans produced 410 law books in the year, against only 66 in England. A more profitable question would be to inquire why, in a period of considerable prosperity, the production of books should actually diminish. We can only suggest in answer that the wants of the reading public are becoming more and more satisfied with newspapers, reviews, and magazines; and that authors consequently find their own best market in the same field.

As the first of a series of "Bibliographical Miscellanies," Mr. William Blades has reprinted from the Library of last March his paper upon "Signatures," to which we drew attention at the time as a model of exact research. He has now added two large facsimile plates, giving examples of signatures in early printed books (1) written in MS and (2) stamped with type by hand. He has also considerably enlarged the lists of MSS and printed books having these primitive kinds of signature. It is a small point; but we may mention that we fail to identify his first facsimile with the corresponding entry in the list.

Correction.—Owing to faulty punctuation, the note about the translation of The Swiss Confederation in the ACADEMY of February 15 was misleading. The introduction is written by M. Buchonnet, minister of police and justice, and for the present year president of the confederation.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

MR. GLADSTONE has now all but completed his articles on "The Old Testament" for Good Words. The first, on the "Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture," will appear in the April number; and this will be followed by others on "The Oration Story," "The Mosaic Legislation," "The Psalms," "The Method of the Old Testament," &c.

THE March issue of the Antiquary will contain an article by the Baron de Cossou on the ancient sporting weapons in the Arts and Sports Exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery. The baron, who is himself an important exhibitor, complains with justice of the arrangement, in which there is no attempt at classification. For example, old cross-bows have been placed in one room, and a varied collection of bolts that pertain to them in another.

THE Hon. Roden Noel contributes a poem to the March number of Lippincott's Magazine, and one to the April number of Atalanta.

A MONTHLY journal devoted to the interests of secondary education will be published on March 1 by Messrs. Roper & Drowley, under the title of Education. Among the features of the new journal will be a series of illustrated interviews with leading educationists; and a number of articles dealing with the practical difficulties of the scholastic world.

BEGINNING with the March number, Mr. Edward Arnold will in future publish the Westminster Review at 18, Warwick-square, Paternoster-row.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

WE hear that a pension of £100 a year on the Civil List has been assigned to the widow of Dr. Edwin Hatch, in recognition of the eminent services rendered by him to the study of biblical theology and ecclesiastical history.

AN address to Prof. Stuart is being signed at Cambridge, on the occasion of his resignation of the chair of mechanics, expressing recognition of his great public services in connexion with the university extension movement, of which he was largely the originator. It is also proposed to present him with some memorial of a personal character, such as a silver salver, of moderate cost.

